Mr. ELIOT. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask that certain papers before them in relation to Milwaukee light-house be printed.

There being no objection, the order to print was made.

TENNESSEE AND KENTUCKY SERVICES.

Mr. THAYER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill directory to the Secretary of War respecting certain services in Tennessee and Kentucky, which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

POINT COUPEE.

Mr. THAYER, from the same committee, also reported back an act (S. No. 258) to grant to the parish of Point Coupee, Louisiana, a certain tract of land in said parish, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill was laid on the table.

OREGON INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. THAYER, from the same committee, also reported back an act (S. No. 143) to secure the right of preemption to certain settlers on lands temporarily occupied as an Indian reservation in Oregon; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOUT. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which this bill was referred. The SPEAKER. Under the rule, no motion to reconsider can be made.

HOSPITAL IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back a bill to incorporate the regents of a general hospital for the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. HICKMAN. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill. The bill is reported because the resolution under which it was drafted was supposed to be obligatory in its character; but the general sentiment of the committee is, that the bill should not pass. It is a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to prescribe the mode of obtaining evidence in cases of contested election," approved February 19, 1853.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] makes objection, and the bill can only come in for reference under the rules.

Mr. HICKMAN. Let the bill be referred, then.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

APPEALS FROM CIRCUIT COURTS.

Mr. HICKMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill to extend the right of appeal from the decisions of circuit courts to the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ILLINOIS SOUTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported back House bill No. 116, to attach the counties of Peoria, Woodford, Livingston, Iroquois, and Marshall, in the State of Illinois, to the southern judicial district of said State, with the recommendation that it do not pass; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BERRIAN BROWN.

Mr. PORTER. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report adversely upon the petition of Berrian Brown and others, of Wisconsin. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of that case, and that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I object to that, as it does not come within the provisions of the rule.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the report cannot be received.

JOHN HOPPER.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs of John Hopper, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CAROLINE GOLDING.

Mr. DE JARNETTE. I am directed by the Committee on Revolutionary Claims to make an adverse report in the case of Caroline Golding, for the amount of land scrip to which she is entitled.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made; and as the report proposed by the gentleman from Virginia does not come within the provisions of the rule, it cannot be sustained.

LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. KENYON, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back House bill No. 195, to confirm certain land claims in the Territory of New Mexico, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS LAVONTURE and PIERRE GRIGNON.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Francis Lavonture and Pierre Grignon; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back Senate bill No. 71, for the relief of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. It only authorizes that board to expend money for repairs, which it cannot do now, because of a certain article of a treaty referred to.

The SPEAKER. The report can only be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. BARR. I hope that there will be no objection to it.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I object; as I will continue to object to everything not in order.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Then let the bill be referred.

The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INDIAN AGENCIES.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill to establish two Indian agencies in Nebraska Territory, and one in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VALENTINE WEHRHEIM.

Mr. FENTON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back Senate bill No. 221, for the relief of Valentine Wehrheim, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PHINEAS G. PEARSON.

Mr. FENTON, from the same committee, also reported back House bill No. 100, for the relief of Phineas G. Pearson, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN PURCELL.

Mr. FENTON, from the same committee, also reported back House bill No. 101, granting an invalid pension to John Purcell, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS W. PHELPS.

Mr. FENTON, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Thomas W. Phelps; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HARRIET S. WYMAN.

Mr. FENTON, from the same committee, also reported a bill granting a pension to Harriet S. Wyman; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. FENTON. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to make sundry adverse reports.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, they cannot be received.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by

Mr. HICKER, their Chief Clerk, notifying the House that that body had passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (No. 29) for the relief of Arthur Edwards and his associates;

An act (No. 30) for the relief of Sheldon McKnight;

An act (No. 111) for the relief of Aaron H. Palmer;

An act (No. 114) for the relief of R. F. Blocker, E. J. Gurley, and J. F. Davis;

An act (No. 221) for the relief of A. T. Spencer and Gordon S. Hubbard;

An act (No. 224) for the relief of the heirs-at-law of the late Abigail Nason, sister and devisee of John Lord, deceased;

An act (No. 82) to amend the act to incorporate the Provident Association of Clerks in the Civil Departments of the Government of the United States, in the District of Columbia;

An act (No. 66) to authorize the extension and use of a branch of the Alexandria, Loudoun, and Hampshire railroad, within the city of Georgetown;

An act (No. 200) directing the conveyance of a lot of ground for the use of the public schools of Washington city;

An act (No. 233) for the relief of Alice Hunt, widow of Thomas Hunt;

An act (No. 250) for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brevet Captain Oliver H. P. Taylor; and

An act (No. 252) to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia.

And also, that the Senate had ordered the printing of the following documents:

Message of the President of the United States, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, a report of the Secretary of the Navy, accompanied by copies of instructions given to officers of the United States naval forces on the coasts of Mexico to protect the persons and property of the citizens of the United States, and copies of the official reports of Captain Jarvis and Commander Turner of the capture of two Mexican war steamers, and the causes which led to said capture; and report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a copy of the memorial of Brevet Lieutenant Colonel B. S. Roberts, relating to a reorganization of the militia of the United States.

MILEAGE OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. ASHMORE, from the Committee on Mileage, made an adverse report on the bill (H. R. No. 71) to reduce the compensation and mileage of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ASHMORE also, from the same committee, made an adverse report on a bill (H. R. No. 69) to reduce the compensation of members of Congress, and to regulate the mileage; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw the resolution I reported a few moments ago, for the benefit of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

Leave to withdraw was granted.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Secretary of War, with its accompaniments, communicating the information called for by the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 1st instant, concerning the difficulties on the southwestern frontier; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the information called for by a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 14th ultimo, in respect to the accounts of Charles W. Pine, late United States marshal, and Henry S. Fitch, late United States district attorney, of the northern district of Illinois; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the War Department, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 26th of March, calling for Lieutenant Colonel Roberts's report on the subject of a general reorganization of the militia of the United States; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed; and

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, in compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 23d of March, requesting the President to communicate to the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, any recent correspondence between our consul general at Havana and the Captain General of Cuba, touching the imprisonment in that island of an American citizen; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

HARLEM RIVER.

Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the improvement of the navigation of the Harlem river and Spuyten Duyvel creek, in the county of New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HELL GATE.

Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill to remove obstructions to navigation at Hell Gate, in the East river, opposite the city of New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COOLIE TRADE.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill prohibiting the Chinese coolie trade by American citizens in American vessels.

Mr. BURNETT. I object.

Mr. ELIOT. Then I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce it.

Mr. BRANCH. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. ELIOT. It is in order to move to suspend the rules, and I hope no gentleman will object to the introduction of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to allow me just here to make a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I was not in my seat when that committee was called.

Mr. ELIOT. You can do that when this matter is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business, under the rule, will prevent the motion to suspend the rules until the morning hour has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to make the bill punishing polygamy the special order after the morning hour only.

The SPEAKER. That has already been done. Mr. SHERMAN. Then a motion to suspend the rules will not be in order until that matter is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. It will not be.

SCUTTLE CUT-OFF MASSACRE.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, made a minority report in the case of the Scuttle-cut-off massacre of the 24th of July, 1859; which was ordered to be printed.

O. F. D. FAIRBANKS AND OTHERS.

Mr. REAGAN also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of O. F. D. Fairbanks, Frederick Dodge, and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHAUNCEY A. BORG.

Mr. REAGAN also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Chauncey A. Borg of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SWAMP LAND CERTIFICATES.

Mr. LOGAN, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and they are hereby, instructed to report a bill making certain cases of grants of swamp lands to States and counties transferable and subject to location in any State or Territory where suitable lands may be subject to sale.

REGULAR ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to disorganize the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of House bill No. 514. It is a case of great suffering and of great merit; and if the House will permit me a moment I will explain the facts.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This matter does not come within the regular reports from committees.

Mr. ALLEY. It does not; but I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. GROW. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. BURNETT. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will be permitted to call up the bill that he alludes to, for it is certainly one of great merit.

The regular order of business was insisted on. Mr. HICKMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill, and to ask to have it put upon its passage. I think that when the bill is read to the House, together with the reasons given for it in a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, there will be no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask for the regular order of business.

Mr. HICKMAN. If this bill be objected to, I will move that the rules be suspended, in order that the bill may be put upon its passage.

POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules would not be in order now. There is a special order before the House which takes precedence of all other business. It is the consideration of House bill (No. 7) to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places, and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, with the consent of all officers of the Territory. It is the consideration of House bill (No. 7) to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places, and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, with the consent of all officers of the Territory. It is the consideration of House bill (No. 7) to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places, and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, with the consent of all officers of the Territory. It is the consideration of House bill (No. 7) to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States and other places, and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, with the consent of all officers of the Territory.

Mr. BRANCH. Before the gentleman from Virginia moves, I would ask the unanimous consent of the House to have a clerical error in my amendment corrected. It is only to substitute the words "fourth and fifth," for the words "third and fourth," in the first section.

There being no objection, the correction was ordered to be made.

Mr. MILLSON. When this bill was last under consideration, some views were expressed by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. BRANCH,] and by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. TAYLOR,] from which I felt myself obliged to dissent. I would now like to say a few words to them. It is desirable that we should pass this bill with as much unanimity as possible. The great intelligence and high character of the gentlemen from North Carolina and Louisiana are calculated to give a weight to the opinions expressed by them, in which I do not think they are intrinsically entitled.

The object of the bill is to punish the crime of bigamy in all the Territories of the United States. The attention of Congress would, perhaps, have never been called to the necessity for such legislation, but for the frequent practice of this crime in one of the Territories. It is not denied that in Utah the crime of bigamy is not only extensively practiced, but has even been attempted to be legalized by statutes of the Territorial Legislature. I do not think any very good can be looked for in different state of things in that Territory, considering the character of the people who have taken possession of it. We certainly had no right to expect from them a very high degree of morality. The disciples of Mormonism might not be pressed upon as far as very good could be looked for. Not only was it not to be expected, but perhaps it was not even to be desired, that the result should have been different. It was fit, and it was fortunate that so low and degrading an imposture should reveal itself in its devilish truth.

It is not an easy matter, I say, to have a difference of opinion in reference to the propriety of sup-praising this odious practice. It has been said, however, that we have no power to pass a law for the punishment of this crime. If this be so, we must suppose that the mischief is without remedy; we cannot budge an inch further. But is it so? Has the Congress of the United States no jurisdiction over this offense? Have we no power to punish this crime? Sir, I should never have thought of making this a subject of serious inquiry, but for the announcement of the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAYLOR) the other day, when he said:

"I believe we have no power to pass a criminal law which is to operate within the Territory of Utah, or within any other organized Territory, or within the United States." Mr. Speaker, I am not fond of using the argument of epithets, and therefore I will not say that the opinion of the gentleman from Louisiana was an extraordinary one; but I trust I shall be able to demonstrate that it was at least a very erroneous one.

Sir, if the Congress of the United States possesses no power to make laws for the punishment of crime in Utah, or in any of the Territories of the United States, where does the power reside? Certainly not in the State Legislatures. The gentleman from Louisiana himself will not say that it is in the hands of the legislatures within the jurisdiction over this crime, or the State of Virginia, or New York, or any other State. Where, then, is the power to be found, if not in Congress?

What, sir, are all the Territories of the United States, Whitefish, where they may rise in insubordination, and arson, and robbery, and perjury, and every other crime that is punished by every civilized nation, be committed within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States with absolute license? Does the gentleman deny that the Territories are within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States? Then, sir, I would suggest to him that our American statesmen have been laboring under a grave error from the time when they first put the machinery of this Government in operation up to this very moment. Sir, in the very first year after the adoption of the Federal Constitution an act was passed by Congress for the punishment of crimes where ever the jurisdiction of the United States extended; and I quote, for the information of the gentleman from Louisiana, an extract from the first crimes act as provided:

"That if any person or persons shall, within any fort, arsenal, dock yard, magazine, or in any other place or district of country under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, commit the crime of treason, or any such person or persons, on being thereof convicted, shall suffer death."

What does the gentleman from Louisiana say to the act of 1790 for the punishment of the crime of murder?

Mr. McCLERNAND. Allow me to inquire the date of that act?

Mr. MILLSON. April 30, 1790.

Mr. McCLERNAND. Where is its application to the organized Territories?

Mr. MILLSON. I have read the words, "within any fort, arsenal, dock yard, magazine, or any other place or district of country under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. McCLERNAND. I undertake to say that there is no instance of the enactment of a law by Congress making a penal offense in an organized Territory of the United States; and I apprehend that the gentleman will find, upon examination, that was not within the design of the legislators, at the time that act was passed, to give it an application to an organized Territory. The application of that law, and of others similar to it, was to individuals in the unorganized territory of the United States, before those individuals pass from individual status to a political state. That is the distinction.

Mr. MILLSON. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I say that not only is he not correct in the statement that there is no single instance of the application of these criminal laws to any organized Territory, but that there has never been an organized Territory of the United States to which this very law has not been made expressly to apply. I now take issue with him broadly on the first part of his statement.

Mr. McCLERNAND. Let me understand the gentleman. Is he in his mind asserting that the laws of the United States relating to offences generally apply in the Territories as they do in the States?

Mr. MILLSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCLERNAND. Very well; there is no difference between you and me upon that point; but the point that I make is this: that Congress has never assumed jurisdiction to enact a slave code for the people of a Territory.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not know why the gentleman talks about a slave code. I am not talking about a slave code.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I meant to say a criminal code, which I have described.

Mr. MILLSON. I understand the gentleman, and I meet him with the flattest contradiction possible to be given, by stating that there never has been an organized Territory to which these laws have not been applied, and I will make that evident presently.

Mr. McCLERNAND. What laws?

Mr. MILLSON. These laws which I have quoted.

Mr. McCLERNAND. That law falls within the category which I have described.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I rise to a question of order. Being upon the same side as the gentleman from Illinois, in opposition to the bill, therefore I feel at liberty to make the point. I trust that an opportunity will be presented to the gentleman from Illinois to answer the argument of the gentleman from Virginia, and that this system of interruption will be broken up. I desire to hear the gentleman from Virginia at length.

Mr. MILLSON. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to receive a suggestion, or even a contradiction, from any gentleman from any other place on any other subject on this floor; for I take it for granted that it will be done in such a spirit of courtesy as will rather give piquancy to the debate. I do not fear that it will subject me to any embarrassment.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM will take issue with the gentleman from Illinois, and say, that the very kind of law which is now proposed the Congress of the United States shall enact, has been passed on all previous occasions, and made applicable to every organized Territory of the United States; that is to say, a law defining crime, and punishing crime, in every place or district of country within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

The gentleman says that it was not the intent of this act that it should be made applicable to the Territories of the United States. Sir, what force does he give to the expression "in any other place or district of country" used in this act? I would like my friend from Illinois—and I will yield to him for that purpose—to tell me what application he makes of that language. After enumerating the places mentioned in the Constitution of the United States, to wit: dock-yards, magazines, arsenals, and forts, why were the other words used—"and any other place or district of country"? To what do they apply?

Mr. TAYLOR. If the gentleman will allow me to repeat the question I have asked, I trust after he has concluded, I shall have an opportunity of expressing my views upon this subject, inasmuch as my remarks already made have been so severely commented on.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I am sorry, gentleman, I will say, that the expression to which he makes reference was employed in that act with regard to the language of the Constitution of the United States. It will be remembered that the Constitution of the United States delegates certain specified powers to the Congress of the United States. These powers are all of a national character.

Mr. MILLSON. The language which I refer to is: "other places or districts."

Mr. TAYLOR. The Constitution of the United States, then, confers exclusive jurisdiction upon the Congress of the United States in the dock-yards, arsenals, forts, and other places which shall be ceded to the United States with the consent of a State. The expression in the act, then, to which the gentleman from Virginia refers, particularizes those portions of country which had then become the property of the United States by cession from any State, and the expression "such other places or districts," was used because at the time that act was passed no such territory had yet become the property of the United States by cession. That was the intention of the expression used in the act, as I contend. It was to provide for a future cession.

Mr. MILLSON. I asked a specific question; and in answer, the gentleman from Louisiana has given an explanation of the objects of the Constitution. We all know what the Constitution contains. I inquired what the language, "other places or districts of country," was intended to refer to? The gentleman's reply was, for the most part, wholly aside from the question; but he says, in effect, that the expression was intended to apply to the District of Columbia. Why, sir, I tell my friend from Louisiana that the District of Columbia was not then required.

Mr. TAYLOR. I said precisely that. I said the language was intended to designate the places which had become the property of the United States, and then such places as should become the property of the United States by cession from the States.

Mr. MILLSON. I think the explanation of the gentleman does not remove him any further from the difficulty; because the law applies to places under the jurisdiction of the United States, and the District of Columbia was not then under their jurisdiction; and besides, the gentleman ought to be aware that it was never proposed to relieve the District of Columbia from the operation of the criminal law of Maryland and Virginia, and it has never been so relieved. The portion ceded by Maryland to the United States was to the criminal law of Maryland; and the portion ceded by Virginia, to the criminal law then in force in that State. And yet the gentleman from Louisiana, in order to escape the difficulty, supposes that this general, comprehensive description in the law of any other place or district of country "was intended to apply to a district not then acquired, but which was afterwards to be acquired. Sir, I will tell you to what it was intended that that law should apply. It was intended to apply to the District of Ohio—the Northwest Territory—which was, about that time, designated in an act of Congress as the "district of Ohio."

Mr. McCLERNAND. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to ask him whether the act to which he has referred applies also to the States?

Mr. MILLSON. No, sir, it does not. But, Mr. Speaker, with a view of removing all further doubt, I will remind my friend from Louisiana that the very first organized Territory to which this law was made applicable was his own Territory of Louisiana. The very first application of this act was made to the very Territory now represented on this floor by the gentleman from Louisiana—or rather the two Territories, known as the Territories of Orleans and Louisiana. By the act of 1804, erecting Louisiana into two Territories, this expression provided for a second application of the act for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States "shall extend to and have full force and effect in the above-mentioned Territories."

Mr. TAYLOR. This act prescribes the punishment of various offenses against the United States, such as treason, piracy, &c. There are some portions of it applicable to Louisiana, and others that are not.

Mr. MILLSON. I have not heard of anybody committing treason in the Territory of Louisiana; but the law was intended to be applicable wherever the offense was committed. The law punished certain offenses, and I will give the gentleman a list of them: treason, murder, conspiracy, piracy, felony, forgery, larceny, perjury, receiving stolen goods, &c. &c. These are some of the crimes punished by the act of 1790, and by the act of 1804, extending that law directly and expressly to the Territory of Louisiana.

My friend from Illinois (Mr. McCLERNAND) has said that there never has been a Territory to which any attempt by Congress to provide directly for the punishment of crimes in any of the organized Territories of the United States; and I have said that there never was an instance where they did not do it. They did it in the Northwest Territory. They did it in the Territory of Indiana. They did it in all of the Territories. They extended the law to all the territory acquired from foreign nations. They made the law applicable to Louisilana, the territory acquired from France; next to Florida, the territory acquired from Spain. In the act organizing a territorial government for Florida, the crime act was, by particular description, made applicable to that Territory. Other territory was acquired from Mexico, and to this very Territory of Utah this same act was extended.

In the act establishing a territorial government for Utah, it was provided that the Constitution and all the laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable, should have the same effect in that Territory; and if any man committed the crime of murder, or forgery, or bribery, or any other of the offenses defined, before the election of the first Territorial Legislature, he would undoubtedly, as the gentleman must admit, have been punished under this law, and so, after the election of a Territorial Legislature, he would, as I maintain, equally be punished under this law.

Now, then, the Congress of the United States has labored under serious misconception in reference to its constitutional rights and duties; if, as the gentleman says, Congress has no power to pass criminal laws which are to operate in the Territory of Utah or any other organized Territory of the United States. How else could it be? Are those who go to the Territory of the United States to be entirely free from accountability for crime? Suppose a number of persons to migrate from the United States, and from foreign nations, and possess themselves of one of the Territories of the United States. By the argument of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Taylor] they are not subject to the operation of the laws of the United States. By what law, then, are they to be bound? What if a company of banditti should occupy a portion of our territory on the overland route to California, and there commit murder and robbery, and other crimes; how are they to be punished? The gentleman says that they are not subject to any criminal laws that we can enact. Then how can we boast of being a Government of laws?

But, sir, if we cannot make laws for the punishment of crime in the Territories, on what better foundation does our civil jurisdiction over them rest? Where does the gentleman find a warrant for making any distinction between our criminal and our civil jurisdiction? If we have no power to govern the Territories, how can we make laws to govern them, and determine for themselves what extent of country they will claim as their own. They may decide that their territorial limits shall be as ample or as small as they may please. Who is to restrain them in their claims for limits? By what authority could Congress declare that our Territory shall be bounded on the north by a particular parallel of latitude, or assign any limits at all? You have no power to govern them, criminally or civilly; why, then, do you presume to give them a governor and judges? They claim a right to establish their own form of government. Why not?

Sir, these gentlemen fall into the mistake by confounding an independent right with what is only a privilege conceded. They talk about the principles of the Revolution, and say that the doctrine contained in the Declaration of Independence is, that every man has a right to self-government. Sir, did the men of the Revolution contend for the right of individual self-government? Did they maintain that each citizen had the right of governing himself? Did they make any pretension to such a grotesque claim as that? No, sir; they complained that the concessions of the British Parliament were not as ample and liberal as they should have been. They insisted that the people, the United colonies, should exercise certain rights which were denied them.

Sir, it would be fit and proper to complain if the Government of the United States was to use their power over the Territories as to subject these people to oppressive restrictions and restraints. But because the Government of the United States is engaged, in exercising their proper control, act in accordance with the Declaration of Independence, and concede every useful privilege to every private citizen, does it follow that those privileges can be claimed as independent rights, aside and apart from the Government?

Why, I have heard gentlemen here in debate, and that within a few days past, employ arguments upon this floor which seemed to go to the extent of declaring that each citizen of the United States, emigrating from the States to the Territories, was an independent power or State; and, according to their conception, the inhabitants of a Territory—the Territory of Utah, for instance—were not indeed to be governed by an independent State, but, separately, forty thousand independent States. Forty thousand sovereignties are now in the Territory of Utah; each man invested with his own right of self-government; each man having the right of governing himself, and no one else; and they are so invested, they say, for that is the logical and necessary consequence of the doctrines maintained upon this floor. They confound, they misunderstand, the principles of the Revolution. The patriots of the Revolution never intended to assert that each individual citizen of the United States possessed the right of self-government, and that he carried it with him wherever he might go. They maintained only that the people of Virginia, as a Commonwealth, had the right to govern themselves and one another. They formed a State; they constituted a sovereignty; and they knew but little of this fantastic doctrine of squatter sovereignty which has led many highly intelligent gentlemen to imagine that each solitary citizen was himself a power.

But my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. Braxton], in denying the position, and, seemingly, with some apprehension that should be extended, very serious consequences may result. He says:

"I will suggest to my friends upon this side of the House that, if we can render polygamy criminal, it may be claimed here as an independent right, and might, 'in the language of barbarism,' slavery, as it is called in the Republican platform of 1860."

"It may be claimed!" Claimed by whom? Does he claim it? I know my friend from North Carolina will not assume the responsibility of this argument. Who claims it? Will the Republican party claim it? I have not heard of any such claim. I do not know why the Republican party should undertake, in their party resolutions, to denounce polygamy in the Territories. It is denunciation without responsibility, without basis. Surely they could hardly flatter themselves that they could antagonize themselves with the Democratic party by denouncing polygamy. Perhaps they had some remote idea, some glimmering hope, that whatever they might do would have no jurisdiction over this crime, and let the Democratic party, and for that very reason it would be opposed by them.

I implore southern gentlemen not to assume the burden of defending every bad thing that may be gratuitously denounced in the Republican platform. What would appear to be thought of slavery if it could only be defended by justifying every crime and excusing every immorality? What is it seriously supposed that we concede the right of Congress to legislate for the abolition or prohibition of slavery in the Territories, because Congress has the right to suppress crime? Would gentlemen see no danger from the admission that slavery in the Territories is protected by no higher guarantees than bigamy? Must the authority to suppress crime carry with it the power to abolish slavery? Is this the argument of southern men? Must we concede the right to suppress crime and decling as "two relics of barbarism" must we therefore repeal our anti-dueling laws? Had they denounced slavery and murder as two relics of barbarism, must we therefore declare that we have no jurisdiction over this crime, and let the murderer go unpunished? Sir, the safeguards of slavery, not only in its establishment in the several States, but also in its relations to the Government of the United States, are to be found in the Constitution. If the Constitution gives to Congress the power to suppress slavery as a crime, let us not be afraid to exercise our general authority to punish crime.

But it is thought to be inconsistent to punish polygamy, which is called a domestic institution, and not to prohibit slavery, which is another domestic institution. There is no inconsistency in it. There is no admission implied, in the exercise of the one power, that the other may be fitly claimed by Congress. We are as much bound by the Constitution to punish crime, as we are restrained by the Constitution from treating slavery as a crime. The duty arising from the Constitution is of the same source—the Constitution. Sir, if there were such provisions in the Constitution in respect to polygamy as there are in regard to slavery, I too would oppose this bill.

If the Constitution conceded to every husband, having more than one wife, the right to reclaim them all; if it forbade any State in which those fugitive wives sought refuge to release them from their matrimonial bonds, and commanded their return to their husbands, I too would say that it would be a gross and palpable violation of the Constitution to punish polygamy as a crime. Whatever may be the result of the investigation, we should be restrained from passing any law for its suppression; and whatever opinion it may please gentlemen of the Republican party to entertain in regard to slavery, they are as much bound by the Constitution, and are as much restrained by it from treating polygamy as a crime, as we should be from treating polygamy as a crime, if it were so sanctioned by the Constitution.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is said that this is an intimate domestic relation, and therefore we ought not to interfere. Sir, is it not as intimate a domestic relation in New York and Virginia, as in England and France, as in the Territories? Have not the Governments there interfered? This argument goes much too far. It strikes at the propriety of any such interference with domestic relations in any where. If it be a proper interference with domestic relations by the law-making power of Virginia, and Kentucky, and Georgia, and England, and France, pray tell me, sir, why not in us too, if we are the only legislative body having authority to act, as I trust I have shown we do? The law not interfere with domestic relations! The law everywhere interferes with them. Marriage has always been a subject of regulation by the State. Law, which is only the influential will and reason of the wise and the good, has, in every age, undertaken to control it. It should not be given up to the discretion of the parties, never looked upon as only a private contract between the man and the woman, to be made whenever they alone think fit, to last only during the term they may agree upon, and to end at their own will. It is the State no party to such a contract. As the State is now in concerning that it shall be made, in regulating its conditions after it is made, and in determining when and how it may be dissolved? Away, then, with this argument of the free-love school!

Sir, this is the big game of society if this most delicate and important relation could be assumed and thrown off at the uncheckered will of every thoughtless boy and giddy girl; if the fountains of public virtue might be poisoned by every voluptuary; if husband and wife, instead of being bound to one another by indissoluble ties, might, without any hindrance of the law, be at the mercy of rival allurements and solicitation? No, sir; this is not such an interference with domestic relations as is unusual or improper. It is the interference which every age has demanded; which every nation has asserted; which every State has claimed for the whole community, and even for the protection and advantage of those for whom its restraints are intended.

But we are told that this law, if it should be passed, will be inoperative—that it will not be carried into effect. They say that it will be a mere paper law; it may not be. But what then? We shall have acquitted ourselves of our duty. We shall have wiped away a reproach from the national reputation. We shall have put upon the statute-book our condemnation of this crime. There may be a criminal sentiment in Utah, as there may be a manly sentiment elsewhere, that may obstruct the operation of this law, as the operation of the laws against the slave trade has been obstructed. What then? We shall have put upon the statute-book our legislative opinion of the crime and its proper punishment. Let the law stand, the salutary rest, then, on those who may, in violation of their oaths, choose not to execute any of its provisions.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word or two before I close, on some amendments offered to this bill. When the bill was introduced by my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. Braxton], I was properly subject for legislation at some future time and in some other connection, I do not see the propriety of adding it to this bill. This is a bill for the punishment of crime. It may be that the people of Utah are competent to govern themselves, but the people of the United States are not competent to legislate for governing that Territory; and if so, then, after a proper investigation by the Committee on authority to legislate directly on the domestic interests of the Territories, then indeed is this bill, and every other measure of equivalent effect, an unwarranted usurpation of power.

But how, sir, can any man maintain that position? Is it not admitted that the territorial governments derive their being and validity exclusively from the act of Congress? They are not the spontaneous creation of an autonomous power in the people of the Territories; for, if they possessed an original and inherent right of self-government, they would be the territorial communities instead of subordinate dependencies on a superior authority. Whether from an express clause in the Constitution, or by virtue of its function as the organism of Federal legislation, Congress obtains jurisdiction over the Federal domain. For purposes of convenience, it may employ the instrumentality of a territorial government in the discharge of its trust; but Congress cannot abdicate its power over the Territories, nor renounce the obligations of its constitutional duty.

Whenever, therefore, its intervention is invoked by the public interests, and permitted by the Constitution, Congress is obliged to correct the errors and to repair the omissions of the Territorial Legislature. And this control of Congress over the Territories subsists to the last moment of its territorial existence; for, when that moment supervenes and annuls the organic law of an independent State. This theory, sir, of congressional power is sustained by the uniform policy of the Government. Innumerable examples of intervention attest the right of Congress to legislate directly on the interests of the Territories. An invariable reservation of power to ratify or to repeal the acts of a Territorial Legislature, dissipates every doubt as to the paramount authority of Congress over the territorial dependencies of the confederate States.

The honorable member from Louisiana [Mr. TAYLOR] concedes that the territorial government is the creature of Congress. He admits, too, that Congress may, at its discretion, annul the organic act of a Territory. On what principles, then, of logical consistency, does he deny that Congress, which may thus annul the organic law of a Territory, is incompetent to enact a single measure of legislation for that Territory? And if he admits the power of Congress to annul the organic law of a Territory—annihilating at one blow all the functions and the very existence—how can he contest the right of Congress to repeal a particular provision of the territorial government? Sir, the honorable member cannot sustain himself in the position which he occupies. Either he must affirm the dogma of equal sovereignty, contending for an original and inherent power of self-government in the Territories, in contravention of the patronage and control of Congress, or else, admitting the subordinate and dependent relation of the Territories, he must acknowledge their subjection to the paramount authority of Congress.

These principles, I understand, Mr. Speaker, have the assent of the honorable member from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]; yet he, too, is opposed to the bill from the Judiciary Committee. In other words, he admits the power of Congress to interpose for the suppression of polygamy in Utah, but shrinks from its exertion, lest, by application to another object, it be employed for the extinction of slavery in the Territories. Sir, I am surprised that so logical and accurate a thinker as my honorable friend from North Carolina should be misled by so false an analogy. The Republican policy may associate polygamy and slavery as "twin relics of barbarism"; but I dispute the philosophy of the classification. I deny that they stand upon the same guarantees, and will fall together when driven from the common basis of constitutional security. In the interest of slavery, I repudiate the suggestion that its rights in the Territories may be impaired by any legitimate act of Federal legislation. The authority of Congress over the Territories is exclusive, but not absolute, being restricted by the nature of its trust, and by the terms of the Constitution. The Territories are the common property of the States, and the power of Congress over them cannot be perverted to the partial advantage of any section. That would be repugnant to justice and subversive of the equality of the States. Slavery exists under the law, and its exclusion by Congress from the Federal territory would be in flagrant derogation of the rights of the South and the equitable spirit of the Constitution. Wherefore, Congress cannot interpose to the disparagement of slavery in the Territories. But, polygamy enjoys no such recognition.

It is not only unknown to the Constitution, but is repugnant to every principle of republican government. It does not exist in any State; but, on the contrary, is prohibited, by penal enactment, in every State of the Union. Hence I affirm that no suppression in the Territories by the direct agency of Congress would promote the established policy of the States, and operate in vindication of the prevalent spirit of the Constitution. There is, then, no association, no alliance, no analogy between polygamy and slavery; and the prohibition of the one system by an exertion of Federal power in no way impairs the security of the other.

Mr. Speaker, there remains still another objection on principle to the bill before the House. Some gentlemen understand polygamy to be an institution of the Mormon Church, and say, as such, to enjoy impunity under that clause of the Constitution which forbids the enactment of any law in restraint of religious liberty.

Now, sir, this argument, if sound in principle, will avail to exempt any abomination which affects religious worship. It will suffice for the protection of Thugism or Suttee, as well as polygamy. Plainly, then, it is an unsound argument and a pernicious philosophy which conducts to such absurd and mischievous consequences.

But, and which the honorable member declares, it is not true that polygamy tends to any religious sanction. It is not true that the Mormons practice it as a pious observance.

Mr. HOOPER. The gentleman from Virginia is in error when he states that polygamy is not recognized by the religion of the people of Utah. It is to him that it is recognized by the Mormon faith.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. Speaker, I have looked through the Mormon Bible—a disgusting farrago of nonsense and blasphemy, written in ribald parody of the more obvious characteristics of Scripture and the more exalted precepts of the Bible; an exposition of the Mormon faith, and nowhere do I find a word in recognition of the practice of polygamy.

It is objected again, sir, even by some of those who approve the principle of the bill, that the exercise of the coercive intervention of Congress for the suppression of polygamy in the Territories will provoke a violent resistance from the Mormon population. Sir, this is the first time I have ever known an argument against legislation for the abatement of an abuse to be based upon the strength and insolence of that abuse. If, indeed, it be true, that Mormonism is already so powerful and audacious as to defy the legitimate authority of Congress, then is there urgent need for the most prompt and effective prohibition of polygamy. The loss of the river, the loss of the horses, the loss of the waters to pass by that he might cross the river, will be surpassed by us, if we defer legislation against polygamy from apprehension of its resentment and recourses. Sir, this objection to the bill only commends it the more strongly to my judgment.

Having, I trust, successfully surmounted the difficulties in the way of congressional legislation for the suppression of polygamy in the Territories, I cannot suppose it necessary to urge any inducement to an immediate and vigorous exertion of the power. I will not suspect for a moment that any gentleman here hesitates to apply whatever authority Congress may possess to the instant extirpation of that scandalous iniquity. Its existence for so long a period has already compromised the character of the country. Sir, there is something shockingly incongruous in the association of the polygamous practices of a barbarous age and a debased people with the Christian civilization of the nineteenth century and the chastened liberality of this enlightened nation. We boast of our freedom, our religious and moral superiority; but in the glow of patriotic pride we must blush with a sense of responsibility for the sordid superstitions of this Mormon sect.

What person of pure sensibilities and pious aspirations but is shocked and humiliated by the spectacle of a community that so openly and so wantonly are a reproach in the eyes of the nation?

a reproach upon civil liberty, as exhibiting to what extravagance of licentious development republican institutions may conduce; and a reproach upon religious freedom, as betraying the excesses of depravity which may flourish under shelter of indiscriminate toleration. Nor is the existence of Mormonism an altogether insignificant obstruction in the path of our progress to material greatness. History abounds in impressive illustrations of the lesson that polygamy is incompatible with the nature of a vigorous race and the energetic development of civilization. Nor is the experience of Mormonism an altogether insignificant illustration of the system by the bitter fruits of addition and crime. If, then, we would avert the scorn of Christendom, and protect our country from the blight of the most consuming curse that can fall upon a nation, let us not hesitate, because of any scruple of legal technicality, to employ the most efficacious expedient for the suppression of polygamy within the limits of the Republic.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I recollect a short time ago seeing an account of a colloquy between two friends, in regard to the certainty of the final coming of the millennium—when the lion and lamb were to lie down together. One was finally convinced by the other that the time would eventually come, but he hesitated in making the admission, he was consulting the propriety of believing that the lamb would be inside the lion. [Laughter.] We have the lion, and the lamb now apparently lying down together in the House of Representatives, and it remains for the historian to ascertain hereafter which is the lion, and which is the lamb. [Renewed laughter.] For the first time since I have been a member of Congress do I see—though with some slight exhibitions of protest, it is true—my Democratic friends and the Republican party harmonizing in relation to this controverted and vexed question of the suppression of polygamy in the Territories of the United States. "To that complexion has it come at last."

That my morality may not be questioned at any future time, I announce in the beginning that I shall not shrink from the bill, and I shall not shrink in view the same end—the abolition of polygamy in Utah. My readiness to do so is attributable, I am sure, in a great degree, to my early policy. [Laughter.] I believe sincerely, however, that the suppression of this evil, understood fully, and with a knowledge of the congressional power involved in voting it, that man will not be in a position hereafter to deny consistently that Congress, by "unfriendly legislation" upon this and kindred subjects, may cripple slavery in the Territories. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] felt the force of this when a few days ago, he presented a substitute for the bill. He is a cautious and observant gentleman, and readily perceived, as I suppose, that the first section of the bill, which creates the offense of bigamy in the Territories, is a positive violation of the Constitution, which has the right or power to legislate in regard to the "domestic institutions" of the people of the organized Territories. He offered his amendment or substitute at the earliest possible moment—a substitute which enables him to obviate the difficulty of pointing out the unconstitutional character of the bill, and which it will be very convenient for him to refer to hereafter when he gets into a congressional canvass; and by which he will, no doubt, be able satisfactorily to show his constituents that he had nothing to do with this transaction. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman's support of the bill rest upon the ground that he believes in doing so he is asserting the doctrine of the power of Congress over the subject of slavery? Mr. ETHERIDGE. The gentleman will avail all my reasons in favor of the passage of the bill by waiting until I get through with my remarks. I intend to be as clear and explicit as I can. I desire so to act and speak in regard to this matter that neither my vote nor my reasons for it need be misinterpreted, and I understand the effect of the bill; and my remarks are designed as a kind warning to certain gentlemen who may not have examined closely its provisions, and who are not fully conscious of its lack of harmony with some modern political theories. I am making up my general remarks on the bill. I have made up my mind to do so. This course accords with my judgment, and unlike other gentlemen, who may desire to act with reference to the effect their course may have on their constituents, I feel no such restraints. Having no political future, because I have no political aspirations, I am willing and anxious to meet this question, and ready to aid in strangling this inquiry while we may, without detriment to our domestic fortune of political parties. As I said before, my advocacy of the bill, if gentlemen desire it, may be attributed to my early training—in the moral precepts which were taught me in my earlier years.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. My friend from Tennessee has no political future; but in reference to his own piety he takes this position. In respect to that piety, I ask him if he has a future?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I have; and I will remind my friend from New York, and warn him, too, of the old piety saying, that "Those who have grown gray in sin

Are hardened in their crimes."

[Laughter.]

Now, sir, what I shall heretofore say is not to be construed into an attack upon the bill. I repeat, I am for it, sincerely so; and if this proposition fails, I shall go for the next best proposition which, to any extent, will break up this den of polygamists who now pollute the atmosphere of Utah.

When the bill was first reported, and until within the last few days, I supposed that it would meet but little opposition. In fact, my sympathy was somewhat excited at the inequality in number of the advocates and opposers of this restrictive measure; this interference with the conjugal happiness of so many of our fellow-citizens in this distant country. It is the first great battle between the pious monogamists and the patriarchal polygamists. Our conjugal friend from Utah [Mr. Hooper] is, I apprehend, almost the sole public champion of the happy state of many of his most prosperous constituents; and really the numerical odds which appear against him excite my sympathy; for I feel always a generous sympathy for the few in their struggle with the many.

But there is not only an important principle in this bill, as well as a great duty to perform. That principle I have already briefly referred to; and it might as well be stated now as heretofore, that the Republicans will not only claim the chief merit of the passage of this bill, but will also claim to it in after times as a direct legislative admission of the power of Congress over the domestic affairs of the people of the organized Territories, including negro slavery. Even now we can observe them exhibiting every mark of satisfaction as they behold our extreme Democratic friends moving into this political snare, which is contrary to the former expositions of your platform; and the kindness of my nature alone prompts me to warn gentlemen of the danger. I do not desire to have any one mislead by carelessness or inadvertence. This question of the power of Congress to regulate the domestic institutions and relations of the white people of Utah is one which necessarily and unavoidably brings up the whole question of the power of Congress to govern those Territories in availing which relates to their domestic affairs—slavery included. Gentlemen feel it, and it is useless to attempt to avoid the force of what I have said by a denial only.

Now, I regret that this question of the power of Congress to govern the Territories promises to be, in the future, as in the past, a controverted one—a question which is to be always open and controverted, and upon which it seems next to impossible to obtain anything like unanimity on the part of our public men. Every three or four years, I am, out of obedience to what seems to be the will of the public mind, required to be required by the Democratic party to change some former opinion—to subscribe to some new dogma or party platform. I hardly get my political catechism memorized before I am required to renounce my teachings and take the opposite ground.

I was reading, a day or two ago, from the opinion of Judge Tancy in the Dred Scott case, a remark of his, which struck me with some force, and though it was made in regard to another question—to wit, whether, or not a negro should be regarded as a "citizen"—yet, if these words,

"negro" and "citizen," had been stricken out, and "power of Congress over the Territories" inserted, the Republican members would have seized upon it as an argument to support their construction of the Constitution. I will read it:

"We have the language of the Declaration of Independence, and of the Articles of Confederation, in addition to the fact that the Constitution itself is a declaration of the different States, before, about the time, and since, the Constitution was adopted; we have the legislative enactments, from the time of its adoption to the present period; and we have the constant and uniform action of the executive department, all concurring together, and leading to the same result."

What "result"? That the negro was not a citizen of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution.

Here we find the highest judicial tribunal of this country pointing to the action of Congress for sixty years, to the opinions of its Attorneys General; to the action of State Legislatures; to public opinion itself, to show what was the proper construction of the Constitution in regard to the matter which was then being considered. Previous to 1848-49, the action of Congress, the executive department, and the opinions of those who made the Constitution, and the general acquiescence of the people, all might have been referred to as an argument in favor of the correctness of the action of the Government for the first sixty years of its existence, in governing the Territories, and exercising and maintaining jurisdiction over the domestic institutions of the people thereof. I say this was the generally received opinion of our public men up to 1848-49. Then the whole question was reviewed, and it resulted, in 1850, in a compromise of opinion, by which the whole subject of the government of the Territories was referred to the people—as in the case of New Mexico and Utah—reserving only to Congress the right to dissent from any legislative acts of the Legislatures of these Territories which Congress might not approve. Well, that doctrine was in fact the platform of the Whig and Democratic parties of 1852; and both these parties, in the presidential contest of that year, declared it should be thereafter adhered to; and all parties were required to say that the congressional action of 1850, in regard to this specific question in the Territories, should be forever maintained.

Well, in 1854, the catechism was again revised by the passage of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, the principal feature of which was, that the legislative power of Congress had applied to the Territories of Utah and New Mexico was proper as far as it went, but that it did not go far enough; that you must give the people of Kansas and Nebraska the power to regulate all their "domestic institutions" in their own way, subject to no restraint whatever, except the restraint imposed upon them by the Constitution, which restraint, as every one knew, existed before you imposed it by the terms of the bill. But you went further, and said that you cared not what they might do in regard to their domestic institutions, you would not interfere with them. Everybody was required to give to this new article in the Democratic catechism; to declare it the settled policy of the whole country, and particularly of the South. Thus stood the matter until 1860, when the catechism of Democratic Congress had applied to the Territories revised. All the teachings of the faithful in 1856 are now to be regarded as so much babble; and I am now required by the Democratic leaders of the section of country in which I live to say that Congress has plenary power over the Territories, provided always that that power shall be exercised alone upon one side—[laughter] upon the southern side. It—the power of Congress—according to modern Democratic teaching, can be exercised only in favor of the negro, or, rather, in favor of slavery in the Territories; and never against slavery. I have now given the reading of the catechism. It may not be published until after the Charleston convention; but it will soon have an indorsement a thousand times more powerful than was given to the Impending Crisis of Helper.

I revert to these things to show you how public opinion has been unsettled by the action of political conventions, and by the action of politicians. And to-day no man can tell, with any degree of certainty, what the people will be required to believe in reference to the power of Congress over the Territories four years hence. I confess

I am afloat; I am drifting along at the mercy of the winds and waves, hoping and trusting that I will ultimately find some peaceful place to pilow my head—if nowhere else, at home, among those who would gladly see fraternal relations restored among the brethren of a common country—a country they love because of its blessings.

I repeat, it is my belief that the people will keep up with these new teachings and changes of those who seek to control and direct public opinion.

Now, sir, what are domestic institutions? They consist simply of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, master and servant, and master and slave. I believe that the Constitution embraces the entire list, as recognized in the law books. Now, when you have said to the people of those Territories, that they may form and regulate their own domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States—which restriction Mr. Benton declared was a stump speech injected into the body of the bill—you stipulated with them that they should exercise this power in all cases. I have enumerated all the domestic relations known to the laws of this country; and I appeal to you whether I have not enumerated them correctly.

And I ask, if Congress can take jurisdiction of the relation of husband and wife, may it not also exercise jurisdiction in regard to another domestic relation? Now, "forewarned is forearmed."

I know that many of our friends are now inviting attention to these things to produce "difficulties in the family." But I disclaim any such purpose. There is domestic trouble enough in Utah, without increasing it here. I have but announced my deliberate legal opinion, which I trust I shall always have the more confidence to call for whenever the occasion and my public duty allow it. Domestic institutions have been about the same from the beginning of time. Go back to the days of Abraham. Ask my patriarchal friend from Utah, the sole representative of the "domestic institutions" of the ruling course of State of Utah—"domestic," I might say, in an eminent degree, [laughter]—and he will tell you that his constituents are attempting to perpetuate the manners and customs of antiquity, and it is unadvised in us to say that this bill does not interfere with one of the "domestic institutions" of society. The Delegate from Utah, who is the sole representative of the people of that Territory, I am sure will feel that the American Congress is disposed to proscribe a portion of his fellow-citizens, by interfering with their domestic institutions; and his sensibilities must be touched at the prospect of passing a measure, the effect of which will be to drive many a wife and matron from home which are endeared by an exuberance of conjugal love, and thus cause them to sorrow alone in the face of an unyielding world. [Laughter.] Do you suppose the people of Utah would have taken this liberty of remodeling their domestic institutions, and falling back upon the customs of the patriarchal age, if they had not given them the power to reform and regulate their domestic institutions? And ought they then to be told that they are to be told that they are to have all domestic affairs, "the people of a Territory, like those of a State," were sovereign and independent? And should not some of our friends be lenient to these deluded Mormons, who are so ready, for their own justification, to appropriate to themselves the force of the example of the patriarchal age? And do not these friends of ours—unnecessarily, I admit—also point to Abraham, with his flocks and herds, his horses and his cattle, his man-servants and his maid-servants, as a conclusive authority and vindication for our own peculiar institution, when assailed by fanaticism? And ought we not to be somewhat kind and forbearing, when we hear our patriarchal friend from Utah exclaim, "We have Abraham to our father." [Laughter.] I feel the force of these things; but I still feel hesitating in my own considerations, to grapple with this monster, polygamy, while it is in its infancy and may be subdued.

Now, sir, I maintain that all writers on jurisprudence have alluded to the domestic relations declare husband and wife to be the most sacred. That of master and servant, or master and slave, are certainly not regarded as any more sacred than that of husband and wife and parent and child. If, sir, there is anything in the world for which, sooner than another, a man will peril his life, everything, it is for his wife, the mother of his children; and it must not be forgotten that these divided people regard polygamy not only as a part of their social relations, but as a feature in their religion.

Now I am favoring this measure, I admit, with a perfect consciousness of all the legal consequences fairly involved in the passage of this bill. I very much resent one of the most intelligent, religious and moral districts in the whole country; and my constituents, without respect to party, have desired me to use my feeble influence to put down this monstrosity; this offense against religion, and against the laws of God. There is no important legal principle conceded in this bill, to wit: that we have the power to break up this abomination in Utah; but I propose, by leave of the House, to extend the application a little, because it is a very dangerous premise, which, when conceded, proves too much. I maintain that this bill concedes too much for that class of southern politicians who maintain that the Constitution carries slavery into all the organized Territories, whether the people of such Territories favor it or oppose it, and that it is the duty of Congress to legislate in this, and to maintain slavery there, without any regard whatever to the popular will. As this bill concedes the right or power of Congress to legislate against a domestic institution, I propose, I say, to extend the application, and see whether the poisonous chalice may not be passed to the people of our own lips. Now, perhaps, I should not, were I to consult the wishes of gentlemen, speak with this sort of freedom—certainly not if I were restrained by selfish considerations—but having no interest in my country but that of a citizen who desires its peace and prosperity, and no motive of a political nature, no aspirations to make me unkind or to warp my judgment, I shall indulge in a fair and candid expression of honest opinion, unswayed by anybody. I propose to notice some offenses not mentioned in this bill, but which are of a kindred nature, and though they are not so much talked of, yet they might be easily embraced in this bill. I almost dislike to name them; but it is said, "the galleries should have no ears."

An acquaintance of mine, a candidate for Congress last year, was sitting in the gallery of the committee, who said he intended to vote for him for Congress; but before doing so, he wanted an explanation from him. "I see," said he, "that there is a terrible thing in the western country; a woman who is giving the Government a deal of trouble out in the Territories. They call her Poly Gammy; who is she?" "Why," said my friend, "she is the favorite wife of Brigham Young." [Laughter.] Now, if I had some other name than the correct one for some offenses, proper to be mentioned in this connection, I certainly should appropriate it.

I repeat, there are other offenses of a kindred character to polygamy. Take, for instance, the crime of incest, adultery, and other offenses that are well known to lawyers, and which I need not enumerate very particularly; not one of which offenses can be called moderate; they are all malum prohibitum. Now, why does this bill limit the punishment to the offense of polygamy, and omit incest and adultery—punish married persons and not the unmarried? The answer, of course, is, that polygamy is the worst offense, the oddest; but here here the power to add incest and adultery to the offense of polygamy—to punish the single as well as the married. I give this illustration to show that the principle conceded by the first section of the bill may be extended so as to embrace all offenses of a kindred nature. They are not made in one country, and have in others been introduced by statutory regulation. Do not gentlemen, therefore, see that the application of the principle of this bill might be extended so as to embrace all the offenses I have mentioned? No gentleman will say that the application of this principle may not be extended so as to embrace them all. And if you can extend the principle so as to embrace them, may you not extend it so as to embrace all persons, of every color, to whom Congress may desire to apply it? If Congress has power to regulate the domestic relations of white people in the Territories, why not also a Republic like ours, and hereafter consistently propose to extend it to the relations between black men and women also?

It cannot be said that the legal relation of husband and wife exists among the slave population. Every lawyer will admit that marriage can be legally contracted only by free persons, and there is not a slave State in the Union—if there is I would thank gentlemen to correct me—that allows marriage among slaves, and regards it as that legal civil contract which is essential and indispensable to a legal marriage.

Mr. MALLORY. In reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, I will state that there is a common law prevailing throughout the slave States of the Union which regards the marriage contract between slaves as sacred. There is no statute in this Union which forbids my State to do this; and I believe in every other slave State this is the case.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I have examined this question to-day, and all the law writers say that marriage can only be contracted by persons who are free.

There is not an exception. It is certainly true, as I remarked, that there is not a slave State in the Union that regards the relation of husband and wife among slaves, save only so far as the master may be pleased to regard it; and it affords me an opportunity to say that in a large majority of instances they respect this relation; but that is not attributable to the provisions of the laws, but to the humanity of the masters.

Mr. MALLORY. The lex non scripta.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. The law not written does not apply to the slave population, whom we regard as having no legal rights, except those specially conferred upon them by law, of which the right to contract marriage is not one. But to allow that negroes can be made subject to the legislation of Congress, and extend the same application to the provisions of this bill, I have but to point to the fact that in every slave State in the Union negroes are regarded as capable of committing all offenses that may be committed by white men. There is scarcely a misdemeanor or crime known to the law which is not committed by negroes, and is not punishable in all cases with more or less severity. Petty larceny, for instance, is punished with less severity.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. Does the statute of your State prohibit fornication among negroes?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I remember no regulation on that subject; but the legislation of every State can at any time declare it a misdemeanor or a felony. I ask the gentleman this question: If Congress has power to interdict offenses among white people in the Territories, may it not among black people or slaves?

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. How can you prohibit a second marriage among slaves, when, according to the gentleman's own argument, they cannot marry the first time?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. The gentleman will admit that I have shown that if Congress has power to prohibit polygamy, it may likewise prohibit adultery and all kindred offenses; and I ask the gentleman if Congress cannot extend the application of its laws to blacks as well as to whites?

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. I say not, if the question is limited to me.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. The gentleman says not; but I have too much respect for his legal ability to believe that when he comes to look into the question he will arrive at any such conclusion.

Now, if you fall back upon the late edition of the Declaration of Independence, that every citizen who goes into the Territories carries with him the laws of his domicile—in other words, that every southern man who carries a slave into the Territories carries also with him the slave laws of the State where he emigrates—then gentlemen will be compelled to admit that if polygamy had existed anterior to the formation of the Federal Constitution in the old thirteen States, it would now lawfully exist in the Territories. I presume no one will deny it. Certainly no gentleman will deny it who has said that whosoever a slaveholder goes into a Territory with slave property, he carries with him the slave laws of the State from which he comes. If the original thirteen States that formed the Federal Constitution; but no one will deny that any State has the power at any time to change its organic laws, and permit polygamy. Well, suppose, for the sake of the argument, that all the States in this Union were now to allow polygamy; then gentlemen will have to concede that polygamists would be allowed to go into the Territories of the United States and be protected by Congress in the enjoyment of this peculiar institution—of their property.

If, then, it comes to this; that the interpretation of the Constitution is made to depend, not upon the reading of the Constitution itself, but upon the whimsical action of the several States. You say that you now have authority under the Constitution to interdict polygamy in the Territories; but suppose the States were to legalize it, then our political high priests would doubtless permit these Mormons to go into the Territories with their families, however numerous, and to establish their harems there in defiance of the power of Congress. This is certainly a new mode by which to interdict the Constitution. I am prepared with very high Democratic authority to show that such a position is indefensible. It is absurd. I will read again from the opinion of the Chief Justice in the celebrated case of Dred Scott.

Mr. LAMAR. Will the gentleman allow me to point him to his place?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. As soon as I get through with the extract I wish to read. Judge Taney says, in regard to all attempts to construe the Constitution with reference to changes in public sentiment, since its formation:

"No one, we presume, supposes that any change in public opinion can so radically and intentionally alter the meaning of the Constitution as to change the rights of the civilized nations of Europe, or in this country, should induce the court to give to the words of the Constitution a new and different meaning; and that every thing intended to be done by the instrument was frustrated and adopted. Such an argument would be altogether inadmissible in any tribunal called on to interpret it. If any of its provisions are deemed unjust, there is a mode prescribed in the instrument itself by which it may be amended, but while it remains unaltered, it must be construed now as it was understood at the time of its adoption. It is not only the same in words, but the same in meaning, and delegates the same powers to the Government, and reserves and secures the same rights and privileges to the citizen; and no less so it contains the same guaranty of freedom to the same words, but with the same meaning and intent with which it spoke when it came from the hands of its framers, and with which it has since been received by the people. Any other rule of construction would abrogate the judicial character of this court, and make it the mere creature of the popular passions of the moment. Neither is it created by the Constitution for such purposes. Higher and graver trusts have been confided to it, and it must not fail to discharge them."

I ask then, gentlemen, how can the different States of this Union, by introducing polygamy, legalize it in the Territories? And that is precisely the position that all must assume who maintain that when a person goes from one of the States of the Union into the Territories, he carries with him the laws of the State from which he emigrates in regard to the property he carries with him. We are told here, day by day, that the Constitution of the United States recognizes slavery. It has been repeated over and over again, until the superficial hearer supposes that there is no other law in the Territories than the Constitution in regard to slavery. Now, sir, I am ready to maintain that the Constitution of the United States does not recognize slavery, or guaranty slavery, any more than it recognizes or guarantees the relation of husband and wife, or parent and child. By the same law which would recognize a fugitive slave, you can recapture your son or your indentured apprentice, if either should escape from the State in which you live and be found in another State.

Now, sir, the recognition of a thing, and the Blackstone says, in speaking of freedom, that it was controllable in his day by the temporal courts; that in 1850, when the law was not so much for their interests to put on the semblance of great purity of morals, incest and adultery were made capital crimes. But at the Restoration, men fell into a contrary extreme of licentiousness, when the rigor of the law was not renewed. These offenses that are not made in any one country, and have in others been introduced by statutory regulation. Do not gentlemen, therefore, see that the application of the principle of this bill might be extended so as to embrace all the offenses I have mentioned? No gentleman establishment or creation of it, are very different things.

Mr. LAMAR. That is just the point at which I would like to see my question.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Very well. I will hear you. Mr. LAMAR. I wish to know whether the gentleman maintains and asserts the power of Congress to punish slavery as a crime in the Territories of the United States?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I will answer the question fully before I close—if not sooner, when I come to state my reasons for consenting to vote for the bill. I am now, however, endeavoring to point out the difficulties some of my friends upon the other side of the House may have in arriving at a similar conclusion, for they may not be able to discern them readily. [Laughter.] I desire this great reform in Utah should be effected, and I shall go very far to accomplish it, but I will not permit my friends on the other side "to go it blindly." [Renewed laughter.]

I do return to this constitutional recognition or guarantee of slavery. I say if this be true, and you have, therefore, a constitutional right to your negro; you have the same right to your wife, to your children, and to your apprentice. I repeat, there is a great difference between the recognition of a right or a thing, and the establishment of that thing or that right. Sir, the old thirteen States are recognized by the Constitution; but did the Constitution create them? The Constitution recognizes certain rivers, bays and mountains; but did the Constitution create or make, or establish them? The Constitution recognizes foreign Powers—Powers which have existed for centuries; but, I ask, did the Constitution create or establish any one of these Powers, which it recognizes in terms? It recognizes slavery by implication in the same article in which it also recognizes husband and wife, parent and child. Any man who lives in a State where the common law of England prevails, may invoke the aid of the Constitution or the law of Congress for the reclamation of his fugitive wife, child, or apprentice. I repeat that any man who lives in a State in which the common law of England has not been abolished, may claim the provisions of the fugitive slave law for the surrender of his fugitive wife, his minor child, or his indentured apprentice, to the same extent as the master who seeks to recapture his slave. By the common law the relation between parent and child, master and apprentice, and master and slave, is in kind almost identical, or the same. The only difference that exists is in the degree of power and authority, and the duration of the reciprocal relations or duties they owe each other.

Why, sir, your son owes you his service and labor until he be twenty-one years of age. You owe him, in return, your protection and moral training; and that is precisely the relation which exists between you and your child. The slave owes you his service and labor. There is this difference, however; that the property in your child, or your right to his service or labor, ceases when he becomes twenty-one years of age; while your property in your slave and your right to his service and labor extends to his whole life, and he should be a slave for life. With this exception, your power in both cases is, in kind, about the same. Your power over your child includes the right to chastise him; and you may hire him as another, if you please; but, as I have already said, your right to his labor and your power of control ceases when his minority ceases; while, in the case of the slave, your control continues during his life.

Now, sir, if your slave, your son, or your apprentice, escapes from a State where the common law prevails, into another State, you have the same right, founded upon the same authority, to pursue and recapture the one as the other. The proceeding is a simple one. In the case of the child or apprentice, you would have to prove, before a commission or a court of law, that he had been committed to your custody, and that he had been taken by the law of the State whence they fled, you were entitled to their labor or service, and that they were fugitives; in which event, the father or the master, as the case might be, would be entitled to a surrender of the fugitive, precisely as is the case with a slave. And so, in regard to the fugitive escaping from a State in which the common law of England prevails.

Until within the last few years, the right of the husband to chastise the wife for good cause was recognized in many of the States, as a common law right; and now, wherever the common law prevails, his right to her labor and to all her earnings is almost identical with the right of the master to the earnings of the slave; and it must not be forgotten, that the common law was in force in all the States when the Federal Constitution was adopted. I say, therefore, that I am right, recognized by the Constitution, in my right to my slave, inasmuch as the right recognized by the same instrument of the father or master to the apprentice or the child, or of the husband to the custody, the labor, and the earnings of the wife.

Now, sir, the relation between master and slave, it should be remembered, is older than the Constitution, and exists to-day in the southern States of this Union upon a basis tenfold stronger and more enduring than any supposed guarantees found in the Constitution. If you place it upon this risky platform of the Constitution, you warn you are thereby throwing away your strongest safeguards for its protection. The object of that clause in the Constitution was merely to secure, by compact between sovereign States, the enforcement of a personal remedy for the recapture of a thing, which, when the guarantee of the Constitution would have been left alone to the comity of the States. If you hold your slaves by virtue of the Constitution, instead of the laws of the States, which in many cases are older than the Constitution, will you not have to look to the Federal Government for protection to slave property? And will you not thereby do yourselves an ultimate injury, because of the abandonment of the stronger position which I have always assumed—that the Constitution carries slavery nowhere, and is not even prohibited to it. To show that I am right, I put this case: If your slave escapes from you, and does not go out of the State in which you reside, you may invoke the Federal Government—the fugitive slave law—bill do me day to capture him; but the Federal Government will give you no relief until the slave passes beyond the jurisdiction in which he resides to another State, at which time the slave may be arrested by authority of the Federal Government, and not before. But the Federal Government does not go beyond this. To this extent it goes, and no farther, because this is the limit of the recognition of slavery contained in the Constitution. At this point the Constitution has performed its full office, and beyond this you cannot invoke its aid.

Mr. JENKINS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question, for he has been indulging in rather severe strictures upon the doctrines of the Democratic party. I understand the gentleman to hold that my title to a slave which I take into one of the Territories of the United States is not recognized by the Constitution, and that from whence I come. What, I ask the gentleman, is the source, from whence I derive the title to my slave, then, if not from those laws?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. So far as regards any strictures I may have indulged in upon the doctrines of the Democratic party, I am not a gentleman that I have learned these doctrines from the teachings of that party, for I have been for years hunted down in my own State by the members of that party for not acceding to their great discovery of the right of the people of the Territories "to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way." I learned them some years ago in this House, when they began their denunciations against me for protesting against the repeal of the Missouri compromise at the time of the passage of the Kansas Nebraska bill.

Desoultre in this House and at the time as containing these odious features of which I now speak—"squatter sovereignty;" and for that I was assailed in a spirit of bitterness by the Democratic party. And, sir, my opposition to that Kansas bill was not based altogether upon selfish motives. I felt satisfied that that compromise was broken down it could do the South no good; it might produce much mischief. How was it possible for the South, with its feeble numbers, feeble in comparison with the North, to emigrate to the Territories and compete with the millions of the North in a struggle for political supremacy? I was in favor of retaining that compromise, which gave protection to the South in all the Territories south of it. I saw then, as clearly as I see now, that we could have no hope in this sort of a contest—a contest in which soil, climate, and a preponderance of population in the free States, to say nothing of the foreign population, of which there were then arriving about a half a million a year, were to be encountered. I was unwilling to provoke such a contest.

It cannot be forgotten that every acquisition of territory by this country since the formation of the Government, with the exception of Florida, has sooner or later provoked an angry agitation of the slavery question. The first great out of the acquisition of the Territory of Louisiana. It was renewed at the time of the annexation of Texas; and again when we conquered from Mexico California, Utah, and New Mexico. The first settlement of this slavery question was made for the country known as the Louisiana Territory—it was the Missouri compromise. On the application for the admission of Missouri an angry controversy arose, which I will refer to only to say that it was settled by the compromise of 1820.

The annexation of Texas produced other dangers, and provoked additional agitation, which was, however, happily adjusted by extending the Missouri compromise through that State at the time of its admission. It was again renewed to us, this we acquired Utah, New Mexico, and California, as I have stated, when this disturbing element again provoked angry wrangling and debate. The struggle ended, however, as we all know, in the compromise measures of 1850, which were regarded as a finality; which were supposed to be a final settlement of the whole subject. Thus we see that whenever the Union of the States has been endangered, as it was at each of these periods, the dangers which were then impending upon our Union, and which were, I am persuaded, regarded as honorable by all parties at the time, it is historically true that each of these compromises was sanctioned and approved by the most distinguished men of all parties; that they restored and maintained peace between the North and the South, and that peace was better to us than the cal of evils of the day. We all feel and know that these things are so. I have never regarded the mode of settling the slavery question so important as letting it alone after it is settled. You settled it in 1820.

Mr. SINGLETON. I want to know exactly what is the gentleman's position, and I hope he will let me propose an interrogatory to him.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Certainly, sir.

Mr. SINGLETON. I understand the gentleman to say that he is in favor of a bill which admits the power of Congress to regulate slavery in the Territories, to abolish it, to drive it out of the Territories if it should be deemed proper to do so. Do I understand the gentleman correctly? I hope the gentleman will give me a straightforward answer, and not a compromise man. I have put a plain question, and I hope the gentleman will answer it in the same spirit.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I will give the gentleman an answer, and I may mix up the answer with a little Democracy. [Laughter.] In my judgment, the power to regulate this question of slavery or polygamy in the Territories, and which this bill applies to white people, may with equal propriety be applied to the negro, if Congress should think proper to do so. This bill involves a concession

Mr. SINGLETON. That is not an answer.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. If Congress can, by a system of "unfriendly legislation," disturb or interfere with the domestic relations of the white race, it can, in my judgment, interfere with the domestic relations of the negro race, if Congress can, by imposing a fine of $500 and imprisonment for two years, punish white men for the offense of polygamy, as provided by the bill, it may certainly extend the provisions of the bill and embrace adultery as an offense, and punish a promiscuous man, a white man, if we may do the one, certainly we have power to do the other. Whoever votes for this bill must, therefore, do so with the express or implied admission that Congress has power to punish all offenses of this kind in the Territories, without reference to the persons who may be found guilty of the offense.

If Congress should hereafter become perverse enough to attempt such "unfriendly legislation," and make the application to slaves in the organized Territories, I apprehend this bill will be cited as a precedent for such "unfriendly legislation" against slavery. Should the attempt ever be made, I have too much respect for the fairness and liberality of the great body of the American people, of my countrymen, to believe that a controlling majority can ever be found in Congress who will seize this as a pretext to adopt any such annoying legislation in regard to slaves in the Territories—the common property of all the people. I shall not withhold my approval of this bill because of any fear I have of any such result, as I have said that this is a concession of the power of Congress to interdict slavery in the Territories by "unfriendly legislation."

Mr. SINGLETON. There is a good deal of circumlocution about the question, in answer. I have made the sincerest efforts to understand the gentleman, and I do not understand him yet. I put it to him in all candor whether, by voting for this bill, as he says he intends to do, he thereby publishes to the world that he recognizes the power of Congress to abolish slavery in the Territories whenever it may think proper?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I have repeatedly stated that I was in favor of driving this nauseating and disgusting crime of polygamy from the face of the earth. I desire to see it accomplished, sir. I am not in favor of doing it, I will claim, sir, the power to do so. I have already admitted that in doing so, in legal effect, we are making a concession of the power of Congress over the Territories; which, by an extension of the principle, can be made to embrace all the Territories, as well as white people; and that the only guarantee I have against the use of any such power in the future, to the prejudice of the slaveholder in the Territories, is in the good sense and liberality and forbearance of Congress in withholding the "unfriendly legislation" which I desire.

Mr. SINGLETON. You have declared every man upon this side of the House who votes for this bill recognizes the power of Congress to abolish slavery in, or to exclude slavery from, the Territories. Do you publish to the world that there is the position you assume when you vote for the bill?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. If Congress is disposed to pass "unfriendly legislation" in regard to the social intercourse and domestic relations of the white people of Utah, it may, I apprehend, extend its action, and include black people also. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLSON. I have a single question. The gentleman says if this be extended to white people it may be extended to black people in the Territories. I put it to the gentleman whether there is any sort of objection to applying it to black men and black women in the Territories, who are free, and capable of contracting marriage?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. None in the world. I understand the very basis of this legislation to be that polygamy is offensive to the American people, the enlightened spirit of the age. It is offensive to religion.

Mr. PRYOR. As I have already indicated, I propose to vote for this bill. The honorable gentleman from Tennessee declares that he regards the vote of every gentleman who supports this bill as tantamount to an acknowledgment of the right of Congress to abolish slavery in the Territories. That may be true of that gentleman, and of course it is true, because what he imputes to us we must declare for himself. I would to repudiate the proposition so far as I am concerned, and to say that I observe a distinction between slavery and polygamy under the Constitution.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I know that the honorable gentleman does, for he has stated it. I am only speaking for myself.

Mr. PRYOR. Very well, then. Let that be understood.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Of course I am not responsible for the opinions of others.

Mr. LAMAR. The gentleman has not answered my question, in whether the gentleman asserts the power, the constitutional competency, of Congress to declare and punish slavery in the Territories as a felony or a crime!

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I say, sir, that I admit the power of Congress to legislate over the black population of the Territories, and to increase the very same offenses that Congress assumes to legislate about where the white people of a Territory are concerned. I say that while this bill upon its face does not embrace negroes who are slaves, yet that Congress has the power, according to the principles of this bill, either to increase the number of offenses or to extend the punishment contemplated to negroes who are slaves. Every man must know that this legislation is based upon the idea that this illicit association of the people of Utah is subversive of good morals, and offensive in the sight of God and man.

My friend from Kentucky [Mr. MALLORY] referred a while ago to the marriage of slaves. I have here the authority to sustain the statement I made—

Mr. LAMAR. Before the gentleman goes to that, I will put a question to him.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. One thing at a time. Mr. LAMAR. I am so much indebted to the gentleman for the clear answer he has given me, that I want to put another question to him.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. The gentleman will pardon me. I understand, but a few minutes more of my time left.

I will read an extract from the law book I hold in my hand upon the point I referred to in reference to the marriage of slaves. Marriage is defined as follows:

"A contract made in due form of law, by which a free man and a free woman engage to live with each other during their joint lives, in the union which exists between husband and wife. By the terms free man and free woman, in this definition, are meant, not only that they are free, not slaves, but also that they are clear of all bars to free marriage."

Mr. MALLORY. Which case is that?

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Here is a list of cases cited in the authority from which I read, almost as long as Pennsylvania avenue, and the gentleman can take his choice of them. [Laughter.]

I read in Boyer's Law Dictionary:—

I am reminded, Mr. Speaker, that I have but five minutes of my hour left. I have submitted gracefully to interruptions. I know that it is an ungrateful task to unfold to any political party the dangers which are involved in a step it thus far declines to take. I shall not be surprised, if we postpone a vote on this bill for a day or two, to find my opinions sustained by many of the most cautious and intelligent leaders of the Democratic party.

I know many gentlemen are not willing to deny the legal conclusions fairly to be drawn from the principles conceded by this bill. I put it to gentlemen whether they are not bound to admit that by the passage of this bill they surrender, to a great extent, the controverted question of the power of Congress over the Territories; or, rather, the power to reach slavery by "unfriendly legislation."

I vote for the bill upon the ground that the moral sense of my constituents of all parties demands it. I shall positively be interested in the extirpation of this crime from Utah. I have seen and read various amendments proposed, intended designed to avoid the force of the view I have presented. My friend from North Carolina, [Mr. BRANCH], whom I have referred to already, will admit, if called upon, that the object of his amendment is to obviate the difficulty I have named, and escape a direct vote upon the bill.

Mr. BRANCH. I will say in response to the gentleman from Tennessee, that I had no such object in view as the dodging of any portion of the bill. My object was effectually to root out polygamy from Utah; and, to remove any suspicion the gentleman may have that I desire, either for myself or my friends, to dodge this bill, I tell him now, sir, distinctly, that I will never vote for the first section of Utah; that polygamy may continue to exist in Utah before I will vote to eradicate it by any one of the first sections of the bill.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. The gentleman is willing to take the responsibility and vote against it. He is a kind man, and felt some sympathy for his friends, and, sir, the amendment offered by him was designed to give his friends a narrow gangway upon which to escape from the wreck of the dangers behind them. I am sure that the amendment was kindly meant on his part, and offered in order that his Democratic friends, or some of them, might have a chance to avoid an inconsistent position which would be obvious were they to vote for this bill with a knowledge, as they already have, of the effect of its provisions, and the concession it makes to the power of Congress over the Territories.

I am willing to take all the responsibility in voting for this bill. This is a great exigency which I feel it is wrong to surrender that large Territory, to become in future time another Sodom and Gomorrah. I repeat, I will vote for this bill or any other which is sufficiently stringent to strike at the root of this acknowledged evil—this admitted crime.

Mr. TAYLOR obtains the floor, and spoke for an hour, in answer to the argument of Mr. MILLSON. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

During its delivery the following proceedings took place:

Mr. NELSON, (interrupting.) Mr. Speaker, several gentlemen have been inquiring whether a vote is to be taken on this bill this evening. I understand that a number of gentlemen desire to discuss it; and, with the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, I will say to you, so far as I am concerned, I shall not attempt to press a vote upon it this evening.

Mr. SHERMAN. I give gentlemen notice that this subject cannot be reached to-morrow in the regular order, and cannot be for a week to come; that if it is to be disposed of at all, it should be disposed of to-day. There are special orders extending from this day for at least two weeks.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I hope the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee will be adopted by the House, that no vote be taken this evening, and that the discussion be permitted to proceed.

Mr. PHELPS. It we cannot dispose of it to-day, and if special orders intervene, let it go over till another time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Gentlemen can settle this question for themselves.

Mr. T. continued his remarks.

Mr. PRYOR, (interrupting.) Mr. Speaker, it is now four o'clock, and as it is evident that my friend from Louisiana is somewhat exhausted, I will move an adjournment, if I may say this for that purpose. He has spoken half an hour, and he can occupy the residue of his hour to-morrow morning.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. PRYOR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BRANCH. There are a great many gentlemen who desire to speak upon this question; and if the gentleman from Louisiana can conveniently go on with his speech, I think it would be better for the convenience, go on this evening. I have been announced that there will be no vote called for on this bill this evening. I know the fact that there are a great many members who desire to speak—many more than can speak to-morrow; and if the gentleman from Louisiana can, with his kind permission, go on this evening, I think it would be greatly preferable; so that we may get off as many speeches as we can to-day, and be able to take a vote to-morrow evening.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is a special order set for to-morrow—the bill for the admission of Kansas.

Mr. BURNETT. That is a mistake. The Kansas bill was not made a special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that the Kansas bill was made a special order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the chairman of the Committee on Territories supposed that it was made a special order.

The SPEAKER. It will come up in its order. The Chair does not see how it can take precedence.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to say that this bill stands in the way of every other bill until it is disposed of; and there is no doubt that if we adjourn now, this bill will come up to-morrow, and will be debated all day to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That is the idea the Chair entertains.

porary government for the Territory of Arizona, and to create the office of surveyor general therein; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. No. 365) to provide for a temporary government in the Territory of Colorado; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of Francis Miller, praying compensation for extra services while assistant keeper of the penitentiary of the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 344) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend 'An act to establish a criminal court in the District of Columbia,'" reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 202) to reimburse the corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, a sum of money advanced towards the construction of the Little Falls bridge, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 147) to prevent malicious mischief at a protest meeting in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 213) to incorporate the United States Agricultural Society, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 295) authorizing the corporation of Georgetown to lay a special tax for distributing Potomac water through said town, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 343) amendatory of the act regulating the distribution of Potomac water throughout the city of Washington, approved March 3, 1859, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; which was agreed to.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom were introduced by a resolution of the Senate to inquire into the propriety of providing by law for the reception of the Japanese mission shortly expected to visit the United States, reported a joint resolution (No. 23) in regard to the mission from Japan; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of Frederick E. Sickels, praying that his application for an extension of his patent may be referred to the Commissioner of Patents, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 367) for the relief of Frederick E. Sickels. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOLK, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of the heirs of John Forsyth, praying that certain charges erroneously made against him in the settlement of his accounts as United States minister at Madrid, may be adjusted and the amount refunded, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 368) for the relief of the representatives of the late John Forsyth. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of the Mayor and Board of Aldermen of the city of Pensacola, Florida, praying that the title of the United States to certain lots in that city may be released to the city, reported adversely thereon.

PACIFIC MAILS.

Mr. GREEN submitted an amendment, which he gave notice of his intention to propose, to the bill (H. R. No. 304) inviting proposals for carrying the entire mail between the Atlantic and Pacific States in one line; which was ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, submitted an amendment, which he gave notice of his intention to propose, to the bill (S. No. 1) to grant to any person who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period therein specified.

DISTRICT JUDGE OF ALABAMA.

Mr. FITZPATRICK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the payment of the salary of the district judge of the State of Alabama.

DAVID WALDO.

Mr. FITZPATRICK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the payment of the claim of David Waldo, for damages sustained by him on account of the non-fulfillment on the part of the Government of a contract made with him by the War Department, on the 28th of May, 1860.

WILLIAM MEDILL.

Mr. GREEN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce joint resolutions (No. 22) concerning the First Comptroller of the Treasury, William Medill; which were read twice by the Clerk.

Mr. GREEN. I move that the joint resolutions be referred to a select committee of three or five, whichever be the custom of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What number does the Senator desire?

Mr. GREEN. I shall be satisfied with either. Five, I suggest.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to hear the resolutions read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States, by the sixth session of the Post Office department act, passed August 16, 1855, enacted as follows: "The First Comptroller of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to adjust the accounts of William M. Carmack and Albert C. Ramsey on account of the appropriation by the Postmaster General of these counties to carry the mail on the Vera Cruz, Acapulco, and Mexico City routes, and to award them according to the principles of law, equity, and justice, the amount so found due; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby required to pay the same to the said Carmack and Ramsey, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and whereas it is the judgment of Congress that the law so enacted declared the fact that a contract existed as stated in the said law, involving the claims of the said Carmack and Ramsey, and further determined that damages had been incurred to them by reason of the abrogation of said contract by the Postmaster General aforesaid; and whereas it is the further judgment of Congress that there was imposed on the said Comptroller of the Treasury by the said law the imperative duty of proceeding to ascertain and adjust the said damages in accordance with the principles of 'law, equity, and justice'; and whereas William Medill, First Comptroller of the Treasury, instead of proceeding to execute said law of Congress aforesaid, did undertake to affirm and decide that said contract was never abrogated; thereby intending to defeat the said law of Congress, and thus to evade and evade the decision of his predecessor, the Hon. Elihu Whittier; and whereas, in so doing, the said William Medill incurred the penalty of the said law of Congress, and has thereby refused to obey the order of Congress, and he was bound to have done otherwise; Therefore—

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the said William Medill, First Comptroller of the Treasury aforesaid, has justly incurred the disapprobation of Congress.

Resolved further, That in the judgment of Congress the conduct of the said William Medill makes it improper that he should longer remain First Comptroller of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves that these resolutions be referred to a select committee.

Mr. TRUMBULL. My object in calling for the reading was merely to see what they were. They seem to be an arraignment of one of the public officers. I do not consider it my province particularly to take charge of the officers. If the majority of the Senate think proper to institute an investigation, through a select committee, I do not know that I shall object. It strikes me, however, that the resolutions would more appropriately go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the resolutions will go over. I should like to examine them.

Mr. GREEN. They cannot go over. I object to that. They are now pending before the Senate on a motion of reference. A mere objection cannot put them over under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. The resolutions have been received, and read twice. I think the Senator from Missouri is clearly right; they cannot be postponed now by an objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair believes the resolutions were received, and read twice without objection. Perhaps the motion to refer is in order.

Mr. HUNTER. I did not hear them, and I should like to hear them read. ["Oh, no,"]

Mr. MASON. If my colleague will allow me, the resolutions struck me as seemingly to involve the judgment of the Senate upon matters on which I, for one, have no information whatever.

Mr. GREEN. Permit me to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that I do not propose present action; but to refer them to a committee, and let the committee report, and then let the Senate act.

Mr. MASON. I understand that; but still they seem to involve the judgment of the Senate on matters upon which I, for one, have certainly no information. They are to be referred to a select committee of five, and the committee is not instructed to find or inquire whether the claims are correct or incorrect, founded or unfounded. They are to be referred to a select committee, as the judgment of the Senate; and further, the judgment of the Senate is to be expressed that this officer should be removed. Now I have no objection to the inquiry of course, but I think the proposition should take a different course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On reference to the 26th rule, the opinion of the Chair is that the Senator from Virginia may require the resolutions to be read.

Mr. HUNTER. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the resolutions will lie over.

APPEALS AND WRITS OF ERROR.

Mr. BAYARD. There are two bills from the Judiciary Committee which I ask the Senate to take up this morning. I move first, to take up bill No. 4, the second bill on the Calendar, concerning appeals and writs of error; a bill which was reported at the last Congress, and ought, I think, to be taken up at this time, to receive the sanction of the committee. It is a very short bill, which I think will consume no time.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 4) concerning appeals and writs of error. It provides that appeals or writs of error from the final decrees and judgments hereafter rendered in civil actions, and in causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, in a district court, shall only be allowed where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $300, exclusive of costs. It further provides that no writ of error or appeal shall be allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States from final judgments or decrees hereafter rendered in civil actions, and in suits in equity, and causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, in a circuit court, or district court acting as a circuit court, unless the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of $3,000, exclusive of costs, except in civil actions brought by the United States for the enforcement of the revenue laws, or for the collection of the duties due or alleged to be due on imported merchandise; and writs of error are not to be brought or appeals allowed from such final judgments or decrees, except within two years after rendering or passing the judgment or decree complained of, or (in case the person entitled to such writ of error or appeal is dead, or insane, or imprisoned, or otherwise disabled) within two years, exclusive of the time of such disability.

Mr. BAYARD. The sole object of the first section of this bill is to restore the amount at which an appeal may be allowed in equity cases. As the law now stands, an appeal is allowed where the decree is for fifty dollars or upwards. The costs in admiralty are very high, and the committee unanimously agreed that it was utterly unnecessary to burden suitors in that court with an appeal jurisdiction in a circuit court. The suggestion came to me originally from the judge of the district court for Texas, founded on his practical experience of the extreme injustice to suitors of allowing delay, especially in regard to that class who could least bear it, where the decree in their favor was fifty dollars or a little over. Appeals were taken with a view to prevent the administration of justice, and to wear out the patience of a suitor. The law is merely restored in that respect to what it was in the original history of the country; and the stronger reason for it is in the fact that the value of money has certainly depreciated within the last ten years relatively, and therefore the sum ought to be increased for which an appeal will be allowed. Now it allowed where the sum amounts to fifty dollars. The bill proposes to restore the old law, which only allowed an appeal where the amount in controversy was $300. I think that sum is a reasonable one. The judge of Massachusetts suggested $500. The committee thought it rather high, and unanimously fixed it at $300. The second section relates to appeals to the Supreme Court, and there, from the necessary connection with it, and the fact that one of the great objects of that court is to settle principles which shall govern other cases, and not to decide every case which may be heard in the circuit courts, the right of appeal is proposed to be limited to cases in which the matter in controversy involves $3,000 net value, instead of $2,000, as at present. That is founded on the same consideration, in part, that the value of money has depreciated in relation to other property; and, therefore, $300 now would be quite as proper a limit as $2,000 was twenty years ago. The further effect of it would be, in the judgment of the committee, not to overwork that court to the extent it is overcrowded with business in cases which really do not pay the expense of the appeal, and also make it equitable to both parties. We do not think it would end in any defect of justice by extending the amount at which an appeal should be allowed.

Another clause of the second section of the bill relates to the time within which an appeal shall be taken. That is fixed by the committee at two years. All these provisions were unanimously agreed to in committee, founded on the knowledge of the practice of the courts and the practical effect of the measure, by the members of the committee, who come from the different States of the Union, and who are practically conversant with courts of justice and the administration of justice. I trust the bill will be passed by the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VACANCIES IN OFFICES.

Mr. MASON. There is a bill upon the table to organize a mission to carry into execution the treaty with Paraguay. I assure it will not occupy five minutes; and I ask that they may take up, because it is a matter of public interest that ought to be passed.

Mr. BAYARD. I stated to the Senate, when I made my motion, that there were two bills which I wished to take up. They follow each other very securely on the Calendar; neither of them will take the Senate long;—either hardly as long as the one which has just been passed; and I think that the honorable Senator from Virginia might allow me to dispose of these two bills. They were before the Senate all the time Congress was in session, and were not acted on. I hope the Senator will allow me to dispose of that bill first. It cannot take ten minutes. It will meet with no objection. It is merely to supply a defect in the existing law.

Mr. MASON. I could have my bill passed while the Senate is talking.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not know that. I think I might have been allowed to go on, and take up the bill alluded to. The Senate must decide.

Mr. MASON. If it was a matter of any personal interest to me, I would yield to the Senator who has just said that there is a public duty involved in this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Secretary has sent for the bill alluded to by the Senator from Virginia. It has not yet come from the Printer. It will be some time before it can come here.

Mr. MASON. Then I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 5) to supply vacancies in certain offices.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all officers of the United States, appointed for a term of years, shall hold their offices from and after the expiration of the regular terms for which they have been or may be appointed, until their successors shall have been appointed and qualified; and also, that wherever a vacancy shall exist, or shall hereafter occur, in the office of marshal or attorney of the United States for any district, the district court may appoint a marshal or an attorney, as the case may be, who shall serve until a regular appointment and until such new appointee shall have been qualified and sworn of law. It also provides that every clerk of the circuit or district courts of the United States, in cases of sickness or temporary disability, may appoint a deputy, to be approved by the judge or judges, or a majority of them in vacation, or by the court, who shall take the oath, and may, in the name of the principal, perform the duties of the clerk; but all clerks and their surrogates shall be responsible for the conduct of their deputies.

Mr. BAYARD. The bill speaks for itself. It contains a provision that has often been found to exist, where offices become vacant during the session of the Senate. No person can act until an appointment is made by the President, and confirmed by the Senate; and thus the appointment must either be hurried, both in the nomination of the Executive and action of the Senate, or there is no person to perform the duties. The bill cannot create any possible difficulty. It enables the officer whose regular term expires to remain in his position until a successor is qualified. The other section applies to the case of marshals. It is necessarily made general, but also of essential, because the officer may die at a distance from the seat of Government or during the session of the Senate, and the functions ought to be constantly attended to. It may be imperatively necessary for them to attend to it, and yet there is no positive law sanctioning the action of the Executive and of the Senate to perform the duties of these ministerial officers. It is to these cases alone that the bill applies.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVENTION WITH PARAGUAY.

Mr. MASON. I want to take up the bill in relation to Paraguay, if it has come.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is here.

Mr. MASON. It will take but a moment, I hope.

The motion of Mr. Mason was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 340) to carry into effect the convention between the United States and the Republic of Paraguay.

Mr. MASON. It was thought proper by the committee, as the bill organized a commission, that it should be prepared at the Department of State, and sent to the committee, and meet their approval. I think it is prepared as well as it could be for a like occasion. The treaty provides that these commissioners shall sit at Washington, and shall not sit longer than three months; and it was recommended, and I think wisely, that their compensation should be a sum in gross. The committee have instructed me to move to fill the blank for the compensation of the commissioner with the sum of $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I am further instructed by the committee to move that the compensation of the secretary be $1,000, and to fill the blank accordingly.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. It will be observed that the last clause provides that this money shall be refunded to the United States out of the sum recovered from Paraguay. I ask that the Secretary be directed to insert the first two or three lines, for my impression is that there is a mistake there.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice of the Senate—

Mr. MASON. It ought to be "advice and consent." I move to add the words "and consent."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendments were concurred in, and the bill ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL J. HENLEY.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I ask leave of the Senate to take up the bill (No. 249) for the relief of Samuel J. Henley.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 249) for the relief of Samuel J. Henley, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to have some account of that bill. That is a very large amount—over $96,000—for Indian supplies in California. I should like to have some account of the reason for the liability of the United States.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. It would perhaps be more satisfactory to have the report read, which accompanies the bill, and explain the reasons and facts on which the claim is founded. I could, probably, more briefly state the substance of the case, but it might not be so satisfactory to the gentleman. I therefore prefer that the report should be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs; but before concluding, the hour of one o'clock arrived.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will pause. The Chair must call up the special order.

Mr. HUNTER. Is the special order the Indian appropriation bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has no recollection that that was made a special order.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders, with a view to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. GWIN. Let us dispose of this bill.

Mr. HUNTER. This is a private claim. I am inclined to let it come in tomorrow morning, in the morning hour, or on Friday.

It was informed by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives that the appropriation bills will come over very rapidly now.

Mr. LATHAM. This will take but a short time.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not think this will take a short time, from what I have heard of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is to postpone the special order, and to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. What is the special order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions of the Senator from Mississippi, in relation to the protection of property in the Territories.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. They were laid on the table, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions of the other Senator from Mississippi [Mr. DAVIS] were laid on the table. The question is on the postponing the special order, and taking up the Indian appropriation bill.

The question being put, a division was called for. Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I do not know that there is any great pressing exigency for the passage of the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator that the Senate is in the act of dividing at this time.

The question being put, on a division there were—aye, fourteen.

Mr. HUNTER. There seems to be no quorum. I ask for the yeas and nays. Then we can have a quorum.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I wish to state to the Senate that if this motion fails, to take up the Indian appropriation bill, I shall move then to take up the last-mentioned bill, and hope we shall take up that bill and press it, until final action is had on the part of the Senate. It is a measure of fully as much importance as the Indian appropriation bill, as far as being postponed again and again, and I hope we shall take it up and have definite action on it, so far as the Senate is concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is to postpone the special order, with a view to take up the Indian appropriation bill. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. How do I understand I am to vote? Is it on a motion to postpone, or a motion to take up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To postpone all prior orders, and take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Does it then require a yeas and nays motion to take up the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair calls it up if the motion prevails.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll. Mr. TRUMBULL, (when his name was called.) I should like to inquire if the effect of this vote is to call up the Indian Appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foor in the chair.) That is the motion, to postpone all prior orders, with a view to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Then I vote "no."

Mr. HINGHAM. "With a view to take it up." Cannot anything else be taken up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By the force of this vote the Indian appropriation bill will be before the Senate. Of course it will be competent to move to postpone it, and take up another bill.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bigler, Briggs, Clark, Clay, Clingman, Colburn, Crittenden, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Fox, Green, Hewitt, Hamlin, Hendon, Hunter, Johnson, of Arkansas, Kennedy, Lane, Latham, Mason, Nicholson, Pease, Polk, Southard, Sebastian, Thompson, and Vane—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Briggs, Chandler, Doolittle, Durkee, Fitch, Grimes, Harlan, Johnson, of Tennessee, Rice, Simmons, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilkinson—15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Senate decides to postpone all prior orders, with a view to take up the Indian appropriation bill, which is now before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, accordingly proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 215) making appropriation for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1854.

Mr. HUNTER. I will say, in regard to the body of the bill, that it is strictly according to estimate, and, for the most part, only to carry out treaties. The amendments are on the new estimates, which require explanation. If it be the pleasure of the Senate, I propose that the amendments of the Committee on Finance be read, and I will give explanations as they are read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent of the Senate, that course will be taken. The Chair does not hear the reading of the whole bill called for. The amendments of the Committee on Finance will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read them. The first amendment of the committee was, in page 8, lines one hundred and eighty-two and one hundred and eighty-three, to insert "per third article of treaty of 23d February, 1855;" so that the clause will read:

For completing the planting and preparation for cultivation of two hundred and seventy-five acres for the Pillager and Lake Winnebago Indians of Wisconsin, per third article of treaty of 23d February, 1855, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in page 16, lines three hundred and seventy-nine and three hundred and eighty, to insert the words "balance of $157,500," so that the clause would read:

Insert—For interest in land of investment on $67,500, balance of $157,500, in the 1st July, 1851, at 5 per centum, for redemption or other legal redemption, under the direction of the President, per second article treaty 19th October, 1838, and ninth article treaty 17th May, 1854, $4,675.

Mr. HUNTER. It is a mere clerical amendment, to make it conform to the estimates in words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in page 20, line four hundred and sixty-three, to insert the word "article" after the word "third," so that it will read:

For permanent annuity to goods or otherwise, per third article and separate article to treaty 30th September, 1809, $350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert, at the end of the bill:

For fulfilling the provisions of the treaty with the Creek

Indians of March 21, 1832, respecting the orphan children of the Creeks, and to be in lieu of the investment of the same sum required to be made by the sixth article of the treaty with the Creeks, the limitation of the 7th, 1854; the Creeks, by formal act of their council, having agreed to exchange funds with said orphans, the proceeds of whose sale under the treaty of 1852, were hereunto, without authority of law, invested and used as a general school fund among the Creeks; and the said council of the Creeks, in consideration of the said act of March 21st, having petitioned for such exchange and for the payment to said orphans of their dues, $300,000.

Mr. HUNTER. The explanation to that is this: by the second article of the treaty of 1832, with the Creeks, twenty sections of land were to be selected, under the direction of the President, for the orphan children of the Creeks, and divided, or retained, or sold, for their benefit, as the President should direct. These sections were duly selected, and were afterwards sold; and the proceeds, and for a time the accruing interest, were invested in stocks of different States, which are now depreciated, but on which the interest is regularly paid. Since 1847, however, the annual interest on the amount so invested has been used and applied to school purposes among the Creeks. With a view of realizing this fund to the orphans who had retained their majority, and desired to have their money paid over to them, as has been uniformly done in other like cases, the Creeks, in the sixth article of the treaty of 1856, agreed to set apart the sum of $200,000 of the money stipulated to be paid to them by this treaty, to be invested as a school fund; and in consideration of the present depreciation of the stocks in which the orphan money is invested, and the loss that will therefore be sustained by their sale, and for which the Government might hereafter be held liable, the Creek council, representing both the nation and the orphans, have agreed to petition for an exchange of the funds with the orphans, as the latter will yield annually a larger amount of interest. The amount, therefore, having been increased by the additional investment of interest, is $206,742.

The fund acquired, by the treaty of 1856, to be invested for school purposes. The appropriation of this sum will not increase the amount needed for fulfilling treaty stipulations; as under the treaty of 1856 it is required to be appropriated for investment, which positive requirement of the treaty the Government has overlooked. It is now asked for by the Department; and the sum of $10,000, with interest thereon, asked for in the annual estimates from the Indian Office for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1851, and embraced in the present bill, will not be needed. The same amount, under the present fiscal year, which has not yet been remitted for payment, can also be saved, and retained in the Treasury; as the nation, in lieu of it, got the interest on the orphan fund. It is merely an exchange of funds. Instead of paying $300,000 to the nation, to be invested for educational purposes, and selling the stock of the orphans, we give the nation the stock for educational purposes, and give the orphans the money. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert, at the end of the bill:

For payment of this amount to the Shawnees, due them under the provisions of the eleventh article of the treaty of 10th May, 1854, to be reimbursed to the United States, when collected from Agents Gay and Arnold, against whom suits are pending, $2,574.44.

Mr. HUNTER. Two hundred and sixty-two dollars of this money, belonging to the Shawnees, was remitted to William Gay, the last agent, for payment; $2,811 to his successor, A. Arnold, for the same purpose. Both failed to make full payment, and hence the application for means to pay them. The money was due them under the treaty stipulations. Both Gay and Arnold are deceased; suits are pending against their executors, and should these funds be recovered, they will be returned to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For clothes attending the vaccination of Indians for the years 1860 and 1861, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For purchasing land claims on the general reservation at Peget Sound, $97,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For completing the building of the grist and saw mills a Leech Lake, for the Pillager and Lake Winnebago Indians of Wisconsin, for the under the third article of the treaty with the Chippewa Indians of 23d February, 1855, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For pay of an engineer for one year, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For the purchase of seven hundred and ninety-four acre, nearly four hundred acres of land, owned by the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Lequesne Point, Michigan, for certain bands of Ottawas and Chippewas, at the annual Government price, $902.44.

Mr. HUNTER. This appropriation is required to carry into effect the stipulations embraced in the eighth section of the first article of the treaty of July 31, 1855, with the Ottawas and Chippewas of Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For the payment to Spink or Bull Frog, alias Joseph Benson, the amount of $400 for his valuation on an improvement under the Executive treaty of 1855, in pursuance of the provisions of the twenty-fourth section of the act of March 3, 1855, making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out lines three hundred and fifty-seven to three hundred and sixty, inclusive, in the following words:

For five per centum interest on $900,000, for purposes of education, per sixth article treaty 7th August, 1856, $10,000.

Mr. HUNTER. That is to strike out $10,000, which the Secretary stated would not be necessary, in the event we made the exchange of funds for the Creek nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in the Territory of Utah, presents of goods, agricultural implements, and other useful articles, including the traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, clerk hire, and so forth, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For surveying and mapping four farms and reservations, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For the general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon and Washington, including the transportation of supplies, goods, and presents, where no special provision is made by treaty, and office and traveling expenses of the superintendent, agents, and sub-agents, for the year ending 30th June, 1851, $25,000.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state, in relation to that, that the Secretary of the Interior largely reduced the estimate of the superintendent of Indian affairs in those Territories. He says this is as little he can get along with—less than was appropriated last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of the Indians in Oregon to the reservation there, aiding them in procuring their own subsistence, purchase of provisions and presents, compensation of laborers and other employees, for the year ending 30th June, 1851, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

For defraying the expenses of the removal and subsistence of the Indians in Washington Territory to the reservation there, aiding them in procuring their own subsistence, purchase of provisions and presents, and compensation of laborers and other employees, for the year ending 30th June, 1851, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For payment of improvements of the Indians west of the Cascade mountains, the Nez Percés, the Flatheads, the Yakamas, which may have to be abandoned in consequence of the discovery of gold in the same region, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For payment of improvements of the Indians west of the Cascade mountains, the Nez Percés, the Flatheads, the Yakamas, which may have to be abandoned in consequence of the discovery of gold in the same region, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....NO. 95.

quence of certain treaty stipulations with them, and for surveys of reservations to which they are to be removed, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For insurance, transportation, and the necessary expenses of delivery of annuities, goods, and provisions to Yakama, Flathead, and Nez Perce, for the year ending 30th June, 1860, per fourth article of treaty of 18th June, 1855, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For the first five installments due and payable to the Yakama nation, for the year ending 30th June, 1860, per fourth article of treaty of 18th June, 1855, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For the first five installments due and payable to the Nez Perce Indians, for the year ending 30th June, 1860, per fourth article of treaty of 18th June, 1855, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For the pay of each of the head chiefs of the Flathead, Kootenay, and Upper Pend d'Oreilles tribes, for the year ending 30th June, 1860, per fifth article of treaty of 16th July, 1855, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert:

For the pay of each of the head chiefs of the Flathead, Kootenay, and Upper Pend d'Oreilles tribes, for the year ending 30th June, 1860, per fifth article of treaty of 16th July, 1855, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. There is an important amendment of the Committee on Finance, which is not printed—it seems to be omitted by inadvertence—to provide for a second installment due under treaties with the Indians in Oregon and Washington Territories. I will prepare that while the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is offering his amendments.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Inasmuch as the chairman of the Committee on Finance has offered all the amendments which he is prepared to submit at this time, I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Thursday, with a view of preparing amendments and obtaining information from the office, which can probably be obtained by that time.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator move to postpone it until one o'clock on Thursday, and make the special order for that time?

Mr. SEBASTIAN. Yes, sir.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL BROWN A LAW.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BECHANAN, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed an act (S. No. 247) for the relief of Mary E. Castor.

ROBERT H. MORRIS.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I move now to postpone all prior orders, and take up the homestead bill.

Mr. YULEE. Allow me, before that motion is voted upon, to ask the Senate to take up a bill which I have been requested to appeal to the Senate to dispose of. It is a House bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, of New York. It is a private bill, which will probably not be debated at all.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If it will take no time, I give way for that purpose.

Mr. YULEE. I move to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senat, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 242) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I think there is a principle involved in this bill that I have heard denied very constantly by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, unless I am mistaken. It reads:

That the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department be authorized and directed to readjust and settle the account of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York, from May 30, 1845, to June 30, 1846, and to allow in said account all sums of money paid out by said Morris for defraying the expenses of said office within said period, including the amount paid on account of the city dispatch office.

Of course it must embrace those expenses hitherto rejected for want of any law to authorize them. It goes on:

Provided, That, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, such expenses were properly incurred, and were necessary for the business of said office.

I know that there have been before this committee, in two instances, applications for relief from the post office for persons who have performed the postal service there, who stand in the same attitude. They only asked the privilege of being allowed to show that the service, over and above what were the terms, nature, and character of their contract, was performed, not only by the authority, but with the approval, of the Post Office agent. Not only was the service done with his authority, but they are able to show that it was necessary, and that the mails could not travel without it.

There is no authority of law to make any allowance. It is within the knowledge of all the people of the State that those parties did suffer. Their claim is rejected by the Post Office Committee, and has been so for three years. It will stand here. There is a bill lying on the table that I declined to have referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and asked that it might lie there, to see whether or not I could not get it up on its merits before the Senate. I do not see why fish should be made of one and flesh of another. I am tired of it; I do not think it is right; and I wish in appeal to the Senate against principles of that character. Now, if this proposition here to-day is right, very well; let the money be paid. But to what time does it run? From 1845? How many years, I ask the chairman, does this run, within which we are to settle accounts not authorized by law, and which now require a special order to allow the money to be paid? Will the gentleman state?

Mr. YULEE. When the gentleman is through, I will.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask him that question for information.

Mr. YULEE. The bill states that. This gentleman is not now in office. He died many years ago. This relates to the adjustment of his accounts in the Auditor's office.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Can the Senator tell me how far it goes back?

Mr. YULEE. I think these items probably occurred in the last year of the administration of his office.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Can the Senator tell me when that was?

Mr. YULEE. I cannot tell you precisely the year. I think he was the predecessor of Mr. Graham, and went into office in 1845.

Mr. LATHAM. He was in office from 1845 to 1849.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. There are four years to go back to 1845, and yet service that is rendered under the Post Office Department can get no relief at all, and of the very same character in the classification it must necessarily be. I do not like this way of acting on these matters. If the principle is to reject those accounts which are not authorized by law, then make it uniform, and apply it to all; but such I have not found to be the case. This bill, in addition to what I have already read, goes on to provide:

And in addition thereto, the said Auditor shall also allow for the same period such sum as would make the compensation of said Morris equal to the sum of $3,000 per annum, as provided for by the act of 1845.

I do not understand that. If it was provided for by the act of 1845, why did he not get it? It must be there provided for in some other case by the act of 1845. It is to make a new law, and apply the act of 1845 to it now. That is the whole of this proposition. But further:

Is there anything in regard to this case that sanctifies it as an appeal to justice, and an appeal to equity and right, above other cases of the character I have already stated, which would not justify allowing the discretion is the one case as well as the other in the Post Office Department to settle and pay such amounts of money as may be equitably found due? I know that in the instances of which I spoke, the accounts have been certified to not only by the agent of the Post Office Department on the ground, but by the Governor of the State, who is one of the same class of men with the Senators who are the chairman of the Committee on Finance here. [Mr. HERRICK.] who would resist almost everything—certainly everything that is not within the strictest and most rigid rule of law and economy. Those cases are certified to, and established by the strongest testimony I have ever known or read of, or at least equal to any that I have ever known in any case appealing to the justice of Congress for relief. That is the case in two instances; yet the application is not entertained by the committee. I know that those cases are among those that are appointed to be sacrificed. I shall not say that it is a case, or that the rule be applied to all alike. This bill directs the proper officers "to allow in said amount all sums of money paid out by said Morris for defraying the expenses of said office within said period"—about as you would find the amount paid on account of the city dispatch office.

We are to pass it without any further explanation. I do not think it proper.

Mr. YULEE. The Senator from Arkansas unites totally different cases—cases that belong to different classes. The claims to which he refers, when he speaks of bills from his State, the action of the committee upon which he complains of, are a class of cases in which it is proposed, against the will and against the decision of the Department, to pay for services that they never authorized, and that they are not entitled to receive when performed. This belongs to a different class. This bill relates to an adjustment—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Senator, I presume, does not understand the cases. He says they are cases in which the Department did not believe the services were rendered, and the Senator must certainly know that they refused to pay anything more than the contract price; and the Senator and his committee decline to suffer the Department, that he says did not believe the services were necessary, to judge whether an allowance for them would be right and equitable and necessary, or not. That is all we ask. There is the bill on the table.

Mr. YULEE. The Senator is mistaken on that point, as the committee gave him a bill for that purpose at the last session in the very case to which he refers. They gave him a bill which would have enabled the Department to pay for what it considered necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. If the committee have established a precedent different from what the Senator says, I am not going to say so.

Mr. YULEE. Is not the Senator aware that we gave him such a bill at the last session? Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I was not aware that they went even to the extent of allowing it at the discretion of the Department, who the Senator says was against the case. That is all the parties ever asked.

Mr. YULEE. The rule on which the committee are acting, in the cases to which the Senator refers, is that they will not force on the Department payment for services which it has not authorized and which do not seem to have been necessarily called for by the public interest. Whenever it is prepared to say or to decide, either by recommending in advance to the committee, or in a bill which the committee may submit to its opinion, that the services, although not authorized, were beneficial to the public, and under the circumstances should be paid for, we are willing that they should be paid for; and upon that footing we are disposed to place the cases to which the Senator from Arkansas refers, and I thought he was satisfied with that view at the last session, which the committee authorized me to report.

Now, sir, in reference to this particular bill, it proposes simply, not the reversal of any decision, but the readjustment of an account upon a principle adopted afterwards by direction of an act of Congress in the case of the successor of this gentleman. The committee yielded to report favorably on the bill which came from the House, for the reason that the Auditor—the officer who is appointed to arrange and adjust the accounts of postmasters according to law—in a letter which he communicated to the committee of the House, regarded it as just, as being in conformity with the principles of settlement directed by an act of Congress for the relief of the successor of this gentleman, Mr. Graham. It is upon that ground that the committee recommend the favorable action of the Senate; because, in the opinion of the auditing officer of the Department, the readjustment of the account is due to justice. The bill comes, therefore, indorsed by the recommendation of the proper officer of the Department, and we give to them the opportunity to do justice according to their views of right—that is all. The letter of the Auditor is another matter, and we need not be troubled for the satisfaction of the Senate. It is not a direct recommendation, but, from its terms, carries with it what the committee considered to have been the indorsement of the auditing officer to the justice of the demand.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Senator gives me information which I had not before, or if I had, I forgot it, because my action was based on the belief that I was right in the facts which I attempted to state. Now, sir, I am glad to hear the statement the Senator has made; but I should like to make a statement, and then I can find the bill alluded to by him, and look at it. I was of the impression that there was an idea, such as the Senator stated, as to the improper or inequitable character of the application made by the parties to whom I referred, which would perhaps preclude the possibility of any relief to them. As I know, from the manner in which the Senator speaks of those cases, that he has not looked at them with anything like the same view in which they struck me, knowing all the parties who testified as to their case, and the facts of their interest, I shall ask that I may be allowed time to examine as to the facts, and to examine this case also, and see as to the parallel between them. There is no special occasion for passing this bill to-day; and I will ask the privilege of the Senate following the recess, and then, before the adjournment, that I may have an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. YULEE. I will state that it was only at the very pressing and particular urgency of the member of the House representing the district in which this party lives, and on his representation that it was a matter of great consequence to a widow whose circumstances needed immediate relief, that I was induced to ask the presentation of the Senate upon this bill, taking it up out of its order on the Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask that it may lie over until another day. I should like to examine it for that reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill was interposed pending another motion, by common consent; and if it be the sense of the Senate, it will be passed over.

The bill was laid aside.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HAYES, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had ordered this day the printing of the following documents:

Message of the President of the United States, in answer to a resolution of the House calling for information in relation to the difficulties on the southwestern frontier—ordered at twelve o'clock and fifty-four minutes, p. m.

Message of the President of the United States, in answer to a resolution of the House calling for information in reference to the imprisonment of an American citizen in the Island of Cuba—ordered at twelve o'clock and fifty-five minutes, p. m.

Letter from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the House calling for Lieutenant Colonel Roberts's report on the subject of a general reorganization of the militia of the United States—ordered at twelve o'clock and fifty-five minutes, p. m.

HOUSTON BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Now the question pending before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, to postpone the prior orders, with a view to take up the homestead bill.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator will not press that bill now. There was a bill in progress at the expiration of the morning hour which can be disposed of in a few minutes. If there is any objection to it, I will not urge it; but we progressed in that case and were reading the report, and I think we had better get clear of it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I suggest to the Senator from California that it was very clearly indicated that that bill could not be disposed of in a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from California has been ordered unless the Senator from Tennessee yields. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, to postpone the prior orders with a view to take up the homestead bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That motion, as I understand it, includes both the Senate bill and the bill from the House of Representatives; so that the whole subject comes up.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The Senate bill is the one that was under consideration before. I move that we proceed to the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives before the Senate as the unfinished business.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I inquire of the Chair whether that motion will bring up for consideration both the Senate bill and the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not sure of the particulars of the question; as this question was postponed; but the motion of the Senator from Tennessee will bring up the bill that was left unfinished on this subject, and that the Chair is informed was the Senate bill; but the House bill had been moved as an amendment, or the Senate informed that it would be moved as an amendment, to the Senate bill. The Senate bill being before the Senate, on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, it will be in order to move the House bill as an amendment to it, if it has not been previously disposed of. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to take up that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WADE. I suppose the question is on the report of the committee who reported these bills—the Committee on Public Lands, who reported back the Senate bill, substituting it for the House bill, I believe. I have never been able to learn what that committee did; because, whenever it is up, there is a question about what was done and what the report was, and I should like to hear it read. I heard the Journal read, which states that such is the condition of things.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understood the Committee on Public Lands to report back the House bill that was referred to them, with an amendment; the amendment substituting the Senate bill for the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chairman be governed only by the record kept by the Secretary. The Chair understands that the committee has reported back both bills—the Senate bill and the House bill; that the Senate bill was the bill under consideration when the subject of the homestead was last before the Senate, and to which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] had moved an amendment, which was the pending question.

Mr. WADE. Is it in order now to move to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order at any time to move to strike out the whole or any portion of any bill, and to insert any other matter; but before the question is taken on that motion, which is in fact a substitution of one bill for another, both propositions are open for amendment, for perfecting the bill.

Mr. WADE. I make the motion to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, and substitute the House bill, which I send up to the desk.

Mr. CLAY. Permit me to ask whether, if the motion prevails, the substitute will then be the subject of amendment in like manner? I presume it will; but I ask for information, because I propose to offer some amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Both the original bill, which is in order, to be stricken out, and the substitute—or, in other words, the matter proposed to be inserted—are open to amendment before the question of substitution is taken.

Mr. CLAY. But if that motion prevail and the substitute be adopted, I ask whether it would then be open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the matter proposed to be inserted be adopted, it will not be open to further amendment. Whatever modifications or amendments may be made, must be made before the question of substitution is taken.

Mr. CLINGMAN. To avoid a difficult question of that kind, I should like to offer the same amendment to the substitute which I offered to the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order to offer the same amendment to the original bill and the substitute.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If no one is entitled to the floor, I desire to make that motion. I was of the impression that the Senator from Ohio had not surrendered the floor; and I intended, in that event, to ask for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before debate is in order, the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senator from Ohio must be read, unless the reading be dispensed with by common consent.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope it will be dispensed with, and I am sure my amendment will be the substitute. I will see at what time of the substitute, as soon as I can get it, it ought to come in properly.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If I understand the position of this question, it is this: The Senate bill is before the Senate, and the Senator from Ohio has moved an amendment; and now I understand the Senator from Ohio to move an amendment to his amendment, which is, to strike out the whole—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin misapprehended the position of the question.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The pending question to the bill was the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was. Now, the Senator from Ohio moves to strike out the whole of the original bill after the enacting clause, and insert another bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand it to be in order to move an amendment to an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I understand that to the point whether it was in order to move to strike out the whole of an amendment after certain words, or after the enacting clause, and insert another proposition, and substitute that in place of the original bill; and it was decided that such a motion was in order. I understand that to be the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio—it is a substitute for the amendment, and then to substitute that for the original bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate bill was before the Senate and under consideration, to which the Senator from North Carolina moved an amendment, not in the form of a substitute for the whole bill, but a modification of the pending bill. This morning, the Senator from Ohio moves to strike out the whole of the original bill, and to insert, in substance, another and a different bill, which is in order. It is not a substitute for the pending amendment moved by the Senator from North Carolina, but a substitute for the whole bill. That is in order. Now, both bills are open to amendment. The question, in the judgment of the Chair, is a very plain and simple one.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire if it were not in order, as the Senator from Ohio withdraws his proposition, for me now to move that this bill be laid aside, with a view of taking up the House bill? That would carry this bill and amendment, and we could take up the one that we want to set on. Yes; that is it. I am not that motion, if it is in order, that the Senate bill be laid aside, together with the amendment, in order to take up the House bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I inquire whether my motion has not been entertained, and will not be pending, so as to take precedence.

Mr. SIMMONS. You can move to amend the House bill just as well as this, after we take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition of the Senator from Ohio is not yet fully before the Senate. The first business in order is the reading of the matter proposed to be inserted, unless dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLAY. I must ask that the bill be read; because it has never been printed by the Senate, and I have never seen it. I want to learn what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter proposed to be inserted by the Senator from Ohio, in place of the original bill, will be read.

Mr. SLIDELL. That bill is long, and its reading will occupy some time. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina whether the proposition made by the Senator from Rhode Island is not the better course, to avoid any difficulty on this subject. If the House bill be taken up, then the Senator can offer his amendment. I think that will simplify the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that it will be a more simple process, if a majority so will it, to lay aside the Senate bill and take up the House bill for consideration, which will be open to any modification or amendment.

Mr. PUGH. That is a proposition on which I desire to say a few words strictly within the rules. I prefer the Senate bill to the House bill, and at a proper time I shall give the Senate the reasons why I prefer it. But even if the motion of the colleague should be carried, the House bill for the Senate bill, that would yet be the Senate bill, and would have to go to the House; whereas if we take up the bill passed by the House and consider it—either pass it with or without amendments, then we obtain some decisive action. As it is, I see no advantage in proceeding, day after day, to debate the Senate bill, and send that to the House, when the House has sent us a bill. It seems to me that our debates tend to no conclusion. Therefore, I think the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island is a motion based on common sense. We have a bill from the House embracing the subject-matter. Let us lay aside the Senate bill, and take up the House bill and proceed to its consideration. If the Senator from North Carolina wishes to move any amendment that he is in favor of, let the other Senator wants to offer an amendment, let him move it. But why, after we debate the Senate bill to our hearts' content, and put it on its passage, should we then take up the House bill, and debate that again? It seems to me that the Senate ought to come to some conclusion. Therefore, I hope the motion will be stated and carried, to postpone the consideration of this bill and all prior orders, in order to take up the House bill; and if that be done, I design at some time—I am not prepared to-day—to speak to the question.

Mr. WADE. I have been endeavoring ever since this matter was taken up, to simplify it, by getting at the House bill. When, on the other occasion, it was taken up, I moved to postpone all other orders and take up the House bill.

Mr. PUGH. I am sorry, but the motion seems to have been withdrawn.

Mr. WADE. It met with so many difficulties that I was compelled to withdraw it. It was thought, perhaps, that, complicated as it was, the better way was to try the question as it was presented, and to try to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill, for I had not the power to cast out the Senate bill. Now, if we can do it by common consent, and without debating this question of order eternally, I am willing and anxious to get hold of the House bill. That is altogether the simplest and best way to consider the subject. I hope it will be done by common consent, that we shall take up the House bill; that that shall be the bill before us, and then the Senate bill may be moved as a substitute for it by those who wish it, or any amendment may be offered. I consent to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his motion to amend the Senate bill by substituting the House bill, and follows it with a motion to lay the Senate bill on the table for the time being, with a view to take up the House bill. Will he reach the object indicated by his motion at this way?

Mr. WADE. I make that motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. One single word. It is not very material to me which of the bills is considered first; but perhaps a word of explanation here will be well enough. When the House bill was reported back from the Committee on Public Lands, the Senate bill was under consideration as a special order. Consequently the House bill took its place on the table, and the bill and amendment were ordered to be printed. The Senate bill was considered and left as unfinished business before the Senate. The House bill was taken up before, and, as a matter of course, came up to-day when my motion prevailed. Before the Senator from Ohio withdrew his amendment, the Senate bill was before the Senate, with the House bill offered as an amendment in lieu of it. If we postpone the Senate bill now, all the result will be that the House bill will be before the Senate, and the Senate bill will be offered in lieu of it, as an amendment. So far as I am concerned, it is not material to me. If it meets the approbation of the Senate, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate bill be postponed, with a view to take up the House bill. That is the simple question before the Senate.

There is no practical importance in this question either way. If the House bill be up, the Senate bill can be moved as an amendment to it. If the Senate bill be up, the House bill can be moved as an amendment, and therefore it is about as broad as it is long. I see no objection to this motion.

Mr. WADE. There is this difference, and the only difference I can see: if we take up the House bill and pass it, it will not have to go back to the House. If we pass the Senate bill, it has to go back to the House as a new proposition. That is the difference.

Mr. GREEN. That does not touch the point I was pressing before the Senate. It is this: that we want to get the sense of the Senate on the passage of a bill on this subject. If we postpone the Senate bill, the House bill is not before the Senate, but the next order standing on the Calendar will come up for consideration; and then it will require another vote to lay aside that order, and all other orders of the Senate, before you can bring up the House bill, unless a majority of the Senate be in favor of it. If we take up the Senate bill now before the Senate, I would prefer that gentlemen move the other as an amendment if they think it the best bill, and then take the choice of the Senate between the two; for we come to that point. It is known to all Senators, that the House bill comes up, if a majority of the Senate be in favor of it, if a majority of the Senate be in favor of it, they will put the Senate bill upon it as an amendment, and it must go back to the House. Thus, this controversy amounts to nothing. We are playing battle-door. It amounts to nothing. We can strike the ball either way; but the result is the same.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am a little surprised that the Senator from Missouri does not see the point which was made so clearly by the Senator from Ohio. A bill has passed the Senate. It is unknown to the House, and it strikes out the Senate bill, or whether it will prefer its own. Suppose it agree to the House bill: it is a law, and there is an end of it. If we take up the House bill, and pass it, that is an end of it. But suppose we keep at work on the Senate bill, and the Senate prefers the House bill, and strikes out the Senate bill, and substitutes the House bill for it: it is not a law; it has got to go back to the other House.

Mr. GREEN. It is not in either case a law until the President approves it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am talking about it so far as Congress is concerned. Does the Senator mean to intimate that the President is not going to approve of the homestead bill? If he makes a point upon that, that will be another matter; but so far as Congress is concerned, it will become a law, if we concur in the bill the House has passed, as a bill from the House; but if we substitute the bill the House has passed, in lieu of the Senate bill pending before the House, we have not enacted any law; but it has then got to go back to the House, and be re-passed there. Now, it does seem to me to be a very awkward way of doing business.

Mr. GREEN. I think it very palpable that if both Houses concur in a bill, it is no law, not even so far as the two Houses are concerned. It is a manoeuvre to denigrate the concurrence of the two Houses as a law. It is the asset of the two Houses to a proposition—that is all; and to call it a law, to say it is a law qualifiedly, or a law so far as the two Houses are concerned, is not speaking in constitutional language.

Again, if we choose to approve the House bill as an amendment to the Senate bill, it results inevitably, by amending their own bill, that it goes back to them. As a matter of course, it is inevitable. Hence, the question is not, but it is a question whether we take up the one or the other.

We are wasting time to consider the question. I am perfectly willing to take up the House bill. I am perfectly willing to take up the Senate bill. It is a mere matter of propriety; a matter which will result in no good or harm, but it is a question whether we take up the one or the other.

Mr. PUGH. If the question is to be taken without further debate or opposition, by general consent, I will not say anything further; but if it is to be debated, I shall have something further to say.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Committee on Public Lands had both bills before them. The committee found about five or six points of difference between the two bills. Those points were presented to, and considered at some length by, the committee. The House bill was framed in accordance with the sentiment which is to be found in the Senate, the presumption is that the Senate bill much more truly reflects that which will obtain the sanction of the Senate, than the bill of the House does. Under these circumstances, I certainly have no objection to postponing the House bill.

We shall take up the Senate bill which is already framed. As I understand it, that bill is now before the Senate, and the motion is to postpone it. If we postpone the Senate bill, then, if the committee have reported in accordance with the sentiment of the Senate, still the House bill will have to be remodelled in many points. It will be a labor of no little difficulty. The committee themselves, in recommending and urging the Senate bill, which reflected their belief and opinions in regard to it, know that it will take some time to convert the House bill into the Senate bill; whereas, if we take the Senate bill as it is, we can consider it; the points of difference can be presented, and, if the Senate chooses, the House bill can be inserted as a substitute; but I believe, from what I have seen, that the Senate bill will prevail here much more strongly than the House bill can.

Mr. GREEN. Allow me to inquire whether the bill, as it was originally passed by the House, is now before the Senate in any shape, upon the table, or otherwise?

Mr. PUGH. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. GREEN. Has it not been referred to the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It was referred, and directed to be reported back by the Senator from Tennessee, and I suppose has been.

Mr. GREEN. Without amendment?

Mr. TRUMBULL. With an amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Is it proposed to take it up with the amendment?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. There were no amendments reported to the House bill.

Mr. COLLAMER. The Senator is mistaken. The committee reported the Senate bill as a substitute for the House bill, and it is now presented with the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That is the present condition of it. It is unnecessary, then, to call the attention of the Senate to the difference of the points which are to be found in the two bills.

Mr. CLINGMAN. As I am against both bills, I have no preference between them in themselves;

Government traffic and speculates in the public lands, and why should not the people?

In view of these facts, I have looked anxiously for a change in some shape; and it is with peculiar gratification that I see the change proposed in the shape of a homestead bill.

The original bill, as reported to the Senate from the House of Representatives, would receive my hearty concurrence. But it seems to have been met by a strong opposition in this body. Our Committee on Public Lands reported in a similar manner, and in essence it has now been compressed into the form of a Senate bill, introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JONES]. This bill, while it recognizes the justice of the general principle, appears to me to lack the force and vitality of a practical measure.

This I say with all deference to the gentlemen who have drawn up that proposition in its present form. They have acted upon their own convictions of propriety, and it may be of expediency; but I must repeat that, in my judgment at least, the Senate bill does not reach the real merits of the case; that it does not cover the whole ground, and that it is loaded down with provisions and restrictions which will seriously tend to destroy its efficiency and usefulness before the country.

Some of its restrictions are dilatory, when liberality should be the distinguishing characteristic of such a bill. Some of its provisions would seek to create a distinction between persons and classes; when the real purpose of such a bill should be, to furnish homes for all of our citizens, present and prospective, who are willing to settle upon the public domain. These objections seem to me so obvious, that I am extremely desirous that the Senate should agree to the House bill, or to such amendments as would bring us back to that original proposition. At all events, a full and friendly discussion should be had upon the merits of the whole subject.

I am told that the framers of the Senate bill anticipated serious difficulties; that they judged it necessary to attempt a kind of compromise between the friends and the opponents of the measure; and that they were compelled to draw their proposition in this manner, so as to render it acceptable to all parties. I must confess, that I, for one, did not expect any considerable resistance to be made. The measure of granting free homesteads to actual settlers upon the public lands, I embrace a policy as wise, as just, as I can imagine, that I am at a loss to conceive why it should be steadily and persistently opposed by any leading member of any party. Least of all did I suppose that its defeat would be attempted by a resort to parliamentary tergiversation.

My surprise, therefore, was natural and great, when the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. CURRIE] the other day offered the following amendment:

"Strike out, in the first section, the words 'to enter one quarter of an acre of great and small tracts of land, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body, in conformity with the legal subdivision of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed, and ascertained to lie free, to have issued to him or her, by the Commissioner of Public Lands, a warrant for one hundred and twenty acres of land to be located in the same manner, and that under which the bounty land warrants heretofore issued have been located, on any of the public lands of the United States subject to entry, the applicant is required to make proof, to support of his claim, to such manner and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; so as to make the section read, 'That any person who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to have issued to him or her, by the Commissioner of Public Lands, a warrant,' &c."

In his speech in defense of this amendment the Senator told us frankly that he was opposed to the whole scheme of giving away the public lands. He could not have said more so, and he showed the strength of his opposition. His amendment is impracticable upon its face; and its only effect would be to defeat and destroy all chances of an operative homestead bill.

The Senator went on to say, that he regarded the measure of granting homes to the actual settlers upon the public lands in precisely the same light with a donation of money from the Federal Treasury. Having assumed this position, he endeavored to deduce that we would commit an act of injustice in limiting the benefit of this grant to those who reside upon the lands; or, in other words, in requiring actual settlement and occupancy as the necessary conditions upon which the grant shall be made.

Thus, he reasoned that the rights of many citizens would be impaired, because many citizens might not choose to avail themselves of a general privilege, common to all. Sir, if the Senator is sincere in his position, if he has really said and his words are his intentions, if he can in this manner do nothing higher or greater than to mislead the minds of money from the Federal Treasury; if he considers a just and meritorious and expeditious movement as a simple expression of charity; if he is so much in the wrong, as to regard the matter as near and narrow prospect; then, sir, I must say that he does not fully understand the principles involved; then, sir, I must believe that he does not altogether comprehend the magnitude of the question; then, sir, I must say, that he does not properly appreciate either the causes or the effects of our proposed policy.

I cannot reply better to the Senator from North Carolina than by quoting from a speech delivered in this body on the 18th of July, 1854, by Hon. LEWIS CASS, then a Senator from Michigan. A somewhat proposition was before the Senate, and was being discussed, and a Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN], still a member of this body, urged very nearly the same objection which has now been presented by the Senator from North Carolina. In reply to it, Mr. Cass said, "I read from the Appendix to the Congressional Globe, Thirty-Third Congress, first session, page 1088:

"The Senator from Louisiana seems to consider this project of granting lands to actual settlers as very unequal and unjust, and that the range of vision is confined to the objection, whatever force it possesses, is just as applicable to all preceding grants to actual settlers as to the proposed one, and, consequently, condemns the separate action upon this subject since the foundation of the Government. But why is it unjust? I confess I listened to the assertion with much surprise. It is unjust because it will not take advantage of it. This, to me, is a strange objection. If a system of policy is honest, just, and equal in itself, and if it is worthy to be adopted, though all may not be willing to accept the advantages it offers. What constitutes the justice of such a measure is its perfect equality; and, consequently, it will not affect one man more than another so well situated in life that they do not need the benefit it holds out. This bill offers grants of land to every man who is willing to settle upon the public lands. It is a man in one of the old States a right to say, I am rich; I do not intend to emigrate, and, therefore, you shall not put me to the test; I will make provision for myself, which is of no use to me. There is neither reason nor constitutional principle in such an objection."

Such was the opinion of LEWIS CASS; and the Senator from North Carolina is not alone in this. His objection is not only ancient and stale, but that it comes to us with the weight of a triumphant refutation upon its head. I repudiate entirely the untenable idea that the grant proposed would be in any sense a charity. Men in power are very fond of telling us that the Government is intended to be a mere charitable institution. "Will they get go a little further, and admit that it is not intended to be a monopolist and a speculator?"

The proposed measure embodies a manifestation of national justice, of national right, and of national wisdom. It is the duty of the Government so to dispose of the public lands—the property of the whole country—as to promote the undoubted interests of the whole country.

Here we have the solution of the problem; and the Senator from North Carolina is left in possession of charity. In my opinion, this Government should acknowledge, formally and officially, the distinct natural truth, that the wild, uncultivated lands of the nation belong, and of right ought to belong, to him who resides upon them, and subdues them, and cultivates them. It is but common principle in equity to which we are giving expression.

The adoption of a wise and liberal homestead bill by Congress would be a virtual abolition of all landed monopoly within the United States, whether land be monopolized by the Government, or by itself, or by any of its citizens. I need scarcely remind the Senate that the monopoly of land by the few as against the many, and the parceling out of public domain in immense tracts among venal capitalists, has been, all over this country, one of the powerful auxiliaries of absolute and despotic power. Thus the monarchies and aristocracies of all ages have been enabled to hold the masses subject to their will; thus millions of the human family have been reduced to penury and degradation, and their rights and their property have been taken from their substance from the common earth, which was intended alike for the rich and for the poor. Ireland, with her great mass of population, having scarcely the means of life, and depending for daily bread upon squelch and haughty aristocracy—Ireland, the masses of whose people are not masters of ground enough to stand upon—has been frequently cited as an instance of that cruel injustice which most always results from great landed monopolies. Out of her six million inhabitants, not more than one in every six thousand is the owner of even an inch of land, or has any legal right to earn his subsistence from the soil. Here I point to a most indispensable record.

Our present mode of disposing of our lands has a tendency to increase the spirit of monopoly and speculation, by putting up large tracts of land at public auction, and inviting the capitalist to purchase as much of the national domain as he may desire. This practice, if tolerated, may yet become a fruitful source of injury and oppression even in our own free and enlightened country. Even now, with all our vast expanse of territory, labor is outweighed by capital, and the rights of the settler are but slightly regarded when brought into comparison with the money of the speculator. Thus far, the course of the Government has been in a wrong direction, and the sooner it is changed the better. For my part, I am clearly of the conviction that it should adopt a policy far older than the nation itself, and decree that "the land shall be sold on new terms for the benefit of the Government, in its humanity and in its wisdom, to ordain that 'the people go and inherit the land,' and that the public domain should be granted in limited quantities, to every man who is anxious to earn an honorable living by the cultivation of the soil, and who is willing to make a permanent abode, and address itself to the laboring masses of the country; to those who are so often crushed down by the cruel and unequal conflict between capital and labor; to the poor man, who earns his bread from day to day by the sweat of his brow; to him who wishes to leave a home to his children, which fall from the rich man's table to those, I repeat, I would have this proposition addressed.

I would have the Government say to these persons, 'there is yet a vast unsettled domain for your occupancy; make it, then, your duty, to cultivate it, and shall be yours forever.' "And when," as was said by a distinguished member of the House of Representatives a few years ago, "the poor man is put in possession of his portion of this vast domain, and is secured by the strong arm of the law, that he shall never be driven from a home from which not he nor his wife nor his children can be driven, then is he raised above poverty, not only in his possession of the land, but still more by the virtues which he cultivates in his heart which till the soil. Then, too, he no longer ministers to the consumption of wealth by others, as he did when advantage was taken of his homeless condition, and he was compelled to serve for what he could get."

Sir, my objections were against the Senate bill, as supposed, from the course which has been heretofore taken, and from the course which the Government had intended to offer some amendments, for the purpose of removing its objectionable features. In the first place, the Senate bill excludes from the benefit of its provisions all young, unmarried men; it is a provision for the benefit of the old. I do not understand why a bill of this description should be less broad in its application than the present preemption laws. I do not recognize the propriety of abolishing one evil for the mere purpose of substituting another. I certainly regard it as a very unwise, and I might say, unjust, to exclude all unmarried men from the benefits of such a bill. As the Senate bill now stands, they are entirely cut off from all its advantages. The effect of this provision, taken in connection with the clause limiting the operations of the bill to lands subject to entry, would be to exclude almost entirely the early settlers; those who go first into the unpopulated West, and receive its benefits in store for the multitudes that may flock in after the toils and dangers and inconveniences of pioneer life have passed away. Such a restriction would be meted by the most despotic and proprietary and manifest unfairness; and I was surprised to hear the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PRENTISS], a western man, advocate the Senate bill for this very reason.

He says the emigrate in youth to the western country, to build up for themselves a fortune and a reputation, are the men of all others to whom the most liberal provisions of this act should apply. We need their services. They are, in plain fact, the vanguard of civilization upon this continent. They penetrate the wild solitudes far beyond the safety and comforts of society. They traverse and explore regions in which, for the time being, families could not reside securely. They pitch their tents, build their houses, break up and improve the soil, and open the broad areas to occupancy and culture. They furnish a more sure and perfect protection to our western frontier than can be given by any of the armed soldiers along the border-line. Coming mostly from the different States of the Union, they bring with them a deep and permanent attachment to the institutions of our country; and, as settlements advance, they organize municipal governments, and lay the foundation of future States. Such are the fruits of their labors and dangers—such are some of their achievements. Why, then, in the name of fairness and of common sense, should this class of active and energetic young men be entirely ignored and cast aside by the Senate bill?

Law, in order to be just, must be equal in their application; and I regard the Senate bill, in the provision of which I speak, as partial, unequal, and unjust.

It may be that the authors of the bill intended that this exclusion of young men without families from the benefits to be conferred should of itself operate as an active encouragement to matrimony among our people. I have no doubt that they agree with me in believing early marriages to be productive of great moral good in a community; but I maintain that the bill, by their prescriptive policy fails of its object, and does not furnish the proper encouragement. If the restrictive clause were to apply only to the sons and daughters of those early pioneers who emigrated many years ago to the frontier, and who have grown, with growing States, into farmers and wealth; if it were to apply only to those children who have inherited from their parents both the spirit of adventure and the frame to sustain hardships—if these were the only persons to be affected, this clause would not be so entirely objectionable. But not only women, but children of the same privations. While the forest is yet to be felled, and the humble cabin is yet to be erected, the great majority of the women of our country are too frail to join in the struggles and hardships of the early settler. Sir, this is the class beyond an immediate benefit. If properly drafted, it will be for the interest of the masses; it will be for the interest of society at large, and of that high morality upon which all society ought to rest. It will advance the cause of suffering humanity everywhere. These are the ends which the guardians of the nation's weal should seek in discharging the high trust reposed in them. Pass through our great cities. See the boys of all ages who swarm around the streets—many of them willing and anxious to labor, but finding nothing for their hands to do. See States exposed to temptations of every kind; day after day looking upon the equipages of wealth with the hungry and cannibal eye of poverty. Who does not wish that these boys might be rescued from the constant strife between vice and virtue, in which vice so often obtains the victory? These are the ends which there is labor for them. Let them be told that they can go to the fertile lands of the West, and conquer a possession from the wilderness by the force of their own exertions.

We shall have less need for the erection of prisons; we have less occasion for the maintenance of houses of refuge. And when the ambition of the settler has been attained; when his task has been accomplished; when the cabin has been built; when the rich earth has begun to yield her abundant fruits; then the young and energetic man, legislating legislation to drive him into matrimony. He will feel for himself the necessity of a partner and a helpmeet in his free home, won by his own toil. Nature legislates in these cases better than man. Rely upon it, sir, that we shall wisely in extending the benefits of the bill to all men.

Now, sir, I come to another objection against the Senate bill. It will operate unjustly as to our foreign population. In this particular it falls far short of the liberality of the preemption law to themselves. On this account, too, I was surprised that the Senator from Ohio should announce that he favored the Senate bill.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator is mistaken. That is a point which I have suggested to the Senator from Tennessee; that the Senate bill escaped my attention. I wish so amend it in that; but if it will not interrupt the Senator, I will make a suggestion on the point he has just left. The object of confining the Senate bill to heads of families is to prevent fraud, with which the Senator must certainly be familiar under the operations of the preemption act. The Senate bill does not affect the operation of the preemption act, or graduation act, or the special law for Kansas and Nebraska, which confers the Senate bill to heads of families in to prevent fraud, with which the Senator must certainly be familiar under the operations of the preemption law, and they are not even called upon to pay for it until proclamation and public sale is made at the interval of five or six years. Therefore, the effect of the Senate bill is simply to make, not an exclusion, but a distinction between the head of a family and an unmarried man, and precisely that distinction exists in every donation law we have ever adopted—in the Oregon act, the New Mexico act, and the Florida act. The Senate committee have not departed from the principles heretofore adopted.

Mr. WILKINSON. I would say to the Senator that the provision for which I contend is precisely the same as that adopted by the policy of the preemption law. That law extends its privileges to those who are single, present or prospective, married or unmarried; who may be over twenty-one years of age. I do not wish this measure to fall short of the liberality of that law.

Mr. PUGH. I know that; but the preemption law is the law of payment, and that is the reason for it.

Mr. WILKINSON. I do not know that I exactly understand the meaning of the Senator. If he means only that this restriction would have the effect of preventing frauds, I can readily answer him. So far as my experience has gone, young and unmarried men have been found no more efficient in robbing the Government of its lands by fraud than some older men and heads of families. My impression is that their honesty is quite equal to the average honesty of the old men. Perhaps they are more likely to live long enough to become so hardened in iniquity as to enable them to take a preemption oath without foundation for it. Their elders sometimes set the example.

Mr. PUGH. This is the idea: the head of a family who has, or may have his family with him, is to be preferred—I will not say to be preferred—make a bona fide settlement and go upon the land; but in the case of young men, who have no fixed residence, a majority of their settlements in-day, under the preemption law, are colorable. It is an admitted fact that a majority of them are colorable. They merely use the lands to sell them again, and that is the way they get into the hands of speculators. They do not get it at public sale, but get it by colorable pretexts.

Mr. WILKINSON. The Senator strengthens my position. My argument is that the present practice encourages a violation of the law. His objection, I repeat, would apply equally to any married men who might choose to avail themselves of a looseness in the law.

Mr. PUGH. No doubt, in some cases. But I am not arguing that the bill is not yet seen to appreciate the full force of the idea. In advance of settlements, men cannot take their families into the wilderness. They could not endure the necessary hardships. By offering inducements to young men, we shall secure the opening up of the wilderness, the building of cabins, and the planting of first crops. As settlements increase, the facilities for obtaining wives will increase with them.

But to resume. I have said that I object to the Senate bill, because it operates unjustly in regard to our foreign population.

The Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. NICHOLSON], in his recent speech in support of that bill, used the following language:

"The bill passed by the Senate committee, and now before the House, is a bill to amend the provisions, and to that I shall concur my remarks."

"It provides that any person who is the head of a family and who has been in the United States, and whose intention to become a citizen in pursuance of our naturalization laws, shall have the right to enter one quarter section of land, to be designated by the Government, and in exercising this right, such person is to be restricted to those lands that have been surveyed, proclaimed, and offered for sale, and are consequently subject to private entry under existing laws."

With all respect for the Senator, I must go to correct the error in this statement of fact. The bill does not declare that any person "who shall have filed his intention to become a citizen, in pursuance of our naturalization laws," shall have the right to enter lands under its provisions. And here, too, my complaint; here I find another act of palpable injustice. The first section of the Senate bill is as follows:

"That any person who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, and who has filed his intention to become a citizen, in pursuance of this act, be entitled to enter one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated public lands, or a quantity equal thereto, to be designated by the Government, and in exercising this right, such person is to be restricted to those divisions of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed."

This section distinctly and expressly limits the application of the bill to the citizens of the United States. It would entirely exclude all other persons who may emigrate to this country from a foreign land after the passage of the bill, until they shall have resided in the United States for five years, and until they shall have become citizens thereof.

Mr. WIGFALL. I ask the Senator, in a word, does he propose to give away the public lands to persons who are not citizens of the United States?

Mr. WILKINSON. I propose to make the bill precisely as broad as the preemption act now is; to give to all persons the same advantages, and may declare their intention to become citizens of the United States. I wish to do nothing more; I believe that it would be unjust to do anything less. Twenty years ago Congress, in the passage of its preemption act, adopted the measure of placing aliens on the same footing as citizens, and encouraging them to become citizens of the United States on an equality (so far as the land laws were concerned) with the native-born citizen. This system was dictated, not only by an exalted sense of national liberty, but also by a wise desire on the part of the Government to invite, foster, and encourage emigration from Europe. I argue that twenty years of beneficial experience should be amply sufficient to confirm in our minds the evident advantages of the established policy. During that time we have been furnished with the most abundant proof of the loyalty of this class of our people. Why should we now begin to make any oppressive restrictions in regard to them?

Who can now pretend to dread their influence? Who can pretend, in the face of a long and convincing experience, to fear that they will become a higher class? But new reason has been discovered that should check the influx of this foreign population? Let us question the record; let us summon history to produce her testimony in regard to our foreign population. There has been no battlefield named Maine to Mexico that is not red with the blood of foreigners shed in defense of American liberty! Wherever our flag has been borne victoriously in battle, there the heart of the foreigner has throbbed beneath its folds! There he has stood shoulder to shoulder with the native-born, hoping the same honors to himself, and struggling for the same ends, and exulting in the same triumphs. Whenever we have conquered new territory from an enemy, his bones lie thickly scattered beneath it.

The Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Davis], who is now in the Senate, and who is the Secretary of War, can tell, from the annals of his Department, how true that class of our population has been in time of war. The whole cheerless West—indeed, the whole country—can attest how useful they have been in time of peace. The foreign population! Stretching outward and westward from our sea-port towns, bearing the will to toil and the energy to secure success, that population has marched steadily on, with the incessant and irresistible tread of a great destiny. It is the foreign population that has made music in the ax and the ax of the woodman has made music in the solitude; and happy homes have smiled throughout the wilderness. It has plunged into the depths of the marshes; and millions of acres have been reclaimed from sterility and won to cultivation. Every man, woman, and child, in our villages, towns, and cities, in its luminous path.

Wherever American art has triumphed, or American civilization has been clearly established, there you will find the history of our foreign population, not written in perishable or living records, but traced indelibly stamped upon the broad and action, upon the progress and civilization of a mighty national existence. These foreigners who have become citizens—these men who have accomplished so much—have only paved good will? May we not cherish the fond expectation that no disturbing sectional ideas shall be allowed to corrupt the infancy of a pure measure? It should be eroded in the lap of peace; it should receive its nurture and support from the kindly feelings of all sections of the country; because it is for the common benefit of the whole country.

Standing upon his own soil, the settler rises to the full dignity of manhood. He is independent from the hour in which he becomes the owner of a free farm— independent of everything, except his country and his God. Open up your domain to him; give him a home out of the vast abundance of your lands, and you will have found the surest method for the perpetuation of your Government. You will have satisfied the just ambition of the pioneer, and you will have secured the order in which the pioneer prairie is to be settled.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I have felt it incumbent on me, as one of the Committee on Public Lands, to speak at an early stage of the discussion, because not only Senators, like the Senator from Minnesota, who has just addressed the Senate, but others who have opposed the bill, do not seem to understand the principles on which the majority of the committee are acting. I propose to proceed with the discussion to-day. I should like to have an opportunity of addressing the Senate to-morrow at one o'clock. Before that, I wish to offer an amendment to the committee's proposition.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I want to offer one to the original proposition—merely to renew my amendment, and not to speak on it to-day.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator will be in order. I merely propose to perfect the amendment reported by the committee to the original bill. The amendment is to correct a difficulty which I suggested before. It is, in the sixth section of the Senate amendment, line two, after the word "resident," to insert "or who may hereafter become a resident;" and in the same line to strike out the word "and," at the end of the line, and to substitute the word "but;" and in line one to insert "white" between "any" and "person," so as to make the section read:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any white person, now a resident, or who may hereafter become a resident, of any one of the States or Territories of the United States; but who, at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed declaration of intention, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent as provided for in this act, such person shall be placed in equal footing with the native-born citizens of the United States.

Mr. HARLAN. I inquire whether that amendment is now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. RIEZ in the chair.) The amendment is not in order, as the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Fitch] is now pending. The Chair presumed it was read merely for information.

Mr. PUGH. I will explain to the Senator from Iowa that the pending motion of the committee is to strike out the entire House bill, and insert a substitute. Pending the discussion of the amendments, our practice—which I do not think is a very good practice, but it is our practice—it is in order to amend either the matter proposed to be stricken out or the matter proposed to be inserted. Now the Senator from Indiana proposes to amend the bill so that it is to be stricken out, I propose to amend the part that is to be inserted. Therefore I do not interfere with his amendment.

Mr. HARLAN. I understood the Senator who was occupying the chair at the time the bill was read, to say that he had no objection to amendments pertaining to the House bill; and after that bill was supposed to be perfected, he would then receive amendments to the Senate bill.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from Vermont is not now in the chair, but it has been the constant practice of the Senate. I have no objection to the order in which the question is put, however.

Mr. HARLAN. My reason for making the inquiry is, that I desire to offer two or three amendments to the first section of the bill, and I do not wish to have the first and second sections of the bill passed over until those amendments are proposed, if it is now in order to amend the Senate bill, or the matter proposed to be substituted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that, in accordance with a decision of a former occupant, the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is not in order.

Mr. PUGH. Then I give notice that I shall offer it at the proper time.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Would not an amendment to strike out a part of the first section, to which the amendment of the Senator from Indiana is offered as a proviso, be in order? If so, I desire to strike out after the word "entitled," in line one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there can be but one amendment before the Senate at the same time. The one offered by the Senator from Indiana has precedence.

Mr. FITCH. I merely wish to allude to the fact, that the Senator from Minnesota based the most of his opposition to my amendment, I believe, on the ground that the reservations provided for in the amendment would prevent the donation, by this bill, of any land within Minnesota; because, said he, although now subject to preemption, is not subject to private sale. In answer to that, I will simply say—what I presume that Senator and his colleague will bear me out in saying—that most of Minnesota is settled by preceptors. The House bill, or any other bill, which proposes to make a law, without restricting it to lands now in the market, would be an act of gross injustice to those preceptors. They have made their selections; they are improving the value of their own and the land immediately contiguous, belonging to the United States; and when they thus improve it, the bill proposes to donate to any one who settles on land beside them, the land which their money and their labor has rendered valuable. You compel the one to pay; to the other you say, "take for nothing; and give it for free." Is this justice? Is it justice to the preceptor?

Mr. WADE. I think the Senator is mistaken in that, as the House bill provides that those who have already preempted land may have the benefit of the bill.

My colleague will recollect it provides that those who have not yet paid shall be included; but it does not provide that those who have paid shall have their money back.

Mr. WADE. That is true. That is another thing. We must begin somewhere. I hope the amendment will not be so carried out. It is objectionable for the reason the Senator from Minnesota has stated. First of all, it confines it, as he has said, to land subject to private entry, and there is very little of that which is of any value at this time. I know very well that, nominally, there are some two hundred million acres in that condition; but in truth and in fact, it is the mere refuse and cullings of the land, and very little of it is valuable. Then as to the restriction to alternate sections, that is certainly subject to the observations made by the Senator from Minnesota. As he says, it is unjust and impolitic to undertake to speculate out of the improvements that the settlers make. I hope the friends of the bill will reject this amendment. I do not wish to argue it.

Mr. PUGH. My colleague is greatly mistaken. Sixty million acres, according to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, have been brought into market within twelve months, of the whole quantity that is now offered for sale. The idea that all the land now subject to private entry is refuse land, is all a pretense. Fifty-nine million acres and a fraction, within the last twelve months, and sixty million within the year before, according to the report of the Land Office, were brought into market. The surveys are going forward every year. Of course, it takes some time, even after the survey, to perfect all the orders of the Department; but vast quantities are coming into market every year; and when once the lands are offered at public sale and not purchased, they immediately become liable to private entry. It is a mistake to assert that this is refuse land. However, if no Senator wishes to speak at large on the bill now, as the majority I propose to make, I will make somewhat on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, I propose, before we take a vote on it, that the matter may be adjourned until to-morrow at one o'clock, and made the special order.

Mr. HARLAN. I am sure the Senator does not adjourn. I propose it the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, April 3, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, Mr. Prayor by the Chaplain, Rev. Thomas H. Strotter.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SUBLETTE CUT-OFF MASSACRE.

Mr. SCOTT. Yesterday, during my absence, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] made a minority report in reference to the Sublette Cut-Off massacre. I now ask the consent of the House to present the report of the majority of the committee on that subject.

No objection being made, the report was received.

KENTUCKY RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. BURNETT, by unanimous consent, presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, in favor of granting pensions to all the soldiers engaged in the war of 1812; and in favor of granting to the heirs of volunteers who served in the war of 1812 bounty lands, in like manner, and under the same circumstances as the heirs of those who served in Mexico are now entitled to receive warrants; which were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BURNETT also, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, in favor of the removal of the duty on tobacco in foreign nations; which were referred to the special committee on that subject.

Mr. BURNETT also, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, asking an appropriation by Congress for the enlargement and completion of the Louisville and Portland canal; which were referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. BURNETT also, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, urging upon the treaty-making power of the Government of the United States the necessity of amending the tenth section of our treaty with Great Britain in regard to fugitives from justice, which was ratified in London, on the 13th of October, 1842, by the British minister and American envoy respectively, as to include in its provisions fugitives from service or labor, so held under the Constitution and laws of the United States or of either of the States; which were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

ART COMMISSION.

Mr. TRAIN. I ask the consent of the House to report a bill which I neglected to report yesterday, to define the duties and fix the salaries of the United States Art Commission. It is a matter upon which some legislation must be had; and I merely wish to have the bill printed, so that members may examine it, with a view of calling it up at some future time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. TRAIN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his call for a minute. I merely desire to have the bill printed.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I object to that bill.

POLYGOON IN ILLINOIS.

The SPEAKER stated the regular business in order before the House to be the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary for the suppression of polygamy; but that on the 2d of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McCLERNAND] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. COOPER. Before we go to that business, I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution for the compensation of R. R. Richards, in order that it may be referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Objection was made.

Mr. McCLERNAND. Mr. Speaker, the question before us involves two inquiries: first, whether Congress possesses power under the Constitution to pass the bill under consideration, and, if so, whether it is expedient to pass it. I will first pass it. If my able and astute friend from Louisiana [Mr. TAYLOR] is right in his negation of this power, then the question is at an end, and the committee's bill should be at once rejected.

The ethical and many distinguished friends of Virginia [Mr. Patton] and his eloquent colleague [Mr. MILLER] are right in their affirmation of the power, still the question already stated send them away, or to repeal their territorial charter, and to merge them in more wholesome and honest States. And how many would I answer, that the substitute I have prepared, and which was offered the other day, when I was absent from the city, for me, and at my instance, by my colleague, [Mr. LOGAN,] will effectually do it.

I propose, sir, by my substitute, to repeal the organic act of the Territory, and to divide the Territory into two parts—making a Territory out of each part, in conjunction with some additions to one of the Territories from Nebraska, Kansas, and the Mexican boundary of the Territory of New Mexico, as given in my substitute, are as follows:

Sec. 2. And it is further enacted, That the district of country which is embraced within the following limits, to wit: beginning at the point where the one hundred and third (103d) meridian intersects the thirty-seventh (37th) parallel of north latitude; thence on said meridian until it intersects the forty-second (42d) parallel of north latitude; thence west on said parallel to the one hundred and sixteenth (116th) parallel of longitude west of Greenwich; thence south on said meridian until it intersects the thirty-seventh (37th) parallel of north latitude; thence on said parallel to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, by the act, organized into a new Territory, to be called the Territory of Jeffersonia; and the provisions of the act for the organization of the Territory of Nebraska, approved March 3, 1854, are hereby declared to be a part of the organic act of the said Territory of Jeffersonia, with the boundaries heretofore said described, as fully as if the said act were hereby enacted, and the provisions of said act are hereby declared to be a part of the organic act of the said Territory of Jeffersonia; and until the Legislature of said Territory shall otherwise provide, the said act of government of said Territory shall be at Denver City.

Sec. 3. And it is further enacted, That the residue of said Territory of Utah, bounded as follows: beginning at a point on the forty-second (42d) parallel of north latitude, where the one hundred and sixteenth (116th) parallel of longitude intersects the same; thence east on said parallel to the thirty-seventh (37th) parallel of north latitude; thence west on said parallel until it intersects the boundary of the Territory of California; thence following the said boundary to the forty-second (42d) parallel of north latitude; thence east on said parallel to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby organized into a new Territory, to be called the Territory of Nevada; and the provisions of the act for the organization of the said Territory of Nebraska, approved March 3, 1854, are hereby declared to be a part of the organic act of the said Territory of Nevada, with the boundaries heretofore said described, as fully as if the provisions of said act were hereby enacted, and the provisions of said act are hereby declared to be a part of the organic act of the said Territory of Nevada; and until the Legislature of said Territory shall otherwise provide, the act of government of said Territory shall be at Denver City.

[Mr. McCLERNAND here spread out a map prepared at his instance, at the War Department, showing the boundaries of the Territories proposed by him to be created.]

The arrangement divides the Utah by a line running from south to north through Salt Lake, and supercedes Salt Lake City as the present seat of government, by substituting Denver City as the temporary capital of Jeffersonia, and Genoa as the temporary capital of Nevada. Genoa is a pleasant town, situated on Carson's valley, at the mouth of the South Park, on Carson's river, in the midst of the silver region, which is now drawing so wonderful an emigration from California. And Denver City is the rendezvous for the thousands who have already thronged there, and who will send who will emigrate to the gold region about Pike's Peak this spring.

I am assured by gentlemen well informed upon the subject, that the population of these Territories will be, by the time my substitute could be carried into effect, as low as that of the Territory of the present Mormon population of Utah. There is my friend from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK,] who is better informed on this subject than I am. Will he please to answer to it?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will give to the House what information I have upon the subject, as one of the members of the Committee on Territories. Members of that committee will justify me in the belief that in the coming summer there will be at least fifty thousand people at Pike's Peak. It is admitted that there are now going to the Territory of Missouri, enough to make the population thirty thousand. The Delegate of that region has been before us, and from what he has stated, and from other sources of information, I am justified in the belief that during the next three months there will be an acquisition of settlers in the Pike's Peak region as will increase its population to fifty thousand souls. What number will permanently reside there gentlemen must decide for themselves. It is known that those who go there for mining purposes principally; some go for agricultural purposes, and some for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. How many are there now?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. From the best information I have at hand, I am of the belief that there are about eight or ten thousand people at Pike's Peak at this time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. There was a speculation like that indulged by the gentleman very early in the month of last year. Talk to me about fifty or sixty thousand people at Pike's Peak! [Laughter.]

Mr. PARROTT. I hope gentlemen will permit me to say a word on the subject.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I would like to say another word on the subject. I am upon the floor by the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois. The very measure the gentleman is discussing in reference to dividing out the Territory of Utah has been somewhat discussed in the Committee on Territories. I am not, of course, at liberty to discuss what has occurred in that committee. But, sir, I ask the House to allow me to say that dividing out the Territory of Utah is the best way to dispose of this question. I am free to state that it can be done substantially as well as by the gentleman from Illinois. [Mr. McCLERNAND says that this unhappy and deluded people can be put under other jurisdiction, and made subservient to the standard of Christian morality, as well as the legal authority of the Constitution; that the nation of the Constitution can be made to become upon them as to correct the enormities with which they are charged. I believe that it is the only practical way under the Constitution that we can dispose of this question.]

I will make another remark. I understand, under the Constitution, that no man can proceed against criminally, unless he is first indicted by a grand jury, and within the jurisdiction where the person indicted resides. If you give jurisdiction to Utah Territory, of course the grand jury there will be drawn from the people of that Territory. If a man can be indicted by a grand jury that has got to be found before the grand inquest within the jurisdiction. That inquest in Utah would be composed of Mormons, and every sensible man knows that they would not indict a Mormon for the crime of polygamy. If I may say by expression, it is absurd, therefore, to legislate in any way over these people, when such an insurmountable obstacle is interposed to the execution of the law.

Mr. PARROTT. If the gentleman from Illinois will indulge me, I would like to submit a somewhat different estimate of the matter before us. The Pike's Peak, or Jefferson Territory, as it is sometimes called, is chiefly within the limits of the Territory of Kansas, and its people belong to the constituency which I have the honor to represent on this floor. A considerable number of them were entitled to vote at the late election for Delegate in Kansas. Under these circumstances, I was much concerned to know accurately the number of inhabitants, as they would probably turn the scale in case they should take the presidency in the election. The result of my inquiries was, that while the population at the height of the excitement had gone up to fifty thousand, and in the reaction down to five thousand, the permanent and stable portion of the community, when the winter set in, was about ten thousand. I will now estimate, carried out by a comparison of all the information I could obtain from various sources, is not too high, and is, I think, nearly correct. They did not vote with the eastern portion of the Territory, intending to preserve, so to speak, their individuality by making an organization of their own, and ignoring any other, till Congress could act upon their application for a separate organization.

I am friendly to the organization of a Territory in this district of country. It is greatly to be regretted that the carrying out of the measure there will be, speaking within limits, a concession of twenty or thirty thousand people to the numbers already living there. I must be allowed to say, however, that I hope that this will not take place till Kansas is admitted as a State into the Union. The limits prescribed by the Constitution for the admission of a new State leave this country out, and action will then become inevitable. I object to any partition or dismemberment of the Territory as such until that consummation is realized. I protest against the entanglement of our fair proportions. I hope that that act of justice is near at hand.

Legislation for this country will become necessary after the State of Kansas is admitted. Nothing is so important now to all the country to be affected by this legislation as the admission of Kansas.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. There is testimony given, and I want rebutting evidence to be given. I do not believe that there are five thousand people in Jeffersonia, and during this very winter they have had to go to Santa Fe and Taos. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCLERNAND. My friend from Virginia is skeptical on many points. He doubts that there will be a large immigration to the Territory. With the Delegate from Kansas I think there will be an immigration there like that which went to California and filled up that far-off region so suddenly and magically. Gold is the incentive to immigrate to Jeffersonia, as it was the incentive to immigrate to California. Like causes will produce like effects.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I differ with the gentleman.

Mr. McCLERNAND. Does the gentleman doubt that gold is the incentive?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That was the object; but Pike's Peak is no California.

Mr. McCLERNAND. We have the gentleman's authority on that point. But was not the gentleman equally inclined to discredit the richness of the mines in California?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I went to California myself, and of course gave the reports concerning it full faith and credit.

Mr. McCLERNAND. As I have already said, the silver mines in the region embracing Carson's Valley are irresistibly attracting a large immigration from California. There is already a considerable population there; and in the course of the present year it will no doubt be greatly increased. Upon the whole, sir, I feel assured that the population of the two proposed Territories, other than Mormons, will soon be numerically sufficient to overrule and correct Mormon abuses and vices—to enforce among them the canons of an approved and Christian morality.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If we have the power to repeal the act organizing Utah, have we not the power to amend it? If we can, then cannot we insert a provision suppressing polygamy?

Mr. McCLERNAND. I will answer the gentleman. What will be the benefit of your legislation—of a legislative prohibition of polygamy—if you prohibit it, unless you intend to enforce it by the Mormons themselves? But I have passed over this ground already, and have not the time or disposition to go over it again.

Under the operation of my substitute, if the Mormons should be unwilling to reform their vices and dissipation, they would probably pass out of our jurisdiction into Mexico or the British territories.

[Here the hammer fell.] Mr. LAMAR obtained the floor, and responded to the question of Mr. CLARK. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. NOELL. Mr. Speaker, upon mature reflection, I have come to the conclusion that I cannot vote for the bill reported from the Committee on Territories. My objections, however, to that bill are not such as to prevent me from voting against legislation in reference to the domestic institutions of a Territory. I am one of those who hold that Congress may enact, as an original proposition, any law for the people of a Territory which the Territorial Legislature itself can enact. My objection rests upon other grounds, and I will state them before I conclude.

Let me make one or two preliminary remarks. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] has urged the necessity of submitting some remarks which I desire to submit to the consideration of the House from Tennessee [Mr. EYENBROOK] to assert that, when Congress assumes the power to prohibit crime in a Territory, it concedes that it may also prohibit or exclude slavery therefrom. If I understand the theory of the Government upon that point it is this: the reason why Congress cannot exclude slavery, or create an inferior tribunal to do so, has no application to the question of polygamy. The Federal Constitution is a compact between coequal States, and, of necessity, recognizes the validity of all State laws and institutions which do not violate its express provisions. The Constitution regards all these laws and institutions as valid and right, because made by competent State authorities. Whenever the right attaches to a State under the authority of such a law, whether it be statute law or common law, and the party holding the right passes into a Territory, with the property to which the right has thus attached, it falls immediately under the operation of this protection, and the right attaches and remains under its protection so long as the Federal jurisdiction continues over such Territory.

And this consequence does not flow from the fact that each individual takes with him the local law of the State whence he came, but because he carries the right already vested by law, and which cannot be divested in a Territory while it remains under Federal jurisdiction. This principle may be aptly compared to the general rule regulating contracts. A contract, valid in the State where made, is bound to be respected in every other State. Its validity depends on the lex loci. Its enforcement is according to the lex fori. It does not follow from this that the party claiming under a contract made in another State carries about with him the law of that State, and that he is with slavery. It being lawful in South Carolina to own slaves, when the master takes his slave thenceforth into a Territory, he does not carry with him the local law of South Carolina, but he carries with him a legal right originating under the laws of South Carolina, and the Federal Constitution recognizes and protects the right. Not so, however, with polygamy. That practice is not lawful in any State. There is no State in the Union where polygamy is tolerated or established by law. I undertake to say, however, Mr. Speaker, that if the laws of any State of the Union recognized, tolerated, or established polygamy, and an individual citizen of that State, under the laws of that State, should marry two, three, or four women, and should carry into one of the common Territories of the United States, and should marry marriage between him and those women, being valid by the laws of the State where the contract of marriage was entered into, there would be no power in this Federal Government to break up that contract or to declare the connection a criminal one. Such a State might exist, and so might because no State of the Union has established the system of polygamy, or is likely to do so.

I therefore repudiate entirely the idea that there is any analogy between the crime of polygamy and the institution of slavery, as it exists in the South. But while I repudiate this, I do not withhold that Congress may enact any law which a Territorial Legislature might enact under authority of Congress, I am opposed to the provisions of this bill, for the reasons which I will proceed now to lay before the House.

In the first place, I say that the practice of this Government has been against this mode of legislation for the organized Territories. I undertake to say that there is a constitutional objection to the way of this kind of legislation, while the organic act of the Territory is in force, and while the power to make local laws is not withdrawn.

We all understand the theory of our Government to be, that all power of making laws was originally in the people themselves. In the absence of written law, the people of a community might assemble together, and make all laws necessary for their security. But when they assembled in convention to frame a State constitution, they delegated the power to make their laws to the legislative department of the State government. While the government thus exists, it is contrary to the practice of all civilized Governments for the people to take back the power of making laws directly to themselves, and to enter into conventions for the purpose of making their own laws. Now, there was a case decided by the supreme court of our country in this point. The Legislature of the State of Missouri passed an act creating a new county; but that act contained a provision leaving it to the people of that county to decide, by vote, whether that law should go into operation or not. The question was carried up to the supreme court, and that tribunal decided that the legislative power of the State had been delegated by the people to the legislative department of the State government, and that, therefore, those same people who had delegated the power could not directly exercise the power themselves. If that decision be correct, when Congress delegated its power to legislate over matters which concerned the people of these Territories alone, it is in conflict with the principles of all government for Congress to undertake to exercise these powers at the same time, directly and immediately, as proposed by this bill. What would be the condition of things if we were now to act in operation these two law-making machines at the same time over the same Territory, and embracing the same subjects? There would be the Congress of the United States engaged in making laws upon a certain subject to-day, and the Territorial Legislature of Utah engaged in making laws upon the same subject, and these laws coming into conflict with each other. The power of the Territorial Legislature is derived from Congress itself, and here would be the body which has delegated the power, and the body to which the power is delegated, both legislating at the same time, and upon the same subjects. Unutterable confusion and disorder must be the consequence.

But there is another objection. I said, on a former occasion, it was impracticable for the Congress of the United States to legislate with the laws necessary for regulating the domestic concerns of a Territory. If we set out with the idea of correcting all local wrongs in a Territory, we shall have no time for any other kind of business. If we undertake to make laws to punish polygamy, we shall have no time for any other kind of law to exist in a Territory which a Territorial Legislature does not think proper to punish, we shall never see an end of such legislation; and the whole time of this Congress will be taken up with these repeated questions, while the great interests of the country will be neglected. We cannot accomplish such ends as this bill is designed to reach, in this body, by any such means.

But that is not all. What do we know in reference to the wants of a Territory? What do we know of the wants of the United States? The members of Congress upon this floor know how to reach the evil attempted to be reached by this bill? How many members of Congress know what will be the practical operation of this bill, if it passes into a law? I undertake to say, that not one member of Congress can furnish the answer to this effect will be. Some gentlemen suppose that the bill is intended to punish Brigham Young and those who have numerous wives in Utah. I undertake to say that the punishment will fall upon more than upon Brigham Young. If all alike are punished, it will fall equally upon the deluded women who have been induced to go to Utah. They may feel its force, in being deprived of a home for themselves and their children. There is where the punishment will fall; and perhaps Brigham Young would be glad to get rid of some of his old wives. Indeed, no one can know how this bill will operate.

I refer to these things as an illustration of the fact that this body is not competent to legislate in reference to the local concerns of a distant Territory, and that the only mode of legislation which will enable us to perform that duty.

But there is another objection to this bill. We are undertaking, at one single blow, to strike down this system, without looking to the consequences which will follow from it. This Government has already spent three or twenty millions of dollars to keep Utah in subjection. What will be the effect of this bill? I say, that before we pass it, we had better make an appropriation of $50,000,000 to increase the Army, because you very possibly may have to carry on a war under this bill. I am not one of those who would hesitate to spend millions of dollars to put down a wrong in a practicable and proper manner; but when the effect of this bill will be, not to suppress the institution at which it is aimed, but only to bring down the trouble with that people, I must certainly oppose it.

But, again: the people of Utah, as has been stated here by the gentleman from Illinois, showed a rebellious spirit when in Illinois. They did the same thing when in Missouri. We had to drive them out of Missouri, and the people of Illinois had to drive them out of Illinois. And now they have gone into the mountain passes, and the question is, what shall we do with them? I am willing to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. McCLELLAND,] for the reason that it will enable us to get rid of a great evil, and in a way which will not bring these troubles upon the people and the Government. I am willing to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. BRAVETT.] Substantially, it is right; though it requires correction in details. I am willing to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.] Indeed, I am ready to vote for any proposition, provided it be not an attempt to introduce into this body direct legislation in reference to the domestic institutions of a Territory.

Mr. BRANCH. I think I understand what the gentleman from Missouri alludes to as a correction in the details of the bill. I think he means that the bill does not provide for compensating the members of the Legislature. I can satisfy the gentleman on that score. My amendment proposes to repeal only two sections of the bill organizing Utah, and all these matters relating to the compensation of members of the Legislature, and to details of that description, stand in the original act organizing the Territory unreppealed. I do not propose to touch them at all. They are all provided for in the sections of the bill organizing Utah, and all these matters relating to the compensation of members of the Legislature, and to details of that description, stand in the original act organizing the Territory unreppealed. I do not propose to touch them at all. They are all provided for in the sections of the bill organizing Utah, and all these matters relating to the compensation of members of the Legislature, and to details of that description, stand in the original act organizing the Territory unreppealed.

Mr. NOELL. I understand the gentleman from North Carolina. The difficulty with me is regard to the matter is, that the proposition does not directly refer to the provision as being applied to the Legislative Council proposed by this amendment. I understand that the gentleman refers to the members of the Legislative Assembly, but no term is used in apply that provision to the new Legislative Council.

Mr. BRANCH. I would say in reply to that, that even if the gentleman from Missouri is correct in this, it is provided for in another way. The Legislature would have the power to any what these details should be, and Congress would make an annual appropriation of a limited amount to pay these expenses, which amount they could not pay otherwise. Hence they could not vote themselves very extravagant pay. In addition to that, if they did vote themselves extravagant pay, or if they passed any other bad laws, the President of the United States and the Senate would remove the members of the Legislature.

Mr. NOELL. I would say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I do not make that such an objection to the proposition as would prevent me from voting for it. I merely made the suggestion, thinking that the objection might be considered. That objection, however, is not very powerful in its influence on my mind. My main objection is to the bill reported by the committee. I regard it as utterly impracticable. The effect of it will not be to put down the crime of polygamy. The evil will still continue, with innumerable difficulties will spring from the law.

I do not hold that the fact that Congress undertook to pass a law punishing crimes in a Territory, brings about the conclusion that Congress might pass a law on any other subject. I understand that Congress has the power to legislate in limited powers. I understand that the Congress of the United States cannot transgress these powers. The right to property in slaves is a right recognized by the Constitution of the United States, and by the constitutions of the different States of the Union; and when that institution passes into the common Territories, the Constitution of the United States protects it. It is unlike this system of polygamy, which is not recognized as an institution in any of the States of the Union. If it were, if an individual, by virtue of the laws of any State of the Union, as I have before remarked, were to be married to three, four, five, or half a dozen women, and if that marriage were valid in the State, and he took them into one of the common Territories of the Union, I believe that would be a crime, and the Federal Government to break up such marital relations, or to punish the individual for which was not a crime where he committed it.

Mr. REAGAN. By the consent of the gentleman from Missouri, I wish to call his attention to a point which would be a serious consideration, and which would seem to make his argument untenable, and to place him and his friends in a wrong position.

Mr. NOELL. I will listen to the gentleman. Mr. REAGAN. There is an assumption in a former part of the gentleman's speech that the right to have slave property protected in a Territory resulted from the force of the laws of the States from which it may be taken; and that any other insinuation recognized by a State must be protected in a Territory. It has occurred to me, from the course of the Dred Scott decision, as well as from the reasoning of the majority of the court, that the right rests on clauses of the Federal Constitution guaranteeing the security of private vested rights and personal property. All that the authority of the State confers is the original investiture of the title to the property; and then there is the clause of the Federal Constitution concerning personal property and private rights, which secures them against the interference of the Federal Government within the Territories.

Mr. NOELL. The gentleman from Texas has misapprehended the point of my argument, to some extent. I maintain the position which I took; and the remarks that have fallen from the gentleman have not changed my views. I understand that to be a Government of a number of different sovereign States that comprise the whole Confederation; that the theory of the Government is that each is equal to the other, and that, so long as they remain equal partners in the compact, the institutions and rights that are vested by the laws of each one of these States must be respected by the Federal Government in all the common territory that belongs to the Union. I do not regard this as a fundamental doctrine. It rises above the mere positive provisions of the Constitution, and results from the very nature of the compact; and whenever the Federal Government refuses to recognize a Territory a right vested by local State law, it tramples that State with disregard. That is my position. If there were no such provisions in the Constitution as those mentioned by the gentleman from Texas, the mere fact that the States had entered into a Confederacy as equal partners would involve the Federal Government in the principle that the General Government would recognize within the sphere of its jurisdiction the institutions and rights of all of the States; so that, when a man, owning a slave within the limits of a sovereign State by virtue of the laws thereof, passes beyond the limits of that State into the common Territory, which is the common property of all of the States, the Constitution holds that that property is rightfully held, because of the fact that the laws of the State authorized it; and the Constitution requires that it should be protected. There is no mystery of the matter, independently of any express provision of the Constitution.

If that were not the case, I apprehend that none of the States would have entered into the Union at all. It is in such cases precisely as it is under the common law of contracts. It is a well-established principle, that a contract made in one State, if valid by the laws thereof, and if the parties to that contract transfer their domicile to another State, is valid also in that State. Why? Because it is lawful where it is made. The manner of enforcement is that provided for in the law where the remedy is sought; but the validity of the contract is determined by the law where the contract is made. So it is with regard to the rights of property. The Constitution of the United States prohibits, in a very nature, any interference by the Federal Government with the rights of property, whether vested under the laws of Massachusetts or under those of South Carolina. I care not whether every single provision of the Constitution having a direct bearing on the question of slavery were applied to the rights of property recognized by the local laws of each State would exist whenever that property was transferred to a Territory—the common property of all the States. That is my position.

On that view, the question of polygamy and the question of slavery are quite different. My objection to this bill is not founded on the idea that Congress could not, as an original proposition, legislate on the subject of polygamy. It is not founded on the idea that the question of polygamy is beyond the jurisdiction of Congress in a Territory where there has not been any delegation of the powers of local legislation. I recognize the right of Congress to legislate in the Territories on all subjects from which they are not off by the provisions of the Constitution itself.

Now, sir, it may be said that if we do not take at this evil through the act of Congress, we have no remedy for it. I undertake to say that if the power of legislation in the Territory shall be withdrawn from an elective Legislative Assembly, and delegated to a Legislative Council to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, located in the country, and familiar with the wants and feelings of the people, looking to the evil that exists there, and supplying a gradual remedy by some slow and certain process, we may be relieved of this difficulty without further trouble in regard to it.

If we undertake to pass this law, we have an elective Legislative Assembly still left in full operation in Utah; and before this statute gets to Utah, if we should undertake to execute it, they would have other laws upon their local statute-book that would require the action of Congress to wipe out. Where is the necessity of passing a direct law upon this subject, and introducing a new subject into Congress, for the purpose of bringing about confusion between the Federal Government and the people of the Territories? Let us rather withdraw from the people of the Territory the right to make these laws, and transfer it to the President, or to any body qualified to exercise it in conformity to the principles of our Government, and so as not to shock the moral sense of the people everywhere. This is the true theory; and if this object can be accomplished by the proposition of the gentleman assisting me, [Mr. CLARKSON,] I hereby propose the position of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. BRANCH,] I am willing to vote for either of them; but I must protest against the inauguration of a new system of legislation for distant Territories. I am not terrified or threatened from supporting this bill by any of the threats held out by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. EVANS,] in the extraordinary speech which he made yesterday. But I cannot vote for it for the reasons which I have stated, because I believe that it would be necessary to accomplish the object which is in view by the passage of this law, and because I desire to have such a radical change in the system of management in Utah as will save us the necessity of all further interference in regard to this or any other mere local questions.

Mr. SPEER. I am willing to vote for this bill reported by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. NELSON,] not because I believe that it will accomplish the object proposed by its conductors, for, in the unfortunate state of things which exist in that Territory, any such legislation which might probably remain in the statute-book; but I propose to vote for it as the best measure that has been presented to the consideration of the House; and that it may stand at least as a protest of the nation against the enormities which now curse and disgrace the Territory of Utah.

I should have been better pleased, far better pleased, if the committee who had this subject in charge had introduced a measure which would have wiped from the statute-book the act creating the territorial government of Utah, and have provided a legislative tribunal, appointed by the President and Senate, and a judicial system that could arraign and punish, and execute the laws; and, sir, I see no constitutional objections in the way of such a proceeding. It is but recently in the history of the legislation of this country that the power of Congress to govern, in all respects, the Territories of the country has been questioned anywhere; and I do not understand now that that power is questioned to govern the Territories, except that certain limitations are laid out or are implied in the Constitution of the United States as restraining the power of Congress in certain cases. Hence I have been not a little astonished to hear gentlemen inquire, in the course of this debate, how, when Congress has once created a territorial government, it is not authorized the election of a legislative Assembly, it can thereafter interfere with it in any respect, or control its legislation; and one gentleman who, I think, has adorned the bench, inquired whether, after Congress has invested a Territorial Assembly with the entire legislative power, it is not forever precluded thereafter from interfering with the operation of that government? Now, a law creating a territorial government is not a contract between the people of the Territory and Congress by which we are bound. Laws are simply the expression of the supreme will of the people through their representative, subject to be altered, changed, and modified, at the pleasure of the law-making power.

I assert that the power of Congress had never been denied or questioned up to 1850, by any statesman or jurist in the country, to legislate for the Territories upon all the domestic relations, slavery excluded, and it cannot be denied.

You will find that in all the territorial bills passed up to 1850, the power of Congress is expressly reserved to pass upon the legislation of the Territories, and either approve or disapprove it. The creation of a legislative body for a particular Territory or district was merely a convenient mode of doing it, based on the expediency of doing it by direct legislation of Congress.

The very existence of the power to create a territorial government implies, of course, the right to legislate for the Territories. No man can dispute that proposition who has read anything in Blackstone. Now, after we acquired the Territory of Louisiana, gentlemen were probably familiar with the government that was then instituted, and as it was a little different in its features from modern territorial governments, I wish to call the attention of the House to it.

By an act passed, I think, in October, 1803, after the acquisition of that Territory from France, Congress enacted "that all the military, civil, and judicial powers exercised by the existing government of the same, shall be vested in such person or persons, looking to the mode of exercise, as the President shall direct." And that was the form of government that existed for a period of one year over the Territory of Louisiana. All legislative, judicial, and military power in the Territory was vested in persons selected by the President, to be exercised as directed by him. Now, under the machinery of this territorial government of Utah, a judicial tribunal is created, and it is modeled, of course, in accordance with that clause of the Constitution of the United States relating to the obedience of laws to be laid out, is guaranteeing the right of trial by jury, and the protection against trials under criminal law of any persons until indicted by a grand jury. But, sir, this whole system, and indeed the whole theory of our Government, rests upon the assumption that the voluntary obedience of laws is the basis. The moment that voluntary obedience ceases, this machinery is thrown into disorder; your government is at an end, and you have no means of enforcing or protecting any right in civil or social life. And, Mr. SPEER, this is the real point of my speech. I am not speaking [Mr. NELSON,] and all the substitutes and amendments proposed for it, do not reach the difficulty, and never will reach the difficulty, so long as you undertake to carry out this theory in Utah. In my opinion, you have the means of accomplishing your object, but your judicial system will never be adequate to the accomplishment of any such purpose. The right of trial by jury, and the right of requiring that that trial shall be preceded by indictment by the grand jury, are based upon the assumption that the law is to be carried out, and to carry out the law if it lead to an indictment, and that the petty jury will be willing to carry out the law if it lead to a conviction. But do you expect any such result in a community like that in Utah?

Now there is certainly no ground for supposing—and I believe no jurist has ever pretended that the provisions of the Constitution of the United States in relation to the erection of the judiciary system, in which trial by jury, and indictment by a grand jury, are guaranteed to the people of a State, are applicable at all to the Territories of the United States. Nobody holds to that. If it were so, you have been trying and hanging men in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States for the past fifty years. For if the jury, and the grand jury, in the Territories, are required to be formed after the rule prescribed in the Constitution of the United States, those men who have been tried and hung by the judgment of your territorial courts have been tried and hung in violation of the Constitution; and the judges, jury, and grand juries, in the Territories, are guilty of murder, unless it be true that Congress has full power to create a tribunal or court wholly unlike those tribunals prescribed in the Constitution of the United States for the States.

Now, Mr. SPEAKER, certainly it goes no pleasure to see mixed up in a debate of this description the question involving the rights of slaveholders to carry their slaves into the Territories, and hold them there in spite of the power of Congress. In my judgment, it has nothing to do with this question; but if you will take the last exposition given by the Supreme Court of the United States of the power of Congress over the Territories, you will observe the position assumed in that decision by the learned judges—and whether it is right or wrong I do not propose at this time to argue—you will find that it is based, not upon any want of power on the part of Congress to govern a Territory; not upon the right of Congress to institute such government as they see fit, whether they shall reserve the power of legislation to themselves, or grant it to be exercised by a Legislative Council, or intrust it entirely to the territorial government—all power over that subject rests in the pleasure of Congress, with only the limitations found in the Constitution on the exercise of this power.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I should like to see whether I understand the position that the gentleman takes. Do I understand him to hold that Congress has entire power over the legislation of a Territory?

Mr. OLIN. Congress possesses all the legislative power that can be exercised under the Constitution.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. What power has Congress to enforce even the organic act of a Territory if the people of a Territory refuse to accept it? I ask the gentleman that question.

Mr. OLIN. I hardly see what that question has to do with the subject. I do not know that I understand the gentleman.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I repeat the question. Suppose the people of a Territory do not choose to accept it: what power has Congress to enforce it?

Mr. OLIN. The same power that Congress has to enforce any act affecting the Territory. The same power that the government of a State has over the citizens within the limits of a State, and even more; for, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court, as I understand them, Congress has the same power over the people of the Territories, that Congress and a State government combined have over the people of that State.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. Well, sir, what power has a State government to force the people of that State to execute its organic law, if they choose not to do it?

Mr. OLIN. Of what importance is that question?

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman asks the question, what the importance of that is? I think that is the whole matter. He thinks that Congress has an absolute, unconditional power of legislation over the Territories, and of passing an organic act for a Territory, while the people themselves have no power. Now, it seems to me that it is important, in reference to that assertion—I do not call it an argument—that the gentleman should answer the question, what power this Government has to compel the people of a Territory to accept an organic act, if they choose not to do it? I hold that these organic acts are contracts entered into between the Government and the parties; and that if the people of a Territory do not choose to accept the act we pass, we cannot force them to do it. We have no power within the Government to do it.

Mr. OLIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, this proposition is a most extraordinary one—that the Congress of the United States have really no control over the public domain; have no right to pass any law respecting it; and have no right to prohibit you or me, or any one, from entering upon it or settling upon it.

Why, sir, nobody ever questioned that until this new doctrine of equative sovereignty was introduced. Do we not claim the right to control the public land? Cannot we say how you may go upon it? Cannot we convict trespassers and punish them? Has we not done this over and over again? The gentleman asks me how can we compel a Territory to accept an act we create a territorial government? How can we compel them to accept it? We constitute a territorial government, enact a code of laws, send a Governor, judges, and marshals to enforce the laws, and the people yield obedience to them or resist them. If they resist, the whole power of the General Government may be invoked to suppress such resistance; and the only way to avoid accepting the act, would be to quit the Territory. They will quietly march out if they do not accept it, or undergo the penalties of the law.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I understand the gentleman to say that, if the people of a Territory are not disposed to accept just such an organic act as he may choose to propose, he is in favor of driving them out.

Mr. OLIN. You misunderstand me. Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. That is the logical deduction from your argument.

Mr. OLIN. I will proceed with my argument. Gentlemen who have perused the decisions of the judges of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case, know that not one of the judges denied the power of Congress to exercise legislation with respect to all the relations of life—to exercise legislation on all legitimate subjects of legislation, except where the power is limited by the Constitution. It is undertaken to spell out of the Constitution a limitation on the subject of slavery, upon the ground that the Constitution guarantees the right of property in slaves. It is alleged that, being thus guaranteed by the Constitution, it cannot be affected by any act of Congress. And now, if some ingenious gentleman can spell out of the Constitution, in the same way, some guarantee of the protection and security of adultery and polygamy, we will discover another constitutional limitation on the power of Congress to legislate for the Territories.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman whether he thinks Congress has the right under the Constitution, to pass a law for the establishment of slavery in a Territory?

Mr. OLIN. I have no doubt Congress has the same power to establish slavery in the Territories that any legislature could have.

Now, one word in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. NOELL], who protested against the bill before the House upon the ground that it was initiating a new mode of legislation. It seemed to strike the gentleman that it was something novel in the legislation of this country, that, after Congress had created a territorial government, it should undertake to pass any law affecting the internal concern and policy of that Territory, or even to repeal the law it had passed. If the gentleman will look through the legislation of our country, he will find, during the whole period of our country's history, that Congress has repeatedly interfered in that way, and upon all such occasions that it asserted the right to legislate upon all subjects whatever. The mode adopted for convenience was generally to invest a local tribunal with certain legislative powers; for it was easier for that tribunal than Congress to attend to all the details of local legislation. Nobody ever supposed that, because Congress had delegated such a power, it had not the right to resume it whenever it pleased.

Mr. NOELL. I do not wish to be misunderstood about this matter. I take the ground that it was against the practice for Congress to assume this power to make local laws.

Mr. OLIN. I have said all I desire to say, and cannot say more. I do not propose to enter into any attempt to abrogate the powers of Congress to govern the Territories of the United States. It is a doctrine which has found no favor in this Government down to the unhappy period of the repeal of the Missouri compromise. I wish to enter my protest against this doctrine of popular sovereignty in the Territories. It seems as though God, in His providence, had allowed this modern Sodom to grow up in our midst as a rebuke to the Government for departing from that safe and wise policy of our fathers in the government of the Territories.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK], whether in his opinion Congress has the right to establish polygamy, and to protect it in a Territory?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I deny that Congress has the right to establish polygamy or slavery there.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Or to protect polygamy there?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. It has the right to protect property in a Territory that is authorized to hold as property in any of the States from which the people go to a Territory.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. And it has not the right to protect the relation of husband and wife?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Congress has the right to protect all relations and all property in any country belonging to the United States.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. My question was suggested by the question which the gentleman himself propounded.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Polygamy is a relation not authorized by any State of this Union, or anywhere else, that I know of, where decency and good order prevail. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Suppose it did exist in one of the States by authority of that State?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. That would make the world worse than I suppose it ever will be, and worse, I have no doubt, than this country ever will be, unless, unfortunately, the Republican party gets the ascendancy. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARNSWORTH. This question was suggested by the inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Missouri to the gentleman from New York, in regard to the rights of Congress to protect slavery in the Territories. As slavery embraces adultery and polygamy—is “the sum of all villainies,” as declared by Wesley—it occurred to me that Congress might with as much propriety protect polygamy as slavery.

Mr. JENKINS. Does the gentleman declare that?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Declare what?

Mr. JENKINS. What you have just stated.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do declare that John Wesley said so.

Mr. JENKINS. Does the gentleman concur in that expression of Wesley's?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am very much of that opinion.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman declares that, I have a bill.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am not in the habit of allowing myself to soil my own garments by descending into cesspools and throwing dirt with a blackguard.

Mr. JENKINS. I cannot receive an insult from you after you have allowed yourself to take one.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. Important as this measure is, I do not rise for the purpose of debate; but only to assign the reasons which will govern my vote. If this bill, sir, proposed simply to annul my vote, I would not rise to oppose it. But, sir, which establishes or regulates polygamy, it should receive my cordial support. Even if it provided further, that any one who should attempt to execute any such act after it had thus been annulled—thereby coming within the precedents cited by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. LEACH]—it should still have my vote; because the right to disapprove all acts of the Territorial Legislatures of Utah is expressly reserved by Congress in the act organizing that Territory.

By this bill, sir, proposed to go far beyond the mere abrogation of territorial laws. It undertakes, by one sweeping enactment, to declare a certain offense penal, and to punish it in every organized Territory of the United States. Sir, I am not of that number, I never have been of that number, who would propose to give Congress the right to legislate for the Territories. It seems to me that the proposition is too plain for argument. Every organic law is an act of the highest legislation; and there can be no “sovereignty” where the people do not even institute their own governments. I do, indeed, distinctly and emphatically repudiate the insane dogma of a party platform that Congress possesses “sovereign power” over the Territories. Sir, as I read the Constitution, Congress is restricted in all exercise of power by the limitations of that instrument; by the spirit and genius of the Constitution, and by the eternal and immutable principles of justice which are alike obligatory upon individuals and upon States.

I concede, however, I repeat, the power of Congress to organize and to govern the Territories of the United States; and as certain laws have been exercised from the beginning, and as no limitation is to be exercised to this day, as to certain fundamental principles, which are incorporated, usually as restrictions or bills of rights, in our organic territorial acts. Nevertheless, it has equally been the policy, and a calm, extended and impartial review of the legislation of Congress from the beginning will establish the fact—to leave to the Legislatures of the several Territories the control of their domestic affairs. That principle does not originate, so far as ordinary questions are concerned, with the adjustment measures of 1850, still less with the Kansas-Nebraska bill. It had an earlier origin. It goes back to the beginning of the Government, and, therefore, is recognition in the ordinance of 1787, which ordinances establishing certain fundamental principles and providing for two several grades of territorial government, provides also, that first to the judges and Governors appointed by the President, and afterwards to the Territorial Legislatures, chosen by the people, criminal and civil legislation shall abide. Acts subsequent to the formation of the present Government organized Territories south of the Ohio river, in all respects the same as the territory northwest of that river, except as to the prohibition of slavery.

That, I affirm they, has been the fixed and uniform policy of this Government. It is true, however, that there is no instance of a territorial organization, up to 1854, in which Congress did not recognize to itself the negative right of revising and annulling any laws which the Territories might have might enact. It had been the policy, indeed, as I have said, for Congress to settle in the organic act certain fundamental questions relating to taxation of lands, or other subjects similar in their character, and of legislative jurisdiction, chosen by Congress to legislate directly upon the question of slavery; and eight times between 1789 and 1850, Congress prohibited slavery in the Territories, and seven times in express terms recognized and legislated upon it there as an existing institution. But because of this action, legislation which in 1830 and continuing at intervals for thirty years, endangered finally by its violence, the stability of the Government and the existence of the Union, the former policy of prohibition or recognition, whether determined by a geographical line or otherwise, was liberally abandoned, and the principle of non-intervention, ancient indeed as to other and ordinary subjects of legislation in the Territories, was first applied to the question of slavery in the adjustment measures of 1850. That principle, sir, is distinctly contained in the report made to the Senate by Mr. Clay, from the Committee of thirteen, on the 8th of May in that year—a committee composed of Clay, Webster, Cass, King of Alabama, Douglas, Mason, Bell, Berrien, and some five others of the most distinguished Senators of that day. And that report, sir, is a landmark sentence, indicating the deliberate purpose at that time to extend the principle of non-intervention, which had obtained from the beginning in regard to the ordinary subjects of legislation, from thenceforth forever to the question of slavery in the Territories:

"It is high time that the wounds which (the Wilmot proviso) has inflicted should be healed up and closed. And to avoid in all future time the agitation which must be produced by the conflict of opinion on the slavery question, existing in the Territories, and the evils which have been prohibited as it is in others, the rule principle which declares the decision of Congress to be final, and the exclusive of territorial governments for each newly acquired domain to be maintained from all legislation on the slavery in the Territories, as long as it retains the territorial form of government—leaving it to the people of each Territory, which they have attained to a condition which entitles them to do so." (See the report of the Committee of thirteen, on the 8th of May, 1850, in the House of Representatives, 1849-50, No. 192, p. 5.)

That, sir, as I understand it, is a distinct affirmation of the doctrine of non-intervention and of true popular sovereignty, as applied to the question of slavery in the Territories. It is a principle placed upon the same basis on which, from the beginning of the Government, other objects of legislation were treated; always, to the Constitution, and, previous to 1854, to the right, by Congress, of organizing the territorial laws. And Kansas-Nebraska bill the ancient doctrine and policy of the Government, extended, as I have just said, to the question of slavery by the legislation of 1850, was reaffirmed and made yet more distinct and emphatic by the express recognition of non-intervention in the principle of the compromise measures of that year, and the enactment that the true intent and meaning of the bill was to "leave the people perfectly free to form and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States."

And before we propose to move to rescind this entire policy of the Government. It proposes not merely to annul a law which the Territorial Legislature of Utah has enacted, but by direct legislation to create a penal offense, and to punish it in every organized Territory of the United States. Sir, the precedents cited by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LAMAR) do not sustain the proposition, when it is viewed in this respect for its policy and judgment as a lawyer. Congress, in both instances, exercised the reserved power of abrogating or disapproving certain acts of the Territorial Legislature of Florida, and provided simply for the punishment of any one who should attempt to enforce those acts, notwithstanding the abrogation. If, as I said a little while ago, the bill now pending had provided only for the annulment by Congress of certain laws of Utah, and had even gone further, and imposed heavy penalties upon any person who should attempt to enforce the acts so annulled, I would, without hesitation, have supported it; but I am not willing to abandon a policy as old as the Government, and to establish a precedent which may so readily be extended to that question which has been so much agitated this whole country for many days.

For, sir, however others may fall away, I will not consent that that policy shall now be abandoned, and that, for the first time for many years, if not from the beginning, this House, upon a question of purely local concern, should undertake to legislate directly for the Territories, and without the intervention of the Territorial Legislature. Sir, I was the slave prohibitionist of this side of the House that, when they have combined and stricken hands with the slave prohibitions of that side of this House, for the purpose of upholding this long-settled principle of non-interference, and of establishing again a precedent for direct congressional legislation for the Territories, verily it will require but one short step further to apply the doctrine to that other of the "main rule of barbarism." "We punish slavery, not as a crime in your Territory, but as a crime in every Territory."

It is very true, sir, that there is a wide gulf separating these two institutions. Slavery has been declared by judicial decision to rest now on its true constitutional basis—as a question of property. That is, it is not a crime in your Territory, but as a question of property. It is only within the last eight or ten years that, in the minds of the people of the South, in the minds of many in the North and West, and finally by judicial decision, it has been established upon its true basis; resting now upon the high sanction of property, and not merely on the more delicate, indeed, but less secure tenure of "a domestic relation."

Sir, I understand the distinction on which the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LAMAR) relies. I recognize it. It is founded in fact, and is as high as heaven, and as deep as earth, firm as the everlasting hills. But I tell you, and I tell the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. MILLSON), that there are millions in the free State who do not understand, and who will not recognize it. They will look to a political abolition, and denounce in us as "the friends of barbarism," both slavery and polygamy. They will point to the record here; to the united votes of the interventionists of the North and South combined in great majority to pass this bill, and exultingly will gloat over it as a precedent to be set in the history of this Government, of direct legislation for the first time in a matter of purely local concern over organized Territories, ignoring, utterly, the delegation by Congress in every organic act for half a century, and especially in the very act of organizing the several Territories, to which it is the obligation of the power, through their Territorial Legislatures, to enact laws upon all the rightful subjects of legislation.

Mr. MILLSON. Why does the gentleman say that this policy is now for the first time to be set in the history of the Government, when I have shown that, from the very first year of the Government down to the present time, almost every crime conceivable, except bigamy, has been punished by Congress in the Territories?

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. And so, too, have crimes in the United States. In every State, in this Union there sits a doer, or will sit within the next six months, a United States crime, a criminal crime and offenses against the Federal Government. If the gentleman will look at the act organizing the Territory of Florida in 1822, he will find, instead of the general clauses, now inserted in the later organic acts, extending to the Territory organic acts in all laws and ordinances of the United States are specifically enumerated; and first in the list is the very crime act of 1790, to which he so exultingly refers. It is made applicable to the Territory in the same manner that it applies to the States. But why is this, if, as he maintains, the act itself, by its very terms was meant to extend from the beginning to every Territory?

And I beg leave to remind him, also, that in the Kansas-Nebraska bill the fugitive slave law is expressly extended to the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, in connection with other laws of the United States; and all this because doubts have been expressed whether any of the statutes of the United States apply to the Territories unless by express provision.

Sir, I do not read the act of 1790 as the gentleman reads it. I do not understand the section which he quoted as including the organized Territories of the United States. Neither do I regard the acts cited by the gentleman from Mississippi, (Mr. LAMAR), as precedents sustaining his position, because they are not precedents for repealing certain laws and ordinances of the Territorial Legislature, and then provide that whosoever shall undertake to enforce any of the laws or ordinances so repealed shall be punished by fine and imprisonment.

Believing, sir, that this measure proposes a reversal of the policy of the Government and of the Democratic party, and that it is a direct and distinct repudiation of the great doctrine of non-intervention, in accordance with which, as a matter of expediency, and of compromise, we have tolerated certain questions of territorial policy shall be delegated to the inhabitants of each Territory, subject to the restrictions of the Constitution, I voted to lay this bill upon the table; and shall continue to vote against it to the last.

Mr. TILLOTSON. Mr. Speaker, it has become apparent in the progress of this debate that there is at least one question on which the representatives of all portions of the country may agree. Every member from every section of the Union is ready to assert the odious criminality of polygamy. It is so certain, and so generally acknowledged, that there is at least one subject on which there is no sectionalism, in relation to which we have not heard the Representatives of North Carolina boasting that their people are much better than those of Massachusetts, nor the Representatives of the State of New York boasting that their people are better than those of Mississippi.

There is really now one practical question before us for our decision; and, sir, in my remarks upon it, I shall not treat it as an abstraction. I shall not treat it as a question of expediency or legal technicality. Polygamy is an existing fact; and as an existing fact, while I agree with members from every part of the country in denouncing it, I will so act as to insure its most speedy extermination. It is this fact, sir, which began to-day or yesterday, or some week or some month ago, from the zeal which is manifested here, that it never was heard of till the beginning of this session of Congress.

But, sir, some thirteen years ago, one Brigham Young, a shrewd and selfish and unscrupulous adventurer, led certain Mormons from Illinois, or from Missouri, across what was then called the great American desert, by a long and wearisome journey, to the basin of the Great Salt Lake. Poor, deluded, ignorant fanatics were his followers, who, from having no religion, or a gross and false one, by the theories of the Smith, and had joined the ranks of the Latter Day Saints. From time to time there have been accessions to their number. Year after year they have come from Wales and Scotland, from England and Germany, and a few from France, and they have begun to grow in number, so that they attained their highest number some two years since, and now have begun to decline in strength, consolidation, and numbers. During these thirteen years, we have had a Whig Administration; we have had two Democratic Administrations; and at no time have they been able to suppress the organization of this House;

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 96.

the States of the Union. I tell you, we cannot afford to spend the time of this nation in quarreling about these provinces, when the Constitution does not know. The Constitution knows nothing less than a State; and why should we be ever quarreling about Territories? Sir, I am so much a popular sovereignty man, that I deny that Congress, by no argument, bestow sovereignty upon the people of a Territory.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Let me ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman says that the Constitution does not recognize anything else than a State. Then, what does he think of that clause of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power to dispose of the territory and other property of the United States?

Mr. THAYER. I ought to have said as a political community. The Constitution speaks of territory as property, as land; but, sir, as a political community, it is governing less than a State. Hereafter, as a member of Congress, I will know nothing less than a State. I am opposed even to granting permission to any Territory to make any laws, or to manage its own affairs in its own way.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I want to ask another question. If Congress has no power over the territory of the United States, except as property—not as a political community—then Congress has no power over the people of a Territory.

Mr. THAYER. Exactly, sir. It may be that, under the construction of the Constitution which has obtained, Congress would really be decided to have the same right to govern the people that George III. had to govern these colonies. I deny that Congress now ever has any right to govern American citizens in the Territories. To be explicit: if Congress has that right, where did it get it? Congress is the servant, and not the king of the people. The people, Mr. Speaker, in the Territories, are king. There is no other. Nobody has any authority but the people. If Congress can dispense sovereignty, certainly Congress has either acquired that sovereignty or has created it. Nobody believes that Congress creates sovereignty. If Congress acquires it, then when and where did it acquire it? Even the Church of Rome pretends to be a reservoir of what it has and what it dispenses. When that Church sells indulgences, it declares that it only sells the superabundant merit of the saints, so that men that are not as good as they ought to be may have their deficiencies made up by men who are better than they need to be. [Laughter.] I would like to know where this superabundant sovereignty comes from, that Congress can dispense it. Only think what a reservoir of sovereignty this Congress must be, that has dispensed sovereignty to twenty sovereign States since the formation of the Government, and has never had any sovereignty itself, except what it must have acquired from the sovereign people of this country.

No, sir; this thing is a mistake. Its worse—it is a fiction; it is a fallacy. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. CREVIER,] the other day, wondered if what he supposed, by what legendman, that which is to-day public land becomes to-morrow a sovereignty. Public land does not become a sovereignty. Land never becomes a sovereignty. Men are the sovereigns. If there is unoccupied public land to-day, and to-morrow there is a State there, I assure you that somebody has gone there—some citizen, who is himself so much above property that he alone is of more consequence than all the public land that this Government ever did or ever will possess. He, sir, is the sovereign; and you disrobe him of his sovereignty because he has crossed a line and gone into a Territory. By what power, by what law, Congress being his servant—by what law can it do it? By just as good authority your coachman, sir, might put on your hands and head and command you to get into the box and take the whip in hand, while he takes a seat inside the carriage.

But, sir, if the possession of land confers sovereignty, and if the sale of land implies the power to govern, I would like to know whether the selling of the products of the land does not give the right to govern the people? I would like to know whether the doctrine that the party, whether the Government or an individual, who sells land, thereby acquires the right to govern the purchasers of the land, is any more ridiculous than the assumption that the grain dealer who sells corn, the sheep dealer who sells sheep, the cattle dealer who sells cattle, thereby acquires the right to govern his customers? Land is nothing but property. The fiction, that the possession of land gives sovereignty and the right to govern people who are upon it, is a part of the old feudal system.

We have everywhere connected with the fibers of this Government some of the relics of ancient tyranny. When William the Conqueror invaded and subdued England he proclaimed that the fee of all the land on the island was in himself, and he parceled it out amongst his retainers. Holding possession of the land, he then proclaimed that all the men who lived upon it were his slaves. And from the old feudal system we derive this ancient, this fallacious idea, that the possession of land by this Government gives it the power to govern anybody who shall buy the land. I have no sympathy with this ancient system, and I detest it. I shall detest it always, and use my influence against it.

Mr. SPEAKER, while I advocate these views, the amendment I propose commits no man who may vote for it to think; for that amendment neither affirms nor denies the power of Congress to legislate hereafter for these land districts which are thereby constituted. I hope I have succeeded in showing that the bill which is proposed will not accomplish the purpose which it professes to have in view. I hope I have succeeded in showing that the bill is not a necessary evil, and that it is to be accomplished these results. I might have spoken of the complications which this territorial policy is ever imposing upon the Government, and of the dangerous consolidation of power to which these complications inevitably lead. A Republic cannot stand so fully governed as this. Whenever it has attempted to do it, the history of the world has shown that it has not only failed, but it has been overthrown by that policy. The policy of acquiring and of governing provinces creates a necessity for an army and a navy. It is to make the President of the United States, to all intents and purposes, a king; and I am, therefore, for abolishing this policy as soon as may be.

You remember, sir, that it was upon this very mission of acquiring and governing provinces, that Caesar was in Gaul, when, returning, he crossed the Rubicon and overthrew the liberties of his country. Similar to that has been the history of every Republic which has attempted to exercise non-resident jurisdiction—that has attempted to acquire and govern provincial dependencies. While we have sought to annex provinces, we have lost the right time, I protest against the acquisition of territory, to be governed or sold by Congress. I am for simplifying the operations of the Government in respect to the Territories. We have the land to sell. Let us provide for selling it; let us not burden the Government with the people. Let the people take care of themselves. They are the sovereigns. Congress is their servant.

Mr. KEITT. I will trouble the House but a moment in explaining my opinion of this bill. I do not mean to run off on sentimental idealities, which I would not recommend at all.

I wish to treat this matter practically, and to decide upon it as a thing of legislation, and not as a sentimental theory. Then, sir, first, what are we called upon to do; secondly, what power have we to do it; and thirdly, how shall we do it? Now, Rubicon and the other gentlemen pursue. To prohibit polygamy in the Territory of Utah. I ask those gentlemen, where is the proof that polygamy exists in Utah? and I pause for an answer from any gentleman who has been urging this bill.

Mr. PRYOR. Does the gentleman doubt the fact?

Mr. KEITT. I want to know the fact, in my official character as a Federal legislator. I cannot be asked to exercise a great and delicate power upon a mere fugitive rumor.

Mr. PRYOR. I will satisfy the gentleman by stating that the Delegate from Utah [Mr. HOOPER] admitted the fact in our presence yesterday.

Mr. KEITT. He is no witness here; nor do I understand that he admitted the fact.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the gentleman if he intends to occupy the ground, that before we will pass a law against any crime we must have evidence before us that the crime exists?

Mr. KEITT. That is another question altogether. I am inquiring of those gentlemen whether, in the pursuit of a sentimental theory, they are ingrafting an act upon the statute-book? If so, I will examine that. I understood those gentlemen to invite the attention of Congress, and to invoke our interposition, to prohibit an institution which they said was existing, and I asked for the proof of its existence, and I have not heard of it. I am asking those gentlemen who advocate this bill, whether or not we have a right to express a theoretical, sentimental opinion upon it? I want to know where I stand. I want to know whether you are asking me to put into the statute-book a sentiment, upon a theory, or whether you are asking me to put upon the statute-book an act which strikes at an existing institution. Does it exist?

Mr. STANTON. I would inquire of the gentleman whether it is upon the statute-book of South Carolina an act prohibiting bigamy?

Mr. KEITT. What has that to do with this matter?

Mr. STANTON. That is all we propose to do for Utah.

Mr. KEITT. I am asking what the law of Utah is, and the gentleman asks me what the law of South Carolina is. Are we called upon to legislate for South Carolina? I am asking for the record of a Territory, and the gentleman asks me for the record of a State.

Mr. MALLORY. With the permission of the gentleman from South Carolina, if he propounds a serious inquiry—

Mr. KEITT. I do; I want to know the fact.

Mr. MALLORY. I tell the gentleman that we know this fact by tradition; by the current literature of the day; by history; by the thousand means by which we obtain information upon any and every subject. And I now ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he doubts the existence of this practice in the Territory of Utah?

Mr. KEITT. I am here in my official character, to proceed upon the record and not upon newspaper rumors, nor upon tradition nor upon gossip.

Mr. MALLORY. I will then refer my friend from South Carolina to the representative from Utah.

Mr. KEITT. Has he made any statement which is in evidence before the House?

Mr. MALLORY. I will, with the permission of the gentleman from South Carolina, ask the Delegate from Utah if polygamy is not practiced in the Territory of Utah?

Mr. KEITT. I want to get at the facts.

Mr. NELSON. If the gentleman will yield, I will answer the question. I ask the Clerk to read the third section of an ordinance incorporating the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Utah, as found in the "Acts, Resolutions, and Memorials of the Annual Sessions of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah."

The Clerk read as follows:
"§ 3. And it is further ordained, That, as said Church holds the constitution and rights to communion with all civil and religious communities, to worship God according to the dictates of conscience; to reverence communion agreements; to be true to their covenants and marriage covenants; to be obedient to the laws of the land; to be true to the principles of justice, and to be true to the security and full enjoyment of all blessings and privileges embodied in the relation of husband and wife; and it is also declared that said Church does, and shall, possess and enjoy continually the power and authority, in and of itself, to originate, promulgate, and establish, rules, regulations, ordinances, laws, customs, and ceremonies; for the good order, safety, government, preservation, and control of said Church, and for the protection, and to the peace of all offices, relative to fellowship, according to use if there cannot be some time fixed for closing the debate upon this question.

Mr. WASHBURN, Illinois. Let us know when we are to leave the vote.

Mr. GROW. Let some time be fixed when the previous question shall be called.

Mr. KEITT. I suppose that we cannot go on to-night; and I confess that I should like to make a few remarks upon this subject to-morrow morning, for about ten minutes only.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Many members wish to speak.

Mr. STANTON. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he should withdraw his motion at a moment when we may see if some agreement cannot be made.

Mr. GROW. If there is to be no agreement, I hope the motion to adjourn will be voted down.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. What time is proposed?

Mr. STANTON. Say two o'clock to-morrow. Several MEMBERS. Oh, no. Say four o'clock. Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Well, say four o'clock.

Mr. GROW. Three o'clock to-morrow will be long enough. If you are going to let every gentleman speak who desires to be heard upon this question, you will not get a vote for a month.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I want to say to gentlemen opposite that no agreement can be made upon this side of the House; and I hope they will not venture to press a vote upon this question at that early period.

Mr. GROW. I desire to give notice that, unless some agreement can be made, on the first opportunity that I can get the floor I shall call the previous question on the bill. We upon this side have taken very little part in this debate.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had better leave the calling of the previous question to the gentleman from Tennessee, who reported the bill.

Mr. GROW. I have left it for two days. There are other questions as important as this.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. There is no use in attempting to force an agreement in opposition to the wishes of so many members.

Mr. GROW. Our side has taken very little part in this discussion.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. We wish you would. We want to draw you out, and get you to define your position.

Mr. GROW. We will define it by our votes. Mr. SHERMAN. I demand the yeas and nays on this motion adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the calling of the roll is commenced, I presume that an agreement can be made which will be satisfactory to all sides of the House. I suppose that it will be the wish of the House to have this question disposed of to-morrow. If we postpone the ordering of the main question till four o'clock, of course we shall have to adjourn till the next day to take the several votes that will have to be taken on this bill. Now, if the yeas and nays are ordered, we shall take the vote at three o'clock to-morrow, I presume that will meet with the assent of the House on all sides except, perhaps, that of those who still want to speak upon the subject.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I desire to say for myself, in reply to the gentleman from Vermont, that I can assent to no understanding of that kind. I want this bill to be discussed fully and fairly, and I repeat that I hope gentlemen will not attempt to force a vote upon it to-morrow.

Mr. BURNETT. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that he should withdraw the calling of the roll, that the gentleman from Tennessee, who has the bill in charge, can certainly get the floor and call the previous question whenever he may think it right and proper to do so.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he would not be willing to call the previous question to-morrow at two o'clock? He would have then an hour in which to close the debate, and the House could take the several votes upon the bill before adjourning at midnight of to-night.

Mr. NELSON. After ascertaining the opinions of many of the members as to the period when this debate should close, I have to state, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I will call the previous question at three o'clock tomorrow. That will leave me an hour to close debate upon my part, and there will then be ample time for the House to vote upon the bill before adjourning.

Mr. GROW. I hope now the call for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn.

Mr. BRANCH. If the previous question is to be called to-morrow at three o'clock, I would suggest that, until that time, the speaker be confined to thirty minutes each. Of course, I do not apply that rule to the gentleman from Tennessee, who reported the bill; but there are many gentlemen who would like to be heard.

Several MEMBERS. Make it twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will consider it the wish of the House that the debate shall be limited to twenty-minutes speeches.

Mr. GOOCH. I object to twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then propound the question on thirty minutes.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER. There then can be no arrangement.

Mr. GROW. I again appeal to the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. For the purpose of relieving the House from the necessity of having the roll called, for the yeas and nays have been already ordered, I will withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withdraws the motion to adjourn.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I now renew the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at two minutes past four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 4, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GURLEY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, the correspondence between the President and the Attorney General, on the subject of the legal proceedings and condition of affairs in that Territory; which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion by Mr. Peon to print the message was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. THOMSON presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, in favor of the passage of an act by Congress by which the public domain shall be granted, in quantities of not more than one half, nor less than one quarter of a section, free of charge to each actual settler thereupon; which were referred to the Committee on Land and ordered to be printed.

He also presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, relative to the removal of obstructions in the River Delaware; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, concerning the establishment of a Government foundry in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, in favor of the improvement of the navigable waters on the Atlantic coast; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, concerning the establishment of a Government foundry in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a paper in favor of establishing a mail route from Bordentown to Brown's Mills, in Burlington county, New Jersey; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. TEN EYCK. I have received similar resolutions from the State of New Jersey to those which have been presented by my honorable colleague. I desire to present them also at the same time; and in relation to the resolution respecting the public lands, inasmuch as that matter is now before the Senate, and these resolutions are similar in effect to the House homestead bill, I ask, out of respect to the State of New Jersey, that they may be read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

State of New Jersey.

Joint resolutions relative to public lands.

Whereas it is expedient that the public lands of the United States should be held for the equal benefit, in limited quantities, of all equal persons to be willing to settle upon and cultivate the same; and whereas, also, it is the true policy of American institutions that the great mass of the American people should be identified in interest with the soil, by the unconditional ownership of a reasonable, but limited, amount thereof: Therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the Senate and General Assembly of the State of New Jersey, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they hereby are, requested to use all honorable means to procure the passage of an act by the Congress of the United States by which the public domain shall be granted, in quantities of not more than one half, nor less than one quarter of a section, free of charge to each actual settler thereupon, and the title to the same confirmed to him upon his filing, in the office of the Surveyor-General, a certificate of his title, as aforesaid; provided, however, that the act be so guarded as not to defeat or interfere with the rights of persons to whom land warrants have been lawfully granted for services under the Government of the United States.

2. And be it resolved, That the Governor of this State is hereby requested to cause to be printed and distributed to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, that the same may be presented to the national Legislature, for their consideration.

Approved March 29, 1860.

The resolutions were ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN. I have been requested by General Duff Green to present a memorial in favor of building a Pacific railroad. Inasmuch as that question will, I hope, come up in a very short time for consideration, I move to lay this memorial on the table, and that it be printed. It contains a great deal of valuable information.

Mr. CLAY. I do not like to oppose the motion, but it seems to me that would be a considerable volume. I think it had better go to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will go to that committee.

Mr. KING presented the memorial of Anthony F. Navarre and William M. Rice, agents of the Potawatomi Indians, praying that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be required to furnish them with a statement of the condition of their affairs; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PUGH presented a petition of citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, praying the enactment of a uniform bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARLAN presented a resolution of the Legislature of Iowa, in favor of the establishment of a mail route, with tri-weekly service, from Cedar Rapids, in Linn county, via Toledo, Butterfield, LeGrand, Marshalltown, Marietta, and Nevada, to Booneboro, in Boone county, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POWELL presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, instructing its Senators and requesting its Representatives strongly to urge upon the treaty-making power of the Government of the United States the necessity of amending the tenth section of the treaty with Great Britain in regard to fugitives from justice, which was ratified in London, on the 13th day of October, 1842, by the British minister and American envoy, respectively, as to include in its provisions fugitives from justice or the necessity of holding under the Constitution and laws of the United States, or of either of the States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, in reference to pensioning the soldiers of the war of 1812; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, in reference to the enlargement of the Louisville and Portland canal; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, in relation to the duty on tobases; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FITZPATRICK, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred the petition of G. W. Lawrence, praying remuneration for moneys expended and losses sustained, while in the military service of the United States, during the war with Mexico, submitted an adverse report.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the petition of Charles Hays, praying Congress to pass a law changing the name of the schooner Emma, a foreign vessel, and for her enrollment, &c., submitted an adverse report.

Mr. PUGH, The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a memorial of members of the bar and officers of the court for the second judicial district of the United States territorial court for Utah, praying that the salary of the judge for that district may be increased, and the bill (S. No. 305) amendatory of the act entitled "An act to establish a territorial government for Utah," approved September 2, 1850, have instructed me to report the bill without amendment. I give notice that I shall call up the bill at an early day for the consideration of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BROWN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 369) for the protection of the fisheries upon the Potomac river, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 370) for the relief of the Potawatamie nation of Indiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

Mr. BROWN. Yesterday morning, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I made an adverse report on the bill appropriating a certain sum of money for the construction of the Little Falls bridge. Since then some members of the Committee think there may have been possibly some mistake about it. I ask, therefore, that it be taken from the table of the Senate, and recommended to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 309) to reimburse the corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, a sum of money advanced towards the construction of the Little Falls bridge, be recommended to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. KING, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Philip S. Solomon, and their associates, praying the privilege of constructing a horse-railway in Georgetown and Washington, presented on the 31st ultimo, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. PUGH, it was Ordered, That the petition of citizens of Washington, in relation to lighting Four-and-half street, on the site of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. PUGH, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of J. B. Williams, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

On motion of Mr. NICHOLSON, it was Ordered, That the heirs of Thomas Hazard leave to withdraw their petitions and papers.

RIGHTS OF NATURALIZED CITIZENS.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if in his opinion not inconsistent with the public interest, to furnish to the Senate copies of all correspondence not heretofore called for, relating to the claim of any foreign Government to the military services of naturalized American citizens.

It is supplementary to a resolution already passed on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PUGH].

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ROBERT H. MORRIS.

Mr. YULEE. If there be no further morning business, I move that the bill which was before the Senate yesterday, for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, be taken up and acted on finally.

Mr. BIGLER. I hope the Senator from Florida will allow me to take up a small private bill.

Mr. YULEE. That is precisely what I am proposing to do myself.

Mr. BIGLER. This is a case of a peculiar character.

Mr. YULEE. So is this, and it will be disposed of in a moment.

Mr. BIGLER. There is an urgency for this bill.

Mr. YULEE. So there is for mine.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida moves to take up the bill (H. R. No. 242) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York.

Mr. YULEE. I hope my friend from Arkansas has made the examination which he desired.

Mr. GREEN. He is not in.

The motion of Mr. YULEE was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 242) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York.

Mr. GREEN. The Senator from Arkansas seemed to take an interest in this case.

Mr. YULEE. As I said yesterday, the bill is honest, and the Committee considered a recommendation from the auditing department.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I opposed the bill yesterday; but I find that the statement which the Senator from Florida then made in regard to it was correct, and I have nothing to say. I find that his action previously differed from what I supposed it to have been. I had thought the action of his committee in this instance was different from its dealing with other cases heretofore. I chose, therefore, to arrest the proceeding. I find that I was in error in regard to it, and of course I withdraw any remarks I have made in opposition. I think there is some justice and equity in this claim; but I do not know that there is to the extent the committee think, but still I shall make no opposition.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL J. HENSLY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The business next in order is the bill for the relief of Samuel J. Hensley, left unfinished yesterday morning.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I hope that will be proceeded with.

Mr. BIGLER. The bill No. 229, on the files of the Senate, is one that I am satisfied will not occupy five minutes.

Mr. GWIN. Let this be finished.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. This is the unfinished business.

Mr. BIGLER. Well, I yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill (S. No. 240) for the relief of Samuel J. Hensley is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary was yesterday engaged in reading the report, which he will continue.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The reading of the report was desired by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HENRY] who is not here. Unless the reading is desired, I think we might dispense with it.

Mr. SLIDELL. I should like to hear it read. I know nothing of the case. It is a large amount. I am ignorant of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue where he left off yesterday morning.

The Secretary proceeded with the reading of the report.

Mr. CLARK. I doubt whether the further reading of that report will be useful. I think the rest of it is in regard to the finding of particular facts with reference to the contracts. The principles have already been developed, as far as it has been.

Mr. SLIDELL. I desired to hear the report read, not from any disposition to embarrass the bill. I want it disposed of to-day; but it involves a very considerable amount, and I am not willing that it should be passed without a knowledge of the circumstances.

Mr. CLARK. I do not object to the further reading of the report if anybody wants to hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule provides that if an objection be made to the reading of a paper, the question must be put to the Senate.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will dispense with the reading of the remainder of the report if the Court of Claims recommended the payment of the specific sum. That is the point I want to know.

Mr. CLARK. I will say that the Court of Claims has examined the facts as to the quantity delivered, and fixed the amount to which the claimant was entitled.

Mr. SLIDELL. Has the Court of Claims passed on the specific sum?

Mr. CLARK. Yes; this is the specific sum found by them to be due.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then let the Clerk read the latter paragraph of the report.

The Secretary read the concluding paragraph of the report.

Mr. CLARK. I think that paragraph does not furnish, perhaps, the information the Senator wanted; but I will say that the claim was for something like nineteen hundred head of cattle. The bill is upon the owners of the schooner, twelve hundred head of cattle, and recommended payment for twelve hundred only.

Mr. SLIDELL. At a fixed price?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir, at a specific price, which the report found to be payable.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HAYES, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had ordered yesterday, April 3, 1860, the printing of the following documents:

Letter from the Secretary of State, communicating a copy of papers in reference to the fine which was levied upon the owners of the schooner Elizabeth Mary—ordered at twelve o'clock and nineteen minutes, p. m.

Resolution of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, in reference to the enlargement of the Louisville and Nashville—ordered at twelve o'clock and eighteen minutes, p. m.

Resolution of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, in reference to the pensioning of the soldiers of the war of 1812—ordered at twelve o'clock and eighteen minutes, p. m.

Resolution of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, in reference to the duty on tobacco—ordered at twelve o'clock and eighteen minutes, p. m.

Resolution of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, relating to treaties for the surrender of fugitives from labor—ordered at twelve o'clock and eighteen minutes, p. m.

The message further announced that the House had this day ordered the printing of the following documents:

Joint resolutions of the State of New Jersey, relating to the removal of obstructions in the Delaware river.

Also, joint resolutions relative to public lands.

Also, joint resolutions concerning duties on imported merchandise.

Also, joint resolutions for the improvement of navigable waters of the Atlantic coast.

Also, joint resolutions concerning the establishment of a Government fund in the State of New Jersey—all of which were ordered at twelve o'clock and seven minutes, p. m.

WILLIAM MEDILL.

Mr. BIGLER. I move that the Senate—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question before the Senate. The business next in order will be the joint resolutions introduced yesterday by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. GREEK].

Mr. BIGLER. I move to postpone all prior orders, and take up bill No. 229 on the files of the Senate.

Mr. GREEN. I hope that my joint resolution will be preferred. Such a thing has never been refused in any instance since I have been in the Senate. When a bill or joint resolution has been introduced by common consent for the purpose of reference, whatever it may contain, right or wrong, good or bad, its reference has never been refused; and therefore I object to the Senator's motion, and hope he will withdraw it until this matter shall be disposed of. I hope the same courtesy will be extended to me that has been extended to every Senator in this body.

Mr. BIGLER. Certainly it would be no violation of courtesy to make a motion to postpone. Mr. GREEN. But I wish you to withdraw it simply for the purpose of allowing the reference of my joint resolutions.

Mr. BIGLER. If I were satisfied that the matter would be disposed of without discussion, I would withdraw my motion, of course.

Mr. GREEN. It will be disposed of by a reference.

Mr. BIGLER. I withdraw my motion for the present.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, to refer the joint resolutions (S. No. 22) concerning the First Comptroller of the Treasury, William Medill, to a select committee of five.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move to refer them to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I have every disposition to extend courtesy to the Senator from Missouri; but having read something in connection with this case, and as the resolutions are a reflection on a meritorious officer, who has only, in the discharge of his duty, done what the American Government is required to do. The States has said that he ought to do, I do not like even to vote for a reference of the resolutions, as the very reference implies a censure; but still, I make the motion to refer them to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. YULE. I hope the Senator will substitute, for that committee, the Committee on the Judiciary. If the matter goes to any standing committee, it appropriately belongs to the Judiciary Committee; because the subject of the resolutions is the contract of the United States, which the Post Office Committee has nothing to do.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The whole question arises out of a contract made by the Postmaster General with certain men to carry the mails. The claim which these men set up against the Government and from which they allege to be an abrogation of that contract.

Mr. GREEN. Do not debate the merits of it. This is not the time for that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I only mention that fact to show that, if there be any standing committee of this body to whom the reference should be made, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is the appropriate committee.

Mr. GREEN. The subject ought not to go to the Post Office Committee, because it is not business that belongs to them. It is with reference to the execution of a law. It ought not to go to the Judiciary Committee, because that committee—I am one of the members of it—always and uniformly refuse to decide abstract questions.

Where legislation is required, they will do it. Where a relation is to be established, or a judicial action, they will act upon; but these mere abstract questions they do not desire to touch, and will not, but will report that these questions do not belong to them; and it was with deference to the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, that I moved for a select committee. It is a question that involves nobody until the report is made and a judgment is pronounced by the Senate. This mere reference amounts to nothing. In every case in this body since I have been a member, when a joint resolution or bill has been introduced for the purpose of reference, I have never heard a question raised by any Senator, nor a single objection, except in this one instance; and why it is, I do not comprehend. Let the truth come out; let the facts be developed; let the controversy be introduced in this question, and then the Senate can decide and the public can judge.

But here, when I ask to introduce a resolution, unanimous consent being given, and it is introduced, read the first and second time, and then a motion is made to refer it to a select committee, controversy springs up such as I have never seen before, and the merits of the thing proposed to be referred are to be inquired into before the facts are developed. I object to it. I think it is very unkind treatment. I think it is doing no harm anybody to let the facts come out. Let the truth be developed; let the country judge, and let the Senate understand. I know that the Ju-diary Committee will not investigate this subject. I know that they will say it does not belong to them. I know it by similar cases that have been referred to them before. I know that it does not belong to the Post Office Committee. It is a question not pertaining to the postal service; it is an independent question. Now, such being the case, ought it not to go to a select committee, and ought I to be refused the poor privilege of having an investigation, simply because it is an officer of the Government whose conduct is to be investigated?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri, that my objection arises from no want of courtesy to him, but it arises from this fact: I have read the correspondence on this subject. I believe the resolutions, the very presentation of them here, is calculated to injure this gentleman, who, in my judgment, has faithfully discharged his duty. But the proposition of the Senator from Missouri is a novel one. What is it? Certain persons have a private claim, as I understand, against this Government for a breach of their contract. It is referred to this officer to ascertain whether they have sustained a damage, and to assess that damage. He reports adversely to their claim; he makes that report under the written opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, who is called upon by the Postmaster General to give his opinion. He has made his report conformable to the opinion of the highest law officer of this country; and, because he has done this, in the exercise of his duty, he is arraigned before the Senate of the United States by resolutions reflecting upon his official character, and expressing, as I understand, the opinion that he ought to be removed from office. Private claimants against this Government, because the officer, acting under the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, reports adversely to their claim, come here and ask the Senate of the United States to entertain propositions reflecting upon the integrity of such officer. If it had not been for the very great respect which I have for the Senator from Missouri, I would have moved an indefinite postponement of the resolutions, or that they be postponed until the 5th of March next. I refrained from doing that, because I wish to do no discourtesy to him; but I do say, that as this claim does arise out of an alleged breach of contract for carrying the mail, the Post Office Committee is the proper committee to which the reference should be made.

Mr. GREEN. The Senator does not state the case correctly. Originally it was just in the position which he now states. Originally it was a claim growing out of what they alleged to be a breach of contract; but Congress passed a law, stating that the contract having been made and abrogated, the First Comptroller of the Treasury should assess the damage. Therefore, the making of the contract and its abrogation are facts affirmed by the law. Whether any damage was sustained or not, I do not know. I do not know whether it is one dollar, or one hundred, or one hundred thousand dollars. That is a question I have nothing at all to do with; but the Comptroller says there was no contract, no abrogation; and as the Senator from Delaware chooses to say that these questions improperly—for this is not the time for them—I must repeat what he states.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator allow me to make a remark?

Mr. PUGH. Yes. These resolutions were offered yesterday. The day before yesterday Colonel Medill returned to Ohio with some of his relatives, very ill. I have had no opportunity to see him. He is a gentleman of high character, never appearing before me as a petitioner, and I do not know whether he did or not—there will not be found to be a stain on his character. I can give that assurance with perfect confidence from my long acquaintance with him. I do not know anything about this claim; but certainly in this case I feel that it is one of my constituents, to ask that resolutions calling his conduct in question be over until I can obtain some explanation. I cannot obtain it from him, because he is sick and has gone off.

Mr. GREEN. I can reply to the Senator from Ohio—

Mr. PUGH. I will call it up if you fix a day for it.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Medill was not gone when these resolutions were offered.

Mr. PUGH. They were offered yesterday.

Mr. GREEN. He did not go until after they were offered. I know what I say, and no man can contradict it.

Mr. PUGH. I only state what I was told yesterday in the Senate Chamber. I came here before the resolutions were offered. He has been ill, at all events.

Mr. GREEN. Now sit still, and I will tell you the balance. Before he left, a copy of these resolutions was sent to him, and he read it. I know what I say, and no man can contradict that. No person is taken by surprise. This has been a straightforward, fair-dealing process from the beginning up to the present period of time. When these resolutions were prepared—and I put them into the shape which I thought least objectionable—a copy was sent and delivered to him. It was delivered to him before he left. They were introduced in the Senate before he left; and he left yesterday evening as I am informed, and he was shown to him before he left, and he knew all about it.

Now, I will not prejudice the case. Although the Senator from Delaware says the Attorney General bolstered them up, I say that the opinion of two Attorneys General is directly to the contrary. It is a question of law, and a question affecting the dignity and power of Congress. When the Senate and House of Representatives, the Executive approving, declare a fact, and assert a certain rule for the purpose of adjudicating a case, I deny the right of any officer to set at defiance Congress and the Executive, and all. I want the law executed. As to the amount of damage, I have not one word to say. It may be no damage. It is to vindicate a principle that I am acting. I do not know either one of these parties, and never saw one of them, and never expect to see one of them, but I maintain that when Congress passes a law, and it is approved by the Executive, no one officer of this Government has a right to disregard it and do as he pleases. I am not violating the Constitution. As I said before, I will not prejudice the case; and I only say this much in answer to what the Senator from Delaware has said. He went improperly, as I think, into the merits of the case, referring to certain matters involved in the case. All I ask is, that the subject be referred; that it be investigated. I know it is a case worthy of investigation; and, having asked an investigation, it is possible that the Senate will deny the investigation?

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will rise if he is desirous of the Chair to call up the special order at this hour.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask leave of the Senate to make a very short statement in relation to this matter. It will take me not more than ten minutes, certainly, and I think it is a case in which I should be permitted to do so. I will promise to close when I have to say in ten minutes.

Mr. GREEN. I make no objection, if the Senate will then take a vote; otherwise, I will object.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FITCH. The understanding which the Senator from Missouri wishes to have cannot be had, because I design to offer a substitute for his resolutions.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware needs unanimous consent to make a few remarks.

Mr. GREEN. I shall object, unless we have an understanding.

Mr. GRIMES. I shall object, unless there is a right to reply.

Mr. BAYARD. I have a right to move to postpone the previous business to continue this discussion for ten minutes.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The special order for to-day is a bill in addition to "An act to secure the progress of the usual arts;" but the act to secure noninterference to actual settlers on the public domain, being the unfinished business of yesterday, takes precedence. The Senator from Delaware moves to postpone the special orders with a view to continue for ten minutes the further consideration of the resolutions of the Senator from Missouri. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 23, nays 16.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not purpose to enter into the merits of the case, as the honorable Senator from Missouri has done in part, or, as I did not hear the previous part of the debate, others may have done. I will state as to Mr. Medill, that the only interest I feel in him—I do not know him personally—I feel that he originally came from my own State, and here there a high character when he left it. I have not heard of him since. But that is not the point of my objection to these resolutions and their reference to any committee. Mr. Medill had notice, I have no doubt, that these resolutions would be offered. He considered it as a threat to him. He was previously advised by his physician that it was essential to his health that he should entirely abstain from all business, having been laboring under an attack of disease for three or four weeks previous, which was sympathetically actually affecting the mind. He had determined and made all his arrangements to go, when this notice was given to him the day previous. He went before these resolutions were offered, as I understand, at six o'clock yesterday morning, and the resolutions were offered yesterday after the meeting of the Senate. So much for that.

But the objection to these resolutions—the objection even to their reference—which appears on their face, in, that they place the Senate in an improper position. Take every allegation there to be true—that a law of Congress was passed; that certain construction was given to it, which the honorable member says, in the judgment of the Senate, was wrong. Suppose it was: what is that any reason for the resolutions that follow it—that we should turn ourselves into an accusatory body; that we should interfere with the rights of the President as regards his relations to Congress? If it is proper that we, who are to sit as judges in cases of impeachment, should take such action as this, and commit ourselves to resolutions accusing and condemning a public officer on our own inquiry, and requesting him to resign from office? Is that a proper course on the part of the Senate? Is it due to the organization of the body and the system of our Government, or is it consistent with it? There is no charge of fraud. There is the charge that he misconstrued a law; that he construed it differently from what the honorable Senator from Missouri says it ought to be construed. Well, sir, it is the fact, undoubtedly, that he construed it on the written opinion of the Attorney General of the United States. It may be wrong. Concede his construction to be wrong; is that a reason for Congress passing these resolutions, or even sending them to a committee? Is it within our province, because a public officer may make an erroneous decision on the construction of a law, to ensure him by the vote of the Senate, and request the President to remove him? Those are the propositions in the resolutions. If it is not, will you not the Senate say that it is not a subject for reference to a committee, and that we should lay it on the table? On the face of it, without inquiry into the facts, supposing the facts to be true, that the decision was so made, supposing the decision to be palpably erroneous in the judgment of a majority of the Senate, does it justify this proceeding? I will say here that I looked at that question a year ago, when the opinion of the Attorney General was published, and I think it a rather doubtful question. I am inclined to think the Attorney General is right, and I will say he is; but I rather incline to think he is—in his construction of the law. I may be wrong. I may change that opinion on a more full investigation, for I only read the opinion, and it seemed to be not an unreasonable one; and, on the other hand, the Comptroller, acting on his own opinion, having decided that there were no damages, because the contract was not approved by the Postmaster General, we are to pass a resolution censuring him for his conduct, and another saying that he ought to be removed.

formance of their duties, impeachment is what is to be resorted to; not this course of action. I like to keep the several departments—executive, judicial, and legislative—separate from each other. I have no opinion on the propriety of the action of Mr. Medill as a matter of law, whether he was right or whether he was wrong; and I do not understand the resolutions to charge him with improper motives; but if they did, I think that would be a matter for more necessary discussion. It should spring from the House of Representatives; and it must embody the Attorney General also, as well as the Comptroller, for they both stand in precisely the same position as regards this question; and if so, we may be called upon to sit here as judges under our oaths for the purpose of determining the guilt or innocence of the public officer. Is it right, then, that by these resolutions we should beforehand commit our minds as to a question on which we may have hereafter judicially to act? I think not. I think, therefore, on the face of the resolutions, without reference for one instant to the question whether the decision was right or wrong, whether the remedy ought to have been given or not, this is not the proper mode to put the party on his trial; and therefore the resolutions ought to be laid on the table. I think, I will add, that the action of the Comptroller, if it is right or wrong, was done in August, 1857; and there was no complaint made here, or any motion made to attack and arraign that officer for his decision, for a period of more than eighteen months; and he is incurring no censure or disgrace, known to have existed for two weeks previous to the introduction of these resolutions, it would seem somewhat hard that resolutions which do go to the character and to the standing of the man, which seek to deprive him of the office which he is in, should be introduced into the Senate, should be called up and referred to a committee for investigation when the party is not here to be heard. I submit to the Senate, for these considerations, that the resolutions, at least for the present, should lie on the table; and I make that motion.

Mr. GREEN. I hope the Senator will not take that course to cut off all possible debate.

Mr. BAYARD. I will not prevent the honorable Senator from discussing it as much as he pleases.

Mr. GREEN. I move the further postponement of the special order for ten minutes.

Mr. PUGH. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. GREEN. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. PUGH. Then I object to that motion.

Mr. GREEN. You may object to the motion after I get through. I have the floor now.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator has not the floor to debate it. It is not a debatable motion.

Mr. GREEN. I have the floor; and, until I yield it, he has no privilege to speak.

Mr. PUGH. I have the floor. (Mr. Fitzpatrick in the chair.) It is moved and seconded that the Senate postpone the consideration of all previous orders, to consider this subject for ten minutes further.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I object to that; because, if the President is to be continued in discussion, I should want to move an amendment to the resolutions, and I should want time to prepare it. My objection to the resolutions, I will say in a word, is that they assume certain facts, and therefore I—

Mr. GREEN. I object to his discussing the resolutions. He shall not do it. It is not in order, and he knows it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not permit any gentleman to tell me I shall not do a thing on this floor.

Mr. GREEN. Well, I object to it; and I call on the Presiding Officer to enforce the rule.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Very well; address yourself to the Presiding Officer.

Mr. GREEN. I do, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri raise a distinct question of order?

Mr. GREEN. I do; that he shall not discuss the merits of the question on this motion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order to discuss the merits of the question; but it is in order to say the reasons why the Senator should or should not yield to the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WADE. Is anything before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I was going on to say, until I was interrupted, in a manner somewhat discourteous, at all events, that I was unwilling that these resolutions should be postponed for ten minutes only; because it would not give time to dispose of them as I think they ought to be disposed of; that I should have an amendment to offer, which should have time to prepare. These were the reasons which I was about giving when I was interrupted, in a manner of which I leave the Senate to judge.

Mr. GREEN. I have no objection to such reasons as those; but when he undertakes to discuss the merits of the resolutions, I will object; for he, as well as myself and the Presiding Officer, knows it to be out of order.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. I ask unanimous consent to order my resolutions to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion goes to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GREEN. No, sir. I mean the resolutions I offered.

Mr. FITCH. I wish to carry with that order a motion to print an amendment which I intend to offer.

Mr. GREEN. I have no objection. The motion to print was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President.

An act (S. No. 81) for the relief of Elizabeth M. Cooke, widow of Major James H. Cooke, late marshal of the district of Texas; and

An act (S. No. 302) in relation to the return of undelivered letters in the Post Office.

HOUSEBUILT BILL.

Mr. WADE. I move to take up the house-built bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the business now before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 280) to exempt homesteads to actual settlers on the public lands.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, the substitute proposed by the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. JOHNSON) is only the bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands—of which he and I are both members—during the last Congress, as well as at an early period of this session. It aims to establish a general policy in respect to the disposition of our public domain; not a new policy, as I conceive, but an ancient policy enlarged in its application; not a policy adverse to the principles of our Federal Constitution, or the reserved rights of the States, but in faithful accordance with the one and the other; not a policy intended or calculated to waste the landed property of the Government, or impair its revenue from that source, but, in fact, to enhance the usefulness of the former and to increase the revenue of the latter.

The substitute—or as I call it, the Senate bill—proposes to grant one hundred and sixty acres, by a regular subdivision and alternate sections, from the public lands hitherto surveyed, or which may hereafter be surveyed, and subject to sale at private entry, to any citizen of the United States, being the head of a family, who will settle upon the tract so granted and cultivate it for a term of five years.

My colleague (Mr. WADE) has mentioned several particulars in which he prefers the original House bill. I reserve with him as to one of them, and shall endeavor to amend the Senate bill accordingly; but I differ as to all the rest.

I agree that no distinction ought to be made between persons of alien birth, now residents in the United States, and persons who may hereafter be admitted to citizenship, or regularly declare their intention to become citizens. Both classes ought to be included; and why that was not done by the Senate bill originally, or by some amendment from the Committee on Public Lands, I confess myself unable to say.

Three other objections of my colleague are contained in a single paragraph of his speech:

"In the next place, the Senate bill confines the benefits of its provisions in lands of families. The House bill gives the land not only to heads of families, but to any person who is twenty-one years old, who will make a declaration, and become a citizen before he receives his patent from the Government. The Senate bill confines the persons to lands that are subject to private entry. The House bill gives the preference for the preemption to the heads of families, and also subjects to preemption, and also makes the benefits to all such as have already preempted land, but have not paid for the same completely within this time."

It is true that the act of September 4, 1841, section ten, allows a right of preemption to married men, "over the age of twenty-one years," being citizens, as well as to the heads of families; and also extends that right to all lands which have been surveyed, and not specially reserved before, no less than subsequent, to such lands being offered at public sale, but there are two particulars in which the act of 1841 is very intemperate, and ought not to be imitated. They have been fruitful sources of fraud and perjury; have opened the door to most reprehensible monopolies; and have, in one and the same instant, deprived the actual settler, deprived the Government of nearly all its revenue from the public lands, and involved it in the utmost extravagance of expenditures.

Unmarried men seldom have any fixed residence; and their settlements on the public domain, at the majority of cases, are of the casual kind, intended to secure the lands at a nominal price, in order to sell them at an advance to mere speculators. This evil is greatly increased by the provision which authorizes them to settle upon lands not yet offered to public sale; because, as unmarried men are not required, almost in company with the surveyors, and before the heads of families, in order to select the best lands and make such slight improvements as will entitle them to the privilege of preemption. The speculators do not care to wait until public sales, but select the best lands. They find it more advantageous to purchase claims for preemption upon lands which have thus been selected in advance of sales, or even of any advertisement. Consequently, while the income of the Government has steadily declined, actual settlements have not been promoted, and monopolies of the public domain, based on frauds and perjuries, have increased to an alarming degree.

The act of September 4, 1841, is the first which authorized future preemptions. The former acts were retrospective, and only confirmed settlements made before their respective dates of enactment for a number of years. Congress ought to have foreseen that such an extension of the principle, throwing aside all safeguards, would immediately induce the most shameless frauds, as well as the most corrupt speculations. Accordingly, in less than two years, by the act of March 3, 1843, provision was made to investigate some of these frauds, and an attempt to prevent their recurrence. (Statutes at Large, vol. 5, p. 619.) That attempt was but partially successful; and since it has been a member of the Committee on Public Lands, for now almost five years, no subject has been more frequently and anxiously considered than the adoption of some plan to avoid the evil of sham settlements under the preemption act. I believe that its operation ought to be limited to heads of families, or, at least, to lands which have been offered at public sale; and, so believing, I wish to restrain the homestead bill in those two particulars. Otherwise—and I warn its friends before-hand—it will become a terrible engine of mischief and corruption.

In the report of the Secretary of the Interior, of December 1, 1859, I find this paragraph:

"The advantages and profits arising from the first settlement of a new country ought to be enjoyed by the early settlers. They have peculiar hardships and privations to undergo, and the Government should encourage them. The law does not contemplate that they shall have any competition, except from other actual settlers, in selecting the best lands for settlement. It is not the intention of the law to deprive the settler of the privilege of purchasing a homestead until he has settled on the land. It is the reason to be that the withholding of lands from a public offering, and consequently from private entry, has often proved prejudicial to the Government, and has been a source of great loss, and has been a source of great loss, and has been a source of great loss."

How great this temptation to fraud is, may be inferred from the fact that, in many instances, lands which have been entered at $1 25 per acre, have been sold in twelve months after entry from ten to one hundred dollars per acre."

The graduation act of August 4, 1854, was an enlargement of the principles of the preemption act, and was immediately followed by enormous and shameless frauds. I refer, in confirmation, to the act of March 3, 1857, Statutes at Large, volume 11, page 185. The Secretary of the Interior said in his report of December 2, 1858:

"It is believed that the graduation law will continue to prove a fruitful source of fraud and annoyance, unless some change is made in its terms. Congress should require proof of settlement prior to graduation, and should limit the entry, or should release the purchaser from the conditions now imposed."

And the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his report for the same year, says:

"From the passage of the act of August 4, 1854, up to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1858, 168,324 acres have been sold at the various graduated rates. Of these, 105,060, and about one-third, were sold at the rate of twelve and a half cents per acre. And of the whole quantity, over 6,527,491 acres, or more than one third, were sold at the rate of twelve and a half cents per acre."

"We have reason to believe that a very considerable portion, if not the greater portion, of the entries for settlement and cultivation have been made by unscrupulous individuals in contravention of the law, and bought up by speculators, who are trying to Congress for the confirmation of the law, by the passage of the act of March 3, 1857, dispensing with the proof of settlement and cultivation."

To force the act from the editors of evasion and fraud, and to confer its wise and beneficent provisions to the exclusive benefit of the actual settler and cultivator of the land, the Government should require proof of settlement and cultivation to be made, and proof of that fact produced in every instance before the entry of the land, and the same is required in the act of March 3, 1857, and the condition of settlement and cultivation be required altogether.

"The graduation law was never designed to interfere with the regular sales under the general law, but merely to limit the sale of the lands to actual settlers and cultivators; and its operation should be confined, as far as practicable, to that class of persons; and, in my opinion, this can only be done by legislative action."

Another consideration deserves to be noticed. The head of a family who fixes his residence upon the public domain must not only struggle for his own subsistence, but for the subsistence of his wife and children. These are the attachments which bind him to the land, which stimulate his toil and industry, and induce him to bestow pains and make more useful improvements. Such improvements enhance, proportionally, the value of all other lands in the neighborhood to which the Government retains title, and furnish a reason for discriminating between his case and the case of temporary or trifling improvements, by an unmarried man.

Again: to allow the selection of homesteads upon lands which have been surveyed but never advertised for sale, in the first place, to offer inducements not to purchase or settle upon lands already surveyed, and after entry, and to offer those lands, from year to year, under the provisions of the graduation act; and, in the second place, to compel the continuance of our present extravagant system for surveying the public lands. It is not because of deficiency in the lands before surveyed and liable to purchase, or location, or preemption, but merely that speculators may be enabled to press forward into the prairie or the wilderness, and under cover of fraudulent preemption, appropriate the best portions of our public domain, that we are called upon, year after year, to enlarge the expenditures for surveying lands and for increasing the number of land offices and land officers. I am tired of opposing and exposing such extravagances; but if you will listen to nothing else, Senators, listen to this: here in the Indian wars, with their enormous drafts on the Treasury, and even more enormous sums stipulated by the treaties which ensue. We expend millions to induce our people to rush into the Indian country, surveying lands which are not required for sale or settlement, but only for speculation—thus driving the Indians from their homes to theft or starvation. We then expend millions to pay soldiers and militiamen for killing as many of these Indians as possible, and finally expend other millions, by sham treaties, to civilize the survivors, and to give the kind assistance of Indian traders, furnishing them weapons with which to destroy our people, and whisky with which to destroy themselves.

On the 30th of September, 1859, as the Secretary of the Interior informs us, there were eighty million acres subject to private entry, and fifty million acres already entered, and twenty million acres surveyed and ready for market. I assume that sixty million acres at least will be liable to occupation, as homesteads under the Senate bill—a quantity sufficient for all the homesteads demanded here, for, in addition to those acquired under the preemption and graduation acts, during the next twenty-five years."

As to the proposition of the House, which my colleague specially commended—that those who have already made claims for preemption, but have neglected to pay for the lands claimed at the price fixed by the preemption act, should be discharged from all indebtedness, on what reasonable pretext can that be defended? Why not also refund the money heretofore paid by pre-emptors? Why not refund to every purchaser, small and great, the whole amount of his purchase money? Why not give to every landowner a bounty land warrant the lands which they have located, and the price of their warrants besides? Sir, it is an extravagant proposition, and utterly destitute of merit. We do not propose, by the Senate bill, to touch or otherwise interfere with the preemption or the graduation law, but to keep always in mind the principle of those laws, namely, that an advantage to the actual settler (within certain limits) will result in advantage to the Government as a landed proprietor. That principle is one from which no compromise with the United States, we are at liberty to depart; inasmuch as the public lands have been ceded to or purchased by the Federal Government for an especial purpose—not as property, to be dispensed for benevolent, or religious, or educational objects, but primarily and chiefly for the revenue, and as immediately connected with that, the encouragement of new colonies, Territories and States within our present boundaries.

For these reasons, also, the Senate bill confines the choice of homesteads to the alternate (uncumbered) sections of a township, four families to settle together upon adjacent farms, but reserving the even numbered sections for school purposes, (as in the case of section sixteen), or other special selections, or else to the operation of the preemption and graduation acts. The effect will be to bring the even numbered sections into market, and enable the Government to dispose of them at an earlier period and at better prices than if no homesteads had ever been granted. It must be remembered that the graduation act reduces the price of lands, from thirty to five cents per acre, subject to sale; so that the Senate bill is, in effect, a wise measure of revenue, as well as a measure for the colonization of our public domain.

And now, Mr. President, having explained the reasons which induced the Committee on Public Lands to propose the Senate bill, and to amend it, in four of the particulars specified by my colleague, I proceed to the general question debated by others.

It has been our constant practice, ever since the 3d of September, 1788, when the Congress met, to report two thousand acres, in Ohio, to the Society of United Brethren, for propagating the Gospel among the heathen, to donate a portion of the public lands, by alternate sections or otherwise, with a view to the enlargement of the residue. This was done by the act of August 2, 1827, granting to the State of Indiana the alternate sections for five sections in width, along the route of a proposed canal from the Wabash river to Lake Erie, and the act of May 24, 1828, granting to the State of Ohio a like quantity of lands along the route of the Miami extension canal, and five hundred thousand acres in addition. Such grants were not considered as gratuities by the Federal Government to the States I have mentioned, but as the contributions of a land proprietor towards improvements which would enhance the value of its remaining estate.

And so, by the act of September 20, 1850, Congress granted to Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama, the alternate section for six sections in width, (being two million five hundred and ninety-five thousand and fifty-three acres) and in the construction of two railroads from Galena and Chicago to the mouth of the Ohio river, and one railroad thence to the city of Mobile, Mr. Claykey tells us, in his Political Text-Book, that the grant to Missouri for railroads, under the act of June 10, 1852, embraced one million acres in the construction of two railroads from St. Louis and St. Charles to the mouth of the Ohio river, and one railroad thence to the city of Mobile, Mr. Claykey tells us, in his Political Text-Book, that the grant to Missouri for railroads, under the act of June 10, 1852, embraced one million acres in the construction of two railroads from St. Louis and St. Charles to the mouth of the Ohio river, and one railroad thence to the city of Mobile, Mr. Claykey tells us, in passed by the Thirty-fourth Congress, there have been donated to Iowa, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Mississippi, and Minnesota, for like purposes, between fifteen and twenty million acres.

Nor has the utility of such grants been abandoned, even at this session, as several Senators who have signified themselves in opposition to the present measure. I hold in my hand Senate bill No. 122, "to establish a communication by railroad and telegraph between the Atlantic States and California, and for other purposes," introduced by the Senator from Texas. [Mr. Wigfall,] and now upon the Calendar. I ask the Secretary to read me the first two sections of that bill.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Mississippi river to the western boundary of Texas, and from thence to the Pacific ocean, there is hereby granted, on the terms and conditions hereinafter mentioned, to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, chartered by the State of Texas, of which J. Edgar Thompson of Pennsylvania, Vernon K. Stevenson, Samuel Tate, and Joshua Foxworth of Tennessee are directors, and John P. Buckley, William H. Clement of Ohio, John P. King of Georgia, Charles T. Follard of Alabama, William C. Shreve of Mississippi, John L. McLean of Kentucky, John H. Seward and S. M. Barlow of New York, R. W. Loughery, Jason C. Wilson, W. T. Stewart, Robinson, and others of Texas, are directors, their associates, successors, and assigns, every alternate section of land, to the amount of three alternate sections per mile on either side of said railroad and telegraph line, from the Mississippi river to the Rocky Mountains, parallel of north latitude, to the eastern boundary of the State of Texas, and every alternate section of land, to the amount of twenty-five alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line, from the western boundary of Texas, on the most eligible route to the eastern boundary of California, in the direction to San Francisco, and from thence, to the amount of six alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line, on the most eligible route to the Pacific ocean, at or near San Francisco. And this road shall pass over the Rocky Mountain also south of the thirty-third parallel of north latitude.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, to insure the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri river, commencing at the mouth of the Missouri river, on the north latitude, and thence on the most eligible route to the Pacific ocean, crossing the Rocky Mountains north of the thirty-third (33) parallel of north latitude, there is hereby made, upon the terms aforesaid, to William H. Swift of Massachusetts, Erasmus Corning of New York, W. W. Case of Massachusetts, and others of Ohio, Thomas A. Morris of Indiana, Benjamin H. Latrobe of Maryland, William B. Ogden of Illinois, Charles E. Mason of Iowa, J. S. Wood of Kentucky, John H. Seward, John How, Robert Campbell, and A. S. Mitchell of Missouri, and their associates, successors, and assigns, every alternate section of land, to the amount of three alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line, for the distance of five hundred miles from the western boundary of the State of Iowa, and from thence on the most eligible route towards the line now selected therefor over the Rocky Mountains; and from the end of said five hundred miles, to the amount of twenty-five alternate sections per mile on each side thereof, on the most direct eligible route to the eastern boundary of the State of California, in the direction to San Francisco, and from said eastern boundary, to the amount of six alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line, on the most direct eligible route to the Pacific ocean, at or near San Francisco, with a branch and telegraph from the western practicable point to said main railroad, to the mouth of the Missouri river, at or near its mouth, or to Puget sound; so as to aid in constructing which, a like grant of lands to said company for the amount of six alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line is hereby made.

Mr. PUGH. Now I ask the Secretary to read that portion of the fourth section which I have marked.

The Secretary read, as follows:

And in all cases where the United States have disposed of any of the alternate sections granted by this act, or for any other reason cannot convey title thereto, or where the same shall be conveyed by the United States to any other authority, (and his decision shall be approved by the Secretary of the Interior,) or where the same shall be mineral lands in California, (which are heretofore on the list of the operations of this act,) the deficiency shall be made up by other sections from the several appropriated public lands belonging to the United States, in the order of the several objections apply. And the alternate sections granted by this act shall be in all cases made up of the lands designated by said authority: Provided, That so soon as this act is passed and accepted by the companies undertaking to build the railroads, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to cause the public lands for forty miles on each side of so much of said roads as the companies shall indicate to be the most eligible route, and the occupation until the lands shall have been surveyed and the alternate sections selected, as provided for in this act.

In addition to all these grants, the seventh section of the same bill provides for a loan of $750,000,000, upon almost indefinite terms of repayment, in aid of the railroad and telegraph lines then theretofore contemplated. Will the Senator from Texas inform us whereabouts in the Constitution of the United States, as interpreted by itself, or with the aid of his detailed narrative of the events which preceded or accompanied the separation of the thirteen colonies from the dominion of the British Crown, whereof it is a part, to be introduced by or under the authority of the resolutions of 1798 and 1799, or by Mr. Madison's report, he discovered that the Federal Government had any more authority to provide railroads and telegraphs in Louisiana and California and Oregon, as well as in the Territories, than it has to bestow lands upon the landless, or secure homes for the homeless?

Mr. WIGFALL. With the permission of the Senator, I will ask the caption and the parts of the first and second sections of the bill which I have marked, be read, and I will then explain very briefly.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, to insure the safe, certain, and speedy transportation by railroad of mail, troops, munitions of war, military and naval stores between the Atlantic States and California, and for other purposes.

That, to insure the safe, certain, and speedy transportation of mail, troops, munitions of war, military and naval stores, from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean, there is hereby granted, on the terms and conditions hereinafter mentioned, to the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, chartered by the State of Texas, of which J. Edgar Thompson of Pennsylvania, Vernon K. Stevenson, Samuel Tate, and Joshua Foxworth of Tennessee are directors, and John P. Buckley, William H. Clement of Ohio, John P. King of Georgia, Charles T. Follard of Alabama, William C. Shreve of Mississippi, John L. McLean of Kentucky, John H. Seward and S. M. Barlow of New York, R. W. Loughery, Jason C. Wilson, W. T. Stewart, Robinson, and others of Texas, are directors, their associates, successors, and assigns, every alternate section of land, to the amount of three alternate sections per mile on either side of said railroad and telegraph line, from the Mississippi river to the Rocky Mountains, parallel of north latitude, to the eastern boundary of the State of Texas, and every alternate section of land, to the amount of twenty-five alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line, from the western boundary of Texas, on the most eligible route to the eastern boundary of California, in the direction to San Francisco, and from thence, to the amount of six alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line, on the most eligible route to the Pacific ocean, at or near San Francisco. And this road shall pass over the Rocky Mountain also south of the thirty-third parallel of north latitude.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That, to insure the safe, certain, and speedy transportation of mail, troops, munitions of war, military and naval stores, from the Missouri river, commencing at the mouth of the Missouri river, on the north latitude, and thence on the most eligible route to the Pacific ocean, crossing the Rocky Mountains north of the thirty-third (33) parallel of north latitude, there is hereby made, upon the terms aforesaid, to William H. Swift of Massachusetts, Erasmus Corning of New York, W. W. Case of Massachusetts, and others of Ohio, Thomas A. Morris of Indiana, Benjamin H. Latrobe of Maryland, William B. Ogden of Illinois, Charles E. Mason of Iowa, J. S. Wood of Kentucky, John H. Seward, John How, Robert Campbell, and A. S. Mitchell of Missouri, and their associates, successors, and assigns, every alternate section of land, to the amount of three alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line, for the distance of five hundred miles from the western boundary of the State of Iowa, and from thence on the most eligible route towards the line now selected therefor over the Rocky Mountains; and from the end of said five hundred miles, to the amount of twenty-five alternate sections per mile on each side thereof, on the most direct eligible route to the eastern boundary of the State of California, in the direction to San Francisco, and from said eastern boundary, to the amount of six alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line, on the most direct eligible route to the Pacific ocean, at or near San Francisco, with a branch and telegraph from the western practicable point to said main railroad, to the mouth of the Missouri river, at or near its mouth, or to Puget sound; so as to aid in constructing which, a like grant of lands to said company for the amount of six alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad and telegraph line is hereby made.

Mr. WIGFALL. With the permission of the Senator from Ohio, I beg leave to say that I stated that the first clause of that bill which I introduced, and three clauses of which he has read, I did not intend myself to support. The bill was drawn rather with a view to substance than to form. The provisions of that bill are contained in the amended bill which I hold in my hand, and from which I have just been reading. I have just been reading. I will not at this time go into any argument upon the question. It is enough for me to say now, in order to put myself right upon the record, that I do not believe that the Federal Government has any power to carry on any system of internal improvements, either general or otherwise. I do believe that the Federal Government has the right to establish post offices and post roads, and, under that power, to make provision for transporting the mails. I believe that the Government has the right to keep up an army and a Navy—I do not pretend to quote the words of the Constitution—to construct forts, navy-yards, and dock-yards, and other necessary buildings for this purpose, on such land as may be acquired by the Federal Government from the States. I believe that the Federal Government, having the right to transport the mails, charging, of course, those who derive the benefit by the reception of letters and printed matter through the mails, has also the right to transport munitions of war and naval and military stores when necessary; and that it is right to make contracts for the transporting of mails and naval and military stores. It is in reference to these particular matters that this bill is drawn; and I think when it comes up for consideration, I shall be able to show that it is obnoxious to none of the objections which can be made to it, and that it is right to make contracts for the transporting of mails and naval and military stores, and have heretofore been introduced. At least, if I do not show—and so show that this bill no loop or hinge to hang a doubt on—that shall bear no doubt—not encourage or admit the doctrine of the right to carry on internal improvements on the part of the Federal Government, or give away lands without consideration, then I pledge myself to vote against it.

With that explanation, and thanking the Senator for his kindness in allowing me to make the statement, I will not venture to further upon his time, nor upon that of the Senate.

Mr. PUGH. I do not understand that the grants of land contained in that substitute are different from the grants which were read from the Secretary's desk.

Mr. WIGFALL. They are not.

Mr. PUGH. The only difference, then, between the bills, consists in the preamble which the Senator has added to the substitute. That preamble recites that these grants of lands for the construction of railroads are made to insure the safe, certain, and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, military and naval stores, from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean. Is it necessary for either one of those purposes to construct a railroad?

Mr. WIGFALL. I think so.

Mr. PUGH. Why, sir, they are transported now without a railroad. You have now three overland routes.

Mr. WIGFALL. But at a greater cost.

Mr. PUGH. Yes, sir. Then, the same argument authorizes the Government to charter a line of steamboats on the Mississippi river to carry the mail. It is a degree of laxity of construction in which my friend from Texas exceeds any of the Republican Senators on this floor. If on the mere pretext that you can transport the mails, troops, and munitions of war, better by a railroad than under the present system, you may launch the Government into the expenditure of money and grants of land for a railroad, I say it exceeds in latitudinarian construction of the Constitution anything that the Federalists ever dreamed of. There is no defense for the bill upon that ground. It cannot be defended there. It must stand upon the other proposition, namely: that the construction of railroads and telegraphs through the public domain will enhance the value of the public domain; that it is in our interest, as a landed proprietor, to give away a part for this purpose in order to get a larger whole back again. This is strict construction! That is according to the resolutions of 1798 and 1799! I think the Senator will find it difficult to get this bill on that platform.

Mr. WIGFALL. With that ground I do not deal. The Senator accuses me, but I did not stand the Senator previously. That bill has a twofold operation, and it is double in its provisions. I do not intend to go into any argument now, of course; but I wish merely to put myself right on the record. I am glad to hear the Senator say that he is a lawyer, and that he has the temper, the fairness, and, I will add, with the good sense which he is doing. He seems to have some rational views upon the subject; and if I shall differ with him, it will be because we differ upon questions of reason any conclusions, after he has heard me. I have no objection to the Government for land donations to a railroad company, upon the principle that the Government is, as he says, the landed proprietor, having the legal title to the lands, the States being the cestui que trusts, and the Government being the trustee. The Government sections upon that ground; and upon that ground, if authority (which I do not generally call upon) were necessary, I at least could fall back upon one whose reputation for strict construction has been well established. I mean Mr. Calhoun, of South Carolina. The other provisions of the bill to which I alluded, as to the mail transportation and the munitions of war, is a money donation; and the bill provides for money donations upon the ground that the Government has a right, in making a contract, to pay either cash, or in kind, or in land, or in any other advance, as it may make its best bargain.

Mr. PUGH. In that regard there is no difference between the Senator from Texas and myself. I was about to call his attention to the fact that, in addition to the donations of land, proposed by the bill, there is a donation of money on very indefinite credit; but still I agree with him so far as payment for services performed, either in carrying the mail or the transportation of munitions of war, is concerned, it is purely at the option of Government to pay advance for a year, or a series of years. On that basis I have no objection to the principle of his bill; but the object which I had in view in citing the bill—which in that particular is the same in both—is to show that the Government of the United States had admitted the right of the land proprietor, and would give a portion of the land with a view to the enhancement of the residue; and that that policy, commencing at the earliest time, had been continued down to this very session; that the benefit of that policy had inured to all the States of the Union, to the southern as well as to the northern States.

The homestead bill designs, also, to enhance the value of that portion of the public domain reserved from its operation.

As to doubling the price of the reserved section, as the Senator has just proposed, by his railroad bill, that does not affect the principle of such grants. It is merely a question what degree of advantage the Government will stipulate, and whether that advantage shall be immediate or remote. The principle is, that something shall be given, freely, with a view to the enhancement of that which is not given; and it holds as completely, although not in so immediate a degree, in the case of grants scattered over the whole domain, at the pleasure of the settlers, as it does in the case of grants confined to alternate sections.

Mr. WIGFALL. I will draw the Senator's attention—I know as ready a blaster as he is, is not to be drawn—to some important particulars in these bills drawn. Will he state to me the amount of land proposed to be donated to each individual?

Mr. PUGH. One hundred and sixty acres—a quarter section.

Mr. WIGFALL. In this bill there are six sections given for railroad purposes, and the alternate six sections reserved to the Government. In one instance a railroad is to be built directly through the country—six sections reserved alternately—and after the road has been built, and the country has been settled, in consequence of the building of the road, we may rationally conclude that the land will actually be increased in value. But, if you cut it up into quarter sections of one hundred and sixty acres each, and individuals speculate about, and act upon, where they please, and select the important quarter sections in a prairie country, picking a single spring and a small bit of timber, what will be the result? The Senator has traversed through prairie country, and knows the character of it. I can take six certificates, of one hundred and sixty acres each and destroy utterly the value of any league of land in the United States in a prairie country, by selecting important locations upon water courses or springs or small bits of timber. You may utterly destroy the value of the land that has been built, and give a donation of six sections, taken in a block, and leave the other six sections, those advantages against the Government are not secured to the settlers. Then, again, there is a vast difference in this particular—and whilst I run up, as the Senator is patient, I will state it—where a road is built through the country and it becomes open for settlement and sale, sections of six in a block are left open for sale on the part of the Government, and the other six sections—

Mr. PUGH. Sections in a block. You are mistaken. You only reserve the alternate sections for six sections in depth.

Mr. WIGFALL. I will read it:

Every alternate section of land, to the amount of six sections per mile, on each side of the railroad line.

I was speaking of a block of these quarter sections. By my bill, a block of one mile square will be left for sale, and one occupied. The railroad company will have a block for sale; that railroad company without means, and therefore willing to sell and anxious to sell. The Government will hold the rest back, and when they are assigning to settle will move into the country that is about being developed and that is improving, and they will draw good neighbors with them. But to whom will land be given according to the provisions of the constitutional bill? Men who buy one hundred and sixty acres of land are to settle on alternate quarter sections, leaving one hundred and sixty acres between each of them? Why, sir, I undertake to say, that of the entire population of the United States—I mean the agricultural population—will find a very small proportion of those who till the soil who are going to settle in a country that was settled by such a population as this bill proposes to settle on the public domain. Men who are going to cultivate public land usually want more than one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. PUGH. There is no provision that they shall not buy it, if they choose. They can buy as much as they please.

Mr. WIGFALL. But the bill is intended to provide for those who cannot buy.

Mr. PUGH. You will be intended to provide for everybody, whether they can or cannot buy.

Mr. WIGFALL. The Senator from Minnesota said yesterday it was for those who were not able to buy.

Mr. PUGH. That is not my view of it.

Mr. WIGFALL. I will go further—

Mr. PUGH. It is undoubtedly true that in particular districts of country, not only in prairie, but in the case of a mountain defile, the party who has the choice in advance of all others may so make his choice as to destroy comparatively the value of all the rest. That happens in other instances. That will happen under the Senator's railroad bill. If the spring be within the section that belongs to the railroad, what use would it be for us to double the price of the reserved sections?

If the spring be on the sections reserved, what benefit does the railroad company receive? There, beside that, how does the Senator expect the railroad company or the Government to derive the slightest benefit, either from the section that is given or the section which is reserved, until he can persuade the actual settler to go there? I hear a great deal about the value of the public domain. I stated this morning, on the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, that there were eighty million acres now subject to private entry. It sounds large—eighty million acres—but it is not worth eighty cents, unless you can sell it to some one else. It is not worth a cent. All you can do is not worth anything until you get a man upon it to cultivate it. That brings it into market. That is why the railroad company want the land. They will build the road there, and sell the land to the actual settler. That is what the Government doubles the price of the reserved sections, where the railroad company has stipulated settlement, the Government thinks it can take advantage of the necessity of the actual settler, and compel him to pay double price. There is no benefit in principle to be derived from this. There is merely a difference in the method of applying the principle, and perhaps, in some instances, a difference in degree.

But, in his railroad bill, the Senator adopts and acts upon this very proposition of mine. He proposes to reserve the Government sections to alternate sections to bestow upon the routes of the two roads, or the section be condemned as worthless, or be mineral land, "the deficiency shall be made up by other sections"—and these need not be alternate sections, from the nearest inappropriate section, if handy. Now, if the Government will derive only an incidental, remote, and even contingent advantage from such grants; they are not upon the line of the railroads, and no alternate sections are to be reserved, or prices to be advanced, or compensation to be made.

Shall I turn the Senator's constitutional argument against himself? Let us hear what he said:

"This Government was established for the purpose of securing liberty to ourselves and to our posterity, and it was vested with certain powers which are to be exercised in the name and for the benefit and the good of the States; and if this Government has a right to acquire territory, not beyond what has a right to acquire territory by taxation, the money of that territory (if property) is the legal title vested in the Government, but the States being the actual grantees, and they having the equitable title, and this Government cannot distribute or distribute either the money or the territory (that is the land) except for Federal purposes, and it is not the duty of the Government to establish a money establishment. I deny that it has a right to distribute land or money among the individuals of the United States, and that there is any duty to give land to the people of the United States. I believe that there are thirty-three different sovereign independent nations confederated together, and that we have established a Federal Government, of which we are a part."

To all that, Mr. President, I fully agree. The difference between the Senator and myself is in the application of it to particular cases. He seems to believe that the Constitution is very elastic, and can be stretched a great way, when we come to the case of railroads and telegraphs; that the property of the Federal Government, acquired by Federal taxation and held strictly for Federal purposes, can, in taxation with $70,000,000 of money, raised by like taxation, be donated to the use of individuals, and that the Government can give it to corporations in the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, or to the use of William H. Swift, of Massachusetts, and his associates, in a company for constructing a railroad across the Rocky Mountains north and south, thirty-fourth parallel of north latitude, but that to bestow one acre of land on a much land upon any other individual who may desire to cultivate it, and thereby improve the adjacent public domain, would be an open breach of the Constitution, and a denunciation from democratic principles. The Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Johnson) must be dealt with summarily, for what he has proposed; but the Sentor from Texas, notwithstanding the enormity of his bill, is henceforth to carry the standard of our faith.

I agree that the public lands are public property; but in the disposition of them, whether in the States or in the Territories, the Constitution has expressly conferred on Congress all the discretion of a landed proprietor. I know that discretion may be, as it often has been, abused by Congress. There is no remedy for that; it is an infirmity of all human government.

That Congress, in its discretion, has frequently granted lands for an inadequate price, or no price at all, in order to enhance the value of remaining lands, and this for other objects than the construction of railroads, telegraphs, or canals, is a fact of which every Senator must be more or less aware.

Thus, on the 3d of March, 1817—[call the attention of my friend from Alabama [Mr. CLAY]—an act was passed "to act apart and dispose of certain lands for the encouragement of the cultivation of the vine and olive." (Statutes at Large, vol. 3, p. 374.) That reserved four contiguous townships, each of six miles square, in Mississippi Territory, (now the State of Alabama,) from public or private sale, under the general laws then in force, and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to contract for their sale, at the rate of one dollar per acre, to be paid for within one year from the date of the contract, to certain emigrants from France, stipulating "for such conditions of settlement, and cultivation of the vine and other vegetable productions as may to him appear reasonable." If it be to be supposed that any emigrants were to pay for the lands at the general price then established by law, I answer, that the terms of payment were extremely liberal, and such as never had been granted to any other class of purchasers. The principle, therefore, is the same.

We have now an act approved March 2d, 1844, commonly called the town-site law. (Statutes at Large, vol. 5, p. 657.) That authorizes the corporate authorities of any town established on the public domain, or, if the town be not incorporated, the judges of the county court, to enter three sections of land, to be sold for the benefit of the site, in trust for the inhabitants of the town, at $1 25 per acre. To be sure, as in the last case, a payment is required here; but then it is a payment of the minimum price, without preliminary advertisement, offering to sell, and in exclusion of all other purchasers.

We have also the act of March 2, 1849, granting to the State of Louisiana, and aid "in constructing the necessary levees to drain and reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands therein, the whole of those swamp and overflowed lands which may be or are found unfit for cultivation." (Statutes at Large, vol. 9, p. 352, 353.) The benefits of this act were extended to the State of Arkansas, and all other States then admitted, by the act of September 28, 1850. (Statutes at Large, vol. 9, p. 515, 520.) That act, too, has been further extended to Minnesota and Oregon, by an act passed unanimously at the present session. No compensation is reserved to the Federal Government directly for such grants. The proceeds are to be applied exclusively to the construction of levees and drains, which will enhance the value of remaining lands.

The grants already approved of this character, excluding Minnesota and Oregon, embrace more than forty million acres.

Another act, approved March 3, 1855, declares, "That each contract, made, or to be made, in carrying mail through any of the Territories west of the Mississippi, shall have the privilege of occupying stations, at the rate of one cent of its length for every mile of route on which it carries a mail, and shall have a preemption right therein, within the time which shall be brought into market, to the end of its length and every acre may be taken rentlessly, and to include his improvement; but no such preemption right shall extend to any pass in a mountain, or other defile." (Statutes at Large, vol. 10, p. 654.)

The act of 3d of March, 1857, providing for the overland mails between California and the Mississippi, declares, "That the contractors shall have the right of preemption to three hundred and twenty acres of any land not then (at the time of making the contract) disposed of or reserved, at each point necessary for a station, or for any other uses (from each other) and provided that no mineral land shall be thus preempted." (Statutes at Large, vol. 11, p. 654.)

the extent allowed by law in other cases of pre-emption; but the object of them, whether wisely or unwisely designed, is to induce the establishment of stations, at intervals of ten or twenty miles, along the overland post-roads, and thus promote the colonization and settlement of the public domain.

There is an act of February 17, 1815, "for the relief of the inhabitants of the late State of New Madrid, in the Missouri Territory, who suffered by earthquakes," (Statutes at Large, vol. 3, pp. 211, 212,) the principle of which I do not clearly distinguish. It provides that any persons owning lands in New Madrid county, according to the limits, on the 10th of November, 1812, "whose lands have been materially injured by earthquakes," shall be authorized to locate the same quantity of public land, subject to sale elsewhere in Missouri Territory, without price or reward. Here is an eleemosynary donation, upon which not merely the Senator from Texas, but the Senator from Missouri, (Mr. GREEN,) can fasten an abundance of constitutional criticism.

Mr. POLK. I did not understand a word the Senator used. He said they should be allowed to locate the same quantity of land.

Mr. PUGH. Without price or reward.

Mr. POLK. It was an exchange of land. The United States got the land that was injured by that earthquake in place of the land that was entered by the certificate that the recorder of land titles was authorized to issue.

Mr. PUGH. They gave up the land that was injured by earthquake, because it was of no value. They got the good land, and gave up that which was destroyed. I say it was an eleemosynary grant. I acknowledge it, but it is an exception.

Mr. WIGFALL. I beg to ask the Senator, for I know he is a fair man, whether he means to say I voted for that bill?

Mr. PUGH. No; but I state that to show what the course of the Government has been. I believe the Senator from Missouri will be brought out in saying that a large portion of the land in Missouri has been located on New Madrid certificates. A great many cases of litigation have grown out of them, I know.

Mr. POLK. I wish to say that the litigation has been in vast disproportion to the quantity of land entered. The quantity of land entered under that act was not very great, for it was confined to New Madrid.

Mr. PUGH. I did not suppose the lands so entered were very great, compared with the area of so large a State as Missouri. I do not mean that my friend from Texas voted for the bill, but I mean this: when he says, and others say, that this hatched bill revolutionizes the policy of the Government in relation to the public lands, I mean to show that it introduces a new principle. They tell us that it is some extravagance that is to overwhelm us, to destroy the public revenue, and to alter the whole course of events in this country. I have shown him that this very principle, in all forms of application, has been the guiding principle of our early public lands, from the very earliest day until the present time.

But, sir, if there be any case in which the Constitution allows us to exercise a liberal discretion, as proprietor of the public lands, it is not in the case of railroads to be granted, especially when there are to be controlled by corporations—but in the case of the actual settler. This results from the fact, that Congress can only acquire land, by treaty or otherwise, for particular purposes; and in regard to cessions from individual States or foreign nations, the same rule is observed. Therefore, there is a paramount duty imposed on Congress by the Constitution to dispose of such lands, not as property alone, but with a view to the formation of States and their admission into the Union. The right to dispose of the lands, whether for purposes of revenue or otherwise, may be exercised in subjection to this paramount idea. This truly defines the raison d'être of which the Federal Government is trustee, and of which the people of all the States are thus, and not otherwise, to become the beneficiaries.

I know the Senator from Texas has little respect for judicial decisions; but he will pardon me, I trust, in quoting two or three brief, pungent, and very decisive sentences:

"There is certainly no power given by the Constitution to the Federal Government to establish or maintain colonies bordering on the United States, or at a distance, to be ruled and governed at its own pleasure; nor to enlarge its territorial limits in any way, except by the admission of new States."

Again:

"The power to expand the territory of the United States by the admission of new States is plainly given; and, in the construction of this power by the departments of the Government, it has been held to authorize the acquisition of territory, not fit for admission at the time, but to be admitted as soon as its population and situation would entitle it to admission. It is acquired to become a State, and not to be sold as a colony, and governed by Congress with absolute authority."

That is from the opinion of Chief Justice Taney in Dred Scott's case, and affords a complete answer to the argument of the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. NICHOLSON) in support of this bill.

Mr. WIGFALL. I agree to what the Senator has read, with a qualification.

Mr. PUGH. Far less is it acquired merely to the land property, in the disposal of which the Government acts as speculator in land. The high and guiding principle of the whole is, that the Territory is acquired hereafter to become a State, and it never can become a State without people. Therefore I repeat, that in disposing of the public lands with a view to revenue or bounty, protection to the actual settler and the colonization of the public domain rises above every other consideration, and Congress is bound by the Constitution so to legislate.

The encouragement of the actual settler has always been a prime object in every act relating to acquiring and disposing of the public domain; not merely, as in the case of canals, railroads, and other local improvements, by the grant of alternate sections, but by larger donations, and without interest, price of adjacent or reserved lands.

That by the act of March 3, 1823, section second, every person, being the head of a family or twenty-one years of age, who had become an actual settler upon lands within the Louisiana Territory, prior to the treaty of cession, was confirmed in title to his settlement. (Statutes at Large, vol. 2, pp. 325, 326.)

And so, by the act of March 3, 1823, all claims for lands between the Rio Hondo and the Sabine river, "founded on occupation, habitation, and cultivation, prior to the treaty of February 22, 1821," Spain, were ordered to be confirmed. (Statutes at Large, vol. 3, p. 337.)

When I referred to these cases some time ago, the Senator from Alabama (Mr. CLAY) declared that in his State, at least, and the State of Mississippi, no similar grants had been made. The bill is precisely in error, as he will ascertain by reference to the act of March 3, 1823, sections one and two. (Statutes at Large, vol. 2, pp. 229, 230.) A like provision was made in Florida by the act of May 26, 1824. (Statutes at Large, vol. 4, p. 47.)

It may be said these were the confirmations and settlements previously made—but what then? They were settlements without title, and for which nothing ever had been, or ever was to be paid. The principle is exactly the same. But, sir, I have taken pains to make decisive instances. Here is the act of August 4, 1842, the first section of which provides:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, That any person, being the head of a family, or single man over eighteen years of age, able to bear arms, who has made, or shall within one year from and after the passage of this act, make an actual settlement on a portion of the public lands within the limits of the line dividing lands number nine and ten south, and east of the base line, shall be entitled to one quarter section of said land, on the following conditions and stipulations:

"First, That said settler shall obtain from the register of the district in which the land is situated, a permit describing, as particularly as may be practicable, the place where his or her settlement is to be made; provided, That no part of the land shall be located in Florida at the time of the passage of this act, who shall be the owner of one hundred and sixty acres of land at the time he is required to make, shall be entitled to a permit from the register.

"Second, That said settler shall reside in the Territory of Florida, and shall so continue to do, until he has resided one year, and to take his grant on any public land south of that township.

"Third, That said settler shall erect thereon a house fit for habitation of man, and shall clear, enclose, and cultivate at least five acres of said land, and reside thereon for the period of four years next following the first year after the date of his permit, or he or she shall so long live.

"Fourth, That such settler shall, within one year after the said four years shall have expired, and before the expiration of the year and date of the same by the United States, prove, before such tribunal and in such manner and form as shall be prescribed by law, that he or she has complied with the conditions of the act, and that he or she is entitled to the land; and, with the approval of the President, the fact that the settlement had been commenced, and the particular quantity of section upon which he or she is entitled to receive the settler shall, within six months after the expiration of five years from the date of his permit, prove, in like manner, the fact that he or she has complied with the conditions of the act, and that he or she is entitled to the land; and, in the second and third conditions heretofore prescribed; whereupon, and not until then, a patent shall issue to said settler for the land so claimed.

The Secretary of the Interior tells us that a signal failure resulted from this act, and refers us to his report of December, 1858, in testimony of the fact. Well, sir, here is what he said in that report:

"The grant of land under the act for the armed occupation of Florida, passed August 4, 1842, has resulted in two hundred thousand acres. The eagerness of settlers to avail themselves of the benefits of this grant is shown by the issuance of letters patent and twenty-one years of one hundred and sixty acres each, which amounted in the aggregate to two hundred and eleven thousand three hundred and sixty acres.

"In the year 1854, a supplemental act was passed, substituting cash payments for the condition of continued residence; and under the original and supplemental acts one hundred and sixteen claims had been finally approved and patented, amounting to eighteen thousand five hundred and thirty acres.

"On the 1st of July, 1849, another act was passed for the relief of those to whom permits may be granted, dispensing with the condition of residence on the land. This act required the employment of an agent for the adjustment of the claims of cases, and it appears that two hundred and eighty-two claims were made under this act, amounting to forty-five thousand two hundred and eighty acres. From the foregoing statement it will be seen that various cases, amounting to nine thousand three hundred and twenty-four and five, if any, of these will ever be earned into patents under the act of August 4, 1842, and the claims which have been absolutely forfeited and canceled, amounting to one hundred and thirty-eight thousand four hundred acres. From the foregoing statement it will be perceived that only about one-twelfth of the whole area proposed to be granted has been secured finally to claimants under the act of 1842, and that the balance of the area was paid for; that not one-fourth has been finally secured under the relieving act of 1849, and that more than two-thirds has been lost forever to the Government."

Really, on this statement, I see no case of "failure" at all. The permits were asked without knowing the character of the lands to be occupied; those who retained their settlements, in all probability, had the best lands; the rest had poor lands, or lands subject to be overflowed, which they were obliged to abandon, and driven away in consequence of Indian warfare.

The Secretary does not even begin to prove by such a history that donations of this character are less acceptable to settlers than sales at $1 25 per acre. Doubtless, in many cases, the settlers in Florida preferred to receive their lands after a settlement of two years; but this certainly was because the lands had become valuable, even by reason of so brief a settlement, and therefore would be sold at an advance on the minimum price fixed by law. It will be so, in many cases, under the homestead bill.

The Secretary does not tell us how much of these one hundred and thirty-eight thousand four hundred acres abandoned, or never settled, has been sold since the act of June 15, 1844, or the act of July 1, 1850. But, yet, under the latter act, when sold at $1 25 per acre, there is a pretty nothing in his argument. The probability is that every man has gone to the State of Florida under the grant of swamp or overflowed lands.

I cite next the grants to actual settlers, or those who might become actual settlers, in Oregon Territory, embracing the present Territory of Washington as well as the State of Oregon. These are contained in sections four and five of an act approved September 27, 1850, Statutes at Large, volume nine, pages 497, 498. Those sections are in these words:

"Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That there shall be, and hereby is, granted by every white settler or occupant of the public lands, American half-breed Indians included, above the line of eighteen years, and under the line of the United States, or having made a declaration according to law of his intention to become a citizen, or who shall have been admitted to the benefits of the laws of the United States, before the 1st day of December, 1850, now residing in said Territory, or who shall become a resident thereof on or before the 1st day of December, 1850, and who shall have been a resident of the same for three consecutive years, and shall otherwise conform to the provisions of this act, the quantity of one half section of land, or less, to be selected by the settler, if a single man, and if a married man, or if he shall become married within one year from the 1st day of December, 1850, the quantity of one section of land, or less, to be selected by him to himself and the other half to his wife, to be held by her to be her own right; and the surveyor general shall divide the land, and the original and true copy of the title and sale of the same by the United States, prove, tion in this report, we add the consideration that it is their labor alone which gives real value to the lands, and that the proceeds arising from their sales are distributed chiefly among States which had not sold their lands, and which had also enjoyed the undivided and unimpaired benefit from the sale of their own lands, it cannot be expected that new States will remain long in the hands of the Government, after the payment of the public debt. To avert the consequences which may be apprehended from this course, we put an end forever to the sale of the public lands in relation to this subject, and to afford to every American citizen of enterprise the opportunity of securing an independent livelihood, it seems to me, that the only policy is the idea of raising a future revenue out of the public lands."

Sir, it was not even the Democracy of John C. Calhoun, to whom the Senator from Texas has referred as a bright example of Democratic faith and consistency. In his speech of February 7, 1837, Mr. Calhoun said, in support of his bill to donate all the public lands to the States in which they were respectively situated, on their paying to the General Government twenty-five per cent. of the proceeds:

"He thought, therefore, that, instead of attempting to redress any longer what must eventually happen, it would be better for all concerned that Congress should yield at once to the force of circumstances, and cede the public domain. Its objects in this measure would be to terminate the evils. He wished to break down the vassalage of the new States. He desired that this Government should cease to hold the relation of landlord."

And again he said, in the same speech:

"I saw clearly it was time to cut off this vast source of patronage and power, and to place the Senators and Representatives from the new States on an equality with those from the old, by withdrawing from them the power and patronage which they now possess. The Senator from Massachusetts objects to the term, and desires that Congress exercise any language concerning the States. I acknowledge that the epithet is strong; perhaps too harsh. I used it to express the strong degree of independence of the new States in this Government, whose power and patronage are ramified over the whole surface, and whose domains constitute so large a portion of their territory. I certainly did not asseverate that the Senator from Massachusetts, or any other, would deny the existence of this dependence, or the local control of the Government within their limits. Can any State be said to be free from dependence on a government when that government has the disposition of a large portion of its domain? Is it no hardship that the citizens of the new States should be compelled to travel vast distances to buy lands in this place, and to wait our tardy justice, or will Congress, by placing the public lands—a subject, in its own nature the most local of subjects, which ought to be controlled by the local authorities of the States? I ask him if he would be willing to see Massachusetts placed in the same relation to this Government as the new States? It would not destroy its independence? I ask him if it must not give a great and controlling influence wherever it exists? Through the influence of the Senator from Massachusetts this Government pervades the whole territory of the new States; and their citizens become claimants in your doors, without other security than the honor of the Government, any man that all this is incompatible with the sovereignty of those States; but I do not say it is derogation of their sovereignty."—Calhoun's Works, vol. 3, pp. 645, 646.

And does my friend from Texas, assuming to be a peculiar believer in the reserved rights of the States, oppose a policy which endeavors to carry out the views expressed by Mr. Calhoun, to release the grasp of this Federal Government over the new States, the greater portion of whose lands are controlled, and over which they possess so great an influence? I say, with Mr. Calhoun, in its derogation of their sovereignty; and that it is the duty of every man who maintains the reserved rights of the States to use every lawful effort to increase the power and influence of the Federal Government in those States.

Mr. President, there have been several other objections made by the Secretary of the Interior and others. It is objected that the passage of this bill will destroy or greatly reduce the revenue of the Federal Government from the public lands. I answer, this cannot be so. The Secretary should have in mind that, under the graduation act, the value of the public land subject to private entry is depreciated from time to time; and, therefore, any measure which tends to bring the public lands into market and sale in advance of the usual period saves them from depreciation, and increases the revenue of the graduation act. Then, in the next place, if the Secretary of the Interior has told us the truth, as I presume he has, the revenue has now entirely failed, except from lands subject to the graduation act. Here is his report to your very session:

"It will be seen that the cash receipts from the public lands have been less than anticipated in any last annual report, although the number of acres sold does not fall short of the calculation the Secretary has made. This, which, by a long continuance in market, have graduated the prices by virtue of the act of August 4, 1854, have been sold for cash. These lands at the minimum at $1 25 per acre have been entered almost exclusively with military bounty land warrants; and although large quantities of fresh lands have been brought into market by protraction, less money in proportion to the amount of land sold has been received from sales than at any previous period."

Then let us hear no more from the Secretary of the Interior about the destruction of revenue from the public land. It is destroyed already, and destroyed by that very system of bounty land warrants which he eulogizes in his annual report. But, sir, in fact, the adoption of this bill will improve other sources of Federal revenue, particularly that derived from duties on imports. I choose to substitute for my own argument on this point, the argument of one of the greatest statesmen, in my opinion, that ever lived, and mean Edmund Burke. In Mr. Burke's famous speech on economical reform, delivered February 11, 1780, he used this language, in advocacy of a proposition to sell the Crown lands:

"The revenue to be obtained from the sale of the forest lands and rights will not be so considerable, I believe, as many people have imagined; and I conceive it would be to leave us exposed to the caprice of the market, and to the whims of chance, according to their caprices, the purchase of objects, whereas the expense of that purchase may be so great, that it may be expected to be so great, that I, I can well swear, might give room for parity in the disposal. In my opinion, it would be the best of the two, rather than to consider that the revenue of the Crown might be established, which would take away all sort of unjust and corrupt partiality. The principal revenue which we really receive from these sources is not to be derived from the improvement and population of the kingdom; which never can happen without producing an improvement in the agriculture, and the better of the Crown than the rents of the best landed estates which it can hold."

—Burke's Works, vol. 3, p. 306.

Every word of this language is applicable to the public lands of the United States. I would, however, that the preceptor will complain. What force? Has not the Secretary of the Interior endeavored to persuade us, in his annual report, that the donors of land in Washington and Oregon and Florida were anxious, at the expiration of two years, to pay for their lands at $1 25 an acre, rather than to get them for nothing? If so, there is nothing to prevent any settler, under the operation of the homestead act, from converting his location into a settlement, under the preemption law, at any time. The very same affidavit which would be required to require the purchase of the benefit of the homestead bill, brings him directly within the provisions of the preemption law; and instead of giving the preemptor any cause of complaint, it offers him the alternative of obtaining the land free of cost upon a settlement of five years, or by paying for it at $1 25 at any time short of that period.

It is said finally by the Secretary that it interferes with the bounty land system. I hope so. I hope to see the end of that system. Now, four years ago, in this Senate Chamber, I gave my opinion, derived from observation and experience, as to the effect of that system on the discharged soldier. Where these warrants were given in pursuance of the contract of enlistment, there it was a debt on the part of the Government. It may be that the Government might expect it would be so, to the advantage to the soldier. It is none. It was an injury to him. After having been in the military service in a foreign country twelve or eighteen months, when all his old habits of life had been forgotten, the Government of the United States discharged him, provided him with a warrant, which he was brought, and instead of furnishing him with money with which his wants could be satisfied during the course of three or six months, or any less period in which he might regain the habits of civil life, he was furnished with a discharge, and told to seek his way to the Commissioner of the General Land Office he might hope in the course of two or three years to get a bounty land warrant and be able to locate it in some of the new States or Territories, whether he was old enough to go. The consequence was that they sold their discharge at three or four dollars each, many of them, in which the discharge of the soldier was sold for five dollars; and those who purchased them, in defiance of the acts of Congress, came here in the course of two or three years, and they covered up the selling pressure put down through a bill to legalize all their purchases, and make the warrants valid in the hands of the assignees; and thus the whole purpose and object of the bounty land law, so far as the soldier was concerned, were overturned. You gave the soldier the poor privilege of locating his warrant through the General Land Office, because he could have lost one. After you had made down assignable, the assignee came here, and in one case, which is within the knowledge of the Committee on Public Lands, one assignee, representing a company, located more than forty thousand acres of land through the General Land Office, interfering with the local courts, and making a large number of settlements, until to-day there is not a more monstrous job in any department of this Government than the location of bounty land warrants by the assignee through the General Land Office. The Senator has passed a bill this session to abolish it, and through the House Committee on Public Lands have reported it favorably. God only knows what will be the result.

But, sir, this being the effect of the system as to the soldier, whereby he got no benefit, what shall I say to the ceaseless retrogressive gratuitous grants to soldiers in the war with England, and to soldiers engaged in the Indian wars? How many of them have located the warrants? In there any man who, in the flush of youth, fought with the British along the Canada line, and then located a warrant, and then, when he was old, in his old age, or after the 3d of March, 1853, migrated to Iowa or Minnesota, there to enter his one hundred and sixty acres? It all went to the speculator. The market was glutted by the warrants that the soldiers had for sale. They, too, went to the speculator, and they were sold in parcels, located in large, compact bodies, until, as the Secretary of the Interior himself tells you, they have made an end to all the Government revenue from land at $1 25 an acre. I do not dwell on the arguments which I might adduce to show the unconstitutionality of such a system, believing, as I think, to be a mere largess; but what does the Secretary tell us as to the amount we have already given? Are we never to be satisfied with the system of bounty land warrants? I learn, from his report of December, 1855, a year ago, that:

"Under the various acts of Congress of 1847, 1850, 1852, and 1853,"

"and this is entirely independent of the grants of land that were made to revolutionary soldiers, or their heirs, or those that were promised to the soldiers of the war of 1812 and their heirs—

"there have been issued five hundred and sixteen thousand and thirty-five million seven hundred and thirty-one thousand eight hundred and ninety acres of land, and to soldiers."

And now let any Senator reflect what must be the effect of a system like this on the new States. It is a hard enough, when the pioneers have left their homes in the old States; none out into the prairie or the wilderness, struggling against the savage and against the wild beast; when their improvements are small; when the taxation upon them is onerous for the support of their Government; that speculators, assignees of bounty land warrants, hold millions of acres of unimproved lands, and continue to hold them, year after year, paying little or none of the taxes, until by the industry of the actual settler those lands have been made valuable? I say the system in question has made the new States, in the greatest outrage that was ever committed by the Federal Government, under the pretense of rewarding the old soldier, to plunder and lay waste the new States. If you owe the old soldier a debt, pay it out of the Treasury; let Congress do so equally with the States, but do not satisfy your generosity at the expense of the hardy pioneers of the West.

Besides, sir, the system is the parent of the most abominable fraud. The Secretary has told us this. I need no witness for it but himself. He refers to the case of a man who had located, in every case of these bounty land warrants, the lands which have been finally issued under them have been double, treble, quadruple, what was represented to Congress at the time it was enacted. He said:

"The same man, which has heretofore been paid under the various preemption and bounty land acts for the encroachments of those who advanced their encroachments, and who have been able to do so, to the great injury of the honest settler, has now been found out. What has made it so? Not merely misadventure."

lation, but absolute and positive fraud. Here is what he says:

"I have the greatest confidence in the watchfulness and integrity of the officers who have heretofore had the direct management of the pension bureau, the development of the frauds which have been made in this office is astounding. During the last year fraudulent bounty land claims, amounting in the aggregate to about one hundred and seventy thousand acres, were made out, investigated and exposed. Previous investigation had brought to light a fraudulent issue of about two hundred and twenty five acres. Four of the persons who were made out to have been convicted and sentenced during the last year; one, against whom the proof was conclusive, escaped punishment under the statute limiting proceedings to two years from the commission of the offense; and thirteen others have been regularly indicted, and are awaiting their trials. The evidence and testimony which these impostors have presented, proved, and successfully procured their cures, have equalled anything recorded in the annals of crime. In some cases they have even taken upon their immediate Representatives in Congress, and made them the vehicles of conducting their correspondence for establishing their fraudulent claims. They are generally a class of men who have managed to maintain respectable names in the community in which they live; so that nothing but the most convincing proof, furnished from the records of the office, can satisfy the juries of their guilt. Public justice and the fair reputation of the Government alike demand that these offenders should be brought to condign punishment."

But, yet, with his own sentence of condemnation upon the system which has been thus fruitful of frauds unparalleled in the annals of crime, the Secretary of the Interior implores us not to pass the homestead bill, for fear it will destroy the bounty land warrants! Mr. President, when I have considered the bill, and when I have seen [Mr. JOHNSON] was added to the Committee on Public Lands at the first of December, 1857, I cannot express the sensation of relief to myself personally. I had been a member of that committee at that time for two years. Singly and alone in the committee, and alone along the Senate floor, I resisted the extravagant grants to railroad corporations, until finally I begged my political friends to relieve me from a duty so oppressive. At that time, too, we were pressed by a proposition to issue vast quantities of land to corporations, and to open up under the pretense of endowing agricultural colleges. We had barely escaped a similar scheme for the endowment of asylums for the insane. The great bounty land act of 1855, which was the chief sin of all, was in full operation, even to its supply of land for the insane. In the year 1856, and it did really seem to me that, between railroads and insane asylums, and agricultural colleges and bounty lands, there would not be left a foot of the continent on which the actual settler could any longer go; and it was for the purpose of cutting up this monstrous bill, that I begged the Senator from Tennessee to introduce and press his homestead bill.

To be sure, further examination has induced me, as one of the committee, to recommend many limitations and conditions which bars not many altogether acceptable to other friends of the bill; and I believe the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WILLIAMSON] left us in doubt finally whether he would or would not vote for the bill in case the Senate amendments were adopted. Sir, it is better to err on the side of caution than to provide for the premature act and the graduation bill. Let us put the homestead act into operation with all the safeguards which caution can suggest. If it proves well, if it answers our expectation, there will be time enough to remove these safeguards, which we put of about a century ago, to provide for the future. There will be time enough to extend the benefit of it to unmarried men, to extend its operation to lands not subject to private entry. All that can come in due season; but it is the principle which I esteem of more importance than all the rest. It is for the Congress to declare, on the part of the United States, that the mere sitting of this Government shall be no longer the plunder ground of the lobbyists who beset this Capitol; that it shall not endow colleges, asylums, nor schools, anywhere but upon the very spot where the land itself is; that it shall go into the coffers of no railroad corporation, while it is to raise the price of the land to every humble purchaser, and thus deprive him of the bread which he would otherwise put into the mouths of his wife and children. Sir, if we can establish this principle, even if no individual ever took advantage of it, the mere sitting of this Capitol—the mere driving out from this temple, with the whips of scorn, those who have so long gathered here for the purpose of fastening their schemes on the public domain—will, in the purification of the Government alone, be of infinitely more importance than any bill that has been proposed since I have held the honor to be a member of the Senate."

Sir, I deprecate all attempts of gentlemen on either side of this Chamber to give this discussion a partisan or a sectional turn. If my Democracy is not sufficiently well tested to stand me against the accusation of any other gentleman who chooses to put it in this way, then, sir, let me take the credit of itself. It is very certain that, until this session, and, I believe, until the Senator from Texas suggested it, I never heard it suggested that there was a party issue involved in this bill. The first men who reported it to Congress were Democrats. It passed the same Democratic House of Representatives which enacted the Kansas-Nebraska bill, and in the same session; and I think it had passed before, at a time when the Senator from Tennessee was a member of that House.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. It passed in the Legislature in which they lived; so that nothing but the most convincing proof, furnished from the records of the office, can satisfy the juries of their guilt. Public justice and the fair reputation of the Government alike demand that these offenders should be brought to condign punishment."

Mr. PUGH. "So that it is rather late in the day for my friend from Texas to introduce new tests into the party; and for one, I choose to adhere to the policy declared by General Jackson, Mr. Calhoun, for whom I have no respect, with the Senator. Neither do I want to be suggested by the Senator from Tennessee who spoke the other day, [Mr. NICHOLS,] how the effect of the homestead bill can be either to increase or discourage the settlement of slaveholding communities. I am sure how it is to injure any party."

Mr. WIGFALL. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me to explain, I may just as well do it in a few words now. I surely never intended to bring in question his Democracy, or the Democracy of any gentleman on this floor. I said that the question did involve, in my apprehension, some great constitutional questions, such as the power of the Government; and that under that phase of the question, it must necessarily (as almost every question which arises here) be a test of political orthodoxy. For instance, there are two parties, as the Senator will admit, in this country, and always have been, differing from each other as to their mode of construing the Constitution and administering the Government. If the parties do not differ upon that, then both are political heresies. If the parties differ, I said that this question, as it occurred to me, must be a party question. It involves the power of the Government over the public domain; and that again involves the question as to what sort of a Government we are living under; and that, the character and construction of the Constitution. Thus far I did say it was a party question, and no further. There is no one that would render more justice to the Senator from Ohio than I would, for the good service he has done the principles of the Democratic party in defending a strict construction of the Federal Constitution.

Mr. PUGH. I am very much obliged to my friend for the compliment; and under his disclaimer I have no further observations to make on that point. I was about to say, that I could not but be gratified by the introduction of this bill, so disastrous to the slaveholding States, or to Territories in which slaveholders might desire to be. In the first place, as to that large class of people, the non-slaveholders, it would occur to me that if they received this grant of one hundred and sixty acres without being compelled to pay for it, they might invent the small surplus of their funds, whatever it might be, in the purchase of negroes. [Laughter.]

Mr. WIGFALL. Ninety-nine out of a hundred of them own land already.

Mr. PUGH. Well, they are not all that land if they receive our farm for nothing; and they can invest the proceeds of their other farm in the negro business, as far as the act is concerned. If there be any particular advantages in a man's owning negroes, I should think it rather advanced for the act to be introduced; but it will have no effect on that question.

Mr. WIGFALL. I will simply say to the Senator, that one hundred and sixty acres is not enough to work a negro.

Mr. PUGH. Very well; then he can buy the additional sections. We do not provide that he shall have only one hundred and sixty acres. We give him that much.

Mr. WIGFALL. Will the Senator add one hundred and sixty acres for every negro he owns?

Mr. PUGH. If he has a negro, he ought to be able to buy an additional one hundred and sixty acres.

Mr. WIGFALL. Then you admit it is providing for those who cannot buy?

Mr. PUGH. Those who cannot buy and those who can—both of them. Those who already have lands, by receiving this grant free of cost, can appropriate it in any way they see fit, or they can, if they choose to go into the business of buying slaves, they will have more funds for the purpose. I think the great majority of the settlers will not do anything of the sort.

However, Mr. President, it was probably out of the usual time for me to make any reference to that matter. I have only said what I have in regard to it to dispel the alarm of my friend from Texas. I really do not think the homestead bill will have the slightest effect either to retard or extend the jurisdiction of slavery. Nor do I believe furthermore that all the acts of Congress which have been passed from the days of the ordinance of 1787 down to this present hour, contained, I think, in about eleven volumes of statutes, more or less, have ever had the effect of extending the jurisdiction of slavery one hair's breadth; and for that reason I have said as I have thought, as still think, that the less we bring that question into sectional and congressional discussion, the better.

As I said at the outset, it is the object of this bill to understand it, to adopt a policy for the disposition of the public domain. We are at present without a policy; or it is a plunder policy for railroad companies, for agricultural colleges, for the assignees of bounty land warrants. The object of this bill is to include the whole of them, and transfer the sale of the public land we have to sell, limiting it to actual settlers.

Mr. MASON. To give it away.

Mr. PUGH. No, sir; not give it away, no more than you give it away, as I have shown, under every other statute. There is an ample remedy to the Government in the increase of value of all the adjacent lands. I thank the Senate for the kind attention they have given to me.

Mr. WIGFALL. Mr. President, having been alluded to particularly by the Senator from Ohio, and having been charged with making any reference to this question, I do not feel that it would be entirely out of place for me to answer so much of his speech as shall occur to me objectionable to criticism, during the brief period I shall occupy the attention of the Senate.

The Senator has charged me with inconsistency. Well, possibly so; but those who live in glass houses ought not to throw stones. The Senator, if I recollect aright—and I beg that he will correct me if I do not—some time during the first half of his speech, in alluding to preemption settlers, objected to the whole policy, on two distinct grounds; one was that it induced men to go into unsettled and unsurveyed territory, trespass upon Indian rights, get involved in difficulties with the Indians, and then involve the Government in the expense of the preemption policy; and the other was, in the words of Indian treaties, and that again by the appointment of Indian agents, who were to kill the Indians off with whiskey. That was his objection to the preemption policy.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator must not say I objected to the preemption policy. I addressed it. I said that particular feature of the preemption law precipitated this pressure into the public domain beyond what the general policy of the law designed; that it was one of the particular defects in the bill, and therefore we had omitted it in this case.

Mr. WIGFALL. Then, in one case, he objects to the preemption policy, because it extends the settlements and involves us in difficulty with the Indians. Then he goes, in the very next breath, to the homestead policy on the ground that it will involve the State policy of our settlements, and throw into the Indian country a body of hardy frontiersmen who will prevent the Government from the expense of carrying on Indian wars, by conducting them themselves.

Mr. PUGH. I do not recollect anything of that sort in my speech.

Mr. WIGFALL. If you will look to the speech you will see it. Well, Mr. President, so far as that question is concerned, I take the Senator up on another ground. He admits the Senfullest extent my construction of the Constitution. He admits to the fullest extent that there is no such community as the American people. He admits that we are citizens of the different States; and that this Government is a landholder for the benefit of the particular States whose agent it is. He admits that the Government is to deal with that land as a trustee for the benefit of the several qui trusts. If that be true—

Mr. PUGH. Did I understand me to know that the Government is a landholder for the benefit of the public lands in trust for the States, as so many corporations, to realize for the States as much money as possible out of them?

Mr. WIGFALL. No, sir.

Mr. PUGH. I said the trust of the Federal Government was to administer the public domain as that while we derive revenue from it to some extent, it should also be open to cultivation and settlement with a view to the admission of new States into the Union. That was the trust—no trust for the States themselves.

Mr. WIGFALL. I understood the Senator subsequently to qualify the statement or admission, and add to it that, in addition to being a landholder for the benefit of the several qui trusts, it had another purpose to perform; and that was, to induce settlement for the benefit of the particular States. These were the qualifications that he made. Now, sir, it is possible that the Senator, before we get through with this debate, may persuade me that I cannot vote for my donations to railroads. I hope that I shall be able to persuade him that he cannot vote for a land-stead bill. I have already reversed the story of the two Yankees who were locked up in a room together, and made twenty-five dollars out of each other by swapping coats. [Laughter.] We shall lose—I my railroad bill and he his homestead bill—the operation, and I shall be very much content to follow even the railroad, if thereby I can defeat this bill. I wanted, in reply to the Senator's comments on my own consistency, to show, and I will now proceed to do so directly, that land donations to railroad companies and land donations to paupers are two very distinct propositions.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator does not call this a bill of donations to paupers. The only proposition I have heard of that sort is the one introduced by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN.] This is a proposition to donate to the actual settler. He proposes to donate to the pauper.

Mr. WIGFALL. Mr. President—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the Senator will allow me to say that the Senator from Ohio is wholly mistaken. My proposition gives to every citizen of the United States, whether he be pauper or not, his warrant, and I take it for granted that it cannot be affirmed that every man in America who is a citizen is a pauper.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator does not require them to move on the land and settle it, and therefore I say his is a general division of the public property.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is an equal division of public property among all the owners. He proposes to appropriate the public property to the expense of those who, having nothing to do therein to home, may choose to go and take possession of it. If either set are to be called paupers, I presume it is those men who have nothing to keep them at home and who can afford to emigrate to this property and use it.

Mr. WIGFALL. I intended to draw the attention of the Senator from Ohio particularly to some important differences between these two propositions. In the first place, a donation to a railroad company, with which company a contract is made to transport not only arms and munitions of war but naval stores, and the mails, can be so framed as to perform a double purpose: first, by inducing the building of the road, to increase the price of the alternate sections which are left; and secondly, as a consideration for the benefit which the company will derive from the alternate sections which will be sold, to induce the company to undertake to carry the mails, munitions of war, and naval and military supplies at a lower rate than you could otherwise induce them to do; thus using the public domain in payment of the expenses of the transportation of the munitions of war, of naval and military stores, and the mails. Now, sir, if my bill is not framed with that object; if the donation of land is too large; or if the amount of money to be paid is too large, they can both be diminished when the bill comes up for passage and is under consideration by this House.

I say, then, that there is nothing unconstitutional in the idea, there is nothing objectionable in the view which I take upon this subject, that the land donation first operates no loss to the Government; because, by reserving the alternate sections, the increased price will reimburse the Government for the land which is donated, and in the next place, the land and money may be so graduated together as to be considered as part payment of the services to be rendered by the company. But can this homestead bill be in any manner so framed as to produce these two results? What is it that the homestead settler is to do for the Government? That is what I want to hear. How is the value of the Government land to be increased? I ask the Senator's attention to that particular point. I have read neither of these bills; but in the discussion I have a general idea, and I judge that I am not mistaken as to the general character of them. One of them I have never deemed it necessary to consider—the House bill; the other, supported by men of the Senator's character, I have considered, and I have considered carefully. I have read it, but I have read it with a purpose to give every alternate section of one hundred and sixty acres—that is, the one fourth of a mile square—to every man who will settle upon the alternate section.

Mr. PUGH. The alternate quarter section.—I first asked that; but the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. JOHNSON,] who was more familiar with settlements even than I am, suggested that it would be an improvement to let four settlers come together and make a neighborhood, and therefore this bill was amended so as to say that particular numbered sections should be given to settlement under this bill, and not others. That leaves four settlements on a section.

Mr. GREEN. Is that the House bill, or the Senate amendment?

Mr. PUGH. It is the Senate amendment. I think the odd numbered sections are subject to this bill, and the even numbered sections where ever they occur (and they will include section sixteen, or the school section) will not be open to settlement under it. They may be settled under the other bill.

Mr. WIGFALL. Very well. I will ask the Senator from Ohio, what amount of land by the bill is set aside so to be settled upon?

Mr. PUGH. None; because we put it upon the ground that it is a policy for the colonization of the public domain. Whenever that section occurs, the settler may settle upon it.

Mr. WIGFALL. I will ask the Senator, whether the surveyed or unsurveyed lands are subject?

Mr. PUGH. Only the surveyed lands which have been offered at public sale and not purchased.

Mr. WIGFALL. Precisely so; that is just what I judged. Then, Mr. President, the proposition is, that this Government shall incur the expense of surveying the public domain. In the first place, the Federal Government has incurred the expense of purchasing, either with blood or money, the public domain; and it is not the blood that I complain of, but the money that we have paid for the blood. It is the pork and bread and the eight dollars a month that have been taken out of the Treasury to keep an Army in the field to conquer this territory; and then afterwards the money that is taken from the public Treasury to consummate treaties by which this public domain has been acquired. Now, sir, the public domain having been acquired and paid for by the Government, I think it is not reasonable to calculate of, but I judge not less really, if you take all matters into consideration, than one dollar an acre, without the expenses of survey, and of the land if it is—that is an estimate I have seen—

Mr. PUGH. I think, if the Senator will pardon me, the Senator from Tennessee, that comes to me—there was an estimate made by the Secretary of the Interior under Mr. Fillmore's Administration, that the price then received for the public land had more than paid for all that had ever been expended on it.

Mr. WIGFALL. This land is then to be surveyed and this expense to be continued and kept up, and those parties are to settle upon it, and yet it is no donation! Oh no! Of course not! A man goes and settles on the public domain, gets possession of it, keeps possession of it, the fee passes from the Government to him, and the Senator, because he can only settle on every alternate section? Who is going to settle on the other alternate section and pay for it? I ask the Senator not to deceive himself, or suppose that others are to be deceived. I am satisfied that the wish has been uttered by the thought, that the Senator would not attempt to use an argument here which he himself did not believe was legitimate; that he would not attempt to palm off sophisms on a body of the respectability and that has the amount of brains that this body has; but I ask him seriously how it is that this Government is not making a donation—when and where he expects ever to sell another acre of land as long as parties can go and settle on every alternate quarter section?

Mr. PUGH. The Senator seems to suppose that the mere giving of one hundred and sixty acres, upon condition of settlement for five years, will exclude every other sort of purchase. The Secretary of the Interior has told us, and I adverted to the statement many times, that in a large number of cases the settler prefers to pay $1 25 an acre rather than to be compelled to remain on the same land for five years, and the operation of the law in Oregon, and every other place where it has been applied, shows that granting a part as a donation has in no case interfered with the sale. It has not diminished the revenue of the Government.

Mr. WIGFALL. That is all very clear—that a man who can go and settle on one hundred and sixty acres of land—a man who is going to be a bona fide settler—would rather pay $1 25 than have it for nothing. I am entirely satisfied with the argument.

Mr. PUGH. No, sir. I say in some cases. You settle the odd numbered sections by actual settlers under the homestead bill. The alternate section—the even numbered section—is in market, liable to sale at private entry.

Mr. WIGFALL. I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. PUGH. Then the same parties, if they choose, or are able, or other parties, may enter that section, and will enter it; and in many cases where the settler is offered a large advance for his property, he would rather come forward and pay $1 25, and not the price of the land, than to have it may sell. That is the motive for them, in many cases, to have title at once, at the price of $1 25, rather than be compelled to remain five years; because they have an offer to sell the land to some person at an advance.

Mr. WIGFALL. I am entirely satisfied.

Mr. GREEN. Will the Senator allow me one moment? I should like to know how this can be called properly a homestead bill, when, after five years, the land granted is subject to the State laws, and not the United States law? It is to be subject to operation under the law of the State, the moment the title is vested; and to call it a homestead bill before the State acquires it, and when the title divests, is a contradiction.

Mr. WIGFALL. The Senator from Ohio does not apply the law, he goes to the edge of the State, and the Senator from Tennessee, and the Senator from Ohio will admit to be a misnomer. I state that I am satisfied with the argument of the Senator from Ohio; but I happen not to believe that the class of population who are going to move into the public domain upon an inducement of one hundred and sixty acres, are going to abandon their settlement and pay for another one hundred and sixty acres. I just happen not to believe it. And then, again, I do not think that those who have originated this matter apprehend that such will be the result. I have stated the Senator to say that. I was going to explain that this could not come under the rule which was laid down by the Senator himself, that the Government had not the power to give away the land, unless, by giving it away, the Government increased the price of the land and thereby increased the revenue of the Government by this homestead bill, by giving one hundred and sixty acres of land to every one who will settle upon it and remain upon it for five years, you stop at once the sale of the public lands. Such is my argument.

Mr. GREEN. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. WIGFALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREEN. I do not wish to interrupt his argument; but this is called a homestead bill. It makes it popular in the public mind. Now, to be a homestead, it must be sacred as home. I suggest whether Congress, the moment it parts with the title, can exempt it from execution, sale, and alienation.

Mr. PUGH. Does the Senator suppose there can be no homestead unless it is exempted from execution?

Mr. GREEN. I say there can be no homestead unless it is exempted from execution.

Mr. PUGH. I think we all have homesteads in our States, but they can be sold.

Mr. GREEN. I beg leave to request the Senator to keep his seat. I say that it belongs to the States to make homesteads, not to the Federal Government. The Federal Government may give away money and land to the individual, but it cannot make a free homestead in the proper sense, nobody can do it but the States; and if Congress should attempt to exempt it from execution, it would be void; for the moment the title passed out of the United States to the individual, it would be subject to the State laws. How do you make a homestead exempt, then, from execution, except by State laws?

Mr. PUGH. The bill does not propose to exempt it from execution. I call a homestead the place where a man who is poor, and who has no money, is necessary to exempt it from execution to make it a homestead.

Mr. WIGFALL. Then I judge that, by the consent of the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Missouri, we may call this a bill to provide homes for the homeless, except to make it under an execution and transfer without the consent of the wife, instead of a homestead bill.

Mr. GREEN. That is it.

Mr. WIGFALL. And in that view I will discuss the bill. I have noticed that these railroad donations are predicated on one idea; and that was, that the Government was not actually making a donation, and that it was not squandering the public domain; but that, by donating alternate sections, it was remunerated by the increased price of the alternate sections, which would be sold. And this bill has no such feature as that. It proposes to give one hundred and sixty acres to every man who will go and settle on the alternate quarter section; and as the settlement is continuous, and there is no use provided when one shall not have time to go and settle without paying, and as the Government has to survey and incur all the expenses of acquiring and surveying, the time will never come when another acre of land will be sold by this Government. This is, therefore, an entire abandonment of the public domain as a source of revenue, and it will be a continual expense upon the Federal Treasury; in the first place, the Government being called upon to furnish homes for the homeless, and in the next place, to run to the immense expense of keeping up land offices for the purpose of having their homes surveyed out there. Instead of a source of revenue, the public domain will become a constant source of expense to the Government. Hence it is better, in every view, to give them $150 at once; or, if you choose to rate the public lands at $1.50, to give each man $20 at once, and be done with it, provided you can get that class of population to give a receipt in full against the Government, and bind themselves never again to come here and ask any further donations. If you can do that, I am willing to give them the $200 and quit, to get rid of them.

Now, having, at least to my own satisfaction, shown that there is some difference between supporting a bill to make grants of land to a railroad company, for carrying the mails and munitions of war and naval and military stores, and furnishing homes to the homeless, I will now return to alternate sections to be bought by actual settlers from the Government, when the railroad company shall have sold out their alternate sections, or when they shall ask higher prices than the Government does—having shown that that does not diminish the power of the Government from a source of income, and that the other does, I, being satisfied of these facts, can vote for one bill, and not for the other.

Mr. PUGH. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention, as I did before, to the fact of his own departure from his own doctrine—the very point of departure that I recollect my friend Judge Butler used to comment upon? He has provided in his bill that wherever the Government has no alternate sections to bestow, you may go off an indefinite distance. For instance, in the State of Louisiana, (for his bill extends from the Mississippi river to the eastern boundary of Texas,) you may go through lands that have been sold by the Government; and not having any alternate section to bestow, the Senator makes up that defect out of the whole quantity of public lands, where he neither reserves an alternate section nor doles out the public lands to the individual. What is that? For if he strikes that feature out of his railroad bill, I can tell him that those who are demanding the grant would not ask for it at all, because that is the chief element of all the railroad grants.

Mr. WIGFALL. I have two answers to make to what the Senator says; first, that the bill may be amended, and that stricken out—

Mr. PUGH. Then, I tell him, they will not want it.

Mr. WIGFALL. If that be not expedient, I say to him as I said before—as he would have heard if he had listened to me instead of listening to the Senator from Tennessee, (Mr. JOHNSON,) whose conversation I cannot doubt is very interesting, but it causes me to travel over the ground two or three times. On what principle does he demand the price to be paid in advance for the transportation of the mails, munitions of war, military and naval stores; that the whole bill is predicated on the idea of a contract made by the Government with certain parties who are to render a certain service to the Government? There is the important difference between the two measures; and upon that I predicate it. If he can show me that it is an iniquitous contract; that the companies are getting more land or more money than the Government ought to pay, I will vote against my own bill. If he will show that there is anything in that bill inconsistent with the principles which I here avow—and these are the principles which I really entertain—I will vote against the bill; but I do insist that there is no similarity between the two propositions. That, however.

Now, sir, there is another important distinction between the two propositions—the one that I have introduced and the one that the Senator from Tennessee says he introduced, though I believe Felix Grundy McConnell was the author of it. The one that I have introduced is this: That, however, is a question which I leave Alabama and Tennessee to speak about.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. All that I have to say in that connection is, that I do not care who is the author of this measure; but I will inform the Senator from Texas that he has been informed wrongly.

Mr. WIGFALL. I was told so this morning by an Abolitionist. He might have been desirous of claiming the credit for his State; and doubtless the Senator knows.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. An Abolitionist once before stated it in the Senate, and he was shown then that he had fallen into an inaccuracy, and had made a statement which the record did not sustain.

Mr. WIGFALL. Were I an Abolitionist, I should be glad that it were so. (Laughter.) But to go on with my argument, if argument it can be called. I have stated the difference between these measures. I was about to state that there is another important difference, and that is in the whole character of the measures; the tone, the look, the motive, the feeling; the sentiment that induces them. One is a measure that a Government might undertake to carry out—I mean a Government that deserves the name of a Government; the other is one which, in my humble judgment, no Government would undertake. One looks to contracts for the performance of great public services that are indispensable; the other looks to providing for pauperism. I know it is popular to talk about poor men, but I tell you that poverty is a crime. A man who is poor has sinned, (laughter.) There is a screw loose somewhere. (Laughter.) The Senator from Ohio laughs. I will prove it.

Mr. PUGH. My observation of late years is, that those who have sinned the most generally get rich the fastest in this country. (Laughter.)

Mr. WIGFALL. I think not. I think virtue is not always its own reward; but it is very frequently rewarded.

Mr. GREEN. Will the Senator allow me to propose an amendment that I intend to offer, so as to have it printed?

Mr. WIGFALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREEN. I present an amendment, and give notice that I shall offer it hereafter. I ask that it be read and printed.

The Secretary read the amendment; which is to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert: That the provisions of all the existing preemption laws be, and shall be, strictly, extended by the terms of the act to the space of two years; and that if, at or before the termination of the two years, the preceptor shall elect to pay for any land outside of such quarter section, the balance not paid shall be subject to private entry according to existing laws.

Mr. GREEN. I will make one remark in explanation. This proposition is to extend the time of payment to the preceptor for two years. It is a homestead for two years instead of five. In the next place, if he cannot pay for one hundred and sixty acres of land, he may pay for forty, or eighty, according to his ability.

Mr. WIGFALL. I will not be diverted from the train of my remarks by the amendment which has been introduced. I say, Mr. President, that poverty is a crime; and I shall move to amend this bill by calling it a bill to encourage crime, and to provide for the punishment of crime, and to violate the Constitution of the United States, and bankrupt the Treasury. I said before that I knew it was very fashionable to talk about poor people. It is supposed that a man makes himself poor by being about poor people, and that the friends of the poor must be the enemies of the country—brogans and wool lands, and all that sort of thing. Whenever I fail to render some other evidence of my capacity to represent my portion of the people of the United States of America, I feel that I am doing wrong. I do not intend to prejudice, I hope that I shall pass from public life into retirement. What is poverty? Could you call any man poor who has capital? Hardly. What is capital? It is that which will bring money. Who are the capitalists of the country? The rich. They are the capitalists of the country. How do men live? Sir, I trust in God that I have as little respect for that class of society who are the fruges consumere nati—those who are born to eat, to sleep, and to die—as any man who ever lived. Who, sir, are the capitalists of the country? The rich. They are the capitalists of the country. It is not, thank God, in this country restricted to that class who happen to be born rich, and who therefore have the ability to do nothing. That is not the class; but the man who, either by his brains or by his strong arms can make a living and force it—collects the debt the world owes him, rendering service to the world—he is a capitalist; and when you find such a man, he does not ask you to furnish him a home. He would not take it if you would give it to him. He goes into the wild West and buys one, or perhaps one, if he needs it, where he will make the way for himself. That class of the community are respectable. That class of the community make always good citizens. When a State is composed of that class of citizens, it is a respectable State. These men are not poor, though they possess but little of the way of the world.

You, sir, (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair,) or any other Senator I see here, may, by long and deliberate study, have so thoroughly imbued yourselves with the principles of the law, that your mere opinion passes for law. You enter into the profession; you are employed; it is known that when you give an opinion or argue a case it is gained already. You may have an income of $100,000 a year; yet you may own no house, you may scarcely have a new suit of clothes in a year. Are you not a capitalist? Ah! you a poor man, and I a capitalist. You say, "What if you may have none of it; you may gamble it off at a 'hell' you may dispense it in charity, you may throw it to the dogs. I care not what you do with it. Are you not a capitalist? You are selling your lands, you are levying contribution on the community; you are doing that which is of value to them, and you are paid for it. Are you not a capitalist? The man who, by his skill, can make a watch, and invent machinery, is a capitalist. Though he owns no land, and no negroes, no broad acres, he is a capitalist. The man who is willing to take his spade and go into the ditch, and throw out the dirt, is a capitalist; his labor is worth money, and he can at any time walk into the streets and highways and byways, asking a living, and the world will recognize his right to a living, and give it to him. That man wants to free home for the homeless; that class does not come here with thousands of dollars.

But, sir, this bill does not intend to provide for these men. It intends to provide for a set of men who either cannot or will not make a living, and who are unwilling to take the hazards of the law to steal, and would, rather than starve, log or go to the poor-house. It is a pauper bill—that is what it is, and nothing else.

Mr. PUGH. I suggest to the Senator that I think there are very few of the class of people whom he calls paupers that would get the benefit of this bill. I suppose, by pauper he means the poor man.

Mr. WIGFALL. I so consider it.

Mr. PUGH. Nobody will ever take the benefit of this bill but the laborer. A man who does not want to work will be the last man. You could as well, with the Army of the United States, drive him on a homestead. He would not go there. He would stay about the cities and towns, and steal, as the Senator says. The man who will go, will be what he calls the capitalist; that is, the man who has capital in his bones and muscles. He will go to work. The laborer, the other class never will go. If you gave them a thousand acres in Minnesota, they would not go there after it.

Mr. WIGFALL. I have seen something of the capitalists I have been speaking of. They are as proud as any man in the land. They will send their children to poor schools; they do not go into poor-houses; they have as great an aversion to that crime of pauperism as the millionaire. I have seen something of them, and I have lived amongst them. No, sir; this bill is to provide for those who inhabit the purgatory of London, and the Five Points of New York; "tattered prodigals," as "ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth," the "cankers of a calm world and a long peace;" "revolted tapsters and hostlers trade-fallen." These are the men to be provided for, and gentlemen suppose they will make themselves popular by bringing in a bill to provide for the poor. The greatest mistake that any man ever made in these United States was in supposing that the people have no sense. [Laughter.] The worst paying trade that any man ever followed was that of demagogues. The man who does what is right, and goes before the people and defends his position, will always be mistaken. I have great confidence in juries. I never have yet seen a jury that I would not rather talk to than a judge. If my cause was right, they would understand it, and their verdict you might rely upon. I have great confidence in the wisdom and virtue and intelligence of the people—not vagabondism or pauperism.

Some allusion was made by the Senator from Ohio to the non-slaveholders of the South. I tell him the non-slaveholders of the South are as proud a race as ever trod the green earth.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator did not understand me as calling that in question.

Mr. WIGFALL. I did not understand that you spoke disparagingly.

Mr. PUGH. I said, so far from being injurious to the slaveholding States in regard to that class of population, the bill would be very valuable and even valuable to the slaveholder. On the contrary, I have warm sympathies with that people, because the great body of my constituents are non-slaveholders. I do not believe I have a slaveholder among them.

Mr. WIGFALL. I am sorry for it, for a few of them would add considerably. [Laughter.] "A hell-leaven leaveneth the whole lump." [Laughter.] The non-slaveholders of the South, nineteen times out of a hundred, are landholders. This bill is not intended to provide for them. No one supposes it is intended to provide for them. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. NICOLSON] admits that it is not, in substance. He admits that the effect of the bill is to free-soil the territory of the United States; but he says, in defense of himself as a southern man, that to that complexion it must come at last; and really it is a matter of very little consequence whether it is to-day or to-morrow. I have said I happen to feel as Jack Falstaff did in a battle in which he did not distinguish himself for his courage. Honest Jack said, it was true he owed God a death, but it was not due yet, and he was loth to pay it before it was due. [Laughter.] It may be coming to that complexion; I know not; but I shall not, by any vote of mine, hasten the catastrophe. I have said to-day is the evil thereof. Now, does this hasten the catastrophe, or does it not?

There is a new idea that has been introduced here by several Senators. The Senator from Ohio has countenanced it, and I was rather shocked that he did. It is that this Government has a double duty imposed on it: first as a landholder; and he takes issue entirely with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WILKINSON] on that subject, who considers the Government as a sort of great land speculator who, as he says, goes into market here and there to defend the people out of their money by selling land. He says it is in duty bound to furnish land to the landless; and he put on to the broad ground of donation. He said the Senator from Ohio take very different views. The Senator from Tennessee, though, suggested the idea the other day that this Government owed a double duty to the States: first to act as their trustee, and sell out the lands and make money by them; and, in the next place, to induce settlement and the formation of new States.

Now, Mr. President, if this Government be a Government instituted by the States, if this Government be the agent of the States, I want to know when and where and how that duty has devolved upon it of forming new partners; or, if it does devolve on it, whether this Government is also not bound to the States in this particular as to the disposal of the partners? What sort of a State would the Senator from Tennessee form under this misnamed homestead bill? What kind of a State would it be that was settled by a parcel of men who were not able to buy one hundred and one acre of land, who had no money to buy one hundred and sixty acres of land, who would not go upon the public domain if you were to give them two, or three, or four, or five years to pay it in? [A parcel of paupers; the outpourings of the hell of London, and the hell-hounds to go there and settle on alternate quarterly auctions and have a sufficient number beheadminded into the Union, ninety-three thousand and some odd; and when they have their ninety-three thousand population and are admitted into the Union, with such a population, should not the Senator from Tennessee, Senators; I should like to see the member that would represent them in the other House: I should like really to see the man who wore the emerald elected by such a set, and being themselves of them. I should like to see their Legislature. Great God! it would be a sight to behold! [Laughter.] Are we, the representatives of the States of the Union, to make provision for filling up the Territories of the United States with a population taken, as I have said, from the purgatories of London and the Five Points of New York, and provide for men who are unwilling to provide for themselves?

Why, sir, the curse of God is upon the class who are intended to be provided for by this bill. It is the declaration of Divine justice and wisdom that "he who will not provide for his own family is worse than the infidel;" and I have said before that poverty is a crime, and I say that God has declared so. A man who has intellect, and who has energy, and who line character, may become poor; but you see that man struggling against adversity, he sits out at the corner of the street with a hat, and asks no aid. If he is wanting in one of the elements of manhood, moral character, he may put on a mask and meet you upon the road and say, "stand and deliver;" and before God I would have more respect for the man that says so than for the man that says, "stand and deliver;" for the man that says so has the boldness of manhood, he has not honesty of character. If he is too worthless to work, he is at least ashamed to beg. The miserable mendicant has lost even the sense of shame. He has "sounded the base string of humility," and he has no honor for his race.

This bill, then, is objectionable because it is pandering to a false sentiment; it is objectionable because it is creating a false sentiment; because it is encouraging a false and demoralizing sentiment. But the Senator from Ohio has quoted John C. Calhoun on this. I say to the Senator that I am glad to know, and I long suspected the fact, that he was in the habit of consulting that oracle of wisdom; and if he will introduce the bill that John C. Calhoun introduced when that speech was made which he has quoted, I will join him in voting for it. I am willing to give the lands to the States. The entire domain should be in the States. This Government should have its land offices and its patronage broken up. Let the lands be under the disposition of the States. But did Mr. Calhoun agree or propose to give away even to the States? No; he proposed they should return at least twenty-five per cent. of the proceeds.

Mr. PUGH. Only twenty-five per cent.; and the argument was the same argument by which this bill is supported.

Mr. WIGFALL. But he proposed that we should get nothing. The bill which has been introduced here into the Senate proposes not only that we shall get nothing, but that we shall pay the expenses of getting nothing. [Laughter.] We shall not only give away the land to vagabondism, but shall pay vagabondism for taking the land; it is very objectionable. It cuts off a source of income, and yet does not destroy Government patronage.

Mr. WILKINSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WIGFALL. Certainly.

Mr. WILKINSON. Is it, whether the State of Texas has not given away her lands; not only to her own citizens, but to foreigners?

Mr. WIGFALL. Foreigners! That is more objectionable still.

Mr. WILKINSON. I ask you whether the State of Texas has not done so?

Mr. WIGFALL. Thank you for that word. I will speak to that in a moment. I want to finish what I was saying to the Senator from Ohio. I say that, in reference to Mr. Calhoun, I have not read his speech lately, nor his bill or report; but I know the general character of them. It was to give to the States the lands, and throw on them the expense of surveying those lands, and recurring to the Federal Government a certain percentage of the gross or net profits, I care not which. As to the vast eminent domain in the States, where I ought to be, it was to break up the patronage of the Government; and I wish the Senator had read also another paragraph, I think from that same speech, but I could not find it, though I looked for it, whilst he was speaking. It was that the Government should have no more to do with the bill was to cut the throat of demagogism. He said that the public lands had become a means of corrupting not only the Government but the people, and that men who had no other merit were presenting themselves as candidates for the Presidency; indirectly bribing the people before the public, by offering to donate these lands to pauperism. I do not pretend to quote the language.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President—

Mr. WIGFALL. I do not mean it for you, Mr. PUGH. No; but what the Senator refers to, I have never called in question. I have said precisely such a proposition as the Senator from North Carolina has offered. What Mr. Calhoun called demagogism was this: telling the people of the States that the proceeds of the public lands should be divided among them; and I agree that was demagogism. It was to grant to the States a proposition as the Senator from North Carolina has made.

Mr. WIGFALL. Well, sir, now I will go on. The Senator from Minnesota has drawn my attention to foreigners. I did not hear him distinctly, but I heard the word "foreigners." He has drawn my attention to this matter of foreigners.

Mr. WILKINSON. The question I proposed was, whether Texas had not given away lands to foreigners, not only to her own citizens, but to foreigners?

Mr. WIGFALL. Yes, sir; and she had a right to do it.

Mr. WILKINSON. Exactly.

Mr. WIGFALL. I have a right to do with my own land as I please for my own good, and to put it in a hell, if I choose; I have a right to squander it; I have a right to give it to missionary societies, or for publishing the Bible, or do whatever I please with that which is my own. But the Senator from Minnesota seems not to be able to draw the distinction between the State of Texas, a political community, that conquered the land that she is giving away, who can deal with her own as she sees fit—can she not draw the distinction between a State government in which the sovereignty vests, and a miserable one-horse concern here in Washington, that is administering a few, not granted, but delegated powers, that the States have intrusted it to administer, under the general impression of what they honestly administer the trust. [Laughter.] Why, sir, this is a monstrous matter of immorality, as well as schism in political knowledge.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1st Session.

Mr. WILKINSON. My question was directed to this point. I understood the Senator to attack the whole system as giving away lands to paupers. That was the idea.

Mr. WIGFALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILKINSON. Not on the legal question. Mr. WIGFALL. Well, I say Texas has a right to indulge her vanity. [Laughter.] She has not done just exactly what you suppose; but if she had, she had a right to do with her own what she saw fit. If she chose to dispense her means in charity, she had a right to do it.

Mr. WILKINSON. I will ask the Senator another question. Was that policy a good one in Texas? Has it worked well for the State?

Mr. WIGFALL. I have discussed that question often in Texas; and having the Senator from Ohio, who is worthy of any gentleman's steel, immediately in my mind's eye, I prefer to go on with him. That giving the public lands not only to the inhabitants of the purlieus of London and the Five Points, but to the pauperism of all continental Europe. The Senator from Minnesota delivered a eulogy on foreigners. He must have been an old Deceit, and fought the Know Nothings. I do not know. If he was, he is on the wrong side of the Chamber. But I should judge, from the eulogies he delivered in reference to the foreigners who had carried our flag—for he speaks with a degree of enthusiasm with which I have never seen a man speak of a foreigner—that he was writing upon Democracy—that he was with us then. I do not know whether the Senator was one of us then, or not. He does not answer.

Mr. WILKINSON. I can say that I was not; and I am very sorry for it.

Mr. WIGFALL. I think the foreign population, then, would be very much surprised to hear your eulogies, and not thank you much for them. As to foreigners—

Mr. PUGH. I dislike to interrupt the Senator; but I hope he will allow me to ask a question, as he is devoting himself to me, he says.

Mr. WIGFALL. Certainly.

Mr. PUGH. I think the Senator has not answered the Senator from Minnesota fairly. Perhaps I am not proper judge. I understand the Senator—waiting the question of the right of the Federal Government to dispose of the lands—to say that a grant of land to actual settlers by those who have the right to grant them is a premium to pauperism. Now I ask the question, has Texas given a premium to pauperism? Has the policy of Texas and other States, for many of the States adopted it—in point of fact and experience had any such result as the Senator supposes? If it has not, then the Senator is in error, and I tell him it is in error. What he calls paupers will be on the other side of the Chamber, and go there. As I said before, the whole Army of the United States could not drive the people of whom he speaks on to the public domain. They will not go. I call his attention to the fact that he has said that part of his argument is concerned, it is answered by the experience of only of Texas, but of Tennessee and other States.

Mr. WIGFALL. The clock admonishes me that I had as well go on. [Laughter.] For the satisfaction of the two Senators, I will answer the Senator though I do not desire to. I understand Texas has never pursued the policy contemplated by the bill. Those who had conquered the territory and held it by the best of all titles—the title of the sword—made a large land donation to themselves —that is, to those who were in Texas at the date of the declaration of independence. Again they made a donation to those who had fought at San Jacinto. Subsequently, when they needed soldiers, they offered lands to those who would move into the Republic. Some colony contracts were made during the days of the Republic. Since annexation, we have made no donations of land. It has been sold at a fair price; and we have, as a consequence, a population who, having paid for their freeholds, feel like free men. Nor have we suffered from the population obtained under our colony contracts. They have proved to be worthy and industrious citizens; but they were not introduced by New England emigrant aid companies. A policy that is good for a new State engaged in war and needing men, may be bad when the circumstances change. But this is not a question of policy; it is a question of power. I deny the power of this Government to give away the public domain.

This Federal Government, having certain political powers, can, of course, exercise them, but no others; and I propose to go on, and discuss these matters, somewhat after the manner of the Senator from Ohio, and follow his up to the hilt. The Senator from Minnesota brought my attention particularly to this matter of foreigners, and I will say to him, in a few words, that I have as little prejudice against foreigners as anybody. I think, nevertheless, that this Government has a positive power for foreigners, and especially has this Federal Government not the right to put in a Territory, that now belongs to the States, a parcel of men who can form a State constitution before there is a citizen there residing. The Senator from Minnesota objects to the present bill because it has not a qualification of that sort.

His proposition is to give to every foreigner who will come here before he is naturalized, one hundred and sixty acres of land; and these people are, according to the views of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Nicholson], "Native-born Americans." The Constitution, and we may have ninety-three thousand inhabitants in one of the Territories with a State constitution and not a citizen of the United States there. Why, sir, they may form State constitutions, but they cannot be represented. On any objection to their proposition in that there is not a single one of that population who could represent them in the Senate of the United States. They might have to import a citizen, native or naturalized, in order to represent them here. When a man comes from Europe to this country to measure his is in quest, of citizenship; because he wishes to be entitled to that which he can gain by the sweat of his brow; because he wants light taxes; because he wants open jury trials, and to be faced by his accuser, to get rid of all these protections; because he wants a State constitution, and he is enjoying civil liberty in this country—when such a man comes here, and has remained here for five years, and has his certificate of naturalization in his pocket, I am disposed to allow him to vote, and I am disposed to allow him to hold any office except those which the Constitution of the United States prohibits him from holding. That is my view. The special and particular friend of the foreigners, sitting over on the other side, from Minnesota, would deprive these men of these rights, but he would give each one of them one hundred and sixty acres of land.

Mr. WILKINSON. I wish the Senator would repeat that last remark.

Mr. WIGFALL. I do not think I could. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILKINSON. I understood him to say that he would deprive the foreigner of the right of voting.

Mr. WIGFALL. I understood you to say you had been a Know Nothing, or one of the Americans, as they are called.

Mr. WILKINSON. You understood me very erroneously. I never was a Know Nothing.

Mr. WIGFALL. I understood you to say so. You are singularly unhappy in making yourself understood.

Mr. WILKINSON. You asked me if I had been a Democrat, and I said no. I think the Senator himself is a Democrat.

Mr. WIGFALL. It may be so. [Laughter.] Mr. President, these foreigners are to be brought in here, and to be settled upon these lands. I understand all that. This is not a party question, of course, nor is the Republican do not intend to appeal to the German population, they do not intend to appeal to the Irish; they do not intend to appeal to the men that they have been persecuting and making war on, and say, "we were your friends, and would have given you one hundred and sixty acres, but these Democrats would not vote for it!" Oh, no; no party purpose in this, no electioneering! I understand that very well. Why, sir, it is an electioneering trick; and I am sorry that any gentleman on this side of the Senate should have been drawn into it, or been caught by it. Naturalized citizens are not to be caught with such chaff. I am willing, when a man from a foreign nation comes here and becomes a citizen, to treat him as a citizen; but I am not willing to give away the public domain to men who do not owe allegiance to this Government, to men who have not sacrificed their services to our Governments. I am not willing to pass a bill which provides for one class of society, and for one alone.

Mr. PUGH. Does the Senator suppose that any person can get land under this bill without being naturalized? Is not every proposition it is expressed. He is never to have a patent or title until he has been naturalized. It is so in both bills—the House bill and the Senate bill.

Mr. WIGFALL. Are both bills the same?

Mr. PUGH. Both bills are the same.

Mr. WIGFALL. Then I misunderstand the bill from the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota, because he discussed it with that view, and objected to the Senate bill because he said that it did not give the land to foreigners.

Mr. PUGH. Both bills provide that those who are now here, although not citizens, may make a declaration of intention, and finally acquire a title. I agree with the Senator from Minnesota that that is an unnecessary distinction, and I propose to agree to the House bill in that regard, and provide that citizens make a declaration under the naturalization law of his intention to become a citizen may settle; but he never gets a title until he is a citizen. He may stay there fifty years, but never can get a patent or any right of ownership until he becomes a citizen. Therefore, it is not given land to foreigners. It is not given to them until they become citizens.

Mr. WIGFALL. On this subject the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Nicholson] and the Senator from Ohio took the same view of the duty of the Government. They said it was to give it power for two purposes: one as a landholder, and the other for filling up and admitting new States. I have simply to say that it is to me a new view of the Constitution, and more extraordinary than the views of John Taylor of Caroline. I read with much instruction and pleasure his New Views of the Constitution once; but the new views that have been given here, I have not received with quite as much. The Senator from Tennessee adds that we may give away the lands which have been acquired since the time of the Constitution, and that we are not bound to use them as a Federal fund. He says the Dred Scott case decides that. I am not going to discuss the Dred Scott case.

The Constitution says that the Congress of the United States shall have the power "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." Now the Senator from Tennessee says that that is very good constitutional law so far as concerns the Territory which was owned by the Government at the time the Constitution was adopted; but he says it cannot apply to any territory acquired afterwards. I ask him if it can apply to any property acquired afterwards; and that I should like to know what he calls property? Here is the Constitution of the United States; that says Congress shall have power "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." He says that that applies to the territory which belonged to the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, but does not apply to any territory acquired subsequently. If, then, it does not apply to any property. Hence the Congress of the United States may give away, not only the public lands acquired afterwards, but the public money and this Capitol under which this was acquired after the Constitution was ratified; and for that he quotes the Dred Scott decision. I think that those judges "had better look to it." If they are to be quoted for doctrine of that sort, they will be brought into disrepute. As Mrs. Doll Toss-sheet said, when ancient Pistol was introduced to her as captain: "a captain! these villainous will make the word 'captain' as odious as the word 'occupy,' which was an excellent good word before it was ill-used; therefore, captains had need to look to it." If the Supreme Court is to be quoted here for doctrine of that sort, say these Federal judges had better look to it, because there is a palpable absurdity on the face of the proposition, which must stagger every man who looks to it. The Constitution says:

"Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

Now, says the Senator from Tennessee, "Congress having the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," he says that means belonging now, at the time of the ratification of the Constitution, and therefore all the territory which then belonged to the United States is a Federal fund, and cannot be given away; but the territory acquired afterwards is not Federal; it is really a fund, and may be given away. If this is true as to the "territory," I say it is also true as to the "other property;" and every dollar in money or property, every fort, magazine, navy-yard, dock-yard, or other public building, that has been acquired, and all have been acquired by the latter clause, since the Constitution was adopted—may be given away by the Federal Government; it is not Federal property. This clause applies only to that which was owned by the States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. That sort of argument, it seems to me, will not do; and if the homestead bill cannot be defended on other grounds, it must be abandoned.

The homestead bill is defended on many grounds. The Senator from Ohio puts it on constitutional grounds; and the only objection I have to his argument—which is a very good one—is, that it does not fit the case. He admits that the Government cannot give away lands; and if he could only persuade me that those alternate sections would increase the price of the other alternate sections, I could have no ground for my objection; but I cannot comprehend how it is that, whilst the country is divided up into quarter sections, and every man has a right to go and settle on every alternate quarter section he sees fit, any one is ever going to buy one.

I believe it will result not only in cutting off that source of revenue from the Government, but that it will also result in leaving, as it must, the expense of the land office, the cost of the land purchases upon the Government, and this will end to what? Increased tariff taxation; and for that I have no desire.

The Senator from Ohio has denounced the soldiers' bounty land bill. I am willing to join him in the denunciation. He says it was not according to the contract; that these men who had enlisted or volunteered, had taken a consideration, and that when that was paid, there was an end of the contract. I think so.

Mr. PUGH. There were some cases of contract, and I excepted those from that statement. I referred to such acts as that of 1855, which proposed to give responsibility to the public lands, which were no part of the contract of enlistment. Those were the cases.

Mr. WIGFALL. Precisely.

Mr. PUGH. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that, in 1847, with a view to encourage enlistments in the regular Army during a time of war, there was a promise given to those who enlisted that they should have a bounty in land. That I hold to be a contract, although I think it was an injurious system. It was a debt; but the other case—the old soldiers' bill of 1855—I say was a mere plundering of the public Treasury.

Mr. WIGFALL. I did not say that the Senator from Ohio. I understood him distinctly—and I suppose had so explained it—that these land donations were objectionable because they gave additional compensation after the service had been performed. But, sir, they have been passed, and the law now stands; there have been soldiers in the hands of others, those who purchased them; and they are in the hands also of some who have not sold. I say that this bill, if it passes, does this wrong: it violates a contract that is now subsisting. It is not necessary for the Government to have given land to those disbanded soldiers for their services; they had been paid, and there was an end of the matter; but as the Government has given them land, and as, on the faith of that donation, persons have purchased, I care not if it is a contract, and why then, when the Government has purchased for a valuable consideration; and now, to give away the public domain to anybody who will settle upon it, is a breach of the contract between the Government and those purchasers who bought upon the faith of the Government that they would not get something of value. Of course, no man will buy one of these warrants when he can go and settle upon one hundred and sixty acres for nothing. It does this further wrong: you talk of the poor; here is the widow or orphan of the soldier who was entitled to this land warrant, and the law now says that he must wait until the Government comes and asks the poor pittance of the land warrant which the Government has given for her husband's services, she gets it, and what is it worth? To whom can she sell it? The public domain is to be all distributed among those who cannot get anything of value. It is a wrong to the widow and orphan therefore.

Mr. PUGH. Does the Senator suppose this bill prevents the location of land warrants?

Mr. WIGFALL. No, sir; I do not suppose

Mr. PUGH. They can locate it just exactly as much as before. We give what we promised—the right to locate so many acres.

Mr. WIGFALL. You give a widow a land warrant because her husband died in battle; she is entitled to move there, and she cannot move there, and then you say to her, "Go and settle on the land." Will anybody buy her warrant? It is mockery of the living; it is a fraud on the dead. It is an outrage on the widows and orphans with whom this Government has made, whether rightfully or not, a contract; and it has no right to violate it. We have given them these warrants for services, and we have no right now to come in and say this donation shall be utterly valueless, by the declaration that anybody can go and settle on the land for nothing.

Mr. PUGH. I do not think the Senator should hold that a bill to reduce the price of the public land—such as the graduation act—was a violation of the contract.

Mr. WIGFALL. I would vote against it if it were so, but we are not considering that now. This Government has done hundreds of things that I am opposed to. I am not committed to the defunding of the Government. It is more, sir—it is a fraud on the tax payers; it is cutting off an important source of the revenue of this country, thus throwing on us the necessity of increasing our taxes. It is throwing upon the Government of discord into the country. These lands having been acquired by the Federal Government, either by donation at the time of its inauguration, or since by purchase or conquest; and being a Federal fund, I think this Government has no right to utterly and wholly overlook its character as a trustee for the States to give them away; yet may by donation, if it does not diminish the value of the land, encourage settlement; but, so far as I am concerned, I have no particular desire to settle these lands. The Senator says that he does not see that our interests are involved in settling up that country. Why? Are we not strong enough? When the thirteen colonies first confederated together and then established this Government, the time was when it was good policy to induce settlements; when it was good policy to acquire Florida; when it was good policy to open the mouths of the Mississippi. These things were good policy then, and other acquisitions might have been good policy. I believe it would be good policy to acquire Cuba; but why this haste, this indecent haste? The Senator from Ohio said, in the portion of his speech, that he had better "hasten slowly." I think that old Horatian maxim he quoted, festina lente, is the wisest thing that has ever been written, or could ever be acted upon.

Now, as to this other grave, sentimental sentiment that he has quoted, as he said, from some philosopher, of making two blades of grass grow where one grew before, I will only say that this philosopher figures in Gulliver's Travels, according to my recollection. His philosopher in Gulliver said that the man who could make two blades of grass where one grew before was only wiser and better than the politicians. That was all he said. There was nothing about land donations in it.

The Senator from Minnesota, who made a squawking, unvergent speech yesterday, called the attention of the Senate solemnly to this example set by two Governments—Peru and Colombia. Now, sir, I have heard a great deal of Peru. The Persian Government is an old one. I believe it began about five hundred years before Christ; and I believe Mr. Xenophon may have read something or other about it once. The laws of the Persians and the Medes together were, I am told, never changed or to be changed. Its territories have somewhat, by the interposition of Russia, I believe, been changed. But it is a most extraordinary thing that the Persian Government should be held up to the American Senate as an example worthy to be followed—an effete, worn-out Government, twenty-five hundred years old, with an Asiatic population, a despotism from the time it was first inaugurated to the present day. The Senator from Minnesota says that the Persian people and the American Senate as worthy of being followed.

The Senator also alluded to Colombia. Well, sir, I believe that country is not on the map. There is no such country as Colombia. It cannot be found on any map, and is introduced as an example for a map, and got the last one, and looked for it there, but could not find it; and I have not had time since to look it up. That country, if I recollect aright, was once somewhere or other in South America, but I do not know where. I do not think it is the aid of an Irish regiment he kept his men among the Indians for a while. He died, and the day after he died—or maybe the year after—the Government died also; and the wisdom and the policy of this Government, that now lives and is not to be found even upon a school atlas, is brought up here as an example to be followed by the American Senate! I judge that Senator prepared his speech elaborately—for it was written out—and if he could find but two Governments who had acted on this "land to the landless" and "bounty to the soldier" system, he would have Peru and the other Colombia, I think the precedents are wanting. Those are not such as I would follow, at least.

Mr. President, I have touched upon some of the prominent points of the Senator from Ohio's argument, and I will not detain the Senate longer. It is useless to talk about this as a sectional question. It is a known fact, in the first place, that the two parties in this country differ from each other as to their construction of the Constitution of the United States. The Democratic party professes to attach to it a strict construction, and that man who votes, whether myself or anybody else, against a strict, legitimate, and fair construction of the Constitution, is no Democrat. I am not disposed to read anybody out of the party; I make no charge of any wrongs against any one. If I should unfortunately advocate, or even introduce a measure here, and it is shown that it is not a measure that we, the Congress of the United States, have a right to pass, I will abandon it.

There is a sectional question, what is to be the effect of this bill? Do gentlemen intend to hasten the catastrophe? Years ago the suggestion of altering the Constitution by a vote of States was made. As long as the States were about equally balanced, and there was no danger of altering the Constitution and destroying the institution, the civilization, and the property of one section, this excitement merely was smoldering. It has now burst out and is burning fiercely; and yet a policy is introduced here by which, with the aid of emigrant aid societies from Massachusetts—and they are ready to incorporate them at any time—an immense influx of European immigrants can be drawn into the northwestern Territories, and new States admitted;—then comes the proposition to get the Constitution—the abolition slavery in the States. I have spoken of that already, in reply to what was said by the Senator from Tennessee, and I have stated that I am not disposed, at least, to hasten that thing. Southern men take this view; they look upon it in this way, but it is clear that there is a determination to take just exactly such means as will fill up, with a free-soil population, these Territories, and make new States so rapidly that, under the forms of law, we can be defeated.

Now, if the professions of unionism and devotion to this country be sincere on the other side of the Senate Chamber, I think they should at least pause in this matter. Who do you want to provide for? Why offer these lands? Why not give them to the States, and let them do as they please? Why not leave the lands to the States, and let them be dealt with hereafter as the emergency may arise? I am perfectly willing to cut off the patronage of this Government. I am willing to give the lands to the States. Let them deal with them as they please; say any percentage whatever to get out of the question and keep it out of the presidential canvass and cause it to cease to be a sectional question.

But I am not willing to pass a bill here which excludes every slaveholder from moving into a Territory; because no man who owns slaves is going to move on one hundred and sixty acres. We have no pauper population at the South, and I thank God for it. Those who do not own slaves, I land, or are respectable, industrious mechanics, attached to their homes and the institutions of their particular section. They are not going to move off. The only effect of the bill is to fill that country with paupers. We are under no obligation to provide for your paupers. We are under no obligation to provide for the pauperism of Europe. We are under no obligation whatever to the new States composed of such population, and I am utterly opposed to it; and I believe that the effect of this thing will be to fill up that Territory with a prejudiced, sectional, fanatical population, that will send member after member to this body to agitate, agitate, agitate, and keep up the sectional question, until you put the feather upon the camel's back.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Wilson] I see is considering what I am saying; he has no affection for foreigners, nor has his State. There is a provision for foreigners who are not naturalized. In his State, an American citizen is not permitted to vote, if he is of foreign birth, until he has resided two years after he has become a citizen. The whole object of this thing is sectionalism. It is to fill the Territory. Mr. Wilson has said, in 1844 I believe, passing resolutions and sent them here, urging the alteration of the Constitution, and depriving us of our three fifths representation, which he knew perfectly well, and everybody knows, never can be altered. He continued the agitation, and came on with it; she has organized a society to fill up Kansas with a free-soil population. Having kept that up until Kansas has ceased to bleed or freedom to shriek, now comes in this homestead bill, and this is to be passed; and I tell you, when it is passed, it will be the same to me as if it were passed in your mind that you dream not of.

Southern men may vote for it, and suppose they can go home and defend themselves. Possibly so. I cannot vote for it; but I intend to fight it in every manner, shape, and form in which it can be prevented. I will resist it, I will oppose it, I will move to amend it; and I trust in God, if all these things shall fail, the President of the United States at last will have the nerve to exercise his veto upon a measure that seems to me so fraught with evil.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 4, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, Mr. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. STOCKTON. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

NEW JERSEY RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. ADRIN, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions from the Legislature of the State of New Jersey; which were laid on the table, as follows:

1. Relative to the removal of obstructions in the river Delaware.
2. Relative to the public lands.
3. Concerning the duties on imported merchandise.
4. For the improvement of navigable waters on the Atlantic coast.
5. Concerning the establishment of a national foundry in the State of New Jersey.

R. B. RICHARDS.

Mr. COOPER, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution for the compensation of Rev. R. R. Richards, late chaplain of the United States penitentiary, for his salary up to the 30th June, 1857; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

KATE D. TAYLOR.

On motion of Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky, a bill (S. No. 250) for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brevet Captain Oliver H. P. Taylor, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CODIFICATION OF THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. JOIN COCHRANE, I will state that the bill of the House (No. 31) for the codification of the revenue laws was made the special order for to-day, and would probably come up next in order after the bill now pending, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, has been disposed of. Owing, however, to the number of amendments proposed by merchants and others from New York and elsewhere, it will be necessary to postpone this bill further. I ask that the House will postpone it until the second Tuesday in May next, when it may probably be taken up and disposed of.

No objection being made, the bill was accordingly postponed.

STEWART M'GOWAN.

On motion of Mr. SIMMS, of the bill (S. No. 219) for the relief of Stewart McGowan, was, by unanimous consent, taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. STANTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report, from the Committee on Military Affairs, a bill for the support of the Military Academy, with the Senate amendments, and to have it made a special order in the Congressional Calendar. The Committee on Military Affairs unanimously recommend that the first amendment of the Senate, in relation to a small appropriation for West Point, be concurred in. I am instructed by a bare majority of the committee to recommend a non-concurrence in the Senate amendment in relation to the Texas regiment. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made a special order for Tuesday next.

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the gentleman from Vermont will withdraw his objection. It is a matter of importance to the people on the frontier, that they should know whether they are to have the support of the Federal Government or not. I will say further, that, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I should certainly have voted in favor of this amendment of the Senate if the President of the United States or the Secretary of War had, in their communications to this House, said that they considered such a force necessary. In response to the resolution of this House, passed upon my motion calling for information as to what was necessary to protect the people of Texas, I expected to find a distinct avowal from the Executive that we did or did not want volunteers. But, on looking over the report, I find that the Secretary of War and the President of the United States have studiously avoided any expression of opinion upon the subject. In a matter of this kind, there is necessarily to take a delicate responsibility. It is said by the Governor that the present force is not adequate. The Executive replies by sending copies of orders which move more regular force to the frontier. Texas says this kind of force will not do. The Executive should decide this last necessity to take a delicate responsibility is needed, I am for the appropriation; but I want the unequivocal answer of the Executive, who can best judge of the requisite force. To interpose aid to Texas is unquestionably a duty of Government; but to raise a regiment of volunteers without the call of either the President or Secretary of War, who will have their direction and command, would seem to me a dangerous precedent for this department of Government. An Executive is presumed to know best the amount of force required to execute the laws, and that department must take the responsibility to distinctly decide the matter.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope there will be no objection to this bill being made the special order.

Mr. STANTON. It is certainly material, as the gentleman from Vermont will agree, that the people of Texas should know where the House is to pass this amendment or not. For myself, I am opposed to the amendment; but I think it is due to right and justice, due to fair play, that the House should act upon the amendment, and act promptly.

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill will then be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that the bill has been made the special order of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Now, I submit that it is in order to move that this bill—being an appropriation bill—shall be made the special order in committee, and that it may be decided by a majority vote. I understand that to be the effect of one of our new rules which we have adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the gentleman is correct, if the bill has been received. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Vermont to object to the reception of the bill, or to its being made a special order?

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the bill being received and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, if it is not made a special order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The rules of the House require that every bill making an appropriation shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole House. I suppose, of course, therefore, this bill, if received, must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. It must go there, of course. Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; well; but I object to its being made the special order.

Mr. STANTON. I know of no reason why it is not in order to move that it be made a special order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I made the same motion the other day, and a single objection prevented its being put to the House. I wish merely that we shall proceed according to the rules. I hope it may be so, but I do not understand that the Senate amendments to an appropriation bill may be made a special order by a majority vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct that the rule having reference to the subject be read.

The Clerk read the rule, as follows:

"The House may, at any time, by a vote of a majority of the members present, make any of the general appropriation bills a special order."

Mr. REAGAN. If gentlemen knew that the people on the frontier of Texas were daily being murdered, and that their property was daily being stolen, I think they would consent to let action be taken in the House upon this subject. Defeat the bill if you wish, but let the people of Texas know whether they are to have any hope of protection to their lives and property from the Federal Government or not.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose—and in this I agree with the gentleman from Ohio—who is in this debate of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—that the House cannot by a majority vote make a bill a special order as a general proposition. But a special rule was adopted, as I understand, at the instance of the gentleman from Ohio himself, making it in order to move that an appropriation bill be made a special order in committee, which motion may be carried by a majority vote.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair so decides.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is not an appropriation bill. The question is on a Senate amendment, which has nothing to do with the original bill at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire that the gentleman shall understand me. The final action of the House upon the bill itself depends upon the amendment; because, if the amendment of the Senate is not acted on, the bill itself is lost. The purpose for which the rule was adopted was, that the appropriation bills should be acted upon as soon as possible; and this amendment of the Senate, being now attached to the bill, becomes a part of it, so far as the purpose of the rule is concerned, because, unless the amendment is acted on, the bill cannot be passed. Hence the same reason, the same propriety, and the same necessity which should make an appropriation bill a special order, apply with equal force to making Senate amendments to an appropriation bill also a special order.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is well to settle this matter right, and we might as well have a vote upon it. The House has passed a bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy appropriating two, three, or four hundred thousand dollars. The Senate has placed upon it a proposition which has no connection at all with the Military Academy, appropriating over a million dollars for a regiment down in Texas. Now, I do not know whether a regiment is needed there or not. I do not know whether the regular troops are there or not. They may be there, acting for the protection of the people on the frontier, and there may be need of this regiment.

Mr. HOUSTON. That will all be considered when we come to discuss the Senate amendment in committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Just wait a minute, and I will conclude what I have to say. The Senate has tumbled this bill down with this amendment, and I say that it is better that it should not be acted on at all, and that another bill should be reported and passed for the support of the Military Academy, than that the whole business of the House should be blocked up and loaded down by such amendments upon the part of the Senate. If this practice is to be established, the Senate's amendments to appropriation bills, as well as the bills themselves, are to be made special orders, you put the whole business of the House under the control of the Senate. They may put whatever measures they choose upon our bills, and force us to consider them as special orders. I put to gentlemen on the other side of the House, suppose the Senate had placed upon the bill which we passed the other day for the support of the Army, a bill to establish a number of Territories, or for anything else, having no connection at all with the subject-matter of the bill itself: a majority of the House, if this practice be adopted, may make the amendment of the Senate a special order; and thus all the business of the House may be blocked up and controlled by the Senate. I say it is not right, it is not fair, and I insist that the House shall not establish such a practice.

Mr. REAGAN. Then the people of Texas are to be left the satisfaction of knowing that they are to be robbed and murdered, in accordance with the rules of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BRANCH. I rise to a question in order. I submit that the Chair may decide this question, and decide it precisely in accordance with what was the understanding of the House in the adoption of the rule. No debate is in order, unless some gentleman appeals from the decision of the Chair.

THE SPEAKER. It is the opinion of the Chair that he cannot with any propriety discriminate in reference to any particular section or amendment to a bill. The character of the bill itself is what should be ascertained, and the Chair thinks a motion to make this bill a special order is in order under an express rule of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. The question before the House is, whether this is to be made a special order; and that question is debatable.

THE SPEAKER. The question of priority of business is not debatable.

Mr. MAYNARD. How does this question come before the House?

THE SPEAKER. It came before the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call for the regular order of business.

THE SPEAKER. When this was introduced there was no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I appeal to the gentleman from Ohio not to interpose objection. I withdrew my objection solely on the ground that this should not be a special order.

Mr. SHERMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 77, nays 84; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Alden, Thomas L. Anderson, Anshutz, Bartholomew, Baker, Bunker, Bushnell, Butler, Butlerfield, Carey, Carter, Case, Coffey, Crawford, Dawes, Deland, Durell, Dunn, Edgerton, Edwards, Eliot, Ely, Etheridge, Fernald, Gilmer, Gooch, Graham, Grover, Hall, Heinicke, Bickham, Howard, Buschman, Junkin, Kenyon, Klingner, H. W. Leach, Lee, Longueville, Lovejoy, McKim, Mr. K. M. Mendenhall, Johnson, T. Moore, Mosher, Morrill, Nixon, Olin, Palmer, Ferry, Pettit, Porter, Potter, Pott, Pryor, Rice, Reilly, Seranion, Sherman, Spaulding, Spenser, Stevens, William Stewart, Stokes, Stratton, Thayer, Thayer, Thompson, Train, Trimble, Vandever, Van Wyck, Verree, Wadsworth, Watson, Caldwell, C. Washburn, Edith C. Washburn, Grant Washburn, Wells, Wilson, Windom, and Woodruff—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Aldrich, Atley, William C. Anderson, Armstrong, Babbalanza, Bayless, Bullard, Burdette, Butterfield, Carey, Carter, Case, Coffey, Crawford, Dawes, Deland, Durell, Dunn, Edgerton, Edwards, Eliot, Ely, Etheridge, Fernald, Gilmer, Gooch, Graham, Grover, Hall, Heinicke, Bickham, Howard, Buschman, Junkin, Kenyon, Klingner, H. W. Leach, Lee, Longueville, Lovejoy, McKim, Mr. K. M. Mendenhall, Johnson, T. Moore, Mosher, Morrill, Nixon, Olin, Palmer, Ferry, Pettit, Porter, Potter, Pott, Pryor, Rice, Reilly, Seranion, Sherman, Spaulding, Spenser, Stevens, William Stewart, Stokes, Stratton, Thayer, Thayer, Thompson, Train, Trimble, Vandever, Van Wyck, Verree, Wadsworth, Watson, Caldwell, C. Washburn, Edith C. Washburn, Grant Washburn, Wells, Wilson, Windom, and Woodruff—84.

So the House refused to make the bill a special order.

During the vote,

Mr. FERRY stated that he had paired with Mr. MACLAY.

Mr. GARTRELL stated that he had been detained at home by illness for several days, and had been paired with Mr. LAYNE. The pair still continued.

Mr. YANCE stated that his colleague, Mr. LEACH, was compelled to leave the city on important business.

Mr. STRATTON stated that Mr. WHITELEY was paired with Mr. McPHERSON.

Mr. BRANCH stated that his colleague, Mr. REYER, was detained at his room by illness.

Mr. FLORENCE, not being within the bar when his name was called, asked leave to vote.

Objection was made.

Mr. FLORENCE stated that he would have voted in the affirmative.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. HICKS, its Chief Clerk, informing the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (No. 41) concerning appeals and writs or error;

An act (No. 5) to supply vacancies in certain offices;

An act (No. 340) to carry into effect a convention between the United States and the Republic of Paraguay.

Also, that the President of the United States had informed the Senate that he had approved and signed an act (S. No. 347) for the relief of Mary E. Casor.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

THE SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 7) to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States, and other purposes. The first section of the bill is in the act of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah; on which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. KITT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KITT addressed the House in opposition to the bill. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. GOOCH. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which I desire to indicate, and I ask that it may be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Sec. 1. Be it enacted, That every person who shall, in the Territory of Utah, be guilty of adultery, shall be punished by imprisonment not more than three years, or by fine not more than five hundred dollars, and when the crime is committed by a married woman and the man who is married, the man shall be deemed guilty of adultery, and be liable to the same punishment.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, That any person who has a former husband or wife living, shall in said Territory marry any other person or persons, or shall in said Territory continue to cohabit with such person or persons, or wife, he or she shall be deemed guilty of the crime of polygamy, and shall be punished by imprisonment not more than five years, or by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars.

Sec. 3. Be it further enacted, That if any man or woman not being lawfully married to another shall in said Territory lawfully and lawfully associate and cohabit together, or if any man or woman, married or unmarried, shall in said Territory be guilty of open and gross lewdness, exceeding three years, or by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars.

Sec. 4. Be it further enacted, That if any person shall in said Territory commit fornication with any single woman, each of whom shall be at least 16 years of age, and more than one year, or by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts proceeds with his remarks, I wish to make a proposition to the House, which I believe will be concurred in, as there are very many gentlemen who desire to participate in this debate, and who cannot do so because the time will be occupied by such remarks as to be quite limited. My proposition is, that after the gentleman from Massachusetts shall have presented his views at such length, under the rule, as he may choose, no member shall speak more than twenty minutes.

THE SPEAKER. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN objected.

Mr. GOOCH. It seems to be concurred on all sides of the House that polygamy, admitted to exist in the Territory of Utah, is a crime, or, rather, a misdemeanor, which is prohibited by law, and is punished by law. It is, sir, an evil which corrupts the morals of the community, pollutes the blood, and confounds all title to property.

Now, there are before this House some four methods, proposed for reaching and providing a remedy for this evil. The first method is reported from the Committee on the Judiciary. The amendment which I have submitted does not differ in its general principles from the bill of the committee, but only in its details; and so far as its applicability to Utah is concerned, it differs in no important particular from the bill. I propose to make more effectually, by specific definition and detail, the object sought by the committee. The amendment I have proposed does not apply to any Territory except the Territory of Utah; and as I go on I will point out to the House why I have made this limitation in my amendment.

Mr. COX. I did not distinctly hear the amendment of the gentleman read; and I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two explanatory of it. I do not understand whether your amendment reaches the crime of adultery committed in the Territory of Kansas, where, if I understand one hundred and twenty divorces were granted in one year on account of the practice of free-love principles. I want also to know whether your amendment will cover the Indians in the Territories of the United States, who now, in Minnesota and other Territories, are living in bigamy and polygamy?

Mr. GOOCH. If the gentleman from Ohio had listened to me, instead of interrogating me, he would already have understood that my amendment reaches only to the Territory of Utah.

Mr. COX. I wanted an explanation of it.

Mr. GOOCH. The first proposition before the House is the bill of the Judiciary Committee. I agree with the general provisions of that bill. I believe that this Government has the power, and that it is its duty, to use that power, to enact laws making polygamy a crime in the Territory of Utah, and provide an adequate punishment for their infraction. And, sir, I was not a little surprised when my colleague [Mr. THAYER] yesterday made use of the following language:

"Now there seems, as I said before, to be a feeling in this House not to know the enormity of the crime which is accounted for only on the supposition that polygamy never was heard of till to-day. There is a space, sir, of morality, or a proxy, or a proxy, or something that seems to import certain results from the exercise of voting, as of voting en masse, against polygamy at all stages." And now, sir, there is most intense and manifest that something that is voted—needed, and does not exist—polygamy in Utah. West of all, it appears that this act of voting would seem to satisfy some consciences, even though this vote should involve the existence of the Territory as a free institution. It would seem to satisfy some consciences—I will not call them stupid, or sluggish, or dead—that they vote against polygamy.

I had supposed that every man knew that there was a deep-seated conviction from one end of the land to the other that polygamy, admitted as it is to exist in the Territory of Utah, should be made a crime by Congress, and punished as such. I had supposed that no political party, that no section of the country, maintained any peculiar views or ideas in reference to this matter; but that by general and common consent it was understood to be the duty of Congress to legislate in reference to this question. And that is the reason why I apprehend this matter is before the House, and that is the reason why gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject have spoken as though they had feeling upon it.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to take the position that Congress has no right to exclude polygamy in the Territories of the United States. Now, I desire to know if he finds power, under the same clause of the Constitution, to exclude slavery from the Territories?

Mr. GOOCH. I had hoped that one question could be introduced into this Hall and discussed without the introduction of the subject of slavery; and I am glad that this side of the House thus far has participated in the discussion of this question upon its merits, without once alluding to the subject of slavery. I am glad that the Republican party is not responsible for that much of the discussion of slavery which has arisen upon this bill.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GOOCH. I decline to yield further for the purpose of giving gentlemen an opportunity of reference to this subject-matter, and in reference to all subject-matters of legislation before this House, I will legislate respecting them upon their merits; and if such legislation makes in favor of the institution of slavery, the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Tennessee will be the ones that make against the institution of slavery, that gentleman and his friends must take the consequences. Sufficient for this discussion is it for us to know, or to believe, that the Constitution of the United States authorizes us to punish polygamy in the Territory of Utah, and that the Republican demands such legislation. The gentleman from Mississippi seems to want to know my peculiar belief in reference to this matter of the power of Congress over slavery in the Territories. He knows where I stand in reference to the institution of slavery, and I know where he stands; and I propose to him, for the purpose of this discussion, that we let that question drop and so far as we participate in this discussion we will not introduce the question of slavery.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. EYENBARGER], who is in favor of this bill, introduced that subject in his remarks on this bill, and it was the burden of his song. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. OLIX], also discussed the subject of every law in respect which he made yesterday. But I believe that the gentleman who has addressed the House for the last two days has referred directly to the question of slavery; and besides, it is involved in the bill.

Thus much in vindication of myself for asking the question, and desiring, in good faith, of knowing it, in the same clause of the Constitution from which he derives the authority of Congress to exclude polygamy from a Territory, he does not also find the authority of Congress to exclude slavery in the Territories? So far as I am concerned, I see no difference between the question of crime in a Territory and excluding property from a Territory. But I desire to know what position the gentleman occupies upon that question.

Mr. GOOCH. In reference to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. EYENBARGER], and those associated with me, we are in favor of the bill. He discusses the questions which come before this House as he chooses. He does not belong to my political party, nor to my section of the country. He comes from the same section of the country to which the gentleman from Mississippi belongs. He comes from a slaveholding community, and he felt it his duty to introduce the subject of slavery into his discussion of this question.

But, sir, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLIX] introduced it only in reply to an interrogatory put to him by that side of the House; and I am glad that he could not do so without introducing the subject, because the interrogatory of itself referred to it. But I repeat, that thus far, on this side of the House, the question of slavery has not been drawn into this discussion.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then the gentleman from Massachusetts answers my question.

Mr. GOOCH. In reply to the gentleman, I will tell him this: that I do believe that under the Constitution of the United States we have the power to prohibit slavery in the Territories. And when we have that question before the House, I will tell him what source I believe that power to be derived. But it conflicts with my present purpose to go into the discussion of that question at this time. I rose for the purpose of discussing the bill before the House, and not for the purpose of making a speech on the institution of slavery. I am glad that the Republican side of the House will carry out the same policy that it has begun with reference to this question, and discuss it on its merits. If it makes for the institution of slavery, in the decision at which the House may arrive, let slavery have the benefit of it; and if it makes against it, slavery must take the consequences.

Now, I was saying that it seems to be agreed, as a general thing, on both sides of the House, that Congress has power to legislate against the crime or practice of polygamy in the Territories. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] asserts the same thing for that side of the House. Now, the bill of the Judiciary Committee is, it seems to me, a bold and straightforward proposition. It undertakes to control this matter in a straightforward manner, in the Constitution, on the principle that in the organization of a Territory we say to the people there: "You may govern yourselves, but you must do it on this condition: that you shall govern yourselves properly; that you shall exercise the powers which we give to you in a manner as it should be required for the accomplishment of the purposes that should be accomplished by a Government; and when you fail to do that we reserve to ourselves the right to take back the power that we have given to you. And as we reserve the right to take back the whole, we reserve the right to take back any part or portion of it that we please."

I will not discuss the question of this power any further, because it seems to be conceded. I grant that it is an important question for discussion; but it has been discussed, and there has been no very great difference of opinion in regard to it. It has been demonstrated to the House that it has been the practice and policy of the Government, from its foundation, to exercise such sets of power over the Territories; and that, it seems to me, is the only way to use in the discussion of this question. The amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina provides for the appointment of a Council of thirteen men of the Territory, who shall enact the laws that are to govern the people of the Territory. My objection to that is, that I do not believe that the laws thus enacted would be regarded of that force and effect, or would be of that validity, in the Territory, that the legislation of Congress would carry with it in regard to this matter. If I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to be in favor of putting the hands of these thirteen men the whole legislation of the Territory; whereas we propose to legislate only on this subject-matter, on which it is apparent to the country and to the world that legislation is required at our hands.

Now, we come next to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. LEAH], and, sir, I have serious objections to his amendment. The first objection that I state to it, is this: It proposes to divide these people into two sections. Half of them are to be associated with the people of Pike's Peak, and the other half is to be associated with the people of Carson Valley—putting one into the Territory of Jefferson, and the other into the Territory of Nevada. Now, sir, in the first place, it seems to me that there is an insuperable objection to this amendment, from the very geographical position of this people. While with the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois and the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. THAYER], who proposes to repeal the organic act and establish two land districts—one at Carson Valley and the other at Pike's Peak—seem to go on the principle that the Mormons are in the immediate vicinity of my colleague, [Mr. THAYER], who proposes to repeal the organic act and establish two land districts—one at Carson Valley and the other at Pike's Peak—seem to go on the principle that the Mormons are in the immediate vicinity of my colleague, [Mr. THAYER], who proposes to repeal the organic act and establish two land districts—one at Carson Valley and the other at Pike's Peak. We are told, sir, that their legislation is to be the sole legislation; that they are to legislate for the annihilation of polygamy in Utah, and that that will be the legislation of the people of the vicinity.

Let us look a moment at the character and condition of the people at Carson Valley and Pike's Peak. What are they? Organized communities? people who have all the means and appliances and experience necessary to make and enforce laws? By no means. It is known that these people are that, of the people who have recently gone there, a very great proportion went not intending to remain. They are only there temporarily, and intending to return again to their homes. The people at one point are fifteen or twenty miles from the Mormon population, and at the other point ten or twelve days' journey. In the one case, they have to traverse a wilderness and desert, and in the other they have to traverse an unoccupied and unsettled region of mountain and wilderness.

Now, what can be the idea of the man who proposes that this Government shall evade this responsibility, and put it on the people of these two infant settlements to do what my colleague [Mr. THAYER] said yesterday Congress did not even dare to do or propose to do? Is there any probability that these people will be able to do what these miners at Pike's Peak will leave their own business and avocations, and go to work and make laws against polygamy, and then go over to Salt Lake City, a journey of twelve days, for the purpose of enforcing such laws? And that, in the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. THAYER], without even the aid of a territorial government, but through the potency of two land districts. It seems to me that there never was a proposition made which carried on its face its utter futility, more than the proposition to divide these Mormons to the government of these two infant settlements. What is the condition of these people? They themselves need the fostering and protecting hand of the General Government; and yet we propose to give over to them to settle the most difficult question that this Government has ever, perhaps, had thrust upon it.

One word now as to the policy of this Government in relation to the Territories. What has it been?

Mr. THAYER. My colleague asserts that he is unable to show these two infant settlements in Carson Valley and Pike's Peak will be able to govern the Mormon population of Utah; and also, that he is unable to see why we should impose the burden of that government on these two infant settlements. I will answer my colleague that the Delegates from both these proposed Territories of districts assured me that the people of each of them are entirely willing to take this responsibility. They inform me further that the Mormons, in great numbers, are traveling towards Pike's Peak and towards Carson Valley, for the purpose of joining the miners in their works at those two localities.

Mr. GOOCH. I understand very well the condition of these Delegates from these two proposed Territories. They are exceedingly anxious to obtain territory for themselves, and are willing to do anything that may be required for the purpose of securing their organization; but my information from them differs somewhat from that obtained by my colleague. In conversation with one of them this morning, he told me that they did not desire to be associated with the people of the Mormon population. The Delegate from the other Territory told me they were willing to take the Mormons if required. I said to him, "I have no doubt, when you take them, you will let them alone." Now, sir, I understand the position of these Delegates to be just this: they want nothing to do with this Mormon question, but they tell us that if we impose it upon them as a condition of their organization, they will take the Mormons rather than not to have their Territories organized. But, sir, what is it proposed they shall do? Why, just nothing at all.

Mr. HOOPER. The gentleman from the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will remark that the information which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] says he has received from the Delegates from Nevada and Jefferson differs materially from the statements they have made to me. I understand that they are unwilling that the Territory of Utah proper shall be included within their limits. They are willing that a sufficient portion shall be taken from the western portion of the Territory of Utah—say to one hundred and fourteen degrees—to form the Territory of Nevada, and that they are willing to extend on the east to the one hundred and seventh or one hundred and eighth parallels of longitude, for the Territory of Jefferson. I understand that they would unhesitatingly not concur in the proposition made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. THAYER].

Mr. THAYER. If my colleague will allow me, I will say further upon this subject that there need be no impugning of the veracity of these Delegates, for, as I understand it, there are two persons claiming to be Delegates. These are the persons who proposed Territories. I presume, therefore, the difference in the statements made arises from the fact that different statements have been made by different persons claiming to represent the same Territory.

Mr. GOOCH. I do not propose, so far as I am concerned, to impeach the veracity of these Delegates. I admitted that they might have expressed the opinions which my colleague has stated; and I gave the reason why they were willing to accede to such an arrangement. Now, sir, it is not for me to say, that they should be tried and punished for bigamy, that they should be tried and punished for the territorial laws which they may enact, to undertake to eradicate this evil, nor seek to accomplish the same through the novel agency of land districts.

Mr. McCLERNAND. With the permission of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I wish to make one remark. The gentleman objects to the practicability of my scheme, upon the ground that it will not be within the power of the people of Pike's Peak to go to the Salt Lake valley and suppress polygamy. That is the objection to my scheme. If, however, it should be within the power of the people about Pike's Peak to bring the Mormons about Salt Lake down to Denver City, the seat of government for the proposed Territory, the case would be different. In that case, the people of Pike's Peak would not have to go to Salt Lake to punish polygamy, but might bring the polygamists down to Denver City, and punish them there.

Mr. GOOCH. I agree with the gentleman precisely, that if the Mormons will voluntarily go down to Pike's Peak, in order to be tried and punished for bigamy, the people at Pike's Peak may, perhaps, try and punish them. The gentleman's whole theory seems to be predicated—and I admit the suggestion is a valuable one, if the Mormons would only adopt it—upon the idea that the population of Salt Lake City will voluntarily go down to Denver City, or some other point that may be designated in Jefferson Territory, for trial and punishment. I must confess that the gentleman's plan is based upon the assumption that, however guilty these people may be, they are obedient to the most law-abiding people on the face of the earth.

Mr. McCLERNAND. The gentleman certainly cannot be serious in his interpretation of my remarks. He has too much intelligence to take this House as believing that the assumed polygamists in the Salt Lake valley would voluntarily go down to Denver City and submit to punishment.

Mr. GOOCH. The gentleman did not say exactly that; but I was endeavoring to show that his scheme could only be carried out upon that assumption.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I desire to say to the gentleman, that I propose that those who commit crime in the Salt Lake City shall be brought down to Denver City by process of court. Now, Mr.

Speaker, I wish, before I take my seat, to make one further remark. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects to my scheme, upon the ground that it is impracticable. Will he be so kind as to condescend to inform us how and in what respect the scheme proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary is practicable? Will he please inform us how he proposes to indict a polygamist by a process of law? He proposes to indict how he proposes to convict a man of polygamy by a jury composed of polygamists?

Mr. GOOCH. I do not propose precisely at this point to answer the gentleman's interjectory. I can understand very well that the gentleman would like to draw me off from the position which I was stating. I am now discussing the practicability of the scheme proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. What does the gentleman propose to do? He says he proposes to bring the polygamists of Salt Lake City down to Denver City by process of law. Does he suppose the ten thousand miners are going down from Pike's Peak to Salt Lake City, for the purpose of enforcing the warrant, precept, or whatever the officer may have? How many men does he suppose will go down there to enforce the warrant? A journey of twelve or fifteen days' travel through a wilderness country—for the purpose of bringing these Mormons to Denver City for trial? How many men does he suppose it will require to enforce a process of law against a man charged with the crime of polygamy in Salt Lake City? How many men does he suppose it will require to bring them to Denver City? I should like to know that.

Mr. McCLERNAND. Does the gentleman wish an answer?

Mr. GOOCH. Yes, sir, I should like very much to have an answer.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I suppose it would require just the same number—no, not so many as it would require to punish a man in Salt Lake City for polygamy, under the committee bill which the gentleman proposes to pass.

Mr. GOOCH. I accept the answer of the gentleman. Now, sir, it seems to me that nothing further need be said in relation to this question, than to show that the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. McCLERNAND], and that the proposition of my colleague, [Mr. THAYER], are equally absurd. I desire to say that the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is entirely impracticable, and that the proposition of the suppression of the crime of polygamy in this Territory. The geographical position of the three localities is such as upon the very face of the map shows it cannot be done. Why, sir, Salt Lake is further from Pike's Peak than Chicago is from New York. The localities are further apart than North Carolina is from Massachusetts; and yet who would think for a moment of legislating within the State of Massachusetts for the people of North Carolina, even if we had the constitutional power to do it, and especially the people of North Carolina were under a system of church government, banded together for the purposes against which we propose to legislate?

Why, it seems to me that the people of my State would have to go to New York to suppress bigamy, for the purpose of making capture of prisoners in North Carolina and carrying them home to Massachusetts to be tried.

Now, in reference to the bill of the Judiciary Committee, and in answer to the gentleman, I will say that I think one desirable feature of the amendment which I propose to the bill of the Judiciary Committee is that which provides, by a law of this Government, against the commission of this crime in that Territory. Now, sir, what are the facts? I understand that to-day, even among the Mormons of the great Salt Lake area, there are men who have but one wife as there are who have a plurality of wives. I understand further, that this section of the country which is occupied by the Mormons is one which will invite immigration. Again, polygamy is publicly proclaimed to the world as the right of the Mormon Church, being but about eight years old, I believe that the day will come when there will begin to spring up in that community itself, among those who have not indulged in polygamy, and among those who may come in, and among those who may grow there, a feeling of abhorrence to it, and that I believe it is going to require a very great amount of external power to enforce the law within that community. But still further: if that external power be necessary, we all agree that it belongs to somebody to furnish it, and to provide a law against this crime, to punish those who violate it. If it belongs to anybody to legislate this Government, and not to an infant Territory situated at Pike's Peak and at Carson Valley.

I was about speaking of the relation which, in my judgment, a Territory held to this Government, to consider that Government stands in the relation of guardian to all the Territories; that it is the duty of the General Government to provide a government for these Territories; to enact laws for them; and, when they have reached a stage of maturity in which they are capable of instituting certain acts of legislation for themselves, it is good policy—and an experienced legislator would so—to authorize them to act for themselves. When they fail to govern themselves as they should, I believe we should adopt the same policy that a judicious parent pursues with reference to his child. He permits that child to regulate and govern his own conduct so long as he applies wholesome and salutary rules to himself; but when he fails to do that, the parent again resumes the exercise of control over his own offspring.

And what is the position which the Territories hold towards us in another point of view? My colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] spoke of them as colonies, and in that connection alluded to colonies which other countries have held. It was said here the other day that Canada was a Territory of England, and that, if the policy of England continued the same as it is at present, she would continue to be a colony for a hundred or a thousand years to come. If we had any such colonial policy as that, I would agree with my colleague in condemning it. But I do not understand that we have any such colonial policy as that. We do not propose to hold any region of country as a colony, or to retain it in that position. We only propose to give such region aid up to a certain point, and then to give additional assistance in the new government until it shall reach the first stage of manhood, when we will admit it as a State upon an equality with all the other States of the Union.

My colleague spoke of giving sovereignty to a colony. I agree with him that a more absurd idea than that of giving sovereignty upon a colony, or upon a State, or upon any other community, never entered the head of man. The object and purpose of this Government was not to make sovereignty or to destroy sovereignty. It is a Government of checks and balances.

My colleague [Mr. THAYER] said that my colleague to say that I stated in my remarks yesterday that Congress could confer sovereignty.

Mr. GOOCH. No, sir; the gentleman misunderstood my remarks. I stated that I agreed with my colleague in saying that a more absurd idea never entered the head of any human being than that there was anything of sovereignty in this Government, or that this Government was instituted to destroy sovereignty, or to create it. I said that this is a Government of checks and balances. The gentleman stated that if we wanted sovereignty we must have it, and that the people must go back of that. I say that the people themselves, before they can exercise the acts of sovereignty, must annul their laws and their Constitution. As long as the Constitution exists, the people cannot exercise sovereign power. They are in authority over and above the people, and they must govern themselves in subjection to that power. They can exercise sovereignty only when they have annulled their laws and annulled their Constitution.

Mr. BLANCH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he believes in the following sentence, which I read from the Republican platform adopted at Philadelphia in 1856:

Resolved, That the Constitution confers on Congress sovereign power over the Territories of the United States for their government; and that, in the exercise of this power, it is both the right and duty of Congress to prohibit in the Territories those twin relics of barbarism—polygamy and slavery.

Mr. GOOCH. In reference to the exercise of sovereign power, I say I believe Congress has power to legislate upon all matters which are not legislation under the Constitution; but that that exercise of power must be in subjection to the Constitution of the United States.

In relation to the other branch of the resolution—the "twain relics of barbarism"—I apprehend that I have case of the twain here, whether the other exists or not. It is conceded upon all sides that we have here one relic of barbarism; and that it is our duty to suppress it.

Mr. BRANCH. The gentleman does not apprehend the point of my question. I did not propose to him to say whether or not he believed in slavery. My question was, whether he believed that the Constitution confers upon Congress sovereign power over the Territories of the United States for their government? I understood him to deny that this Government was sovereign.

Mr. GOOCH. I am not in full power over the Territories, subject only to the Constitution. I believe they have control of all legitimate subjects of legislation; but that in all their legislation for the Territories they must act in accordance with, and not in conflict with, any principle or provision of the Constitution.

Mr. BRANCH. Does the gentleman believe that Congress possesses no sovereign power over the Territories?

Mr. GOOCH. I believe it possesses full power, with the limitation I mentioned. If the gentleman has any other opinion, let him state it. At the Republican convention, and had been drawing up that resolution, I would have used the word "sovereign." I would answer, I would not. But I point out here the precise sense in which the word is used in common parlance, and as it is used by the Republican party. I do not understand that the Republican party ever proposed to pass any act of legislation for a Territory or a State, or any other place whatever, which should be in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask my colleague, Mr. Speaker, what kind of sovereignty he would prefer—that under which the people of Egypt were controlled by Pharaoh, based on corn, or that by which the people of a Territory would be controlled, based upon land?

Mr. GOOCH. Mr. Speaker, as I do not recognize either sovereignty, I do not see how I can answer my colleague's question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a single question upon this branch, which he has been discussing. Is that the term "sovereignty" and "sovereign power" are terms which we all know have technical significations given to them by publicists—writers on general law. I would like to know whether he thinks there is such a power in this Government; that is, a power which is not in the States?

Mr. GOOCH. If I wanted to find sovereignty in this Government, I should say that I could not find it. If I wanted to find sovereignty in the people who inhabit this country, I would say to them: "When you have stricken down your Constitution, when you have repealed all your laws, when you acknowledge no earthly power or authority as above and binding on you, and when you declare that you have the right to do what you choose, then you will have sovereignty, but not till then."

Mr. BARKSDALE. Under the limitation of the Constitution, to which you have referred, do you believe that Congress has authority to prohibit polygamy in the Territories, and to abolish slavery?

Mr. GOOCH. The gentleman from Mississippi is coming right back to his original question. I thought we had settled that, and that there was a truce to that question, for the purpose of this discussion.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The gentleman from Massachusetts refused at that time to answer my question, but it is now connected with the argument he is making. I desire to know from him, then, if, under the limitation of the Constitution to which he has referred, he believes that Congress can prevent polygamy and slavery in the Territories, as provided in this platform?

Mr. GOOCH. I have been arguing all along that Congress has the power to prohibit polygamy; and I have made a terrible mistake if the gentleman from Mississippi has not ascertained that fact yet. With reference to the institution of slavery, I told the gentleman, when he wanted to know my belief, that I did believe that Congress had the power to prohibit slavery in a Territory. And I told him, still further, that whenever the question was legitimately before the House, I would discuss it with him, if he desired. But I said to him then, and I say to him now, that it is not connected with the matter now under consideration, and that I desired that the question of slavery should not be brought in now, in connection with the crime of polygamy.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Slavery and polygamy are connected in the platform of your party, as well as in the platform of the "twain relics of barbarism." That was the reason that I asked the question.

Mr. GOOCH. When I make a speech on the Philadelphia platform, or on any other platform of my party, I will discuss that question. But I do not feel under any obligation to discuss it every time I get up in the House, because the gentleman tells me that there are articles of that kind in the platform of my party. I might tell the gentleman that, in my judgment, there was squatter sovereignty in the last platform of his own party; and I might insist upon it every time he arises in the House, that he should discuss that question.

Mr. MAYNARD. The question which I just now propounded to the gentleman from Massachusetts was a practical question; but I intended to follow it up with the additional inquiry, whether he regards the Constitution of the United States as the representative of sovereignty in this country, or whether he believes that the people have that power, above and superior to and higher than the Constitution? The gentleman will see the pertinency and tendency of the question, and will answer it accordingly.

Mr. GOOCH. I have no doubt that the people have power beyond the Constitution. But what kind of power is it? It is a revolutionary power. It is a right to destroy their constitution and form of government, and to create another in its place. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts does not want to know from me, whether the Constitution of the United States has absorbed all the power of the people. Nobody understands that; no man dreams it. They have every power themselves, excepting what they have expressly delegated to Congress.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman from Massachusetts understands that the right of revolution, or the power of revolution, is not a right or a power in the Government, but is simply a reserved natural right to destroy the Government and establish another. The question I am now posing was with reference to the Government as it now exists. The question was, whether the Constitution is the ultimate residuary power, or whether there is a sovereignty over and above the Constitution.

Mr. GOOCH. Mr. Speaker, I apprehend that no man ever contended that the Constitution was a residuum of power. I never understood so. I always supposed that what was in the Constitution was expressly put there, and what was not in the Constitution belonged to the people of all the States. I supposed there could be no difference of opinion between the gentleman from Tennessee and myself in reference to this matter. I am sure he could not have inferred, from any remark that I have made, that the Constitution had the right of accepting those that were expressly granted to it. Now, what I did say was this: that the people themselves were not sovereign; that they could not have sovereign power, so long as they acknowledged the binding force of the Constitution. I say with reference to that sovereignty is, that there is nothing above it; that there is nothing that can control it. It may will that it please, and what it wills it may do. There is no power and no provision to restrain it. When the people of a country have thrown off all checks, they come together and act in a sovereign capacity in deciding what shall be done.

We all know that a man, individually and in respect to some things, has sovereign power; that is, there is no power above him with regard to some particular things. What he wills, he may do; he can do, no man can do, or no man can resist against. Some may designate that as sovereign power; but I did not propose to descend into any such particulars. One word with reference to what is to be the policy of this Government. My colleague, [Mr. THAYER,] speaking of the General Government, says:

"I deny that he is now, or ever had, any moral right to govern American citizens in the Territories."

Now, what is the fact? What has been the practice of the Government? Why, sir, it has been the practice of the Government to legislate for the Territories in every relation, from its very inception to the present moment; and when my colleague says this Government has no moral power, I submit that he makes a greater reflection on all the past action of this Government, on the men who founded it, on the men who have administered it up to the present time, then it seemed to me possible to make. If they have not the moral power, I apprehend they have not the legal power. I apprehend that my colleague will not contend that any Government can do legally that which is immoral. I apprehend that if, in any instance, I have established that certain things would be immoral, I have it beyond the just power of legislation. I do not believe that there is a gentleman here who will rise in his place, and say that the Government has any legitimate power to pass acts which may be valid as acts of legislation, and yet be immoral in their character. I do not believe there is any lawyer in the House who would, for a moment, maintain any such doctrine. Now, sir, it seems to me, that before I had laid down any such proposition, before I had announced it in this House, I should have said myself well that I could not be mistaken in referring to it.

I should want, I think, the concurrence of other judgments than my own before I was ready to place myself in opposition to the practice and policy of the Government, in opposition to the settled course of all good men who have ever administered the Government.

But, sir, my colleague asserts that we do not intend to enforce this bill which is now before us from the Judiciary Committee, should it become a law. I know not why he makes such an assertion, so far as I am concerned, and I do not understand the feeling of those who support this bill, they are prepared to enact it into a law; and having enacted it into a law, they are ready to treat this law as they do all other laws, and to use all the power and force of the Government necessary to enforce it. And if all the force and power of the Government are not sufficient to accomplish that object, so far as this matter is concerned, the Government is simply impotent, and not able to carry out its own acts.

I do not understand that there is any man here who claims that there is any measure of legislation which this Congress has the right to adopt, which it has not the power to enforce; and I do not believe that there are any members of this House who are going to take the position to-day that there are certain laws, provisions, or enactments upon which we have the right to legislate, yet that we have not the power to enforce our laws.

Now, what is the proposition of my colleague? How does he propose to remedy this evil? Why, sir, he proposes to let the people go into these Territories without any legislation whatever, and with nothing but the machinery of a land district to restrain them! If this proposition had come from the Delegate from Utah, I think I should have understood it; I think I should have known what it meant; I think I should have seen the wisdom of it; but coming from my colleague, I do not understand it or see the wisdom of it. He proposes that there shall be no legislation at all in these Territories. Is not that precisely what the Mormons ask?

Mr. THAYER. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GOOCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. THAYER. My colleague assures the House that, if my proposition had come from the Delegate from Utah, he should have understood it. Let me say to my colleague that a gentleman has informed me this morning that the Delegate from Utah says, "Pass anything but THAYER's proposition."

Mr. GOOCH. Well, I do not know what the Delegate from Utah may have said; but I think it would be very strange if the Delegate from Utah said that proposition would be the very best one for his church which this House could possibly pass.

Mr. HOOPER. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts misunderstands the wishes of my constituents. They do not ask any legislation by Congress on this subject. They desire to be left as they are, under the present organic law. They do not wish to be left without any government or Legislature, in a state of anarchy.

Mr. GOOCH. The gentleman says that he thinks I mistake the position of his constituents, and that they do not want any legislation. I do not know. I do not profess to understand precisely what they do wish in this matter. But I will only say just what they please me that what they have endeavored to do was to seek a position where it would be hard for external legislation to reach them, to a certain extent; and I had supposed that what they asked was to be let alone in the enjoyment of their own institutions, with the right to do just what they please.

Mr. HOOPER. I would say to the gentleman that the Mormons sought their present home in the Rocky Mountains, not from choice, but from necessity.

Mr. GOOCH. What is the proposition of my colleague? Why, it has all the objectionable features of the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois has, and it has some others. It says to these people: "Go into these Territories and establish just such institutions as you please; this Government declares beforehand that it will not interfere with you, that it has no moral right to interfere with you; you may establish just such institutions as you please and may live and grow up in the enjoyment of them, and there is no power on earth which has any moral right to interfere with you or your institutions." I would ask what any denomination has to say to what I understand the Mormons to be would desire other than that? if it is not precisely what they want? If there are any similar denominations existing in other lands where they are interfered with at all by the local laws, it seems to me that the very best plan for them to pursue would be to find an asylum in some one of our Territories, free of restraint under the land district system of my colleague. Why, a hundred or a thousand men, according to that theory, might go into a Territory, bind themselves together by just such organizations as they chose, and say to the outside world, "We will not permit another man to enter here," and yet the Government would have no right to lay hands on them; no moral right to legislate for them, and they might remain there in possession of that Territory and control it as they chose. It seems to me that this is precisely the point to which my colleague's proposition leads, and that the result of it would be, if carried out, that communities would grow up in the Territories which never, by any possibility, would be in a situation to be taken into consideration and admitted on States upon an equality with the other States. I think that this proposition to leave a Territory to govern itself, without organic law or Legislature, or court, or executive, is an utter desertion of the principles upon which this Government has thus far acted, and of the policy which it has pursued; and I trust that it will be the last principle which the Government will ever adopt.

I hold that there is nothing more beautiful in our system of Government than the fact that, possessing or acquiring territory, we can say to the people of our new land, or to the outside world, if you choose, "Go into it and take possession of it; we will aid you in your government until you reach a certain point of maturity, and when we believe that you are capable of governing yourselves, we will then let you try the experiment; we will then let you clear and pass your own laws, and we will pay all your expenses; and if you conduct yourselves properly, if you violate no principle of our Constitution, if you establish institutions in harmony with our institutions, we will not interfere with you; you may go on thus in your territorial condition, and when you shall have reached a point where it is desirable for you and for us, we will receive you into the Union with us, and put you, in every respect, upon an equality with us." I say that I regard that as one of the most beautiful features of our institutions, and I say that it is one of the last that I would be willing to see stricken down or deserted.

Mr. SIMMS obtained the floor.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. THEAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same: An act for the relief of Elizabeth M. Cocks, widow of the late Major James H. Cocks, late marshal for the district of Texas; and

An act in relation to the return of undelivered letters in the post office.

POLYANMY—AGAIN.

Mr. SIMMS then proceeded to address the House for an hour, upon the question before the House. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. NELSON. I move the previous question on the pending amendments.

[Cries of "Oh, no!" "No!"]

Mr. PHELPS. I call for tellers.

Mr. BRANCH. I rise to a privileged question. The gentleman from Tennessee, I understand, calls the previous question on the whole bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; on the pending amendments. He said so expressly.

Mr. BRANCH. Well, under that new rule, the gentleman from Tennessee has a right to call the previous question on a pending amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) On all the pending amendments.

Mr. BRANCH. On a single pending amendment at once; and after the previous question is ordered, no call of the House is in order. I wish to give notice now, that when the previous question shall have been sustained, I will, under the rules of the House, as the mover of an amendment, claim the privilege of occupying one hour in defense of it.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to know if the amendment which I offered is recognized as being one of the pending amendments?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to know whether the previous question has been called on the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question has been called on the pending amendment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I call the previous question on the bill.

Mr. GROW. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee to call it on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee will state his motion.

Mr. NELSON. I state that I call the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to know if my amendment is one of the pending amendments?

Mr. BRANCH. Let us know whether the previous question is called on the bill or on the pending amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, will the House second the previous question on the bill and pending amendments?

Mr. BRANCH. Dear Sir, hold that, if the previous question be sustained, all other amendments will be cut off, except those two that are pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. BRANCH. Then I hope the previous question will not be sustained.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to know from the Chair whether or not, if the previous question be sustained, those who have offered amendments will have a right to discuss them?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Of course not; and I object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate will be in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Then I wish to make one statement. It is this: the floor has been farmed out to different persons; and members have not been recognized when they rose and addressed the Speaker. Gentlemen who desired to speak have been excluded and prevented. [Loud calls to order.]

Mr. REAGAN. I ask for information, and I appeal to the Speaker to give it to me, for I am entitled to it; and I am not to be put down in this sort of way. I want to know if my amendment is one of the pending amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is not in.

Mr. REAGAN. Then, as I offered it and supposed that it would be so regarded, I ask that it be recognized as a pending amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object to anything of the kind.

Mr. BRANCH. I call the previous question on the pending amendment, under the new rule; which call will take precedence of the demand for the previous question on the bill and all the amendments.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. McCLELLAND. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. NELSON] has done that already.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the demand of the gentleman from Tennessee for the previous question on the bill and amendments; on which the Chair will order tellers, and appoint Messrs. TRAIN and PHELPS to act as tellers.

Mr. BRANCH. Does the Chair decide that I cannot call the previous question on the pending amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the motion for the previous question on the bill and amendments takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina for the previous question upon the pending amendment.

Mr. CURRY. I ask that the bill and all the pending amendments may be reported to the House.

[Cries of "Too late; the House is dividing."] The House has not yet commenced to divide.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They can be read by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, and others, objected.

Mr. CURRY. Well, then, I make a point of order. The point of order which I make—and I do it in good faith, because I really do not know what amendments are pending—is, that before the House commences to divide, I have a right to have the bill and the pending amendments reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill and the pending amendments have already been read once; and no member of the House, as the Chair understands it, has a right to demand, as a matter of right, that they shall be read again.

Mr. REAGAN. Before the previous question is seconded, I wish my amendment to be considered as one of the pending amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can be entertained only by unanimous consent.

Mr. BINGHAM. I object.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I take it that there will be no objection to having the bill and amendments read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I object to it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope that by general consent, as this is a bill that will undoubtedly pass the—

Mr. FLORENCE. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope that, by general consent, the House will allow all the amendments which have been indicated to be considered as before the House, and to be voted on. [Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I desire to know whether the Chair has decided that it is not the right of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CRAW] to call for the reading of the bill and amendments?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. From that decision of the Chair I take on appeal.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. PHELPS. I think this whole difficulty can be obviated. Gentlemen only desire to know what amendments are pending. If the Chair will indicate by the names of the movers the amendments pending, the whole difficulty will probably be removed. I am sure that many of the many amendments have been offered or indicated, that we really do not know what the pending amendments are.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I desire to know whether gentlemen upon the other side of the House are willing that the bill and the amendments shall be read?

Mr. PHELPS. Only the amendments. We do not want the bill read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending amendments are as follows: first, the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. NELSON] to which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BRANCH] has offered his as an amendment.

Mr. BRANCH. No, sir; the gentleman from Tennessee offered his amendment two days after mine was offered.

Mr. REAGAN. I offered a separate and independent amendment, and had it read; and I do not understand how it is that it is not before the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. It was read for information only.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was in error. The gentleman from Tennessee offered his as an amendment to the text of the bill, having a right to perfect the text before a vote is taken on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. Do I understand the Chair as having reversed his decision, and ordered the amendments to be reported to the House? If so, of course I withdraw my appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not know what the gentleman from Illinois understands. The Chair has reversed none of its decisions.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I withdraw my appeal, understanding that the gentleman opposite are willing that the amendments shall be read.

Mr. GROW. They can be read when we come to vote upon them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. NELSON] is, to strike out of the original bill all after the word "persons," in the third line, down to the end of the ninth line, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Being married, shall, during the life of the former husband or wife, marry another person in any Territory of the United States, or other place—except the District of Columbia—where which the United States possess exclusive jurisdiction, or, if the marriage with such other person take place elsewhere, shall thereafter live or cohabit with such other person in such Territory, or other place over which the United States possess exclusive jurisdiction, the former husband or wife being alive, her, his, or they, so offending, shall, on conviction, &c.

The gentleman from North Carolina proposes a substitute for the bill.

Mr. BRANCH. I dislike to create any confusion while the question is being stated, but the Chair misunderstands my proposition. My proposition is to strike out the first section of the bill only, and insert what the Chair is about to have read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee then offers an amendment to the first section before the question is taken on striking out. The gentleman from North Carolina proposes to strike out the first section and insert other matter. It is in order to perfect the action before the question is taken on striking out and inserting.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I wish to ask one question. My amendment was moved before the gentleman from Tennessee moved his amendment. Will the Chair be good enough to give priority to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman's amendment to be a substitute for the whole bill, and the vote upon it is taken on the question of the amendments are disposed of. The first amendment is the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, because it proposes to perfect the first section. The second is the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, because it proposes to strike out the first section and insert another. After that comes the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, who proposes to strike out all the sections, and insert others.

Mr. THAYER. Will it be in order for me now to offer my amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order at this time.

Mr. THAYER. Will it be in order at any time during the voting?

Mr. MILLSON. Before the previous question is seconded, I ask for a separate vote on the preamble.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A separate vote will be taken on the preamble.

Mr. THAYER. I ask this Chair if it will be in order, at any time during the voting, provided that the previous question be sustained, to offer my amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not be in order, if the previous question shall be sustained by the House on the bill and the amendments.

Mr. THAYER. Then to vote to sustain the previous question is to refuse a vote upon my amendment.

Mr. WINSLOW. I suggest that it will be perfectly in order for the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer his as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, if the gentleman from Tennessee will permit it to be done now, before the previous question is called. Mr. GOOCH. I propose this: that, by general consent, a vote be allowed upon all the amendments which have been indicated and read at the Clerk's desk, with the understanding that there shall be no call of the yeas and nays on any amendments, excepting those which are regularly pending. I understand that the gentleman who reported the bill is willing to assent to that proposition, and to allow a vote upon all the amendments which have been indicated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to everything out of order.

Mr. REAGAN. Would it be in order for me now to move to lay the whole subject upon the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would be in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I make that motion, then, as gentlemen are determined not to allow amendments to be voted on.

Mr. FLORENCE. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLSON. I wish to make a proposition to the House, to save time. [Cries of "Order" and "Call the roll!"] I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. [Loud cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. REAGAN. As gentlemen around me urge the withdrawal of my motion, I lay the whole subject on the table. I will withdraw it, although I do not think I ought to do so.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayeas one hundred and one, a further count being demanded.

Mr. GROW. The previous question was seconded; and the question recurred, "Shall the main question be now put?"

Mr. MAYNARD. What will be the effect of refusing to order the main question?

The SPEAKER. The effect will be the same as if the previous question had not been seconded.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope, then, it will not be ordered. I call the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 114, nays 75; as follows: Adams, Adams, Aldrich, William C. Anderson, Ashley, Babbin, Beale, Bingham, Bliss, Binks, Boster, Branson, Brewster, Briggs, Buchanan, Burlingame, Butterfield, Campbell, Carey, Carter, Case, Coffey, Curtis, H. Winter Davis, Dawson, Delano, Doolittle, Dunn, Edgerly, Edwards, Egan, E. Edwards, Farnsworth, Felt, Fisher, French, Gilmer, Groce, Graham, Gross, Gurley, Hale, Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Haskins, Helmick, Hill, Hix, Hodge, Humphreys, Hutchins, Jenkins, Francis W. Kellogg, William Kellogg, Kenyon, Kilgore, Killinger, DeWitt C. Leach, Low, Longmeyer, Lovjoy, Marvin, McKee, McKim, McMillen, Morris, Edgar, Wm. F. Morris, Morse, Nelson, Nyce, Otis, Palmer, Perry, Pettit, Porter, Potter, Potts, Price, Rice, Christopher Robinson, Boyce, Schwartz, Sherman, Sedgwick, Sherman, Spaulding, Steiner, Stanton, Stevens, William Stewart, Stokes, Stratton, Thayer, Thompson, Tilden, Trimble, Vandever, Van Wyck, Verker, Washburn, Watson, Cadwalader C. Washburn, John Washburn, Israel Washburn, Webster, Wells, Wilson, Woodman, Woodman.

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Thomas L. Anderson, Ashmun, Barksdale, Barr, Barrett, Bockel, Bonham, Boutwell, Boyce, Bragg, Brewster, Burnett, Butler, Calkins, Clark, Clifton, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cooper, Cox, James Craig, Crawford, Carl, De Jarnette, Dimmick, Florence, Hardman, J. Harris, Hattie, Hutton, Hawkins, Himes, Holman, Houston, Howard, Jackson, Jenkins, Jones, Kellie, Lamm, Logan, Love, Charles D. Martin, Eliot B. Martin, McQuinn, McQuinn, McQuinn, McQuinn, McQuinn, Montgomery, Byrdman Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, North, Fredrick, Phelps, Gages, Reagan, Rippe, James C. Robinson, Scott, Sumner, Sutherland, Taylor, H. Smith, Stillworth, Sturgeon, James A. Stewart, Taylor, Thayer, Thomas, Valandigham, Vance, Winslow, and Woodman.

So the main question was ordered to be now put.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. FRANK stated that Mr. COMBING was quite indisposed, and had paired for the day with Mr. STEVENS.

Mr. HOLMAN stated that Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, had paired with Mr. LEONIS.

Mr. LEAH stated that Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, had paired with Mr. MORRIS.

Mr. DE JARNETTE stated that Mr. LEAH had paired with Mr. CRAWFORD.

Mr. MALLORY stated that he had paired off, all votes connected with this question, with Mr. HAMILTON.

Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina, said he had been requested to state that Mr. DAVIDSON was detained from the House by indisposition.

Mr. BOULIGNY stated that his colleague, Mr. LANDREW, was confined to his room by indisposition.

Mr. JONES stated that his colleague, Mr. GARRETT, being unwell, had retired from the Hall, and had paired with Mr. IATINE.

Mr. HINDMAN said that if he had been within the bar when his name was called, he should have voted "no."

Mr. ENGLISH made a similar statement.

Mr. NELSON, having reported the bill, took the floor to close the debate.

Mr. MORRILL. Having introduced this bill, I have naturally felt some solicitude in reference to its fate. I have struggled for a long time to get it before the House.

Mr. BRANCH. I rise to a question of order. I ask by what right the gentleman from Vermont is upon the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman has yielded me the floor for ten minutes.

Mr. BRANCH. Has the gentleman from Tennessee the right to yield the floor after the main question has been ordered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANCH. Well, sir, inasmuch as the gentleman from Vermont, I believe, voted for the previous question, which cut the balance of us off from discussion, I do not think we should assent to this arrangement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. BRANCH. Unless the rest of us can have a chance, I object.

Mr. STEVENS, of Maryland. If the gentleman from Vermont speaks in the time of the gentleman from Tennessee, I do not see what objection there can be.

Mr. MORRILL. I appeal to the gentleman from North Carolina to withdraw his objection. I only wish to occupy the floor for a few minutes.

Mr. BRANCH. I would be willing to withdraw my objection, but there are other gentlemen who object.

Mr. BARKSDALE. There are several amendments to be voted on, upon which, I take it, the yeas and nays will be called. I suggest, therefore, that inasmuch as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. NELSON] will occupy an hour in closing the debate, it be understood that there shall be no vote taken to-night.

Mr. GROW. I object to any such arrangement.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I then ask the gentleman to give way for a motion that the House adjourn. It is now four o'clock, the usual hour of adjournment. [Cries of "No!" "No!" and "Yes!"]

Mr. NELSON. So far as I am concerned, I will submit entirely to the will of the House, and for the purpose of ascertaining the desire of the House, I will give way for the motion.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move, then, that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Now I ask that it may be the understanding that no vote shall be taken this evening.

Mr. GROW. The gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to the floor, and I insist that he shall not be beaten out of it.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The gentleman from Tennessee is quite able to take care of himself.

Mr. GROW. An objection is in order.

Mr. BARR. I understand that the Delegate from Utah wishes to be heard upon this subject.

I think no arrangement should be made that will deprive him of that privilege.

Mr. NELSON proceeded to address the committee in support of the bill. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

While Mr. NELSON was speaking, Mr. BARKSDALE said: I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to yield to me, that I may move an adjournment. There is so much confusion and disorder in the Hall, that it is almost impossible for the gentleman to proceed. Besides, a number of gentlemen are forced to leave, who desire very much to hear him.

Mr. NELSON. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon, (at twenty-five minutes to five o'clock, p. m.), the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

Thursday, April 5, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GRADLEY.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FOSTER. I have received, and been requested to present to the Senate, nineteen memorials, praying for the discontinuance of the spirit ration from the sailors of the Navy. These memorials are very numerously signed, having nearly seven hundred signatures. They owe their origin, I believe, to a convention of chaplains, ministers of mariners' churches, and others interested in the welfare of seamen, held at New York in the month of November last, recommending the adoption of such a rule in the service. I notice the names of officers of the highest grade in our service attached to these memorials; men of great distinction, of high character, and of long experience. The names of officers of lower grades, petty officers, and seamen in large numbers, are also attached to these memorials. A former Secretary of the Navy has heretofore recommended this measure; and it seems to me that its adoption would do more to raise the character of seamen, and to promote the efficiency of the service, than any one thing we could do. To maintain discipline on board our ships would be much easier, and cases of insubordination much rarer. The abolition of the spirit ration should have preceded, not followed, the abolition of corporal punishment.

These petitions propose to make each man his allowance in money, in lieu of the spirit ration; so that the men will be gainers in every respect. I consider the subject one of great importance, and I trust that these memorials will receive the favorable consideration of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom I move their reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMMOND presented the petition of Lieutenant A. F. Warley, of the United States Navy, praying relief from the consequence of a sentence of a court-martial which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. YULEE presented the petition of T. J. M. Richardson and Thomas Ross, executors of Samuel B. Richardson, praying payment for fifteen days' service performed by S. B. Richardson as a member of the Senate during the session of the Legislature Council of the Territory of Florida, for the year 1845; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. KENNEDY presented the petition of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, for authority to extend the Washington branch of their road to the Potomac river and across the same, by means of the pile structure connected with the Long Bridge; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That the petition of Nancy Reed, widow of Lord Reed, a soldier in the Revolution, praying a pension, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARLAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the petition of the settlers on the Fort Atkinson military reservation and Old Indian Agency, praying the right of preemption, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 371) for the relief of certain settlers in the State of Iowa. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the report of the Court of Claims on the petition of Eliza E. Ogden, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 374) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza E. Ogden. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William P. Howkay, praying compensation for his services, and for certain inventions, adopted by the Government, in ship-building, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 373) for the relief of William P. Howkay. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the memorial of Citizens of Texas, praying the establishment of a port of entry at Sabine Pass, in that State, submitted a report, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to, the power to grant all the relief necessary being already vested in the Secretary of the Treasury by an existing law.

Mr. TRUMBULL, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of Banerott Woodcock, praying an extension of his patent for an improvement in the construction of the plow, submitted an adverse report.

Mr. FITZPATRICK, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred the memorial of Major Benjamin Alvord, a member of the United States Army, praying that the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be authorized to credit him with $14,000 of the public funds, lost by the shipwreck of the steamship Northern, on the 6th of January, 1860, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 372) for the relief of Major Benjamin Alvord, paymaster of the United States Army; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. FITCH, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the memorial of Duff Green, president of the Sabine and Rio Grande Railroad Company, in the State of Texas, praying such enlargement of the powers and privileges of that company as will enable them to extend their road to the Pacific, at or near Mazatlan, reported in favor of printing the usual number, and the report was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred a memorial of the Mayor and Council of the city of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, praying the confirmation of a certain claim, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 378) to relinquish the title of the United States to certain lands occupying the city of Baton Rouge, in Louisiana. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Joseph McHenry, praying to be allowed to relocate certain warrants for land granted the late Marquis de la Fayette, of which he is the assignee, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 380) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize a relocation of lands," passed April 18, 44, and granted by Congress General La Fayette, approved February 26, 1845. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Daniel Whitney, for the issue of patents for certain land at Green Bay, Wisconsin, in favor of parties to whom said land was confirmed, under the act of February 21, 1823, by commissioners appointed under that act, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 379) for the relief of Daniel Whitney. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Daniel Whitney, for the issue of patents for certain land at Green Bay, Wisconsin, in favor of parties to whom said land was confirmed, under the act of February 21, 1823, by commissioners appointed under that act, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 379) for the relief of Daniel Whitney. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

R. R. RICHARDS.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to offer a joint resolution for the relief of Rev. R. R. Richards, chaplain to the United States penitentiary at the District of Columbia, and ask the Senate to take it up for action.

The joint resolution (S. No. 24) for the relief of Rev. R. R. Richards, chaplain to the United States penitentiary in the District of Columbia, was read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and the Secretary read the title of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $300 for Mr. Richards' salary for the half year ending June 30, 1857.

Mr. HIGLER. It is all right.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think it is worth while to refer it. The Committee on the District of Columbia considered it and brought it into the Senate during the last Congress, and it was unanimously passed after debate here. The whole matter was inquired into, and the Government owes this man $300. It is a small sum.

Mr. HIGLER. The facts can be stated in a few moments. This man was appointed chaplain of the penitentiary, and performed the duty, and has not been paid. The Secretary of the Interior at one time raised a question, because Mr. Richards at the time acted as clerk; but he subsequently abandoned that objection, and the case stands free of difficulty. Mr. Richards performed the duties, and the law allows him, and I hope the joint resolution will be passed. It has heretofore passed the Senate; certainly once, if not twice.

Mr. HAMLIN. I withdraw my motion. The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and was engaged for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTRACTS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WILSON. I submit the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire what contracts, if any, have been entered into by the War Department, or by any other department of the Government, for the use of the public buildings; whether such contracts were made after public advertisement, or otherwise; the amount of iron contracts, and the terms of payment, and whether, or under what authority of law said contracts have been entered into, either by the War Department, or any other or agent thereof. Also, that said committee inquire what contracts have been entered into by the War Department for shot or shells, and iron castings; or what orders have been given by that Department, or by any officer thereof, whether civil or military, for shot or shells, and iron castings; how such orders or contracts were obtained; under what authority the orders were issued or the contracts made; whether by public advertisement in public market, or by other purchase; the reasons for issuing such orders or making such contracts; the necessity for making the expenditure; and if due regard has been had therein to the public interest, and the economy of the Government, to send for persons and papers, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. YULEE. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will lie over.

ANGELINA C. BOWMAN.

Mr. HIGLER. I ask the Senate to consider a bill which I have repeatedly attempted to take up, on which I hope the Senate will now concur. It is the bill (S. No. 223) for the relief of Angelina C. Bowman, widow of Francis L. Bowman, late captain in the United States Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a first and second time, as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing Mrs. Bowman's name upon the pension roll, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, from the 13th of January, 1859, to continue for life.

Mr. HIGLER. I will explain the merits of this bill very briefly. It is in relation to a bill which passed at the last session. It passed the Senate at a very late hour, and was lost, on a slight amendment, between the two Houses. Mrs. Bowman was the wife of the late Francis L. Bowman, who was a major of volunteers in the Mexican war, and, after the war, he was in the service of the Government, acquired a disease there which ultimately destroyed his life. He was afterwards appointed captain in the Army, and stationed at Fort Simcoe, in the Territory of Washington. After being there in that position for about seven or eight months, he showed indications of insanity; and it was finally determined that it was necessary to remove him from the fort. He was started with an escort to take him from Fort Simcoe to the Dalles. On the way, for the reason that the escort was inefficient, or, at least, not sufficiently vigilant, Captain Bowman escaped from the men who had him in charge, in one of his fits of insanity. After some three days' pursuit, his body was found tangled by wild beasts. Mrs. Bowman was at the Dalles at the time, and her family helplessness cost her some seven hundred dollars to remove the remains of her unfortunate husband to his residence in the State of Pennsylvania. She was enabled to do this by the generosity of the officers and men of the Army. She has asked Congress first to pay her back the money which she expended, and which was furnished to her by the soldiers, in order that she might return it. This the committee decline to do; but the evidence being satisfactory that Captain Bowman acquired the disease while in the service of his country, and that he afterwards lost his life for want of proper care on the part of the escort that had him in charge when his mind was deranged, they have reported that Mrs. Bowman is entitled to a pension; and I hope the bill will pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAKE COMMERCE.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a petition of merchants of Detroit, Michigan, praying an extension to the lake commerce of the same limits to the liability of ship-owners and others as is in force on the ocean, have unanimously directed me to report a bill in accordance with the prayer of the petitioners; and I ask for its present consideration. It merely extends to the lake commerce the limitations which have for years existed on the ocean.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 375) to extend the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1851, entitled "An act to limit the liability of ship-owners and for other purposes," to the lakes, was read twice, considered as in committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. CLAY. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution of the House of Representatives (No. 26) constituting Macon, Georgia, a port of entry for the time being, for the purposes therein specified and for other purposes, have instructed me to report it back, and recommend its passage. It is a matter of local interest, to which I presume no objection whatever will be interposed; and I trust it will be acted on now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 26) constituting Macon, Georgia, a port of entry for the time being, for the purposes therein specified and for other purposes.

The preamble sets forth that it is in contemplation, by the cotton planters' convention of the State of Georgia, to institute and hold a fair, in the month of December, in the city of Macon, in the State of Georgia; and that it is contemplated by a foreign association to exhibit their goods at such fair; and as Macon is neither a port of entry nor delivery, articles imported for exhibition at such fair cannot, under existing laws, be exempted from duty, though exported again when withdrawn from exhibition; therefore, it is proposed to enact that Macon, Georgia, be constituted a port of entry, so far and to such extent as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, at his discretion, to extend thereto all existing revenue laws prevailing at ports of entry, and applicable to both the warehouses, to the landing of goods, wares, and merchandise, and exportation of the same; but the force and effect of this provision is to ascertain only to importations made for the purposes exclusively therein recited, and for exportations of the same so having been exhibited, and at such time or times before, during, and after the fair, as shall, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, seem reasonable for those purposes.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELATIONS OF STATES.

Mr. CHESNUT. I ask the Senate to allow me to take up, for the purpose of moving to make them a special order, the resolutions of the Senators from Mississippi, [Mr. Davis.] I move that they be taken up, and made the special order for Monday, at half past one o'clock, when I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to address them on the subject.

The motion was agreed to; and the resolutions were made the special order for Monday next, at half past one o'clock.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BIGLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 372) for the relief of Gottlieb Scherer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KENNEDY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 377) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to extend the Washington branch of their road to the Potomac river, and across the same, by an extension of the present structure known as the Long Bridge, for the purpose of connecting with the regular railroads at that point, which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM B. SHUBRICK.

Mr. HAMMOND. I move to take up the Senate bill, (No. 295,) which will pass the Senate, I think, at once, without the slightest debate.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 295) for the relief of William B. Shubrick, was read the second time, and considered as in committee of the Whole. It provides for the allowance to Captain William B. Shubrick, United States Navy, in the settlement of his accounts, the sum of $1,550, paid by his order, while in command of the cutter "H. P. Henshaw," at La Reintre, translator and interpreter in the public service.

Mr. POLK. I ask the Senator from South Carolina whether the money was actually paid by Commodore Shubrick for services rendered.

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, sir.

Mr. POLK. Cash out of his pocket?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, sir; cash out of his own pocket, but not allowed him by the Government, and for very valuable services, which I can explain in a moment, if any Senator desires.

Mr. POLK. I only desire to know if the Senator is satisfied that the services were necessary?

Mr. HAMMOND. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMBASSY FROM JAPAN.

Mr. MASON. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration the joint resolution reported from the committee on Foreign Relations a few days since, making an appropriation for the expenses of the embassy from Japan. It will arrive here within the next two or three weeks—the time is uncertain—and if the appropriation is made, it is proper the Government should know it, in order to make the necessary preparations.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) in regard to the minister from Japan, was read a second time, and considered as in committee of the Whole.

It proposes to appropriate $50,000 to defray the expenses of the embassy and suite, constituting the Japanese embassy expected to arrive in the United States, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERRITORIAL COURTS.

Mr. GREEN. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 18) concerning courts in the Territories, reported by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] from the Committee on the Judiciary. He requested me to make the motion. It is a mere formal matter.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 148) concerning courts in the Territories, was read a second time, and considered as in committee of the Whole.

Mr. GREEN. The Secretary has either read the bill incorrectly, or it is not printed correctly. The bill, as intended to be reported by the committee, was to give a right of appeal in all cases.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It gives jurisdiction and provides for an appeal to the district courts of the United States where the amount exceeds $200.

Mr. GREEN. No, sir; it gives an appeal in all cases, and I want the jurisdiction limited to $200.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The committee reported to give jurisdiction, providing an appeal to the district court where the sum exceeds $200.

Mr. GREEN. The Senator is mistaken. The committee recommended that the jurisdiction should be limited to $200, with the right of appeal. I move so to amend it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri is in line eight, to strike out the word "exceeds," and insert "does not exceed," so that it will read, "where the amount in controversy, exclusive of costs, does not exceed $200."

Mr. GREEN. That is it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I think the Senator from Missouri will find that he is in error as to the reading of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill again.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Legislative Assemblies of the respective Territories are hereby authorized to confer on the probate courts civil jurisdiction in suits between residents only of the Territory where the suit is brought concurrent with the district courts; subject, however, where the amount in controversy, exclusive of costs, exceeds $200 to an appeal in all cases to the district court for a trial de novo, and from thence to the supreme court of the proper Territory, as in such cases. Provided, That no civil jurisdiction in criminal cases shall be conferred upon said probate courts, or exercised by them.

Mr. GREEN. I submit to the Senator from Missouri that if the bill be amended as he proposes, the probate courts will have jurisdiction concurrent with the district court, and in cases where the amount does not exceed $200, there will be appeal to the district court; but in all cases where it exceeds $200, there will be no appeal. That is the effect of his amendment.

Mr. GREEN. I will explain to the Senator. Under the decision of the supreme court of Kansas it is held—and I think properly held—that the probate court has no civil jurisdiction whatever. It is a probate court; in other words, it is a court to administer estates, to appoint guardians, &c., but it has no civil jurisdiction to try any case.

We want to give it to them because the district court has twelve hundred cases on the docket, and the district court judge cannot possibly discharge all the duties; the number of them are in very small cases. The object of this bill is to enable the Territorial Legislature to give the probate courts what the law organizing the Territory does not give them—a little civil jurisdiction; but we want to limit it to $200, so that an appeal may be taken.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that perfectly. The object of the Senator is to give jurisdiction to judges of probate where the amount involved in the controversy does not exceed $200; but that is not what he attains by the amendment he proposes to incorporate in the bill. As the bill will stand with the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, the probate courts will have unlimited jurisdiction, coextensive with the district court; but in cases where the amount involved does not exceed $200, there will be an appeal to the district court; where the amount involved exceeds $200, there will be no appeal. That is the amendment.

Mr. GREEN. I think the Senator is mistaken. My only purpose is this—

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the Senator allow me to say a word this time?

Mr. GREEN. Certainly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If he will go and look to the bill as he proposes to amend it, he will find that he has done exactly the contrary of what he intends. I am questioning of the amendment.

Mr. GREEN. I ask for the reading of it again.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill as it is proposed to be amended by the Senator from Missouri.

THE SECRETARY. The bill, if amended as proposed, will read:

That the Legislative Assemblies of the respective Territories are hereby authorized to confer on the probate courts civil jurisdiction in suits between residents only of the Territory where the suit is brought, concurrent with the district courts; subject, however, where the amount in controversy, exclusive of costs, does not exceed $200, to an appeal in all cases to the district court for a trial de novo, &c.

MR. GREEN. That will do; I am satisfied with that.

MR. COLLAMER. I apprehend that the point of difference between the gentlemen depends on the manner of punctuation and the cadence with which the language is read. It may mean that the probate courts are to have the concurrent jurisdiction with the district court in all cases, and that the restriction as to amount qualifies the right of appeal. If so, I have objections. My desire is, that the jurisdiction shall be confined to $200, and with the right of appeal in all cases.

MR. GREEN. That is right.

MR. COLLAMER. But the query is, whether it so reads now. The jurisdiction might be $200, with an appeal in all cases. I ask the Secretary to read it once more.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that to be the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

MR. COLLAMER. That is what he desires; but the question is, whether that is accomplished. THE VICE PRESIDENT. It is not for the Chair to say whether the bill means that.

MR. COLLAMER. That is the point of dispute among us; whether it does or not.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The bill, as proposed to be amended, will be read again.

The Secretary again read the bill, as proposed to be amended.

MR. COLLAMER. The clause as to amount qualifies the appeal, but not the jurisdiction.

MR. GREEN. I know I am right, and the Senator from Vermont is not. The object is to limit the jurisdiction to $200, with the right to an appeal.

MR. COLLAMER. But the bill does not do it.

MR. GREEN. It does not do it in the present shape. I therefore move the amendment to limit the jurisdiction to $200, with a right of appeal.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator moves that amendment?

MR. GREEN. Yes, sir.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves to amend the bill by inserting in line eight, after the word "dollars," "and subject," so that it will read, "where the amount in controversy, exclusive of cost, does not exceed $200, and subject to an appeal," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. BENJAMIN. The bill is not right now. It is impossible for us to legislate in this way without looking at the language. I move that the bill be laid aside informally for a few moments, in order that the Senator from Missouri may look at it himself, and make the amendment required.

MR. GREEN. I have no objection.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. That course will be pursued if there be no objection.

MR. GREEN subsequently said: I now move to take up the bill which was informally laid aside. I propose so to amend it as to make it read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Legislative Assemblies of the respective Territories are hereby authorized to confer on the probate courts civil jurisdiction in suits between residents only of the Territory where the suit is brought, concurrent with the district courts, in cases where the amount in controversy, exclusive of costs, does not exceed $200, subject to an appeal in all cases to the district court for a trial de novo, and from thence to the supreme court of the proper Territory in all other cases; Provided, That in all cases jurisdiction in criminal cases shall be conferred upon the said probate courts, or exercised by them.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be amended in this form, if there be no objection.

The Chair hears no objection.

THOMAS L. DISHARON.

On motion of Mr. POLK, the bill (S. No. 356) for the relief of Thomas L. Disharon, of St.

Louis county, Missouri, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Thomas L. Disharon having in good faith purchased and paid for, and having in his possession, four bounty land warrants for one hundred and sixty acres each, issued under the act of Congress of February 11, 1847, and numbered as follows: No. 44575, No. 44568, No. 44567, and No. 44561, the bill proposes to confirm his title, and to authorize him to locate, design, and dispose of them in the manner and form prescribed by the act of 1847, as if the warrants had been issued to him.

MR. POLK. I will state to the Senate that this bill passed this body during the last Congress upon a motion of the Committee on Private Land Claims. It has been again favorably reported to this Congress by the Committee on Private Land Claims of this body, and that committee this year embodied a former favorable report of the Committee on Private Land Claims of the House of Representatives, a member of the Senate Committee on Private Land Claims, I am satisfied the bill is just and proper.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

MR. HUNTER. It will be recollected that we laid over the Indian appropriation bill, to be taken up at one o'clock. I am desirous to take it up, but I do not want to interfere with the precedence which the homestead bill has; but if the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] will agree to it, by the general consent of the Senate we can lay that bill aside informally until the Indian appropriation bill shall be disposed of. Then his bill will resume its regular order on the Calendar.

MR. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I presume there will be no difficulty about it, if the Senator's bill can be passed in a few minutes.

MR. HUNTER. I move, then, by general consent, that we take up the Indian appropriation bill.

MR. WADE. I inquire whether we are to spend the day on that bill?

MR. HUNTER. I cannot tell. It may, perhaps, be one or two, but I do not know. I do not know what amendments the Committee on Indian Affairs may have; but I will say that I shall dispose of the bill as soon as we can. The Senator knows we do not interpose it for delay. We are already anxious to get along with the appropriation bills. The other bill will come up immediately afterwards.

MR. WADE. It appears to me that we had better get through with one bill at a time. The homestead bill is under consideration, and I hope we shall be able to take a vote on it to-day; but at all events, if it goes over to-day, it goes over until next Tuesday; because to-morrow is private bill day, Saturday is devoted to District business, and there is a special order for Monday, on which a Senator has the floor. I think the friends of the homestead bill ought to stand by it until we go through with it. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the question whether we shall take up this bill or go on with the homestead bill.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that he has not yet arrived for calling up the special order.

MR. HUNTER. Is the Indian bill the special order at one o'clock?

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The homestead bill, being the unfinished business of yesterday, comes up at one o'clock.

MR. HUNTER. In order to test the question, I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the Indian appropriation bill. Let the Senate decide. I should like to know their determination. I am responsible for pushing the appropriation bills as far as I can. If the Senate decide against me, let them do so.

MR. WADE. I hope the friends of the homestead bill will stand by it and I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

MR. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that he call for the yeas for him to make a motion to postpone all the prior orders. The homestead bill does not come up as the unfinished business until one o'clock. Let him make a motion to take up the Indian approprition bill; let it be taken up; and then, if we need that discussion is likely to arise, we can lay it aside, and go on with the homestead bill.

MR. HUNTER. Then, the Senator will not call for the yeas and nays, simply move to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will, of course, call up the special order at one o'clock. Are the yeas and nays demanded on this last motion?

MR. WADE. No, sir.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (H. No. 115) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1861, was resumed, as in Committee of the Whole.

MR. HUNTER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Finance have been disposed of. I now offer one which was not ready when the bill was last under consideration. It is an amendment to carry out treaty stipulations, to pay a second installment of $100,000, which was provided for by various tribes in Washington and Oregon.

Pence.—For second of five installments to be paid to them or expended for their benefit, commencing with the year in which the sum of $250,000 was appropriated for their future hours, per second article treaty 12th March, 1855, $125,000.

For school and maintenance of the establishment and maintenance of one or more manual-labor schools, under the direction of the President, per second article treaty 12th March, 1855, $250,000.

For second of ten installments, or during the pleasure of the President, to be expended in furnishing said Indians with seeds and assistance in agricultural and mechanical pursuits, including the working of the mill provided for in the first part of this article, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, per second article treaty 12th March, 1855, $250,000.

For second of ten installments for the establishment and support of an agricultural and industrial school, and to provide said school with a suitable instructor or instructors, per fourth article treaty 25th January, 1855, $200,000.

For second of twenty installments for the establishment and support of a smith and carpenter's shop, and to furnish them with necessary tools and materials, per fifth article treaty 25th January, 1855, $200,000.

For second of twenty installments for the employment of a blacksmith, cooper, farmer, and physician who shall furnish medicines for the sick, per fourth article treaty 25th January, 1855, $200,000.

For second of twenty installments for the support of an agricultural and industrial school, and for pay of teachers, per eleventh article treaty 21st January, 1855, $20,000.

For second of twenty installments for the support of a smith and carpenter's shop, and to provide the necessary tools, materials, per eleventh article treaty 21st January, 1855, $20,000.

For second of twenty installments for the employment of a blacksmith, cooper, farmer, and physician who shall furnish medicines for the sick, per eleventh article treaty 21st January, 1855, $20,000.

Walla-Walla and Nez Percé Tribes.—For second installment of $50,000, for the erection of buildings on the reservations, fencing and opening farms, per third article treaty 18th June, 1855, $50,000.

For second of five installments of $8,000, under the direction of the President, per second article treaty 9th June, 1855, $8,000.

For second of twenty installments for the purchase of all necessary mill fixtures and mechanical tools, medicines and hospital stores, books and stationery for the tribes, and furniture for the employes, per fourth article treaty 25th June, 1855, $20,000.

For second of twenty installments for the pay and subsistence of one superintendent of farming operations, one farmer, one cooper, one blacksmith, one carpenter, one millwright, one physician, and two teachers, per fourth article treaty 9th June, 1855, $7,500.

For second of twenty installments for the pay of each of the head chiefs of the Walla-Walla, Cayuse, and Umatilla bands the sum of $500 per annum, per fifth article treaty 9th June, 1855, $2,500.

For second of twenty installments for salary for the sum of $100-per-month-mox, per fifth article treaty 9th June, 1855, $2,000.

Yakima Nation.—For second of five installments for beneficial objects, at the discretion of the President, per fourth article treaty 25th January, 1855, $10,000.

For second of twenty installments for the support of two schools, one of which is to be an agricultural and industrial school, keeping in stock and school books, and for purchasing suitable furniture, tools, and stationery, per fifth article treaty 9th June, 1855, $2,500.

For second of twenty installments for the employment of one superintendent of teaching and two teachers, per fifth article treaty 9th June, 1855, $2,500.

For second of twenty installments for the employment of a cooper, a blacksmith, a diomist's, gunsmith's, carpenter's shop, and wagon and plow-maker's shops, and for providing necessary tools therefor, per fifth article treaty 18th June, 1855, $60,000.

For second of twenty installments for the employment of one superintendent of farming and two farmers, two blacksmiths, one tin-smith, one cooper, one wagon and plow-maker, per fifth article treaty 18th June, 1855, $60,000.

For second of twenty installments for keeping in repair saws and flouring mills, and for furnishing the necessary tools and fixtures, per fifth article treaty 18th June, 1855, $60,000.

For second of twenty installments for keeping in repair the hospital, and providing the necessary medicines and fixtures therefor, per fifth article treaty 18th June, 1855, $60,000.

For second of twenty installments for the pay of a physician, per fifth article treaty 18th June, 1855, $1,000; for the second of twenty installments for keeping in repair the buildings required for the various employes, per fifth article treaty 18th June, 1855, $300.

For second of twenty installments for the salary of such person as the said confederated tribes and bands of Indians may select to be their head chief, per fifth article treaty 18th June, 1855, $200.

New Peru Indians.—For second of five installments for beneficial objects, at the discretion of the President, per fourth article treaty 11th June, 1855, $10,000.

For second of twenty installments for the support of two teachers, per fifth article treaty 11th June, 1855, $200.

For second of twenty installments for keeping in repair suitable learning, books, and stationery, per fifth article treaty 11th June, 1855, $200.

For second of twenty installments for the employment of one superintendent of teaching and two teachers, per fifth article treaty 11th June, 1855, $1,000.

For second of twenty installments for keeping in repair blacksmiths', tin-smiths', gunsmiths', carpenter's and wagon maker's shops, and for providing necessary tools therefor, per fifth article treaty 11th June, 1855, $500.

For second of twenty installments for keeping in repair the hospital, and providing the necessary medicines and fixtures therefor, per fifth article treaty 16th June, 1855, $60,000.

For second of twenty installments for pay of a physician, per fifth article treaty 16th June, 1855, $1,000.

For second of twenty installments for keeping in repair the buildings required for the various employes, per fifth article treaty 16th June, 1855, $300.

For second of twenty installments for the salary of such person as the confederated bands may select to be their head chief, per fifth article treaty 16th June, 1855, $200.

Confederated tribes and bands in Middle Oregon.—For second of five installments of $8,000 for beneficial objects, at the discretion of the President, per second article treaty 25th June, 1855, $2,000.

For second of five installments for pay and subsistence of one blacksmith, one tin-smith, one cooper, one wagon maker, per fourth article treaty 25th June, 1855, $3,500.

For second of twenty installments for pay and subsistence of one physician, one surveyor, one interpreter, one superintendent of farming operations, and one school-teacher, per fourth article treaty 25th June, 1855, $5,000.

For second of twenty installments for keeping in repair suitable buildings, and for purchasing medicines, mechanical tools, medicine and hospital stores, books and stationery for schools, and furniture for employes, per fourth article treaty 25th June, 1855, $300.

For second of twenty installments for payment of salary to the head chief of said confederated bands, per fourth article treaty 25th June, 1855, $200.

Maid Indians.—For second of ten installments for keeping in repair saws and flouring mills and for the pay of such employes, the head chief, and the superintendent of all affairs by all the confederated bands, per second article treaty 25th June, 1855, $1,000.

For second of five installments (in addition to the installments specified in the treaty of 5th November 1854) for the Unquips and Catoquips of Unquipp valley) for furnishing iron and steel and other materials for the smith and tin smith, for the cooper, for the wagon maker, and for the necessary mechanics, per second article treaty 21st December, 1855, $1,500.

For second of five installments for the pay of a carpenter and joiner, to aid in erecting buildings and making furniture for said Indians, and to furnish tools in said service, per second article treaty 21st December, 1855, $1,500.

For second of five installments for the pay of an additional farmer, per second article treaty 21st December, 1855, $1,500.

Quay-wah and Quik-ah-ah Indians.—For second of five installments of $25,000, for beneficial objects, under the direction of the President, per fourth article treaty 21st January, 1856, $7,000.

For second of twenty installments for the support of an agricultural and industrial school, and for pay of suitable instructors, per tenth article treaty 21st January, 1856, $2,000.

For second of twenty installments for support of smiths' and carpenter's shops, and to provide the necessary tools therefor, per tenth article treaty 21st January, 1856, $2,000.

For second of twenty installments for support of smiths' and carpenter's shops, and to provide the necessary tools therefor, per tenth article treaty 21st January, 1856, $2,000.

For second of twenty installments for the employment of a blacksmith, carpenter, and farmer, and a physician who shall furnish medicine for the sick, per tenth article treaty 21st January, 1856, $2,000.

St. Killeau.—For second of installment for $60,000, under the direction of the President, per fifth article treaty 21st January, 1856, $2,000.

For second of twenty installments for the support of an agricultural and industrial school, per fifth article treaty 21st January, 1856, $2,000.

For second of twenty installments for the employment of a blacksmith, carpenter, farmer, and a physician who shall furnish medicine for the sick, per eleventh article treaty 21st January, 1856, $2,000.

I will say that the amendment if precisely according to treaty stipulations. It was left out by the House of Representatives. I will give the reason, and the Senate may determine. This morning, according to treaty stipulations, in the next fiscal year, but the House committee left it out until it could be ascertained whether they might not dispense with the appropriation now, and postpone it until next winter; but the Interior Department would be paid for the next winter; and, as we have to appropriate it, the Finance Committee sees no reason why we should not appropriate it for the service of the next year now at the regular time, instead of the next winter in a deficiency bill. The Committee on Finance recommends the appropriation; and it is strictly according to treaty stipulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LATHAM. I offer an amendment which I submitted yesterday, and which the Senate then ordered to be printed, to insert after line nine hundred and twenty-five:

Provided, That in the event the State of California will, by an act of its Legislature, agree to take charge of and maintain within the State the Indians now within her jurisdiction, to the satisfaction of the President, and relieve the United States from all liability or responsibility connected with the same for the period of twenty years, the sum of $50,000 to be appropriated for the purpose of the President of the Interior is authorized to draw on the United States Treasury in favor of the State treasurer of California for such sum as may be required for the purpose of the President of the Interior to take possession of the reservations and Government property thereon: Provided, The property of the United States Government in the State of California shall be used for the use of the Indians: Provided also, The President reserves the right to take control of said Indians, and terminate the same in the event the State of California shall not take care of and maintain said Indians, or the Governor of California does not annually report to the Secretary of the Interior all matters relating to their condition.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from California if this comes from a committee?

Mr. LATHAM. I will state that it was before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and was reported by me; and I was requested to present it, but not as the act of the committee. It is not often, Mr. President, that my State appears before this body preaching economy. This is one of the instances, and I trust the Senate will encourage this disposition of the representatives of the people of California. The Indians in California have been a constant source of trouble; not only to the people of the State, but to the General Government. I am sorry to make the confession that the amount expended by the General Government for the same since 1846, as reported by the Secretary of the Interior, has not proved of advantage, and that their condition now is discreditable to the General Government, as well as to the people of that State. The main reason for this arises from the fact that we are so remote from the seat of General Government that when the officers who have charge and control of the Indians communicate to the Government here it is three and frequently five months (on account of distance and a multiplicity of business before the Department) until they receive orders or instructions according to the necessities which may arise.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must ask the Senator from California to pause. The hour of one o'clock having arrived, the Chair calls up the homestead bill, which was the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senators will not agree to let me carry this bill, I must, under my motto to postpone all prior affairs, for the purpose of considering the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WADE. I hope not.

Mr. LATHAM. I hope the Senator from Ohio will at least allow this amendment to be considered. It will take but a short time.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I hope that, by general consent, the special order will be postponed for a few minutes, to allow the Senator from California to conclude his remarks.

Mr. LATHAM. I shall occupy but a very few minutes.

Mr. WADE. Very well; I will consent to allow the Senator to go on.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved to postpone the special order, to enable the Senator from California to conclude his remarks. To this course the Chair bears no objection.

Mr. LATHAM. The Indians in California, since 1850, when the General Government took the control of them, have cost on an average $150,000 a year, and that, too, exclusive of what it has cost to carry on the Indian war. In one instance, the General Government has assumed nearly a million dollars of that indebtedness, and there are still some six hundred thousand dollars or seven hundred thousand dollars of bonds of the State of California outstanding, for which there is no prospect of being repaid by the General Government. One source of these wars arises from the fact, as is the case in all frontier States, that there are certain parties who want to speculate out of the Government, and they get up these parties for the purpose of bringing large bills against the General Government. An investigation which is now going on in the Legislature of the State of California shows a most deplorable state of affairs in one or two of the counties where there have been Indian wars, and where they have been gotten up for the purpose of speculating out of the State, and against the policy of the General Government.

Now, if Congress will give the control of the Indians to the State of California, we can manage them. Whenever the Indians themselves get to understand, and whenever the people who are engaged in getting up these wars understand, that the State of California, through its Legislature, has control of them; that the Legislature can send its committees directly among the people and find out whether the wars are justified or not; that the Indians will be really glad, if you will find that you will have no more trouble from this prolific cause; you will have no more of these Indian wars, and the Indians themselves will be well cared for and maintained.

The Government has four reservations there, and the Secretary of the Interior says only one out of these four reservations is properly managed. He also says:

"The other three are conducted in a manner discreditable to the Government."

I beg to show the Senate the previous cost of the Indians in California, as follows:

"For holding treaties with Indian tribes, $50,000; for salary of superintendent of Indian affairs in California, $20,000; for per perquisites and perquisites of the superintendent, $10,000; for traveling expenses of the superintendent and attendants, $1,500; for clerk to superintendent, $1,000; for interpreter, $1,000; for post and postage for the superintendent's office, $500; pay of interpreters, $2,500; furniture for superintendent's office, $500; flag and stationery among Indian tribes, $200; general incidental expenses of Indian service in California, $2,500; preservation of peace with Indians in California, $100,000; for the purchase of land for the Indians in California, $1,100,000; for pay of third Indian agents, $75,000; pay of three sub-agents, $27,000; pay of physicians, $10,000; for the purchase of land for the Indians on the reservations in California, $130,000; and Indian service, (a general appropriation), $1,000,000. The grand total of your Indian expenses, in California, up to and including this fiscal year, is, $1,727,699 06."

You have got a superintendent, you have got three Indian agents, and three sub-agents, all deriving their authority from the General Government, and each independent, in a certain degree, of the other. If a sub-agent sees fit to disregard the authority of the superintendent, the superintendent has no power to remove him, and is compelled to report here; and the result is that from day to ninety days are consumed, and all this to the disparagement and injury of the public service.

The appropriation bill which is now before this body appropriates $50,000 for the removal of Indians alone, and in addition there is a provision to pay your employes, three Indian agents, $3,000 each, and three sub-agents at $1,500 each, and a superintendent at $4,000. In addition to that, you have to furnish these Indians with subsistence—you must give them blankets, &c.—so that you swell up the bill to about one hundred or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars necessarily.

Now, if Congress will give to the State of California, with such restrictions as it deems just and proper, the right to carry out the purposes and objects of this amendment, and an annual appropriation of $50,000, we will agree to take the charge and control of the Indians and remove them from the Government of all California therewith. The Indians in California occupy a somewhat different position from that which they occupy in any other portion of the Confederacy. We have no Indian treaties there. The Indians are not recognized as having any rights, and we do not treat them as predatory in their character, or connected with the missions at the time of the acquisition of the State. It is the duty of the Government, however, to take care of them. They amount in number, it is supposed, to about sixty thousand; and so long as the Government continues the present system, it will find that it will fail of its purpose, and that these Indians will be a source of taxation, amounting to about a hundred or a hundred and fifty thousand dollars per annum. These are the main features. I do not now feel like occupying the attention of the Senate, but will have more to say when I hear the objections. I sincerely hope that the amendment will be adopted, because I know it will be satisfactory to the people of the State, and that in the end the Government will find itself benefited.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the gentleman propose to dispend with these agencies, or are we to pay agents?

Mr. LATHAM. Dispend with them all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will refer to the Senator from Virginia, to whom no motion consent extended only to the speech of the Senator from California, and the Chair must now call up the bill which is the special order.

Mr. HUNTER. Now, I submit my motion.

Mr. WADE. Let us have it understood which bill is under consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The homestead bill. The Chair calls up the homestead bill, the unfinished business of yesterday, at this hour. The Senator from Virginia moves to postpone it and all other orders, with a view to continue the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WADE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose it is well understood, without calling for the yeas and nays to it, that this is to amount to a defeat of the homestead bill. It is precisely the way it was defeated at the last Congress. We were never able to get a direct vote upon it. The Senator from Virginia repeatedly antagonized appropriation bills with amendments, and I think it was a mistake to do so. If a majority of the Senate are opposed to the homestead bill, of course they will postpone it; or if they prefer not to meet the issue directly, they will be able, if a majority combine together, to defeat it by indirectness; but if it has a majority of the Senate in favor of it, they will stick to it. We can never pass it—and all its friends ought to understand that—if we suffer it to be pushed aside by the appropriation and other bills. There is time enough to pass the Indian appropriation bill. The Senator from Ohio is not the other way, but that he would antagonize the bill against every measure until he could get a direct vote upon it. Now, sir, I do trust that no Senator, who is disposed to vote for the homestead bill, will allow it to be pushed aside by any other measure.

Mr. HUNTER. The gentleman supposes I am calling up an appropriation bill to defeat the homestead bill. He is mistaken. I am calling it up to pass the bill. I am against the homestead bill, but still I am not seeking to defeat it by indirectness; nor am I aware that there are any here who desire to do so. It is for the Senate to say whether they will put aside all the appropriations or to consider the homestead bill. I feel it to be my duty to have the decision of the Senate upon it.

Mr. GWIN. I believe that if this motion had not been made, we should have got through the Indian appropriation bill by this time. I do not think there will be twenty minutes' discussion, unless there is on the amendment offered by my colleague. There is but one more amendment to offer, and the bill will be disposed of.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the Finance Committee. If the Finance Committee are prepared to accept the amendment of the Senator from California, I am willing to postpone the homestead bill for half an hour and dispose of the Indian bill. I am favorably impressed with the amendment, but if the committee are opposed to it, and in the event I should be called to debate, I think I had better leave it over a few days, and let us consider it; but if there is to be any debate on that amendment, or on the Indian appropriation bill, I wish to take up the homestead. If the Finance Committee will accept the amendment, and the bill is ready for passage, I think it is a very great improvement, and I am willing then to lay the homestead bill aside for half an hour for that purpose.

Mr. GWIN. I do not see any opposition manifested to the amendment offered by my colleague. As a member of that committee, I am opposed to it.

Mr. PUGH. I understand the chairman is opposed to it.

Mr. HUNTER. I must consider amendments when they come up. I must be a faithful opposer to the amendment, but I must not lose sight of considering the propositions that are offered. Senators will vote as they think right between these bills. If they take up the Indian bill, I hope they will give it all the time that is due to the subject, as my opponent will take long. As I am not willing to commit myself, I do not know what debate may spring up on the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. It seems to me, then, that is one reason why this matter should be postponed, in order to give the Senator from Virginia time to examine the subject. He will be put upon his feet, and he will have to put his opinion on the subject in the Senate and the country; and I am anxious to know whether he does entertain the opinion that this Government has the power, and if it has the power, whether it is proper for the Government to farm out to the different States of the Union the power and privilege of taking care of the Indians within their respective jurisdictions. That is an additional reason why the question should be postponed, in order that the Senator from Virginia may have an opportunity to examine the subject, and then enlighten the Senate and the country with his opinion on the subject. It is a very important subject.

Mr. WADE. Is it in order to debate the merits of these two propositions on a motion to postpone?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state, as that question has been raised several times this session, that during the last Congress it was distinctly determined by a vote of the body that it was not in order to debate the merits of a proposition upon a question in reference to the propriety of postponing it. The Chair is therefore limited to remarks to suggestions or reasons why one piece of business should be taken up in preference to another, the object of the Senate apparently being to dispense with long speeches on the merits when it was simply a question of what bill should be taken up. The Chair has no authority to be governed by that decision of the Senate.

Mr. WADE. I hope the friends of the homestead bill will stand by the bill until we can dispose of it; and I do not think it will take a great while to do it. For my part, I will not postpone it for any other bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The other day, when the Indian appropriation bill was called up, it was pressed upon the consideration of the Senate as being important that it should pass; and that it was in a condition to be passed at once. The issue was made then; and all prior orders were postponed. But after the bill was taken up, and considered a considerable length of time, the chairman, and others interested in that bill, discovered that they were not prepared to go on with it; and themselves asked a postponement of it until to-day. We see that there are indications that the bill will be postponed again, and that arguments are offered; and some are to be offered that are not yet matured. It seems to me they have furnished the Senate with no good reason why the bill should go over; and we should consider the matter that has been before the Senate and before the country for two or three years—the homestead bill—until it be disposed of.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I only rise for the purpose of correcting the statement of facts made by the Senator from Tennessee, which I am confident he misapprehends. It was on my motion, that the Indian appropriation bill was postponed before. It is true that the chairman of the Committee on Finance was not prepared at that time to present all his amendments, but he is now prepared to discharge that duty. The Committee on Indian Affairs has proposed a bill, and I am confident, which I am satisfied would have been disposed of by this time if the bill had been suffered to be further discussed. So far as I know, there is no disposition among Senators on this side to antagonize this bill with the favorite project of the friends of the homestead bill. I am confident that the test of fidelity as between opposing measures is presented to the Senate now, when I think it is entirely uncalled for, and unwarranted, even by any imaginary necessity. I would ask my friend from Ohio to withdraw his proposition to make a test vote on Tuesday afternoon, and postpone for a short time, and without displacing the priority in the order of business of the homestead bill, allow it to be passed by, by general consent, for half an hour or an hour. I think that at that time we shall have accomplished at least the transaction of one piece of business before the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator will allow me, I think we had better take a test vote. Let us know whether we are to go on with the appropriation bill, or go on with the homestead bill. It will be a great accommodation to the Senate. I do not wish to press these measures against the sense of the Senate, after I know what it is. ["Vote."]

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I have no objection to withdraw my proposition; but I thought it would accommodate all sides, and I thought it would be desirable to make that test, I do not desire to interpose as a peace-maker between the parties. I withdraw the suggestion I made.

Mr. BIGLER. I desire to say that, on the subject of the homestead bill, I have paired off with the Senator from Indiana. [Mr. BRIGGS.] I discover that this motion concerns the success of the measure. I therefore shall not vote; nor shall I vote, for that reason, on any subsequent motion in relation to it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I desire to know the basis of the test—between what measures, and on what ground.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved and seconded to postpone the homestead bill and continue the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. This is the question now pending.

Mr. JOHNSON of Arkansas. Do gentlemen mean that the test is whether we are in favor of passing the homestead bill or not, or is it meant as between that and the appropriation bill, which shall have precedence in our consideration? It seems to me we are using a grand pretext to keep the homestead bill out of the way, and to keep the appropriation bill. There is, however, undoubtedly an unusual anxiety here in regard to the homestead bill. The homestead bill has not been fought by delays here, that I know of. I know it could have been kept in the Committee on Public Lands for many months, and it would not have been kept there at all. It was permitted to come forward promptly. It has not met with that kind of opposition here which insinuation seems to throw on this side of the House; and I trust that those on this side of the House and on any other side of the House, who are opposed to the measure, will receive it with that kind of spirit which I think it is certainly entitled to from us: it is not entitled to respect. It has not been met. I am against the homestead, I will say very freely; but I have not interposed that kind of opposition. I say that I am not yet prepared to be brought to a vote upon the homestead bill. I have good reasons for it, which I can state to gentlemen at any time; but they simply effort myself, and nobody else. When the session is to last for many months longer, because there are a few here who are especially anxious in regard to the homestead bill, are the appropriation bills and every other species of business to be compelled to give way to that anxiety which seems to be morbid?

It is said that we cannot go on with the Indian appropriation bill, that the committee reporting are not ready. Why, sir, the amendment under consideration has already been printed; and that, I believe, is the only amendment to be offered to it, that it is thought will lead to debate. I do not think either of the Senators from Ohio do otherwise than seem to imply that they are very anxious that we should go into the consideration of the homestead bill; and to imply that perhaps it is not proceeding as fast as it ought to do. It is not just to this side. They are ready to go on with an appropriation bill. Are the appropriation bills to be again postponed, and the bill made to yield to this favorite measure of theirs?

I do not entertain any respect for this homestead bill. I believe it to be a mere abolition measure, to tell the truth. I believe it is merely to furnish a bonus, as far as the support of the other side goes, to the agents of the Territories, and to induce men to emigrate to the Territories on condition that aid societies will pay their expenses to get there. I say I have no respect at all for the bill when I look at it in that light, and that is the light in which I do look at it. I do not think that the appropriation bill, the regular business of the country—business that has to be transacted every year, and has been every year, from the beginning of the Government to the present time; and which has always, heretofore, had the precedence—ought now to be set aside in every instance for any particular pet measure of any party or class of persons. I hope the Senate will meet the test. I hope they will require that the regular and legitimate business for the support of this Government shall first be done; and I really think we should like to see the course they would take to the regular business of the country whenever it does come up.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish, before the vote is taken, merely to say again that I have paired off with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Toombs] in relation to questions concerning the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the motion to postpone, resulted—yeas 25, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Briggs, Brown, Chesnut, Clay, Clarendon, Cushman, Flick, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Hammond, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Lane, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Powell, Saulsbury, Sebastian, Shuler, Wigfall, and Yates—42.

So the motion did not prevail.

Mr. WILKINSON. Yesterday, expecting to go away this morning, I paired off with the Senator from Texas [Mr. HENKELS]. As he is not now here, I shall not vote.

POLYGAMY IN THE TERRITORIES.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 7) to punish the present polygamy in the Territories of the United States, and other places, and for approving and annulling certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

On motion of Mr. GREEN, the bill was read by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill (H. R. No. 280) to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain is now before the Senate as Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Before the Senator from Tennessee goes on, I wish to test the question again, as to which bill shall be considered. It was taken when the Senate was thin the other day, and the Senator had better hold on to his own bill, which we were going on with and perfecting; and I move, therefore, to postpone this House bill, and take up the Senate bill. I will not say anything on it, but simply ask the yeas and nays, and hope we shall have the vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WADE. I hope the motion will not prevail. We settled the order of proceeding on this subject the day before yesterday, after considerable debate. The question was, whether the Senate bill should be taken up first, or the House bill; and it was determined by a majority of the Senate that they would take up the House bill, and that the Senate bill could be offered as an amendment to it, and it is pending in that shape. Now the proposition is to reverse this order of things, and go back to the confusion we were in before. Here are two propositions—one of them a House bill, on the subject of the homestead—coming up here for consideration; and it does seem to me that it is more respectful to the House and more orderly in business to take their bill and consider it, and proceed with an independent Senate bill, which, if it should pass here, would require original action on the part of the House again. It is unusual; it is out of the ordinary course of business; and it was decided, on deliberation, that we would proceed with the House bill, and the Senate bill shall do it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not think there is any reason why the Senate should throw aside its own measure and take up that of the House. It seems to me there is no discrepant to the House in going on with their own business. I make this motion, thinking that we had better go on with the bill we had under consideration. I am willing, however, that there shall be a vote taken on it without further debate.

Mr. FUGH. There can be no reason for this course other than the desire of the Senator to prevail. I dislike to make the suggestion, but really the circumstances admit of no other explanation than that the object is to keep delaying this matter, and defeat the bill by the alteration of dilatory motions. We have the House bill before the Senate well as an amendment to the House bill. We can perfect either. Let us dispose of the question in some shape.

Mr. BROWN. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that this state of things will occur instantly if his motion prevails. He proposes to postpone the House bill and take up the Senate bill. As the matter now stands, we have the House bill before us, and the Senate bill pending as an amendment to it. Now, suppose he carries his motion, and you postpone the House bill and take up the Senate bill; the Senator from Ohio would instantly move the House bill as an amendment to the Senate bill; so that you simply turn the proposition over.

Mr. FUGH. The difference is, that if we pass this measure it is a step towards legislation; but if we do not pass it, no Senator will make that amendments, we have not progressed an inch.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Finding that there is a difference of opinion, and gentleman think we had better go on with the House bill, by general consent, I withdraw my motion.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.) The Chair hears no objection, and the motion will be considered as withdrawn. The Senator from Tennessee is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I do not wish to speak. I took the floor yesterday because it was the usual time of adjournment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. FITCH], to add to section one of the following proviso:

Provided, That the lands hereafter granted shall be entered only in alternate quarter sections, or in alternate sections, or parts of quarter sections, of land which shall remain to the United States, and not subject to entry under the provisions of this act, shall not be sold for less than double the minimum price of the public lands when sold: That the provisions of this act shall be applicable only to lands subject to private entry at the date of its passage.

Mr. FITCH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. WADE. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I do not want to go into a general argument of the subject; but it confines the bill, I believe, to lands subject to private entry, and also to alternate quarter sections, which, in my judgment, will very nearly destroy the bill. I hope the friends of the bill will not consent to adopt the amendment; and I trust we shall have the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FUGH. The Senator from Indiana proposes more than my colleague says. He proposes to double the price of the other quarter sections. That will interfere with the preemption and graduation laws, and the whole of our present policy in relation to the public lands. We considered that in committee, and deemed it not advisable. We also considered the question whether we should reserve the alternate quarter sections or the alternate sections, and we finally adopted the alternate section system in preference to alternate quarter sections. For these reasons, I shall be constrained to vote against the amendment, although the general principle upon which it stands, as I stated yesterday, commands to some extent my approbation; but on the amendment as it stands at present I shall be compelled to vote in the negative.

Mr. FITCH. I am not strenuous about the application of the provisions of the bill to alternate quarter sections or alternate sections, although I think its application to alternate quarters is preferable; but I am not so anxious that the amendment ought to be adopted, in my estimation, without any modification whatever. The Senator says that raising the price of the alternate sections will interfere with the preemption law. The preemption law is virtually destroyed by the bill itself. Those not entitled to a preemption of course will not be interfered with; and when the land is to be given, it will not be claimed under the preemption act, but under the donation act. Therefore it cannot interfere with preemptions. Still the preemption law is virtually destroyed by the limitation of the provisions of the bill to land now in market, for the purpose, as I remarked the other day, of preventing a pressure being brought on the Government, to purchase indiscriminately, perhaps, all the Indian lands, because they will be valuable to the Government, and it will be to donate them. Limit it to lands now in market, and if it is found in one, two, or three years afterwards, to have operated beneficially, we can extend its provisions subsequently to other lands.

Mr. FUGH. It seems to me the Senator from Indiana has strangely overlooked a fact. The preemption law requires the party to make an actual settlement, to make a claim fortified by affidavit and on settlement; and the claim and affidavit are precisely the same under the homestead bill and under the preemption bill. Under the homestead bill, after having made this affidavit and this settlement, he continues in possession and in settlement five years, and obtains the patent. Under the preemption bill he can obtain a patent on payment of $1 25 an acre any time short of five years after he has made his settlement. If the Senator committee, does not injure or affect the preemption law in any particular. It leaves the settler an option, after he settles, either to avail himself of the provisions of the homestead bill or of the preemption law; but the amendment of the Senator from Indiana destroys the preemption law utterly. It had better be repealed. These were the reasons that governed the committee. That is a point that my friend from Indiana overlooks, that a settlement under the terms of this bill is a settlement under the terms of the preemption bill; the only difference is, that the preceptor can buy at any time. If he does not choose to buy, and remains in possession five years, then his title ripens under this bill.

Mr. FITCH. I understand precisely what the Senator is saying, and I understand that the settlement under this bill is precisely the settlement under the preemption bill in what I intended to allude to before, if I did not do so with sufficient distinctness for his comprehension. It is precisely because the settlement under the two bills is the same, that I say my amendment will not interfere with the preceptor any more than the original bill. No man will preempt land and pay for it when it is to be given to him, and therefore my amendment does not interfere with the preceptor any more than the bill itself. If the land is now buying on the part of the preceptor, if he prefers buying, he will give $2 50; but if he does not, if he prefers to have it donated, as ninety-nine in a hundred will if you give the land, he will not take the land under the preemption act.

Again, if the amendment be adopted as a whole, most of the land which is likely to be claimed by preceptors is already claimed, for it is contained in land now in market at the time of the passage of the bill, and it is not notorious that nearly all the land claimed by preceptors is claimed even before the land is surveyed. The amendment of course does not apply to lands not now in market, because it is already claimed by the title of the act; and to such land; and other land, not surveyed, or surveyed and not yet in the market, will be liable to entry as heretofore under the preemption act.

Mr. PUGH. Does the Senator mean that lands that may hereafter become subject to private entry shall not be subject to the provisions of this bill?

Mr. FITCH. Yes, sir; I propose to confine it to those in market at the time of its passage.

Mr. PUGH. I am not sure of the confinement I supposed. I did not understand that before.

Mr. FITCH. It limits the application of the bill to land in the market at the date of its passage. Of course, it cannot generally interfere with the preemption laws.

Is the question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Benjamin, Bragg, Chiswell, Clay, Clingman, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Hammond, Hester, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Pearce, Polk, Shaulsbury, Sebastian, and Wigfall—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bingham, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Davidson, Dixon, Houston, Hovey, Johnson of Tennessee, Foot, Foster, Gilman, Harlan, Johnson of Tennessee, Latham, Nicholson, Page, Rice, Sewall, Simmons, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, Wilkinson, and Wilson—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. Would it be in order for me now to move an amendment for the entire amendment of the committee—to substitute one amendment for another?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee is still pending. Mr. CLINGMAN. Before my vote is taken on the substitute, I desire to perfect the first section. I will propose to do so whenever it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot determine whether the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi will be in order until he learns something of its character.

Mr. BROWN. With a view of indicating my own well-considered views on this subject, I present this proposition; which I ask may be read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. Brown; which is, to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the laws now in force, granting preemption to actual settlers on the public lands, be and the same be extended to all the Territories of the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, that from and after the passage of this act, the right of preceptors shall be perpetuated: that is to say, persons acquiring the right of preemption shall retain same until the expiration of the term without payment of any land to the United States; but on these conditions: First. The preceptor shall not sell, alienate, or dispose of his or her right for a consideration; and if he or she voluntarily abandons one preemption, and claims another, no right shall be acquired by such claim, until the claimant has first made provision for the original preemption, and that no consideration, reward, or payment of any kind, has been received, or is expected, directly or indirectly, as an inducement for the preceptor to abandon his or her person who shall testify falsify in such case, shall be deemed guilty of perjury. Second. Any person claiming and holding the right of preemption in any land under this act, may be required by the State within which the same lies to pay taxes thereon in the same manner, and to the same extent, as he or she otherwise would be required to do; and in case such lands are sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire the right of preemption only. Third. Absence of the preceptor and his or her heirs for six consecutive months shall be deemed an abandonment; and the land shall, in such case, revert in the United States, and be subject to the same disposition as other public lands.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That lands preempted, and the improvements thereon, shall not be subject to execution sale, or other sale for debt; and no contract, made in reference thereto, intruded in any way to alienate the right, or to embarrass or disturb the preceptor in his or her occupancy, shall be abrogated.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the preceptor may, at any time, at his or her discretion, enter the lands preempted, by paying therefor, to the proper officer of the United States, the Government minimum price.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That in case of the preceptor's death, if a married man, his right shall survive to his widow and children. And the rights of the older children shall cease as they respectively come of age, or when they reach the age of twenty-one years; in all cases the right of preemption shall remain to the youngest child. And in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving no child or children under fourteen years of age, the right of preemption shall cease, and the fee shall inure to the benefit of said father child or children; and the executor or administrator, may, at any time, within two years after the death of the surviving parent, sell said land for the benefit of said infants, but for no other purpose; and the right of preemption shall acquire the absolute title by the purchase, and be entitled to a patent from the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the committee being to perfect the original bill, and the one offered by the Senator from Mississippi being a substitute, the first question is on the one reported by the committee.

Mr. BROWN. I did not know there was a pending amendment to the original bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I take it it will now be in order to move an amendment to the first section of the original bill; and I propose, in the eighth line, to strike out all after the word entitled, and insert the same amendment, which was before moved by me to the Senate bill.

Mr. BROWN. I understood the Presiding Officer to say that there was an amendment pending to the amendment, and that, therefore, my amendment was in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is so informed by the Clerk.

Mr. BROWN. Then how can the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi is a substitute for the entire bill, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BROWN. No, sir; I propose to substitute my amendment for the amendment reported by the Senator from Tennessee, as the Committee on Public Lands. That is the point I make. I am not proposing to amend the original bill at all; but the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It can be made in order by moving to strike out all after the word "that," where it first occurs in the amendment, and inserting what has been read.

Mr. BROWN. That will do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair misunderstood the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi will not be agreed to. It will destroy the principal features and character of the bill; so that I presume the friends of the bill will go against it.

Mr. BROWN. I have no prepared speech on this subject; but I feel that in justice to myself I ought to state now distinctly what my position is, because otherwise my present position may seem to be somewhat in conflict with my past record. At heart, sir, I am not opposed to this measure; in principle I am not opposed to it; but I do not think it wise to enact a law of this kind, and I have, in various modes, indicated that they did not desire or expect me, as their Senator, to vote in its favor. If I was only giving the vote of ALBERT G. BROWN, I should record it in favor of it; but when I cast one of the votes which belong to the State of Mississippi, I must cast it in accordance with the wish of that State, and therefore in opposition to this bill. But, sir, if the friends of the measure could be induced to accept such a proposition as that which I have laid on your table, I would undoubtedly vote for it, and take the hazards of settling the account with my constituents. To the proposition which I have laid upon your table there can, in my judgment, be no reasonable objection.

Sir, what is the proposition? It secures substantially the same benefit to the poor as the bill which either the House bill or the Senate bill secures. If the object be to benefit the settler on the public lands, my proposition reaches that object. It is, that he who settles upon the public land may remain there and occupy the land as he chooses, or he may remain, like the settler on this Government stretched over him protecting him from harm or molestation. Can the settler ask more? If your object really be to protect the settlers on the public lands, the first section of the substitute which I propose does that, and does it most effectually. It removes the limitations to your preemption laws; removes the twelve months' limitation, the two years' limitation, and all other limitations; and says to the settler: "Go upon the land, and stay as long as you choose; whenever you are ready to pay, come forward and pay the Government the minimum price, whatever that may be." It may be two dollars, or a dollar and a half, or a dollar and a half; it may be a quarter, or a half, or three quarters of a dollar, or a dollar and a quarter; but whatever the Government minimum is, you ask him to pay, and to pay only when it suits his convenience. You do not harass him continually with threats of eviction, if he cannot pay. You relieve him from that anxiety which every settler on the public lands feels when he fails to present the money at the land office at the right term—that some more fortunate man, or some man of more fortune, may come and take, his homestead from him.

Sir, I care not what other men feel, what they think, or what they say in regard to this matter. I tell you, and tell the country, what the bone and sinew of the country already know, that your preemption system is a failure, a grand failure. He has been decaying upon the public lands by his flustering policy; he has expended his labor in rearing a little hut in the forest, felling a few trees, making a little improvement, and struggling against the misfortune of the storm, and the drought, and the flood, to find, after having bestowed a year of honest toil, that he has attracted the eye of cupidity. Some man with more money than he, and ten times, I dare say, less genuine patriotism, has come and taken his home and sent him again into the forest, if he can not satisfy him. You relieve him in this presence and say that every instinct of my heart revolts at such results. I am not ashamed to stand up in this presence and say that, by every power vested in me as a Senator, I will protect these poor settlers, if I can not listen to my friends from Texas [Mr. WIGFALL] yesterday with much pleasure when he said poverty was a crime. No, sir; poverty is no crime. Poverty may lead to crime, but in itself it is a virtue. There are more men on the poor list in this country who are honest and industrious than there are in any other proportion of numbers, on the list of millionaires.

Mr. WIGFALL. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. WIGFALL. I should like to know who he calls the millionaires, and to understand you at that point yesterday, and I desire not to be misunderstood. I never pay any attention to newspaper reports myself, but some friends of mine showed me this morning one published over here in Baltimore, the Sun, and were greatly horrified at its statement of my ideas. I wish to put you right on the record. I stated yesterday, as distinctly as I knew how, that labor was capital. It is a long time since I read books on political economy, and I do not remember definitions; but I ask that to be capital which will bring money; that any man who can get money, and his money will always command money; and that bone and muscle and brains are capital, and that any man who has brains, or bone and muscle, is a capitalist to the extent that he is supplied by nature; and if he chooses not to use his brain, or his bone and muscle, he is guilty of a crime; it is an outrage upon those men who do work, upon those who do pay the taxes, that the results of their energy, their enterprise, and their industry, that the money that is made by the sweat of their faces should be appropriated to support pauperism, which is another word for vagabondism; and that another word for crime; and I would not consent myself to pay one dime to support such a man, nor would I vote that the Government should; and I therefore denounced pauperism as a crime. There is no crime in being poor, and still being crippled, if he is sick, that is an exception; there are exceptions to general rules. It is useless to bring in exceptions. I say that brains and bone and muscle are capital, and the man who has them and does not use them is guilty of a crime, and ought not to be encouraged; and still I say that while they are introduced to provide for the poor are imputations on the character of the American people. Now, sir, I did not intend to argue it; I only wanted to put myself right.

Mr. BROWN. I am not going to discuss this

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 98.

matter with my friend from Texas. I wanted to give my generous friend an opportunity to explain what fell yesterday harshly on my ear. What we understand in common parlance by poor men, are not the Lazarus; they are not absolute paupers, inmates of houses of charity; but they are men not blessed with this world's goods. You find them everywhere. Sir, there are more than ten thousand of them in sight of this Capitol to-day. I should, perhaps, not be extravagant if I said twenty thousand; they are poor—so regarded by their neighbors; so understood by themselves; poor, as contradistinguished from the word rich, or even well to do in the world. These are the sort of people who want homes. It may be well enough for gentlemen born with silver spoons in their mouths—I certainly was not—it may be well enough for those who inherit fortunes, to spurn the wants of the poor; I cannot. I came from among the poor. I was one of them; born to no fortune but poverty; I struggled through the earlier years of my life for a way. I recollect the people from among whom I came; and I never hear a taunt thrown to them that I do not feel disposed to say a word in their defense. Sir, they are the bone and sinew of your land. They are the muscle of your Army and your Navy. Whenever you want food for powder, when you want soldiers, they come not from Fifth Avenue, nor from Wall or State street; they do not come from the families of your millionaires. If you want men to stand in the line, and to fight the enemies of your country, to play the soldier, you take them from the class of people to which I have alluded. Sir, there are more than one hundred and sixty acres—those who have settled in my own State, those who have settled by thousands and tens of thousands in the State from which the Senator comes; those who have settled all over the N. W., and spread their acres out from one extreme to the other of our land. These are the men who make up your poor. They do not lack bone nor muscle nor brains; still less, sir, do they lack patriotism.

MR. WIGFALL. I would merely ask the Senator what us he has to say in criticism—will he bill before us grant them land?

MR. BROWN. Yes.

MR. WIGFALL. Then how do you say that the men who formed the Mississippi regiment, who have done these deeds of valor, who have bone and muscle, are men who will be benefited under the provisions of this bill? The men who filled that Mississippi regiment were landholders; they were men of substance; they were men who had the capital that I have spoken of; they were men who supported themselves; they were freemen; they had bought their freehold; they lived on that which was their own, and which they had paid for. They never begged or stole. They were respectable, decent men, and that is the character of the people of Mississippi. They were men who would not go on one hundred and sixty acres if given to them, nor hold them as a gift. You speak of Texas. I say there are no men in Texas who have ever received donations of public lands. We have no paupers there; and we have got no men, at least none who have come into the State since annexation, who have not paid for all they own. I speak in defense of Mississippi as well as Texas.

MR. BROWN. I am much obliged to my friend for defending Mississippi against any supposed assault of mine.

MR. WIGFALL. I really considered it so.

MR. BROWN. The Senator thinks he, sir, I know what belongs to the honor of my State; and it does not sound very kindly for Senators to tell me that I am making assaults on my own constituents. I think, at least, have never charged me with being disrespectful in their friends. I have never done, nor do not belong to Senators from adjoining States to taunt me with being unfaithful to my own constituents. Let them speak for their own States. I have held this language on other occasions; and I have been twice returned to this body, and twice back to the House of Representatives. That my constituents approve of all my views, I do not pretend; but I doubt if they will thank the Senator from Texas and my friend from Alabama for the special guardianship which those gentlemen are assuming for them.

I have said that the bold men, with bone and muscle and brains, were entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of land; and so they are. They bought the right and paid for it. My proposition does not propose to give it to them. I know where the graduation bill came from. It was an Alabama proposition. I recollect that my friend from Alabama [Mr. CLAY] was exceedingly anxious that it should pass. It reduced Alabama lands to twelve and a half cents an acre. It reduced Mississippi lands to that standard very nearly. Gentlemen from the land States at that time were very anxious to have it pass. You, sir, (Mr. FRANKLIN in the chair,) were anxious for its passage. That graduation was next to giving it away. You reduced the price to the lowest standard—reduced it to twelve and a half cents per acre; and I now declare, what all men know, that the graduation bill has furnished homes, in a given time, to more homeless people than all the bills that ever passed Congress. Now, I appeal to Senators whether, under the operation of that bill, men who have bought homes at twelve and a half cents an acre and who are patriotic and have no muscle, brain and muscle and bone, as those who had the means to pay a dollar and a quarter an acre?

Gentlemen speak of men as being worthless, when they cannot buy land at $1 25 an acre, in the paltry little quantity of one hundred and sixty acres. I say that the men who are patriotic men there are in all the States, who would have been entirely unable to buy land at $1 25, and who secured comfortable homes, when we reduced the price to twelve and a half cents per acre. You introduced it with a view to encourage that sort of thing. Men who have never seen the misfortune with which the settler in a frontier country has to contend can have no idea of his difficulties and dangers, his toils, his troubles, and his embarrassments. Why, sir, imagine a man, say in Virginia, or in New York, or elsewhere, into one of the western States, settling down upon a piece of land, with muscles and bones and brains, to earn an honest livelihood for himself, his wife, and three or four children. He sets to work in good earnest to make an honest living. It is not his fault, and certainly it is not his crime, if disease fall upon him. It is no crime of his if the season be unpropitious. It is no crime of his if bankruptcy should overpread the country and destroy the value of his products. Misfortunes of a thousand kinds may break him up at the end of a year—may leave him not only destitute of money, but even a debtor on account of the year's labor. Where is he to obtain the $200 to enter one hundred and sixty acres of land? He has reaped his little cabin, cleared his little spot of ground, sowed it in, and made a crop; and for another crop; and if you will indulge him the next year, or three, or four, or five years, he may be able to pay for his home; but stop him at the end of one year, as your law now does, and the chances are three to one that some man with money, who may have neither muscle, nor bone, nor brain, but who has gold, will come and enter his home and turn him drift on the world. What encouragement had such a man to struggle against the cold charities of your laws?

Mr. President, I am opposed to treating the settler in this way. My proposition does not give the land to anybody. It simply, under proper guards and restrictions, authorizes the man who settles a piece of land to occupy it so long as he chooses to occupy it. Whenever, from any cause, he desires the title, then he registers him to pay for it; but it does not compel him to pay at the end of one year, or two years, or four years. Misfortune may be close upon his heels; death may take its cold embrace his wife and children; he may struggle against a thousand misfortunes;—mark my words—whenever that man makes the land worth more than the Government minimum, and has the money, he will pay for it. That pride to which the honorable Senator from Texas has appealed would tell him to do it. The natural desire of every man to be the owner in fee of his own estate will prompt him to it. A desire to be a landholder, and to be independent, will urge him on. He will work all the more earnestly, and with all the more zeal and energy, because your law does not cramp him either in body or mind. I implore you, sir, not to maintain the harsh rule which compels this man to have the money at a stated day, or be turned out of his home?

Mr. President, there is no use in closing our eyes to stubborn facts. Take up the newspapers from our western States, and what do we find? Half the controversies, half the murders, half the scenes of bloodshed, grow out of this matter of disturbing squatters on the public lands. A man settles down and bestows his labor on a piece of land, and some man with more money comes and buys it—buys it from the Government—the Government thus selling out one man to another, the Government selling one man's home to another, who chances to have more money to pay for it. I am against the system. I am for protecting men in their settlements. My bill does not propose to give the land. It proposes to give the right of occupancy, and to give it upon the man of settled character, who has the money to pay for the soil the price which the Government asks. Then, what do you give? You give the bare chance of selling the land for a number of years. You may lose the interest of the $800, which six percent, is, and six percent, is, for many years; and you take families from among the commoners and put them in the more profitable class of producers. You take them from the purchases of your cities and your towns, where you found them in squalid poverty, and make them independent settlers upon one hundred and sixty acres of land. You take their children out of the streets, where they beg their bread from door to door, and plant them on a piece of land which is yours, and teach them energy, industry and perseverance, by the protection which you give them. The man himself, his wife and his little children, all become independent because they feel that the Government has extended over them its protecting arm and will never allow them to be disturbed. Let misfortunes come; let sickness, with all its blighting and withering influence, fall upon them—there is no heart sickening unless some one comes and turns them out of doors. They feel secure; they feel that the Government has given them security. Such a family will be patriotic. They will be patriotic in despite of all the influence you can bring to bear on them. They will feel grateful to the Government which thus protects them. But if the man stricken by disease, living under a cloudless sky, with no rains descending to fertilize the soil, is heartlessly turned adrift by the act of his Government, and he and his wife and little children come back to seek refuge in some of our cities, can he be a patriot? If you want a soldier, will he shoulder his musket? Ten to one he will say "No; why should I love a Government which treats me thus? Why should I love a Government that gives up its land to be roamed over by bears and wolves, and other beasts, and denies to me, patriot that I am, patriot that I would ever be, the privilege of occupying it?"

But, Mr. President, I did not intend to make a speech on the subject.

MR. GREEN. Mr. President, I give notice an intended amendment which I shall propose at a proper time, when it will be in order. From the questions now pending, I presume it is not now in order to propose any amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not be in order at this stage of the proceedings.

MR. GREEN. Mr. President, I give notice, and I will read it, because I want to make a few remarks on the question now before the Senate, and my remarks will have some little reference to the amendment I intend to propose. My amendment is, to substitute for the whole of this provision,

That the provisions of all the existing preemption laws be, and the same are hereby extended for the time of payment to the space of two years; and that if, at or before the termination of the two years, the preceptor shall elect to pay for any land, the same shall be subject to private entry according to existing laws.

It will be seen at once that this proposes a change in the preemption law. The preemption law now is that that the land must be paid for in one year. This gives two. The preemption law authorizes a preceptor to take possession of one quarter section; and he must pay for all, or forfeit all. My amendment proposes that he may pay for even one quarter of a quarter—which is forty acres—and the rest that he does not pay for falls back, subject to private entry under general laws.

I intend to move this amendment as a substitute for all that has been called a homestead bill. It is better for the country, better for the people, and will result better for the Government. Homestead! That is the popular cry. Who is there that has the power to make a homestead? Not the Federal Government; and all this talk about a homestead in the Federal Congress is a nonentity and an absurdity. The moment that the title passes out of the Federal Government, the land is subject to State laws; and I beg my particular friend from Tennessee to remember, when he talks about making a homestead, how long does it continue? Just so long as the title remains in the United States; and the very moment it passes from the United States to your power, your power over it ceases. While he is in in, it is a homestead. When the title is vested in him, it is subject to State laws; and, under the judgment and execution of Tennessee, it may be sold from him the next day. If Homestead! If the States want homesteads, let them make them. If Tennessee desires a homestead, why does she not pass a homestead law?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. She had one it. Mr. GREEN. Very well, let them execute it.

Mr. JOHNSON. You do. That's all right—own with your own property, and with your own citizens; but with the property of the United States, outside of Tennessee, what business have you to interfere to make homesteads? This Federal Government was created for the benefit and defense of the people. The public land belonging to it is to be administered for the general benefit, to pay the debts and expenses of the Government; and now we have men getting up a proposition to make homesteads, when, if they were any sensible men, they know that the moment the title passes out of the United States we cannot make it a homestead, but it becomes subject to the State laws; and if the State does not choose to exempt it from execution, it may be sold from under your grantees the next day after the title passes away.

Why call it a homestead? It is a misnomer; it is a misuse of terms. Homestead! To secure to a man and his wife and his children a home! Who can secure it? Nobody but the sovereign power over the property. Who is that sovereign power? The moment that the title passes out of the United States, it is the State; and you would do much better if you were to go to the several State Legislatures and call on them to pass homestead laws, and to call on Congress to pass homestead laws is a contradiction and an absurdity.

Again, if you say that giving for five years' possession amounts to a homestead, then I answer, we already have a homestead bill in the shape of the preemption law, which gives one year's possession; for if five years' possession amounts to a homestead, per se one year's possession is a homestead, and we have already a homestead law. Does it secure it to the man, his wife, and his children, against execution, against creditors, against money, against influence? Not one word of it. There is nothing like a homestead connected with the name of it. I will tell you what it is: first, it is a pandering to a vitiated, corrupt public taste; second, it is a demagogic system to court popularity; and third, it is a deception practiced upon the public mind. I use terms just as I wish them distinctly to be understood. Mr. President, I have no motive for anybody; but these are the probable facts resulting from the action. We have now a preemption law that permits any man to go on the public land, occupy it for twelve months, and then pay for it and take his home. I am willing to extend the time of payment to two years; and if he cannot pay for a whole quarter section, I am willing to let him pay for a less amount—forty acres, or eighty acres, or one hundred and twenty acres. Every man may not be prepared to pay for one hundred and sixty acres, although he can do that with $120, for which sum he can buy a land warrant; but he may not be prepared to pay for eighty acres, although he can get that for about thirty dollars; yet he can surely secure his own home of forty acres; and permit me to remark that forty acres of good land will support a good family, raise them in good circumstances, and send them forth in the world as well as ordinary society will justify.

Mr. RICE. He has that privilege now. Mr. GREEN. Yes, sir; and I am willing to give it to him hereafter. Why give him land and propose to make it a homestead? Now, what do we understand by a homestead? A perpetual home or a temporary home—which do you mean? I want gentlemen to speak out, and distinctly inform the country what they mean. Do you mean a perpetual home? Is that it? Or a temporary home? I ask the Senator from Tennessee to tell me a little more, and let me hear you more by it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If the Senator wants me to answer him now, I will do so.

Mr. GREEN. I do. Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Mr. President, so far my views go with reference to the homestead question I am willing to give them over at any other time. What I mean by a homestead is to put a man into the possession of a certain amount of soil that he may call his home; and, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, to forbid the sale of any forced sale or execution so long as the title remains here. Then I proceed upon the idea that if the States have not already provided for it, they will commence the policy where the Federal Government ceases; that they will, by State legislation, secure to each individual the right to have a home, or the best of soil he can get. You may denominate it a homestead—the abiding place of his wife and children—or whatever name you think proper. The advocates of this bill do not assume any power on the part of the Federal Government to come into conflict with State laws; but they assume the title remains in the Federal Government, until the act itself compels with the condition of the law, it is intended to guaranty and protect him in the enjoyment of the land against any debt or contract made prior to the title passing into the Federal Government, and assuming that the States where this land lies and where the individuals are, will pursue the same policy and carry out the same principle of justice. The same popular sentiment that induces the Federal Government to adopt the policy here, will induce the States to take it up and carry it out. That is what I mean by the homestead measure.

Mr. GREEN. He says "the same popular sentiment." That discloses a wonderful amount of information. I understand—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Permit me, in answer to the Senator, to say that the homestead is concerned, that it is very hard for a State or the Federal Government to secure one of its citizens in the enjoyment of that which never existed. There is one thing very clear: neither the State nor the Federal Government can secure a man in the enjoyment of a home, if he never possessed one. If he gets one, it must be subject to the operation of the laws under which he lives.

Mr. GREEN. I understand that, Mr. President. He says, "the same popular sentiment." Here is a wonderful amount of meaning in that. I see why it is that the trees bend to the gushing wind. I see why it is that individuals bow to what they suppose to be popular sentiment. Popular sentiment! Sir, I will stand by the Constitution of the country against popular sentiment.

In answer to the Senator, against the homestead, I will stand up for what is right, even if public sentiment is against it. Now, sir, is it right, or wrong, in this Federal Government, to do this?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. By permission of the honorable Senate, I will answer, assuming any position I may assume here, I do not set in contravention of the Constitution of the United States. I stand here as the advocate of popular sentiment, in conformity with the organic law and the laws that are made in pursuance of it. I believe the homestead proposition is right; I believe it is constitutional; and in standing by it, I believe I stand by the Constitution, and thereby reflect popular sentiment in accordance with its provisions.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I am not taken by surprise by that remark. I had expected the Senator to say as much; and I have no doubt he is conscientious, but his judgment is not well constituted, and the moral affections and judgment are so tempered, when brought to bear together, that when the idea of popular sentiment gets to bear on them, it too frequently warps the one and sways the other. I am demonstrated, and I think, that there can be no homestead made by Congress. There can be an arrangement made for a temporary occupancy; it may be for one year or five years; but as for securing to the occupant a permanent home against the power of execution under State laws is utterly impossible; it is beyond the power of this Government; and it contravenes the express rights of the several States. Such being the case, why call it a homestead? Why not call it a gift? It is no homestead; and adopting that name, and applying it to it, deceives the public; me a little, but it deceives the country and itself. Call it a gift, a donation, a bounty—a bounty upon terms—upon condition that the donee occupies the land for five years; but calling it a homestead perpetuates a fraud on the public; for it is no homestead. The very moment the title passes out of the United States it is subject to State law.

Another question may spring up; and I will mention it in this connection. Suppose the Federal Government should say: "We let you hold it for five years. If you do not want it, you may sell it—sixtieths of one cent." Perhaps, the Federal Government would have that power; but would it be good policy? Would it not strike at the prosperity of all the new States of this Union? The real interests of these States consist in vesting the title in the States, so that they may be able to improve and extend, according to their power, and their disposition. This measure, if passed, at once strikes down your whole railroad system. There can be no further grants to aid in the construction of railroads; because the land will all be gone. It will occur, now, to no tax one portion of the act of injustice to the soldiers of the Revolution; to the soldiers of the war of 1815; to the soldiers in the Indian wars; to whom bounty land warrants have been granted. We have given them; and if you now pass this bill, those warrants will not be of any value to the soldier, or the man who may buy a land warrant when he can go to the land and get it without paying a single cent?

But, sir, what is the object of government? It is to tax the rich in order to build up the poor. I have no prejudice against the poor. I am not one that class myself. But what is the purpose of this Federal Government? Where are its powers derived from? From the States. For what purposes? To regulate our foreign affairs, and certain specified limited domestic affairs. Is there within that the power to give away the public lands to the people for the benefit of another? There is not; and however the Senate may vote, however the House of Representatives may vote, and however the public judgment may pronounce, the truth will stand forever, that this Government has no power to tax one portion of the people to give away to another. Here is an amount of land bought, paid for out of the Treasury. That Treasury is replenished by drawing money from the common mass of the people. It is now proposed to parcel out the proceeds of that purchase, and give to any man who chooses to go and occupy it. What right have you to do that? Wherever Government undertakes to equalize the condition of men, and to tax the most industrious, and the most thrifty, and the most economical, and bestow it on the most improvident, the worst spirit of extravagance, in all such cases you will find that it encourages neglect, idleness, laziness, and waste, while it discourages industry, enterprise, and energy. The greatest object of government is protection. It is the only purpose of government—protection. If the Government is to protect the property of every man shall pursue his own course in his own way, subject only to the law, and that he shall have the lawful result of his own acquisitions. But if laziness is to be rewarded; if worthlessness is to be courted and caressed; if the basest men in the land are to receive an equal dividend with my own exertions, how much will I exert myself, and how much will other people exert themselves? The motive is all destroyed; industry is paralyzed; enterprise is destroyed, and there will be no future progress in this Union. Agrarianism will be the policy—yes, they will want a division every five years. When these five years expire, the worthless men who go on the land and occupy it, when it becomes subject to taxation, as it will, at the end of five years, and when it is sold, will then clamor for another division; and if I should be fortunate enough, or my friend from Oregon who sits before me [Mr. LANE] should be fortunate enough to have a section of land, they will demand that we shall divide with them. What then? Why, perhaps, the Senator from Tennessee will say the popular breeze demands that we should have a second division. Is that to be the rule of this Government? Suppose the popular breeze blows; I say, that whenever the popular breeze sets in a wrong direction, we must meet and repel it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Who are to be the judges?

Mr. GREEN. Good sense and honesty.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Who is to execute that—the people or the Senate?

Mr. GREEN. The Senate—the people sending them here.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I say the people.

Mr. GREEN. I say the Senate, representing the States of the Union. But they may because the popular breeze sets in that direction, therefore you must have a division. I have already shown to you that the moment the first five years expire it is no longer a homestead, it is subject to the State law. Missouri will sell it for taxes. Will not Tennessee do the same thing? Will not Tennessee sell your homestead for taxes? I want the Senator to answer me. Suppose they do not pay taxes; will you not sell the homestead to coerce the payment of the taxes?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. No, sir.

Mr. GREEN. No part of it?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. No, sir.

Mr. GREEN. It is a beautiful state of things—a homestead secured, and no taxes to be derived, and no power to coerce the payment of the taxes. Is that the system that the Senator desires the Federal Government to inaugurate? No taxes to be collected from these landless creatures; but they are to squat upon the public land, be protected by the Federal Government, pay no taxes, perform no duty, subject to no law, subject to no execution!

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The Senator makes his proposition very broad. It seems to me that the Government is generally in a better condition to do without what is due it than an individual is; and if we exempt a homestead from the payment of a debt between man and man in the same neighborhood, it would seem to me that the Federal Government is competent to get along without collecting taxes from the homesteads of its people. I repeat to the Senator, I would exempt the homestead that gives a man's wife and children, and himself, an abiding place, from the payment of all taxes to the Government, State or Federal.

Mr. GREEN. Is that the law of Tennessee?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I say the homestead is exempt from the payment of any description of debt, either to the State or individuals.

Mr. GREEN. I am not talking about what a State can do. I admit that a State has rights which this Federal Government has not. The States may exempt church property from taxation, as they do; they may exempt school-houses, and academies and colleges from taxation, as they do; but has this Federal Government the power to exempt a college or academy, located in any State, from taxation, State or Federal? It cannot do it, and I hope, therefore, the Senator will stop and discriminate, remembering that a State may do certain things which the Federal Government cannot do.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I would ask the Senator if most of the States do not exempt their public buildings, their burial grounds, their churches, and their benevolent institutions from taxes? Is not that the custom in all the States?

Mr. GREEN. True; exactly as my. I say the States have a right to do it, and most of them do; but this Federal Government cannot do the same thing. Can we sell a piece of land, or give away a piece of land, and say it shall never be subject to taxation, and that the party occupying it shall never be subjected to the payment of taxes upon it?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I would ask the Senator if the public lands are now lying in the States are subject to taxation?

Mr. GREEN. They are not subject to taxation, because there is a special compact made that they should not be until they were sold. But for that compact, it might be so; but when they are sold they are subject to taxation.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I would remind the Senator also of the fact, that the General Government gave a large quantity of land to the States in exchange for that.

Mr. GREEN. Yes, sir; we gave the sixteenth section, and in some cases the "thirty-sixth section; we gave seventy-two sections for public buildings; we gave the salt springs, and six sections surrounding them, and various other land grants, and five per cent. of the proceeds, as I have said, for not selling them.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Really, I want to be informed on this subject.

Mr. GREEN. You shall be.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Does the Senator concede that the States have authority to tax the public lands lying within their limits?

Mr. GREEN. When you get through, I will answer.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Has not that power been denied again and again? It has been a matter of agreement in the admission of a State, one of the conditions on which also could get it, that she would not tax the public lands. Has the power to tax them ever been conceded and acknowledged on the part of this Government?

Mr. GREEN. As the Senator is now through, I will answer him. I do not think I can answer him while the Senator is still occupying the floor, proposing to propound other questions. The point that he asks does not affect the point I am discussing. It was a mooted question, a disputed question, whether, in the absence of these stipulations, the States would have the right to tax the lands of the United States. To avoid dispute, it has been uniformly adjudged at the time of the admission of the State by the contract to which the Senator from Louisiana called my attention, always without a single exception; but in no instance has Congress attempted to put the title to land, and then say, after it has parted with the title, it should be exempted from taxation—in no single instance; nor can the Senator from Tennessee point one out. The lands are subject to taxation, if the State chooses to tax them, the moment the title passes from the United States.

I venture another thing: that the Senator from Tennessee is wrong in the statement of his own State law. They cannot exempt any part of the property of the citizens of that State from taxation, whether it be the school and the poor-house; and I say that an individual owning property there will be taxed, and that wherever property is taxed it is liable to be sold to coerce the payment of that tax. That is true in every State. It is true in Missouri, in Iowa, in Illinois, in every State Congress that I have ever examined.

Why, then, call it a homestead? What do you mean by a homestead? Is it to be perpetually secured; to be beyond the reach of execution under State laws; to be protected to the Lazarini as long as the worthless creature may choose to do so, and then to be thrown upon it? Is that the homestead? If the States choose to pass such a law, let them do it; but this Federal Government has no such power. It can dispose of the public land, and in disposing of the public land it must do it for the public good, and as a prudent, conscientious trustee, it must keep an eye as to what will be best for the public at large.

What is best for the public at large? We are now receiving from two to two and a half million dollars annually from the sales of the public lands. The Federal Government has no other source of revenue. Our duties upon imports are hardly high enough. I am free to admit, for I would readily this day vote to raise them—hardly high enough to afford revenue sufficient to pay the debts and expenses of Government. Under this state of things, shall we throw away $2,500,000 annually? To whom does it go? Who receives the benefit of it? Will it improve Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Illinois—any of the western States? It will not. It will prove the direct opposite; and why? The graduation law was passed, and, as has been well said to-day, it has proved a curse rather than a blessing. It has done more harm than good. The principle of the graduation law is just in itself, and yet the practical effect of it has been injurious. That law requires the individual, after settling upon land, to pay for it at a certain price and keep it a certain time before he shall have a title, just as this does. What has been the practical result? The result has been this: a few rich men hired hundreds and hundreds of worthless perjurors to go upon the public lands, swear to occupancy, stay there a little while, and then run away, and transfer the title to the capitalist; and it has proved a means of monopoly. Instead of poor men having the benefit of the law, men get the whole benefit; and I venture to say that this will be the same. If, unfortunately—if to the curse of our country, and to the misfortune of her institutions—this bill should ever be enacted into a law, it will result in a monopoly in the hands of Eli Thayer and such men, sending the creatures of their emigrant aid societies, and taking up thousands and thousands of acres of land, living there until they can wear out and transfer them all to Eli Thayer and his associates. It will result in the same thing, and the Senator's colleague admitted in his speech.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I beg to correct the Senator.

Mr. GREEN. The Senator certainly admitted it would result to the benefit of anti-slavery societies.

Mr. NICHOLSON. No, sir. I said the natural course of things would carry more men from the free States into these Territories than from the slave States. That is what I said on that point.

Mr. GREEN. The Senator admitted that it would hasten it, in his speech, directly, if I recollect a single word that he said. Why, sir, how are these things to be done? Suppose this bill should become a law: who are to reap the benefit of it? I do not see it. Twenty years ago, together his two hundred or five hundred associates; he will pick them up in the streets, and they will go out with a stipulation, a contract, that the land they settle upon they shall transfer to him at the end of five years, and he will pay their expenses out, and thirty dollars by way of a second-class passage. When they get out there, they will locate and pick out all the best lands. They may stay upon them until they comply with the law, and the moment the title is vested in them, worthless vagabonds that they are, they will transfer it to Eli Thayer—I do not mean "Mr. Thayer"—I shall use his name to illustrate my argument, for I mean no disrespect to him. The only reason why I use the name of Thayer is, because his name has been connected with the emigrant aid societies, and I do not wish to say that I use it with any disrespect towards him; for I do not know him, and know nothing of him; but I use it by way of illustration. I say that some prominent, secure, intelligent men may get up societies to locate land under this bill. They are doing it under the graduation law, and the graduation law, which was intended as a benefit to the new States, has proved a curse to all the States. It would be much better if we never had had a graduation law.

But let me say this remark: while they may thus defeat the purpose of the law, not securing homes to anybody, but securing a large monopoly to a few rich men; while they make use of tools to accomplish their purpose—and it is done under the name and the popularity of a homestead, but is in reality no homestead at all—and they pass and redact one moment, we shall see that every man worthy of a farm can get it under existing laws. We have land now to twelve and a half cents an acre. Forty acres will support a family of industrious people well. I know a family—I know a family of five or six children in the family—all raised, educated, and put forth in the world in admirable order—and they are now as good citizens as you can find in the United States—on forty acres of land. Forty acres will cost, at present prices under the graduation law, five dollars. The man that cannot raise five dollars to pay for it is unworthy to have it. Your talking about exempting it from execution shows the ignorance of any man who promulgates such an idea. Nobody but a State can do that—not the Federal Government. I say, therefore, Mr. President, give the lands to the States, and if the States want homesteaded bills, let them pass them. They are the judges of their own interests, of the causes of their own prosperity, and of the means that will conduce to their public good, than we are.

If you want to rid yourselves of the subject of public lands, give them to the States in which they lie, and I will vote for it; and if Tennessee wants homesteads, let Tennessee have homesteads; if Minnesota wants homesteads, let Minnesota have homesteads; but to talk of this Federal Government making homesteads, which it has not the power to do, looks to me very improper. Homestead! We cannot exempt it one single minute after the title has passed out of the United States. If giving people the privilege of occupying the lands five years in a homestead, then the privilege of occupying them one year is a homestead. I am willing to extend the privilege of occupying the land. That will be the homestead for two years. Your bill is only a homestead for five years. Yet you deplete the Treasury; you dam up the channels that flow into it; you create a necessity for increased taxation; you tax the mass of the people to benefit a few; you create a necessity for aid and are forced out by the stimulus of a society gotten up for speculation. There is no doubt of the fact that some good men will avail themselves of the benefits of this law. Almost any law has some of the good results for it. Under the graduation law some good resulted; but in the aggregate, in the majority of the cases, the fraudulent entries did more harm than good; and instead of settling up the States, (for I live in one of those States, and have seen its practical operations,) it has put the land in the hands of a few men. I saw in my own county an infamous man who gave money and hired indebted individuals to go on the land, take an oath, acquire it, get the title, and in six weeks transfer it to him; and he has more than twenty-five hundred acres of land, when he ought to have a single acre. He has held up for an exorbitant price just as speculators will under this bill, if it should ever become a law.

It will not inure to the benefit of the man who occupies the land; it will result to the benefit of the speculator; and the result will be that large, immense tracts of land will be sold into the hands of the few, not to be sold until exorbitant prices are obtained. It is an injury to the poor; and as a friend of the poor, and of one of them myself, I protest against any such bill. It is not a benefit to the poor. The poor, proud in spirit, indomitable in energy, ask no largesses from the Government. The Senator from Tennessee says protect him. It is all he asks; do that, and if you need his energies, if you need his sinews, if you need his power to assist in the defense of the Government, let him have his land. How would you occupy your land—he who will pay for his home, and feed like an independent freeman. How would you feel if you occupied a farm given to you? Would you not feel humiliated and degraded—a man like a serf? And so with all men. And nobody will go to occupy it, as a general rule, except those who are hired, sent out for purposes of speculation.

Again, sir, what are the materials that are to be sent out? You cannot go to Richmond and hire men to go out there; you might go there and beat your drum, and hold up a flag for six weeks, and not get five men to go. You cannot go to Charleston and get men to go. You may go through the like process there six weeks, and not get five men. But if you go to New York and Boston you will get your thousands of your thousands. Who are they? Men intent on destroying the institutions of the South—men determined to destroy the rights of the South. Where do they go? It is their policy—as Mr. Thayer's was—to colonize Virginia, Missouri, Tennessee, Arkansas, or any other State where they can make an inroad.

Now, Mr. President, I want peace in this Government, I want harmony in this Government; and I will never vote in a manner which will give encouragement in any shape or form to a procession which may result in the destruction of that peace. I say that this is fraught with mischief. It will do no good to the North, but it will gratify a vitiated taste. It will encourage them to do what, in their hearts, they desire to do, but which, in their judgments, they ought to pause and not do. There is a community of feeling between the North and the South; there is a community of interest between the North and the South; and hence there should be no alienation; there should be no war of one upon another; yet, if this bill should pass, you will find them intent on colonizing Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Arkansas, and every State that has any land. They have already attempted it in Virginia, because Virginia lands are cheap lands. They have been forfeited, and sold for the taxes over the mountains.

Let us come to a common honest understanding. Let us not encourage a spirit which is fraught with so much danger. There is a point beyond which even the South, humble as we are, conceding as much as we do, will not go; there may come some event to make us take a stand. A threat would be beneath the dignity of a statesman. It would be beneath the dignity of a Statesman. I will order on the stump. I make no threat; but facts ought to be understood; truths ought to be considered; and these are some of the truths and some of the facts to which we should turn our attention.

You will observe that in the course of my remarks I have simply made the statement that this is an homestead, and that Congress can make no homestead—it belongs to the States alone to make it; second, that it destroys all hope of building railroads hereafter by way of alternate-section grants; third, that it takes the lands away from every friend of the railroad system ought to be against this bill; third, that it destroys the value of all the land warrants, and therefore the friends of the old soldiers ought to be against this bill; fourth, that it is a change in the policy and character of the Government, and that it is a change to give what nothing but honest industry ought to obtain; and finally, that it is encouraging the worst sentiment under the influence of emigrant aid societies, which will sap the foundations of the Government, and in the end destroy it. It is in this light that I regard this bill, and I think that I may approach no difficulty. I know there is a state of public sentiment there too sound to be influenced by the emigrant aid societies; yet I desire to avoid the strife and the contention that will arise from it, and I think that we ought to be aware of any kind of influences that will produce strife, when we can avoid it. It is not just in itself, because it can result in no good. If you say it will settle up the lands, I answer that it will not. The graduation act did not settle up the lands. The land is not yet settled; but speculators have taken hold of it, and have large amounts, which they hold subject to a large price, rather than the Government price, which has been fixed by Congress; and so it will be under this law. It will not be a matter for the benefit of the speculators.

Mr. President, I have been as brief as I could. Perhaps, before the subject is closed, I may take occasion to make some other remarks. I look on this as a serious matter, because it is laying the foundation of a principle which, if followed up hereafter, will run and break down the Government. If the rich are to sustain the poor, if the Government is to divide out the property every five years—for this runs only five years—we had better end the Government at once; we had better put up with the present rule, and never mind it, and blow it up at once, than to live to see the consequences of that agrarian doctrine which will result and take root from this plant, and grow up until it overshadows us all. I hold, if there ever was a principle so destructive in its tendency, this is one of those things; and it is time for us to stop. It is said that it is popular. What if it is? The populace has called for heads, and they were severed; posterity deplored the event. The populace cried against the act. The world was shocked, and the world's voice condemned the act as a crime. Popular! It is the duty of every politician to cultivate an honest public sentiment, not to pander to a vitiated one. They may it is popular. Who made it so? They say that our people are indoctrinated in it. Who indoctrinated them?

I shall resist wrong and this agrarian principle as long as I occupy a place in this Chamber. I do not recognize the right of this Government to give away, as a gift, a single dollar to a single man under any circumstances whatever. We have rights, for questions of expediency, of reward, and we have a right to fix compensation. We have a right to give pensions as an encouragement for service; but as a mere gift, we have no right to give away the public lands. They fall into the hands of speculators. It does not secure a homestead to the man who occupies the land, because the moment the five years expire it is subject to State law; and even before then it is transferred by agreement to the speculator or capitalist, who sets about placing men on the land. In every aspect, therefore, in which you can view this measure, it is wrong, radically wrong, and sooner or later the public judgment will so pronounce.

Mr. MASON. There are some communications on the table which require an executive session, and there is other executive business. I move, therefore, that we proceed to the consideration of the Executive Session.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The honorable Senator will allow me to take the floor. I desire to say a few words on this question. I will give way to his motion.

Mr. MASON. We can devote some time in executive session.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I merely wish to get the floor.

Mr. MASON. Certainly, I yield for that. I withdraw my motion for the purpose of allowing the Senator to take the floor.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President.—THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GWIN. I desire to submit an amendment which I intend to move to the homestead bill; and I move that it be printed. The motion was agreed to.

GOOD FRIDAY.

Mr. MASON. I move an executive session. Mr. PUGH. Before that motion is put, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday. To-morrow is Good Friday, and I think the persons of at least a few denominations of Christians regard it as a day of importance. I think we have never sat on that day before.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Saturday has been set aside for finishing the business of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PUGH. Then I amend the motion, so that we adjourn to meet on Saturday.

Mr. IVERSON. I did not hear the Senator from Ohio give any reason for his motion, and its effect will be to put aside the private bill day, which I thought was a day which the Senate will adjourn over until Saturday. Let us go on with the Private Calendar to-morrow.

Mr. PUGH. We have given diligent attention to the Private Calendar, and, besides, a great many private bills have passed in the morning hour. To-morrow is a day which the Senate will adjourn on, at least, regard with peculiar solemnity, and it is a day on which the Senate has heretofore adjourned. I think it is proper to do so.

Mr. IVERSON. I do not very much whether there are or are not Christians in this body, at any rate. [Laughter.]

Mr. PUGH. I expect to attend church myself to-morrow.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator from Ohio has said we have paid diligent attention to the Private Calendar. If we have, very little has been accomplished. I think we have not passed a dozen bills yet; certainly, I do not think there have been twenty private bills passed since the commencement of the session. There are now one hundred and fifty or more bills on the Private Calendar, and if we lose one day it is an important matter. The day is not a day which we have to have their bills disposed of. I think it is much more important that the business of these claimants should be attended to by Congress, than that we should give attention to the ceremonies of the church. That is my opinion. Besides, Senators are not obliged to come here to-morrow if they do not choose to do so. They can go to church and then come here. There will be plenty of time to attend to both duties. I hope the Senate will not adjourn over.

Mr. PUGH. That would be a good argument for sitting on Sunday; but I think we had better not.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would not interpose any objection to any Senator attending church. I think most of them need it, [laughter]; but, however much they need it, I think there is an obligation they owe to the country which ought to demand their attendance here to-morrow. The House has already, by a vote, assigned Saturday for the consideration of business relative to the District of Columbia. We are the exclusive legislative body for the people here. The Committee on the District—and I would not say a word, but I notice that the chairman of the committee is out—have reported on variety of bills, in which the people here feel, and have a right to feel, a deep interest. If this motion is carried, it carries it over until Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is, that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Saturday.

Mr. HAMLIN. I thought it was to carry over both days; and I thought that was an additional reason why we ought not to adjourn over to-morrow, if it also adjourned us over Saturday. Then I say, that justice to private claimants who have reports on their cases demands that we should act on those reports—either vote for them or against them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. HAMLIN. I call for the yeas and nays. It is a gross outrage.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Benjamin, Cameron, Clay, Fitzpatrick, Fox, Hale, Hammond, Hays, Johnson, Arkansas, Kennedy, Lane, Sumner, Pearce, Powell, Fugh, Rice, Sebastian, Shields, Sumner, and Wigfall—21.
NAYS—Messrs. Briggs, Chalmers, Claiborne, Clement, Clark, Clingman, Colman, Dixon, Doollittle, Durkee, Frazer, Fitch, Foster, Green, Grimes, Grant, Hamlin, Harlan, Hendricks, Johnson, Johnson of Tennessee, Nicholson, Salisbury, Stewart, Simmons, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—29.

So the motion was not agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MASON. I now renew the motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Thursday, April 5, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Thomas H. Stockton. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ALICE HUNT.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, there is upon the Speaker's table a bill from the Senate for the relief of Alice Hunt, widow of Thomas Hunt. I ask that it be taken up, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, received its first and second readings, and was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1861; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

CHANCE OF REFERENCE, ETC.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the Committee of Ways and Means was discharged from the further consideration of the following papers; and they were disposed of as indicated below:

The remonstrance of one hundred and ninety-six citizens of Davis county, Iowa, against the abolition of the franking privilege—referred to the special committee on abolishing the franking privilege.

Memorial relative to an appropriation of money for the transportation and settling of the Indian tribes on their reserves east of the Cascade mountains—laid upon the table.

The following executive communications were generally referred to the Committee on Territories:

A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in reference to an appropriation for the compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly of Utah.

A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to an appropriation, and the accounts incident thereto, connected with the Territory of Utah;

Copy of a letter of the Comptroller to Hon. A. B. Greenwood, dated March 22, 1858, relative to the affairs of the late Almon W. Babbitt, secretary of the Territory of Utah; and Sundry other letters in relation to the Territory of Utah.

RAILROAD LAND IN ALABAMA.

Mr. CLOPTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill extending the provisions of the sixth section of the act granting public lands to the State of Alabama, to aid in the construction of certain railroads, approved June 3, 1850, to the North and South Alabama railroad; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE COOLIE TRADE.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask leave to report, from the Committee on Commerce, a bill prohibiting the Chinese coolie trade by American citizens in American vessels.

The bill was read by its title.

Mr. ELIOT. I move that the bill be postponed for three weeks from this day, and, with the report, be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON. I understood that the bill was to be introduced for reference only, or I should certainly have objected to it.

Mr. ELIOT. It has been referred. I hope the gentleman will not object. I have been trying for weeks to get the bill before the House.

Mr. BRANCH. Do you propose to refer it? Mr. ELIOT. I propose to postpone it to a day certain. It has been referred.

Mr. BRANCH. I must certainly object to the receipt of anything except for reference.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he should let the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ELIOT. No, sir; it makes no appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. You can move to discharge the committee from its consideration at some time.

Mr. ELIOT. I think there can be no objection to having the bill postponed for three weeks. The House can then do what they choose with it. I desire to have the report printed. I think that gentlemen will then see that it is a subject which calls for immediate action by Congress. I hope no objection will be made.

Mr. BRANCH. I do not feel inclined, without knowing anything about the bill, to consent to its being placed in a privileged condition. I feel great dissatisfaction at all times to object to the introduction of bills for reference; but this is quite a different matter.

Mr. ELIOT. If gentlemen object when they read the report, I will not press the bill when it comes up.

Mr. BURNETT. How does this bill get in?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts takes unanimous consent to introduce the bill.

Mr. ELIOT. It comes from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURNETT. I object to the printing of the bill. I am opposed to it.

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman from Kentucky yesterday offered several resolutions, which were not objected to on this side of the House.

Mr. BURNETT. I am opposed to the principle of the bill, and will object, unless the gentleman can get it in the regular order.

Mr. ELIOT. It is already in.

Mr. BRANCH. I hope the gentleman will not claim that the bill has been admitted, for I was listening to the reading of the bill by its title under the impression that it was to be introduced simply for the purpose of reference, and, therefore, I made no objection. But if gentlemen are going to take advantage of our inattention in this way, to bring bills before the House, I shall feel it my duty to object to everything out of order at this time forth.

Mr. ELIOT. I am not disposed to take advantage of anybody. I only wish to bring the bill before the House in such a way as to get action upon it. If it goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, there it will rest; and I do not wish it to be disposed of in that way.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill cannot be received.

NAVIGATION OF THE EAST RIVER.

Mr. BARR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill authorizing the formation of a company for the improvement of the navigation of the East river at Hell Gate, New York, for the purpose of reference.

Mr. TRAIN. I object to everything out of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. PATTON, a clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, notifying the House that that body had passed a bill of the House entitled "An act (H. R. No. 940) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York;" and also notifying the House that that body had passed a bill (S. No. 249) for the relief of Samuel J. Henley, and a joint resolution (S. No. 23) in relation to the minister from Japan, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House; and also notifying the House that it had ordered the printing of the following documents:

Resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, concerning duties on imported merchandise;

Resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, relative to the removal of obstructions in the Delaware river;

Resolution concerning the establishment of a Government foundry in New Jersey;

Resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, relative to the public lands;

Resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, for the improvement of navigable waters on the Atlantic coast;

Resolution of the Legislature of Iowa, for additional mail facilities;

Resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, in reference to pensioning the soldiers of the war of 1812;

Resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, relating to treaties for the surrender of fugitives from labor;

Resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, in relation to duty on tobacco; and Resolutions of the Legislature of Kentucky, in reference to the enlargement of the Louisville and Portland canal.

PENSION BILL.

Mr. HOWARD. I move that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill (No. 66) giving pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and printed.

Mr. ELIOT. I object to everything out of order.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I call for the regular order of business.

POLYGAMY IN UTAH.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 7) to punish and prevent the practice of polygamy in the Territories of the United States, and other places, and disapproving and annulling certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah; on which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. NELSON] resumed his floor.

Mr. NELSON continued his argument, interrupted by the adjournment yesterday, and finished it, in support of the bill as reported by the committee. [A report of his whole speech will be found in the Appendix.]

objection I have referred to, but which, under the rules of the House, I am not permitted to state, constitutes a sufficient reason with me for voting in the negative.

Mr. COBB said: Mr. Speaker, I give my vote with great doubt. If I err at all, I have the consciousness that I err upon the side of morality. I vote in the affirmative.

The vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HASKIN. I desire the gentleman will yield to me to make a motion for the postponement of the further consideration of a special order fixed for this day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HASKIN. I move that the further consideration of the resolutions relative to the public printing, reported from the Committee on Public Expenditures, and which was set down for this day, be postponed until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

JAPAN MINISTER.

Mr. BURLINGAME. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate Resolution No. 23, in regard to the minister from Japan.

There was no objection. The joint resolution read a first and second time, and on motion of Mr. BURLINGAME, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

CONTENDED ELECTION.

Mr. COBB said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. SHERMAN. There can be no higher question of privilege than the one I submit to you, into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I insist on its being put.

Mr. SICKLES. I desire to present to the House some papers in reference to the contest for my seat upon this floor, between Mr. Williamson and myself, in order to have them referred to the Committee of Elections. Before they are referred, I ask that a portion of them, which I have marked, may be read. It will be remembered that, on the 21st of March last, this House passed a resolution requiring Mr. Williamson to serve upon me a particular statement of the grounds upon which he asserted his claim to my seat. On Saturday last I received from him a paper purporting to be such a statement. The paper is substantially a mere repetition of the petition heretofore presented to the House and, of course, if the House did not require something more to be served on me than a mere rehearsal of the contents of that petition, it would not have required him to serve a further paper. I hold his notice in my hand. I have prepared a specification of the objections to that notice, showing its insufficiency and the impossibility for me to take issue upon it, or to proceed to take testimony upon it. I desire to have this paper read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit whether this is a question of privilege. It is a matter for the Committee of Elections.

Mr. SICKLES. It touches the right of a member to a seat upon this floor; and therefore, it is a question of high privilege.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see how, in this incidental way, we can go into the validity of this notice.

Mr. SICKLES. I wish the House to know the character of the papers I submit; and then to have them referred to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the reference.

Mr. SICKLES. There are portions of the papers that I deem it material should be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object to the reading of the papers. It will unnecessarily consume the time of the House. Let the papers go to the Committee of Elections; and when it is proper to bring the matter before the House for its consideration, that committee, which has the power to report at any time, will submit its report.

Mr. SICKLES. The papers are not voluminous. I desire the nature of the objections made, as well as the character of the notice, to be understood by the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think that it is proper to have the papers read at this stage of the proceedings. I object.

Mr. SICKLES. I have the right to have the papers read. I insist that they be read as a portion of my speech.

Mr. HURNETT. It seems to me that the proposition is one of the highest privilege. It touches his right to a seat upon this floor. Even leaving that point out of view, we have the right to have a paper read which it is proposed to refer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman is entitled to have the paper read.

The Clerk, read as follows:

In the matter of the Third Congressional District.

Anno J. Williamson, contestant,

against

Daniel E. Sickles, sitting member.

Know all men, that notice that upon the paper served upon me by your friend on Saturday the 31st ultimo, pointing out the various errors and omissions of said election, and of said contest, required by the resolution of the House of Representatives, passed this ultimo, and upon the exhibit for the purpose of which herewith submitted, I should apply to the Committee of Elections on Thursday, the 5th of April, instant, at eleven o'clock, a. m., at the Capitol in the city of Washington, or at any other place where the parties can be heard, for an order requiring you to make your statement more particular, specific, and certain; and in default thereof, that all the averments of your statement be taken out as inadmissible, insufficient, and immaterial; and that each order shall first state further notice shall be given, and that the law relating to the investigation shall be construed, and also what further time shall be allowed the parties, or either of them, for such notice and the answer thereto, and for the further filing of the statement by the contestant, and the House of Representatives may deem just and proper. I wish you please take notice that a particular reference is made in the annexed exhibit A to the portions of my statement deemed deficient.

D. E. SICKLES.

To ANNO J. WILLIAMSON, Esq.

NEW YORK, April 2, 1860.

EXHIBIT A.

In the matter of the Third Congressional District of New York.

Anno J. Williamson, contestant,

against

Daniel E. Sickles, sitting member.

The undersigned, Daniel E. Sickles, a Representative in Congress from the State of New York, respectfully represents:

That, on the 21st of March ultimo, the House of Representatives, by resolution, required Anno J. Williamson to serve upon the undersigned, within ten days from the passage of said resolution, a particular statement of the grounds upon which said Williamson contests the right of the undersigned to the seat of Representative for the third district of the State of New York;

That the undersigned was also, by said resolution, required to answer such notice within twenty days thereafter;

That, in accordance with the parties were allowed sixty days to take testimony upon the issues thus joined;

That, on the 24th of March ultimo, the said Anno J. Williamson, by a newspaper called the "New York Herald," published in the said city, printed an article in the editorial columns of said paper, of and concerning, said controversy, and in which paragraph of which paragraph of which paragraph from any and all persons, which would enable said Williamson to support the allegations in his petition presented to the House on the 21st of February ultimo, which paragraph is in the words following, to wit:

"In the mean time, all parties interested in this case, on behalf of the contestant, are invited to compare the statement of Alfred Mitchell, Esq., attorney at law, whose office is at No. 220 Broadway. The contestant feels confident that he will be able to show that the statement of Mitchell is untrue in his petition; but, at the same time, he begs to say that he will be obliged to his friends and the citizens of the district to give him their aid and assistance in this contest. If he can get at all the facts, so as to be able to lay them before the House of Representatives at the time of the trial, he feels confident that there will be no hesitation on the part of that body to do justice to the third congressional district."

The undersigned waited in the city of Washington until Thursday evening last, 28th ultimo, to receive the said notice from Mr. Williamson, but not receiving the same, and having occasion to go to the city of New York, the undersigned informed the chairman of the Committee of Elections, Hon. JOHN A. GILMAN, of his intention to be acknowledged by the House of Representatives, and authorized and requested Mr. Gilman to receive and acknowledge the same on his behalf.

That on the evening of the 21st ultimo, in the city of New York, it being the last day upon which notice as aforesaid could be given, and not having received the same from Mr. Williamson, the undersigned sent to Mr. Williamson's place of business to inquire whether he intended to serve any notice upon the undersigned, and if so, that he would wait said five o'clock, p. m., at the office of the city clerk, for the service of the same.

That soon afterwards, the counsel of the said Williamson, Alfred Mitchell, Esq., and another person, came to the undersigned, and requested that he stop the undersigned from pursuing to the particular statement of the grounds of said contest, required by said resolution to be served as aforesaid.

That the said paper is substantially a repetition of the contents of the petition of the third ward, and is, on the behalf of, and Williamson to the House, containing only vague, indefinite, and general allegations;

That the undersigned is not so much as sufficiently definite in show that they, or any of them, are material; that no issue of fact can be framed upon them; that the said Mitchell, Esq., is not so generally true in his admissions or denials of an equally vague and sweeping character;

That said statement charges that many illegal votes were polled, but does not give the name of our illegal voter; That the election took place on the 3d day of November, 1858;

That the poll-books containing the names of all the persons who voted at the several places where the polls were held in said district, are, now, under the care of the clerk in the office of the county clerk of New York;

That either the said Williamson has no information or knowledge of any illegal votes having been polled, upon which he can base a charge against the undersigned, or, else, having such knowledge or information, he conceals and withholds the same from the House;

That said Williamson should be required either to abandon charges which cannot particularly specify, or else to disclose the particular names of the persons who were designated to ascertain whether they are true or not, and thereupon to take issue upon them;

That the said Williamson charges that frauds were practiced by the inspectors and canvassers, in all the election precincts in the several wards comprising the congressional district;

That the fifth wards of the city, in writ: the first, second, third, fifth, and eighth, are embraced in the third congressional district;

That the first ward contained five election precincts; the second ward, three; the third ward, two; the fourth ward, the fifth ward, six, and the eighth ward contained eleven election precincts, in all of which polls were held;

That the first ward was divided into two election precincts, and also three canvassers—officers duly elected or appointed, and authorized by law to act, and who did act in the election;

That although the statement of Mr. Williamson charges generally upon the eighty-four inspectors and the eighty-four canvassers, yet in specific act only twenty-eight inspectors embraced within the said congressional district, various acts of fraud and criminal misconduct in and about the election, and in the canvassing, and in the counting of the votes were lost to the said Williamson, or guarded by the undersigned, in consequence of the misconduct charged, to the injury of the undersigned and to the injury of the voters received by the undersigned;

That the twenty-eight election precincts embraced within the said congressional district, only two precincts, namely: the third and fourth precincts of the first ward, are particularly specified in the statement of the undersigned; the proceedings contained in the contestant's statement, although the charges are made in general terms as to all the precincts, are not alleged how many votes the contestant, or the sitting member charged, by any illegal act done in the said third and fourth precincts of the first ward;

That it is held by the contestant that his officers, marshals, and other persons in the service of the United States, and then stationed at or near the said third district, voted illegal at said election, but the name of no one of said pretended illegal voters is given, nor is it stated in what election precincts such votes were polled;

That it is stated by the contestant that he was induced by the agents of the undersigned to deposit their ballots for him, yet no such agent is designated, nor is the name given of any person who was induced to do so, nor is it stated what such vote was deposited;

That it is said that inspectors, whose duty it is to receive the ballots, and to count the ballots, defrauded the contestant of ballots cast for him, and counted ballots for the sitting member which were not given to the sitting member; yet of the fifty-four canvassers no charge is made in a grand way, not one is designated;

That it is alleged that canvassers, whose duty it is at the close of the polls to receive the ballot boxes from the inspectors and to count the ballots, defrauded the contestant out of ballots cast for him, and counted ballots for the sitting member which were not given to the sitting member; yet of the fifty-four canvassers no charge is made in a grand way, not one is designated;

That it is alleged that many persons voted more than once at said election; but it is not alleged in which of the many precincts this occurred, nor is the name of any person given who voted more than once;

That the undersigned has no knowledge or information of any of the fraudulent occurrences thus vaguely mentioned, and that he is not so much as sufficiently definite in show that they, or any of them, are material; and does not believe, that any such misconduct was committed by any of the inspectors or canvassers or other persons charged in the statement of the undersigned, so far as they are imputed to the undersigned, or to any persons employed or authorized by him, are without foundation and wholly untrue; and that the undersigned has no knowledge or information of any illegal vote put, obtained for, or received by him at said election; but that, on the contrary, the said Mitchell, Esq., and another person, were wrongfully defrauded of many votes at said election, as he will be in due time particularly able to prove.

D. E. SICKLES.

CLERK OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, 2d April, 1860.

the Senate bill No. 84, for the Pacific telegraph, largely reducing the amount to be paid by the Government. We do not desire to have them printed, so that gentlemen can read them, before we shall ask the House to act on them.

There being no objection, the report was received, and the amendments and the Senate bill ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF KANSAS.

Mr. GROW. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact, that to-morrow and Saturday will be private bill days, and that on Tuesday next, the bill for the admission of Kansas will come up in order. I believe there are no special orders to prevent its being taken up. I want to give notice that on Tuesday next I will ask a vote on that bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is giving some notice. I should like to know if there is any validity in it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; it is a mere notice of his intention.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Because I will object to any special order.

Mr. GROW. The bill will come up regularly on Tuesday.

THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The rules were accordingly suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WASHINGTON, of Maine, in the chair.)

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that House bill No. 338, to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes, to authorize a loan, to regulate and fix the duties on imports, and for other purposes, be taken up for consideration. I do not expect to have a vote taken on this bill for two or three weeks; but I wish simply to have it taken up for consideration. I hope there will be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Ohio as asking the consent of the committee to lay aside the bills having precedence of this, and to take up this bill.

Mr. BRANCH. Is it in order for the gentleman from Ohio to ask to lay aside all the bills in a body? I make the point of order that he must make a separate motion to lay aside each.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks the consent of the committee to his proposition.

Mr. BRANCH. I object.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I move to lay aside the annual message of the President. I will move to lay the bills and resolutions aside, one by one, until we reach the tariff bill. I only desire to reach the bill in order, and we might as well do it by a single vote.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from North Carolina might as well withdraw the objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not intend to press a vote on the bill, but I wish simply to reach the bill and let it stand before the committee.

Mr. PHELPS. I have this to say to my friends: that there are a sufficient number of members in the House desirous of having the tariff bill taken up for consideration, to take it up; and it is, therefore, useless for us to consume time by requiring a vote to be taken on laying aside each bill that precedes it on the Calendar. I think the better course would be to let the bill be taken up at once by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that course will be pursued.

Mr. BRANCH. I do not think the fact that there is a majority of the House in favor of passing this bill, or of taking it up, is by any means a sufficient reason for our jumping over the rules, or dispensing with the usual order to motion of the gentleman from Ohio, because I was opposed to reaching the bill, to taking it up, or to acting on it in any way at all; but if I stand alone upon this side of the House, I will not persist in that objection.

Several MEMBERS on the Democratic side of the House. You do not stand alone.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I shall object, if the gentleman does not.

Mr. BRANCH. Then I persist in my objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for a vote upon my motion without further discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. All discussion with regard to the priority of business is out of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I know that, and I am not going to discuss the question. I merely wish to ask the gentleman who is at the head of the Committee of Ways and Means how many of his appropriation bills are yet in the committee undischarged? The gentleman will see the object of my question. I desire to press those bills first.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no appropriation bill standing ahead of this bill upon the Calendar. There are some four or five after it; but we can at any time make those appropriation bills special orders, and that will place them in advance of this bill.

I will say further to the gentleman that I do not propose to press a vote upon this bill for at least three weeks, so as to allow ample time for the discussion of it. I shall propose to make the remaining appropriation bills special orders one by one. I now insist on my motion to lay aside the first bill upon the Calendar.

Mr. BRANCH. I move that the gentleman from Ohio whether it is as his purpose, when the bill is reached, to make it a special order?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not intend to move to make it a special order. If we reach it in its order, I will leave the committee; but if it will not prevent a majority of the House from making the appropriation bills special orders, at any time, one by one. I propose to do that; but, meantime, this bill will stand in order before the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to make one more question of the Chair. It is this: I have not the Calendar before me, and I do not know, therefore, what bills precede this one; but I desire to know of the Chair whether, if they are now passed over, and this bill is taken up, that will not make this bill the first order of the day?

Mr. SHERMAN. I admit that a majority of the House can make the appropriation bills special orders. They cannot make this bill a special order. That would take a two-third vote. But, as between the bills that precede this—not appropriation bills—and this bill, will not the taking up of this bill postpone all the other bills until it is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that if this bill is taken up by the committee it will be before the committee until it is disposed of, and no other bill shall be made a special order, and thus take precedence of it.

Mr. SHERMAN's motion was agreed to.

The next business on the Calendar was a resolution directing the Clerk to remove the present session from the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make the same motion in regard to that—that it be laid aside.

Mr. WINSLOW. I desire to ask the gentleman when it is his business to call for action on the tariff bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. At any time when the committee desire it, if they will indicate any day I have no particular wish in regard to it.

Mr. SHERMAN's motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRANCH. I would inquire if motions to set aside bills are debatable?

Mr. SHERMAN. They are not.

Mr. BRANCH. Does the Chair hold that they are questions relating to the priority of business?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so holds, and it has been the practice of the House so to regard them.

The next business in order was a bill granting pensions to the officers and soldiers of the war with Great Britain of 1812, and those engaged in Indian wars during that period.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that that bill be laid aside.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to know under what rule the Chair decides that that bill be laid aside on the state of the Union, a gentleman has no right to take the floor now and discuss that bill?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion is made to postpone the consideration of this bill, and questions in reference to the order of business are not debatable, by a special rule, and under the uniform practice of the House. The question is upon laying aside the bill, the title of which has been reported.

Mr. BRANCH. I shall call for a division upon that, and for tellers, in order that we may see who is willing to set aside the old soldiers, in order to get up a tax bill. [Laughter.]

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BRANCH and BERTINOT were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—aye 30, no 38.

So the bill was laid aside.

The following resolution and bills coming up in their order, were then severally laid aside, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN:

A resolution deprecating the example which has of late years obtained, by the practice of the subordinate officers of this House of appointing ex-members of Congress to inferior places within their gift, as derogatory to the dignity of the House and calculated to impair its influence with the country.

A bill to establish an assay office in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri.

A bill to provide for a superintendent of Indian affairs for Washington Territory and additional Indian agents.

An act in relation to the assignees of bounty land warrants.

A bill to enable the trustees of the Blue Mount College to preempt a certain quarter section of land, and for other purposes.

A bill to provide for the public printing, binding, engraving, and lithographing.

A bill to reduce the expenses of the Post Office Department.

A bill to suppress the unlawful collection and delivery of letters.

A bill to provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in certain criminal cases.

A bill to divide the State of Pennsylvania into three judicial districts, and to establish a district court to be holden in the city of Erie.

A bill to authorize district judges of the United States to assign one of their districts in certain cases.

The following bill will come up in its order.

A bill (H. R. No. 338) to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes; to authorize a loan; to regulate and fix the duties on imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the bill which I proposed to take up for consideration. I move that the first reading be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOVEJOY obtained the floor.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. It is now four o'clock, and if the gentleman from Illinois will give way, I will move that the committee rise, and let the gentleman start fresh in the morning.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I will yield, if it is the wish of the committee. It is immaterial to me whether I am on or in the morning.

Mr. ADRIN. I move, then, that the committee rise.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that to-morrow is private bill day, and the gentleman will have an opportunity of going on with his speech then.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I prefer to go on now.

Mr. LOVEJOY then proceeded to address the committee upon the slavery question. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. HARDEMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. HATTON. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. WELLS. If the gentleman from Georgia does not desire to go on this evening, I would like to occupy the seat as I have some remarks which I desire to submit.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I have no objection, if it is the understanding that I shall have the floor when the House next resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. VAN METER. I object to the result is to be to have this committee continue in session two or three hours, with only half a dozen members present.

Mr. BRANCH. Subject without qualification. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Wadsworth, of Maine, reported that the committee had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly House bill (No. 388) to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes, to authorize a loan, to regulate and fix the duty on imports, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BRIGGS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COVODE. Will the gentleman withdraw his motion a moment? I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am willing to accommodate the gentleman a moment. I will hear him.

Mr. COVODE. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. BRANCH. I hope no gentleman will endeavor to transact any business now.

Mr. COVODE. I am instructed by a special committee to make a report to the House.

Mr. BRANCH. I object.

Mr. COVODE. The gentleman has no right to object. It is in the privilege matter.

Mr. FLORENCE. A motion to adjourn is a motion of higher privilege than any other.

Mr. BRANCH. The motion to adjourn is a privileged motion.

Mr. MILES. I beg the gentleman from New York to withdraw his motion. To-morrow is Good Friday, and a great many members are exceedingly unwilling to sit to-morrow; and I beg the gentleman to allow me to offer a motion that when the House adjourns it adjourn until Monday next.

Mr. FLORENCE. And on Good Friday we can pass a great many private bills, and do a good deal of good. I believe to-morrow is objection day.

Mr. BRIGGS. I insist on my motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at five o'clock, p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

Friday, April 6, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. Guale. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I present the memorial of Hon. Daniel S. Dickinson and other citizens of Binghamton, New York, praying for the passage of an act directing a term of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the northern district of New York to be held at that place, and a petition of Horatio Ballard and others, of Cortland county, N. Y., praying for an act directing the circuit and district courts of the United States to be held at Binghamton, New York. In connection therewith, I desire also to present a statement made by the clerk of the circuit court for the northern district of New York, in a letter addressed to the Hon. Charles B. Stowes, of the House of Representatives, communicating some facts on this subject; and also a statement touching the number of counties, and the population of the several counties interested in having a court held at that place, they containing some four hundred thousand people; also a report in which is contained a sketch of a map and certain statements bearing on this subject. I move that they all be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of Joseph Wilson, a surgeon in the Navy, praying that the surgeon of the Navy may be allowed an increase of pay; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BINGHAM presented the petition of William Fairfield, a soldier in the war of 1812, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. KENNEDY, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate an original deed from the United States senator, in 1815, to Abraham Hines and Matthew Hines, for a lot in the city of Washington, bought by them at a tax sale of the Government.

On motion of Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the memorial of the legal representatives of Thomas Nelson, an officer in the military forces of the Government, for a house destroyed by the military forces during that war, and to be allowed the compensation pay to which he was entitled.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOOLITTLE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 381) to provide for holding the circuit court and district court of the United States at Binghamton, in the State of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Jeffrey T. Adams, late clerk of the United States court for the Territory of Minnesota, praying to be allowed the compensation contemplated by the act of 26th of February, 1853, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 220) for the relief of Anson Dart, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 369) for the protection of the fisheries upon the Potomac river in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

STEVEN'S RAILROAD REPORT.

Mr. LANE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to inquire into the expediency of printing two hundred copies of the report of the late General Stephen, in explanation of a southern route for a Pacific railroad, for the use of Messrs. Suckley and Cooper, the naturalists of the expedition.

ISLAND OF SAN JEAN.

Mr. LANE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to communicate to the Senate the report of Henry R. Crocker, Esq., regarding the facts and occurrences connected with the occupation of the island of San Juan.

WILLIAM F. BOWLEY.

Mr. HALE. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up, for passage, Senate bill No. 373. It was reported by the Committee on Claims yesterday, and the Senate will give me their ear for about two minutes, I think they will pass it. It is in behalf of an old man, whom many Senators may have met about the city, walking on two crutches, nearly eighty years of age. His name is Bowley. He was reduced to this state of infirmity in the service of the United States on a national vessel; but not being an enlisted sailor, he does not come within the pension law. The committee have reported a bill to give him the small sum of $500, in full for his injuries. I move that the bill be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 373) for the relief of William F. Bowley was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to allow the sum of $500 to William F. Bowley, for severe personal injuries received by him while employed by the United States on board the frigate Congress, which rendered him a cripple for life.

Mr. HALE. I think I am justified in moving to increase the sum to $800. That was the sum originally asked; and I think that was the judgment of the Committee on the Claims, who had the subject under consideration. But, for fear it might not pass, they put the bill at the small sum of $500. The old man now stands at your door a cripple, and he has been so for years, from injuries received in the service. I move the amendment, and I ask the chair to refer the Committee on Claims to give his views upon it.

Mr. IVERSON. The committee had this case under consideration in three aspects. The old man asked some compensation for a machine he had invented and obtained a patent for from the Government. He alleged that the machine was in the use of the Government, and that they ought to pay some compensation for it. He also claimed, and found that his patent expired in 1830. If the Government used it, they had a right to use it after the patent expired; and therefore we declined to give compensation—although it was a very valuable invention, and no doubt the Government has derived some benefit from it. He also asked compensation for injuries sustained in the employment of the Government. The fact was, the old man was employed on the frigate Congress, at the navy-yard at Washington city, and fell from a scaffolding into the hold; timber fell on him, and he has been a cripple ever since. He came before the committee, and I do not think I have ever seen a case that appealed so strongly to the sympathies of Senators. He is in a very bad condition, and has been so for many years, growing out of the injuries received on that occasion. He has now grown a very old—over eighty years of age—and is in very poor; and he asks Congress to allow him a pittance for the residue of his days. I was in favor, myself, of allowing $800, which the committee allowed in another case to a man injured at the navy-yard, and who was a very young man, very much under circumstances like these. Some members of the committee, however, said, "Perhaps if it were put at a lower sum it would more readily pass." But I am satisfied he ought to have $800, and I am very willing to vote for the amendment which the Senator from New Hampshire has proposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES PORTERFIELD'S REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. DURKEE. The Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 443) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased, and to be reported to the Senate, and recommend its passage. I ask that it be put on its passage now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to cause to William Kinney and Thomas J. Michie, executors of the last will and testament of Robert Porterfield, deceased, a number of warrants, equal to six thousand one hundred and thirty-three acres of land, according to the usual subdivisions of public lands, in quantity not less than forty acres, to be by them located on any of the public lands which have been or may be surveyed, and which have not been otherwise appropriated at the time of such location within any of the States or Territories of the United States, and the State of Ohio. The price shall be $25 per acre, to be appropriated according to the directions contained in the last will and testament of Robert Porterfield, deceased, in the same manner and for the purposes directed in regard to the lands which were lost by those legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. POLK. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if this bill is in pari materia with Senate bill No. 186, for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield.

Mr. DURKEE. It is the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

OLIVIA W. CANNON.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I shall not be here on next private bill day, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 98, for the relief of Olivia W. Cannon, widow of Joseph S. Cannon, late a Commodore in the United States Navy. The bill has been reported by the Committee on Pensions favorably. Mr. Cannon was in the United States Navy under Commodore Perry, during the last war with Great Britain. In 1855 or 1856 Congress passed an act giving the widow a pension of $100 per annum. The bill now asks for an extension of it during life or widowhood. The services of her husband were meritorious, and the committee have reported in favor of extending the pension during life or widowhood. I ask that the bill be taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 98) for the relief of Olivia W. Cannon, widow of Joseph S. Cannon, late a shipman in the United States Navy. It proposes to continue to Olivia W. Cannon, for her life, or during her widowhood, the pension at the rate allowed her by act for her relief reported August 16, 1856.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. W. LANDER.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up bill No. 284, for the relief of F. W. Lander. I do so for the reason that Mr. Lander is about to leave, within a few days, in the service of the Government, for the central portions of the continent, and I think we ought to settle this matter before he goes. I ask to have it taken up, and decided one way or the other.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 284) for the relief of F. W. Lander was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to audit and settle the account of F. W. Lander, for services rendered and expenses incurred by him in making a reconnaissance for a railroad from Puget Sound to the Mississippi river, in 1854 and 1855; but the amount named is not to exceed $4,750, which is to be in full consideration for his services and expenses.

Mr. WILSON. This bill has been before the Committee on Military Affairs, and been reported by the unanimous vote of the committee twice. It is sustained by letters from Captain Humphreys, and I think, and the committee thought, this amount was justly due, and ought to be paid. The bill puts it in the hands of the Secretary of War to settle the claim on equitable grounds. I hope the bill will be allowed to pass, and that Mr. MASON. Will the Senator tell us what authority the expense was incurred? I am uninformed.

Mr. GRIMES. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator from Iowa has anticipated me. The reading of the report will give the information.

The Secretary read the report of the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, made at the last session.

Mr. MASON. I understand, from the reading of the report, that this gentleman made a survey for a route for a railroad somewhere in Washington Territory, without the request or employment of any officer of the Government whatever. Subsequently, it seems, was brought to the notice of the Government, and they have entertained it in some form, and paid him a sum of money for it; but the question is, whether it is expedient or wise to encourage this sort of proceeding. I cannot vote for it. I can see no equity or merit in it of any kind.

Mr. POLK. I prefer that the bill should lie over. I think bills on the Private Calendar should not be taken up out of their order; and the reading of the report does not strike me very favorably. Perhaps I do not understand it, but I would prefer to examine the case a little.

Mr. WILSON. The reason why I called up the bill at this time was this: I understand that Mr. Lander is to be ordered from the city in a very few days. As the matter has been pending before Congress for some time, it seems to me it might be better settled, in justice to him, in some form before he is called upon to leave the city in the public service. That is the reason I called it up. The bill leaves the matter with the Secretary of War to be settled. By the statement of Captain Humphreys, the sum of $4,750 is due him. This bill limits it to that sum, and that leaves it to be settled by the Secretary of War upon equitable principles. I think it ought to pass; but I do not wish to press the matter in the face of opposition.

Mr. POLK. I only made my remark for this reason: I feel bound to vote against this bill as it stands now. Perhaps on further examination of it, I may change my opinion; but it strikes me, as said by the Senator from Virginia, that this thing commenced at the mere motion of Mr. Lander. In the first instance, he incurs expense, and then one branch of Congress calls for his report, and it is published; and now there is a demand for payment. It seems to me it is a bad precedent, to prefer that the bill should lie over. I am in favor of these explorations, and perhaps, on examination, I shall not object to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator objects to the third reading of the bill to-day, it must lie over.

Mr. POLK. I do.

Mr. WILSON. The bill has been taken up for consideration; but if the Senate does not wish to consider it now, I am willing that it should be passed over.

Mr. POLK. I will not insist on the objection, if the Senator is anxious to have it brought forward; but I cannot vote for it as it now stands.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to have the bill settled in some form.

Mr. MASON. I object to the third reading of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill having received its second reading to-day, if objection be made, it must lie over.

Mr. MASON. I object.

W. F. ZANTZINGER'S SURETIES.

Mr. HARLAN. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 177) for the relief of John R. Nourse and others.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to release John R. Nourse from the effect of a judgment obtained against him by the United States in the circuit court for the District of Columbia, as one of the sureties of William P. Zantzinger, late a purser in the United States Navy; and to release the said Zantzinger of all claims of the United States upon that judgment as against him.

Mr. MASON. I ask for the reading of the report, if there be a report on the bill.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator merely asks, I suppose, some reason for taking up this bill out of its order. I consented, when the Senator from Iowa asked me to allow it to be taken up, because, under the circumstances, I thought it proper that it should be. It is a good way off on the Calendar, and may not be reached regularly next week, or possibly next month. It is a case of his character: Nourse was one of the sureties of Zantzinger, who was a purser in the Navy during the war with Great Britain; and in the celebrated case of the sloop Hornet by the British fleet, it became necessary to throw everything off the ship, to save her and lighten her, and the purser's stores were thrown overboard, by order of the commander. The accounting officers allowed, under a previous act, a portion of the amount, but they rejected some portion of the account, and a judgment has been rendered in favor of the United States against Zantzinger and his sureties. Zantzinger is dead, but it has gone against his estate and against the sureties. Nourse is one of his sureties, and execution is now, I understand, in the hands of the marshal of the district of Washington, against him, and his property is liable at any moment to be sold and sacrificed. It is a just case. The testimony before the committee was conclusive to their mind that the purser ought to have been allowed a larger amount for the property thrown out of his order, and during that chase, and to the extent of the amount of this judgment, which I think is about two or three thousand dollars. We therefore propose that he be released from the judgment. It is a case of some emergency, and therefore I consented to let the bill be taken up out of its order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the reading of the report called for? As the Senator who called for it is not now present, it will not be read, unless some other Senator desires it.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. WIGFALL gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a joint resolution to continue the light-ship at the entrance of the harbor of Galveston.

CHICAGO HARBOR.

Mr. DOUGLAS. A joint resolution has come from the House of Representatives, not on the Private Calendar, simply as to the expenditure of an unexpended balance of appropriation for the light-house at Chicago, and the protection of the pier, at the end of which the light-house was built. It is merely a transfer of appropriation of the unexpended balance. I ask that it may be considered now.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 11) providing for the manner of expending the balance of appropriation "for repairing the works and piers in order to preserve and secure the light-house at Chicago, Illinois," which had been reported adversely from the Committee on Commerce. It provides that the unexpended balance yet remaining of the appropriation made the 3d of March, 1859, "for repairing the works and piers in order to preserve and secure the light-house at Chicago, Illinois," shall be expended in repairing and improving the harbor of Chicago; but this is not to interfere with so much of the appropriation as may have been already required by the Light-house Board for repairs, in order to secure the light-house; but it shall be expended in accordance with this requirement.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELI W. GOFF.

Mr. IVERSON. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, the Chair will call up the Private Calendar.

The bill (S. No. 113) for the relief of Eli W. Goff was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It will be a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Eli W. Goff, late inspector of customs for the district of Vermont, $3,500, for expenses actually incurred by him in his efforts faithfully to execute the revenue laws of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEE AND JOHN DEATHRAUGE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 87) for the relief of Lee Deathrauge and John Deathrauge, or their legal representatives. It proposes to correct erroneous land entries heretofore made by these parties, and to grant them the land on which they have actually settled, on their surrendering the patents heretofore issued to them, with a deed of relinquishment to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID MYERLE.

The bill (S. No. 118) for the relief of David Myerle, was read the second time.

Mr. MASON. This claim of Myerle is one of very long standing here; and it has been very much debated and litigated, and resisted, I know, by a great many members of the Senate, who are better informed about it than I am. The information I have of it has been derived during these debates; and, unless some reason can be given, as far as my vote is concerned, I shall vote against it. It is a large claim—over forty thousand dollars—which has been depending for thirty or forty years, I think; thirty years, certainly.

Mr. IVERSON. I hope the report will be read. It was drawn up by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY,] who is on the Committee on Claims, and I think it is rather liberal.

Mr. MASON. I think, in the absence of that gentleman, the claim had better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill having received its second reading to-day, if objection be made it cannot be read the third time.

Mr. MASON. I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the bill lies over.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

The bill (S. No. 130) for the relief of William Wallace, of Illinois, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the allowance to William Wallace of an increase of pension, at the rate of two dollars per month, commencing on the 16th day of September, 1858.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH SPEAR.

The bill (S. No. 123) for the relief of Elizabeth Spear was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension list the name of Elizabeth Spear, widow of Thomas Williams, late private in Captain Jernison's company in the Creek war, at the rate of half pay proper, commencing on the 17th day of April, 1858, and to continue during her life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NANCY M. GUNSBALLY.

The bill (S. No. 124) for the relief of Nancy M. Gunsally was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Nancy M. Gunsally, widow of Lyman M. Richmond, deceased, late private and musician in Company G, first regiment Michigan volunteers, in the war with Mexico, upon the pension list at the rate of half pay proper, commencing on the 1st of January, 1859, and to continue during her life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. GENERAL MACOMB.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 67) granting a pension to Mrs. Macomb, widow of Major General Alexander Macomb.

Mr. PUGH. I think we have passed a bill of that character once during this session; and if so, this bill ought to be laid on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that this bill has been passed by the Senate as an amendment to another bill. The Chair will, if there be no objection, lay it aside. The Chair hears no objection.

JOHN PEEBLES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 125) reported from the Court of Claims for the relief of John Peebles.

Mr. POLK. I ask that the bill may lie over on account of the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Davis]. I do not know what interest he may feel in the bill, but a gentleman who is interested in it spoke to me about it.

Mr. IVERSON. I can state the reason. The Court of Claims gave a judgment for only twenty or twenty-five dollars. Since then the claimant has adduced some additional evidence. He now asks that amount to be increased, and the Senator from Mississippi, if interested at all, desires to offer an amendment to the bill to that effect. I think it very proper to let it lie over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the bill may be passed over. The Chair hears no objection.

MICHAEL NOURSE.

The bill (S. No. 126) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Michael Nourse, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Michael Nourse of $2,597 31, as a compensation in full for his services as acting Register of the Treasury, at various times between the 16th of February, 1830, and the 12th of May, 1847.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN ROBB.

The bill (S. No. 127) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of John Robb, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to John Robb of $2,476 73, as a compensation in full for his services as acting Secretary of War, in the years 1842 and 1853.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MOSES NOBLE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 128) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Moses Noble.

Mr. CLARK. There is a House bill for the relief of that same individual, which has passed that body this session. It is No. 253 on the Calendar. I move that the House bill be substituted for this, so that we may have a final disposition of the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the bill receive its second reading, and then it can be disposed of.

The bill was read the second time.

Mr. CLARK. I move to lay that bill on the table, and to take up the House bill, so that if we pass the House bill, there will be an end of the matter.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. C. C. No. 12) for the relief of Moses Noble.

It provides for the payment to Moses Noble, agent for the brig Good Hope, and the schooners Delta, Jaeger, Sardine, Five Sisters, Commonwealth, and Two Brothers, for the benefit of the persons entitled thereto, the sum of $1,704 68, for failing between July 1, 1857, and January 1, 1858, entitled in the fishing season of the year 1852.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARK. It is necessary now to move to indefinitely postpone the Senate bill, so as to get it off the Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will lie on the table and never be called up.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BOCHANAN, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 81) for the relief of Elizabeth M. Cooke, widow of Major James H. Cooke, late marshal of the district of Texas; and

An act (S. No. 302) in relation to the return of undelivered letters in the post office.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FOANEY, announced that the House had passed a bill (No. 543) for the relief of Margaret Whitehead.

The House read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

A bill (H. R. No. 242) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 26) constituting Macon, Georgia, a port of call for the time being, for the purposes therein specified, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House ordered, on the 26th of March, 1860, the printing of the report upon the meteorological observations accompanying the report of the Commissioner of Patents.

Also, that the House had ordered, on the 26th of March, 1860, the printing of an thousand copies, in addition to the usual number, of Governor Stevens's final report of the exploration and survey of the northern route for a Pacific railroad.

ASBURY DICKINS.

The bill (S. No. 129) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Asbury Dickins, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the allowance to Asbury Dickins of $1,393 88, for his services as acting Secretary of the Treasury, at various times, between the 24th of April, 1829, and the 31st of May, 1833, $3,693 37 for his services as acting Secretary of State at various times between the 16th day of August, 1833, and the 30th day of November, 1834, and $294 16 for his services as chief clerk in the Treasury Department, from the 21st day of June, 1831, to the 7th day of August, 1831.

Mr. IVERSON. The Committee on Claims reported an amendment at the last session, but did not report one this session. I propose to offer the amendment which was proposed at the last session. It is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby authorized and required, to ascertain the amount of compensation to which the said Asbury Dickins is entitled as chief clerk in the Treasury Department, and late chief clerk in the Department of State, for the time he discharged the duties of chief clerk in the Treasury Department, Secretary of the Department of State, by appointment from President Jackson, the same compensation as was then allowed by law to the head of that department, deducting therefrom the compensation received by the said Asbury Dickins as chief clerk of either of those Departments, during the same time, and the balance of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

I will make a short explanation of the amendment, and the Senate will decide whether they will adopt the amendment or take the original bill. Mr. Dickins was formerly chief clerk in the Treasury Department and in the State Department, and during the administration of General Jackson and also possibly during that of Mr. Van Buren, while thus acting as chief clerk, in the absence of the head of the Department, he was appointed temporary Secretary of the Treasury, and Secretary of State, and discharged the duties. He went before the Court of Claims with his petition, asking to be allowed the compensation of the Secretary of State and Secretary of the Treasury for those services, and the Court of Claims allowed him the whole amount of both salaries, giving him the salary of Secretary and chief clerk also.

That was in conformity with decisions made by the circuit court of the United States for the District of Columbia and the Supreme Court of the United States; but the Committee on Claims thought that was not fair; that, as Mr. Dickins had discharged the duties of Secretary of the Treasury, the probability was that some other man had discharged the duties of chief clerk, and therefore he ought not to have more than one salary. They therefore propose to give him the higher salary, but deducting the amount which he received for the lower salary. That is the amendment. If that is satisfactory to the Senate, they will pass the amendment. If they want to allow him the whole amount of both salaries, they can reject the amendment and pass the bill. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia why it is that he amends this bill in that particular, and has allowed two other bills in the same description to pass without amendment?

Mr. IVERSON. No such bill has passed. Mr. PUGH. Two bills passed within the last ten minutes—one for the relief of Michael Nourse, and one for the relief of John Robb, giving them the pay of the higher office. In one case the party was acting as Register of the Treasury, and in the other as Secretary of War. If the amendment be made to this bill, I shall move to reconsider those bills, and put them all on the same footing.

Mr. IVERSON. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that they escaped my notice at the time. If this amendment is adopted, the principle settled by the Committee on Claims; and if my attention had been called to them, I should have moved, of course, to amend those bills; but I did not hear those bills read, in fact.

Mr. PUGH. I do not oppose this amendment. I agree with you; but after that has passed, I shall move to reconsider those other bills for the purpose of amending them also.

Mr. IVERSON. That is very proper. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in; the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL NOURSE.

Mr. PUGH. Now I enter a motion to reconsider those two bills I mentioned. I shall not ask for its consideration now. I want the motion to be entered to reconsider the bills Nos. 126 and 127.

Mr. IVERSON. My recollection is, that amendments were introduced by the Committee on Claims to all these bills; but it was at the last Congress when this question was decided by the committee, and I do not remember whether any amendments have been reported to those bills at this season. They can be very soon drawn up by the clerk. The same principle precisely is involved.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Poor in the chair.) The Senator from Ohio moves to reconsider the vote passing the bill for the relief of Michael Nourse.

MR. UGHL. I will not ask to have the vote on that motion to reconsider taken now. The bills may lie on the Calendar until next week, and I can draw up an amendment, or the Senator can perfect it.

MR. IVerson. I simply ask whether there is already an amendment among the papers. If so, we can act upon it at once. I ask the Secretary if there be no amendment among the papers accompanying this bill?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio proposes that the question of reconsideration shall lie over for the present.

MR. IVerson. No; I hope they will be reconsidered by general consent, and then take their place on the Calendar precisely as they were before they were passed. Then, if the amendments are not now ready, we can pass over the bills until the amendments are prepared.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question on reconsidering the passage of both of these bills.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

MR. UGHL. Now I ask that the bills be passed over, retaining their place on the Calendar?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be taken.

MR. IVerson. I will prepare the amendments, and, in the course of the day, will call the attention of the Senate to the bills.

MR. IVerson shortly afterwards said: I now have the papers in the case of Michael Nourse. There was an amendment among the papers which escaped my attention. I ask that that bill be taken up. The amendment is already there, reported by the committee at the last session.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 126) for the relief of Michael Nourse. The amendment is to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized to account with and allow to Michael Nourse, late chief clerk in the office of the Register of the Treasury, for the time he discharged the duties of the Register of the Treasury, by appointment from the President, the same compensation as was then allowed by law to the Register of the Treasury, deducting therefrom the compensation received by the said Michael Nourse as chief clerk of that office during the same time; the same to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. At this stage of the bill, it is not competent to amend, except by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection. The amendment, therefore, will be considered as agreed to by the unanimous consent of the Senate; and it is amended accordingly.

The bill was passed.

JOHN ROBB.

MR. IVerson. Now I call up the other case—bill No. 127, for the relief of John Robb. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized to account with and allow to John Robb, late chief clerk in the War Department, for the time he performed the duties of acting Secretary of War by appointment from the President, the same compensation as was then allowed by law to the head of the War Department, deducting therefrom the compensation received by the said John Robb as chief clerk of the said War Department during the same time; the same to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. If no objection be made, the Chair will regard this amendment as made by unanimous consent.

The bill was passed.

RICHARD FITZPATRICK.

The bill (S. No. 130) from the Court of Claims for the relief of Richard Fitzpatrick was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Richard Fitzpatrick of $12,000, in full for the use and occupation of his plantation as a military post of the United States between the years 1836 and 1842, as also for the damage done to the plantation in the cutting of wood and lumber during such occupation.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARNER T. SCATFE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 131) from the Court of Claims for the relief of Charner T. Scatfe, administrator of Gilbert Stalker.

MR. IVerson. There is a bill precisely similar to this which has come from the House of Representatives, and the better course would be to let this bill lie on the table, and take up the House bill.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be taken, no objection being made, and the Senate bill will lie on the table.

The Senators in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (C. C. No. 82) for the relief of Charner T. Scatfe, administrator of Gilbert Stalker. It provides for the payment of \$5,645 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ full, for the use and service of the steamboat James Adams, belonging to Gilbert Stalker, from the 1st of August, 1841, to the 9th of July, 1842.

The bill was reported to the Senate, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN ERICSON.

The bill (S. No. 132) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of John Ericson, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay John Ericson $13,930, in full for the balance due him for his services in planning the United States war steamer Princeton, and planning and superintending the construction of the machinery of that steamer.

MR. HALE. If there is a report in that case, let it be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the opinion of the Court of Claims; but before doing so—

MR. HALE. The reading was asked for at my request. I do not want to detain the Senate any longer with it. There is enough disclosed in what has been read to suggest to my mind very serious doubts whether the bill should pass. I move that the bill be postponed until next Friday.

I want to examine it. If it is a fair case, I shall not say a word; but I really desire to examine the bill.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

JAMES SMITH.

The bill (S. No. 134) for the relief of James Smith, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of James Smith, now of the city of Washington, late a soldier in the war with Mexico, and on the frontiers of Texas, on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars a month, to commence on the 4th of March, 1858, and to continue during his lifetime.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORNELIUS BOYLE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 135) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Cornelius Boyle, administrator of John Boyle, deceased.

MR. BENJAMIN. This bill, I observe, is another of the same character as those which have been amended by the Senate. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims if he has an amendment ready in this case also.

MR. IVerson. There is no amendment reported at this session; but if it is one of the same class of cases, the Secretary will find the amendment among the papers. If there be not an amendment among the papers, the bill can be passed over for the present.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that there is no amendment among the papers.

MR. IVerson. Then I move that it be passed over for the present.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be taken.

MR. IVerson subsequently said: I have prepared an amendment now in the case of Cornelius Boyle, that was passed over a little while ago. I send it up to the Secretary's desk, and ask that the bill be taken up now.

The bill (S. No. 135) from the Court of Claims for the relief of Cornelius Boyle, administrator of John Boyle, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $7,629 64, in full for the services of John Boyle as acting Secretary of the Navy, at various times between the 21st March, 1831, and the 3rd November, 1838.

MR. IVerson. I move as a substitute for the bill:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Cornelius Boyle, administrator of John Boyle, deceased, the sum of $7,629 64, in full for the services of the said John Boyle as acting Secretary of the Navy at various times between the 21st March, 1831, and the 3rd day of November, 1838, deducting any and all sums which he received as clerk in said Department during the time aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

MR. CRITTENDEN. I want to say one single word in relation to these bills. I have acquiesced in the passage of several of them. They strike me to be of exceeding bad policy, and making exceedingly bad precedents. I do not see how we can allow them. An officer, owing to some casual disability of his superior, performs his duty for a little while, and, twenty years afterwards, it is made a regular business case and present claims for the salary of the superior officers whose duties they have casually and for short periods performed. I think the length of time is alone a sufficient defense on the part of the United States against such demands. I do not think they ought to be allowed at all. What is past is past, and I am willing that it shall be so considered. I shall not attempt to make any opposition to this bill; but I do not think I can ever stand or vote for another. We have made so many precedents that I think it is the last time any acquiescence can ever be extorted to any such bill.

MR. IVerson. The Senator from Kentucky will allow me to say that these precedents can have no bad effect, because in 1849 Congress passed a law prohibiting the payment of salaries being paid to any officer. This is only for cases before that, established by the Supreme Court and the Court of Claims.

MR. CRITTENDEN. I am glad there is some prospect of relief from it.

MR. HALE. This is not obnoxious to one objection of the Senator from Kentucky. The delay has been on the part of the Government in giving, not of the parties in asking.

MR. CRITTENDEN. A very good reason they had, and a very good reason we should have for delaying it until the day of judgment.

MR. SIMMONS. This was not a mere temporary service. It was for a considerable time.

The bill was passed.

THOMAS FILLERBORN.

The bill (S. No. 136) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Thomas Fillerborn, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $430 to Thomas Fillerborn, in full for his salary as secretary of the board of commissioners for the Navy pension fund, from February 7 to May 16, 1827, and for commissions on disbursements of that fund from 1825 to 1829.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAHUM WARD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 137) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Nahum Ward.

MR. BENJAMIN. That bill is for a very large amount, and I am not willing to vote without looking at the papers. I ask that it may lie over informally, and I will look at the papers.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be passed over.

BENJAMIN subsequently said: I have looked at the case of Nahum Ward. I have no objection to its being taken up now, but I shall oppose its passage, and I should like very well for the Senate to vote on that bill now. I think we ought to vote it down.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill S.

No. 137, which was laid aside for the time being is called up by the Senator from Louisiana.

The bill (S. No. 137) for the relief of Nahum Ward was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to Nahum Ward, of Marietta, Ohio, the sum of $67,618 27, in full for the amount due on forty-five loan office requisition of the United States, dated December 23, 1877.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I call for the reading of the report made by my friend from Missouri [Mr. POLK] last session, or the session before last, the reading of which, I think, will satisfy the Senate that it is out of the question to pass this bill; and I should like to have a vote taken on it by yeas and nays.

The Secretary read the adverse report made by Mr. POLK, from the Committee on Claims, on the 26th of January, 1888.

Mr. PUGH. I ask the Senator from Louisiana to allow this bill to pass over until next week. I think I can satisfy my friend from Missouri that he has greatly erred in two or three matters of fact—not of law—in his report, in relation to which the court has found against the report, in relation to which the court has found a sufficient explanation of the decisions made by the Treasury Department, in evidence since discovered. I am not prepared to consider it to-day. Mr. Ward is one of my constituents, and has had his case called to my attention. I think I can satisfy the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Louisiana that there is an error of fact in that report, and that the court has decided rightly. I move to postpone the bill until next Friday.

The motion was agreed to.

ERNEST FIEDLER.

The bill (S. No. 138) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Ernest Fiedler, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Ernest Fiedler of $329 90, in full for excess of duties paid by him on importations of ammonia, made by him into the port of New York, in the years 1846, 1847, 1849, 1851, and 1852.

Mr. SLIDELL. I should like to hear the report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the opinion of the Court of Claims.

Mr. SLIDELL. The bill in Ernest Fiedler's case is for duties on ammonia. The document that is being read is in regard to duties on liquors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Clerk is reading the report of the Court of Claims on Senate bill No. 138.

Mr. SLIDELL. Perhaps it will enlighten the Senate.

Mr. PUGH. Then there is a discrepancy between the bill and the report, because the bill says it is for excess of duties on ammonia; but the report speaks of duties on brandy and gin. I was going to say, however, that there is no identity of these cases. They involve not a large amount of money, but grave questions of law, on which the Court of Claims, I think, has grossly erred, and reversed repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, and in effect repudiated the act of Congress. The Committee on Claims, to which they were referred at the last Congress, reported against them. I believe my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN] and I had a brief discussion of five or ten words a few years ago, giving notice respectively that we would debate the question on the one side and the other; and not expecting that the Senate would make such progress in the Calendar, I am not now prepared to state my objections and refer to the acts of Congress and the decisions. I hope that all that class of cases refunding excess of duties on drugs and liquors will be over. They are claims for the return of duties back on leakage during the voyage, though the duties were paid without protest at the time. If actions had been brought against the collector, as the law would have required before the establishment of the Court of Claims, they could not have been sustained, because no protest was made. Now they have brought their actions against the Government in the Court of Claims. It is a large amount of money, and important questions of law are involved, and I hope that class of cases will be over until Friday, when I shall be able to state my objections; and besides, we have no printed report of the decision of the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves to postpone the consideration of this bill and all like bills until Friday next.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I make no objection to that postponement. I shall endeavor to prepare myself to answer any objections the Senator from Ohio may have in relation to these bills. I desire to repeat now, what I said before, that I think them due by the Government on the highest grounds of equity and justice; and I hope I shall be able to satisfy the Senate to that effect.

Mr. PUGH. I suggest that the decision of the Court of Claims in the leading case, whatever it is, be printed. It has not been printed, I think, for two years; and probably we cannot very conveniently have a copy of the document. I move that the decision of the Court of Claims in the leading case, whatever it may be, be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the Clerk that he has now in his possession the particular report in this case. There was some error before.

Mr. PUGH. We can look at it between now and Friday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves to postpone the consideration of this and all similar cases until Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator further moves that the report of the Court of Claims be printed. He will indicate the case in which he desires to have the decision printed.

Mr. PUGH. The court made a principal decision in one case, and then, in the other cases, referred to that decision. Probably the Secretary may find it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands from the Clerk that the reports have all been printed.

Mr. IVERSON. The Clerk is mistaken. The Committee on Claims made a report in the case of Sturges, Bennett & Co., which was one of the class. That report of the Committee on Claims has been printed, but it is not found in each particular case. It is only one report in the case of Sturges, Bennett & Co., and in that case the Clerk found, probably, the report of the Committee on Claims at the last session. That has been printed, and is, of course, accessible to all Senators. The case of Sturges, Bennett & Co. has only recently been reported back from the Committee on Claims, having been overlooked when this batch of cases was originally reported at the present session. It is a late case on the Calendar, and among the papers of that case, I think, will be found the report of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Georgia if that claim of Sturges, Bennett & Co. is still pending?

Mr. IVERSON. I do not understand.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senate dismissed the case a year ago or more, I believe.

Mr. IVERSON. I am still pending in this way: the Clerk establishing the Court of Claims direct that all cases shall go upon the Calendar, and shall remain on the Calendar from session to session, and from Congress to Congress, until disposed of by both Houses; and, of course, no case is considered as finally disposed of until both Houses concur in the same decision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will pass over all bills of this class, without bringing them to the notice of the Senate.

FRANCIS HUTTMAN.

The bill (S. No. 143) for the relief of Francis Huttman was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to examine the claim of Francis Huttman for losses sustained by the detention of the bark Callao, at San Francisco, in 1848, by the act of the collector of that port, and to settle it according to the terms prescribed in section four of the act "to create additional collection districts in the Territory of Oregon, and changing the existing collection districts therein; and providing for the existing collection districts in the United States," approved September 28, 1850, as though it had been a collection district in 1848; and to pay the sum due for actual damages, with interest, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from the 15th of August, 1848; and also the import duties and tonnage, and light dues on the vessel, illegally exacted from Huttman, but nothing is to be paid for speculative or consequential damages.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JEREMIAH PENDERGAST.

The bill (S. No. 144) for the relief of Jeremiah Pendergast, of the District of Columbia, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Jeremiah Pendergast on the pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 4th of September, 1856, and to continue during his life, in lieu of the pension to which he is now entitled by law.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWAY H. BERRYMAN.

The bill (S. No. 145) for the relief of Oway H. Berryman, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Oway H. Berryman of $2,160 02, being the sum of his expenses sustained by him while commanding and acting as purser of the United States schooner On-ka-hy-a.

Mr. HUNTER. I should like to hear the report in that case.

The Secretary read the report, from which it appeared, that the grounds relied upon by Lieutenant Berryman are substantially those which induced Congress to grant relief to Lieutenant Charles G. Hunter, in 1858. Lieutenant Berryman assumed the command of the United States schooner On-ka-hy-a in October, 1846, under an order from the Navy Department, dated the 30th October, 1846, and he immediately entered upon special duty, and performed active and arduous service in the Gulf of Mexico, to Brazil, and Chagres, during twenty-two months, which was terminated by the total shipwreck of the vessel on a sunken reef, in July, 1848. With his command he was ordered to perform the duties of purser to the vessel, and these duties he performed throughout the whole period of his command. No adjustment of his accounts took place until his return to the United States, when it was found that he had actually expended as purser more money, by $2,325, than he could produce the requisite vouchers for. This sum he paid to the Government, and his accounts were balanced accordingly. He alleges that he was diligently and faithfully kept and disbursed the moneys intrusted to him as purser, to pay the lawful liabilities of the Government, and that the omission to take and return the proper vouchers for all his expenditures was alone the result of his ignorance, and of his want of practice in the duties of purser.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EZENEZER RICKER.

The bill (S. No. 151) for the relief of Ebenezer Ricker was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Ebenezer Ricker, late a corporal in the Army of the United States, on the pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 4th of March, 1856, and to continue during his natural life, on account of a wound received in the military service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RANDALL PEGG.

The bill (S. No. 154) for the relief of Randall Pegg was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. Its purpose is to pay to Randall Pegg $139 58, being the difference between the pay allowed him as a watchman on the construction of the Patent Office extension and that allowed to other watchmen.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIJAH N. MORRILL.

The bill (S. No. 169) for the relief of Elijah N. Morrill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. Its object is to

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 99.

secure the allowance to Elijah H. Merrill, of the State of Maine, the sum of $600, for injuries received while in the employment of the United States in a dangerous service, and for medical and other expenses incurred in consequence thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. H. HOWARD.

The bill (S. No. 170) for the relief of H. H. Howard was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It will be a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of H. H. Howard, late a volunteer in the Oregon mounted volunteers, in the late Indian war, in that State, on the invalid pension roll of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 22d of August, 1859, and to continue for and during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH VERBICKI.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 83) to authorize an increase of pension to Joseph Verbicki.

Mr. BENJAMIN. There is an adverse report on that case from the Committee on Pensions. I move that the Senate concur in the adverse report.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the proper motion is the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move that it be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

A. M. MITCHELL.

The bill (S. No. 119) for the relief of A. M. Mitchell, late colonel of Ohio volunteers in the Mexican war, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to A. M. Mitchell, colonel first regiment of Ohio volunteers in the late war with Mexico, a certain amount may be ascertained to be due him for transportation from Monterey to Cincinnati, and from Cincinnati to Monterey, in 1846, the trip not having been performed under orders, but by leave granted in consequence of temporary disability, caused by wounds received in action on 31st of September, 1846.

The amendment changes the phraseology of the original bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in; the bill ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM MONEY.

The bill (S. No. 174) for the relief of William Money was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It will be a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to inquire into the alleged seizure of certain horses in California, by the orders of General Kearny, said to be the property of William Money, and to pay the value of the horses thus seized, and which were appropriated to the use of the Army of the United States, under the command of said Kearny.

Mr. PUGH. I ask for the reading of the report, if there be one in the case.

The Secretary read the report, from which it appears that the memorialist claims compensation for the seizure of horses, and the orders of General Kearny in California, and for other articles lost, as he avers, in consequence of the conduct of the troops under the command of General Kearny. The horses are valued at $100 each. The memorialist alleges that he had been engaged for many years as a naturalist, in exploring California, studying the geology, geography, and productions of the country, with a view to publish the information accumulated by his observations and researches; and that he had compiled a large manuscript volume, containing many drawings, sketches, and maps, which were worth $10,000. He says he had instruments connected with his scientific investigations in natural history worth $200; and personal baggage and provisions worth $600. He states that, in November, 1846, he left the town of Los Angeles for Sonora, and having reached an Indian village, called Howargo, he was deprived of his horses by the troops under the command of General Kearny, and thus deprived of the means of pursuing his journey, or of returning. He moreover states, "that information having been given by General Kearny's troops to those Indians and to the neighboring tribes, that the country was under the American flag, and that it became the duty of those Indians to aid and assist in the American cause, and to prevent the passage of all persons from the settlements of Sonora, it was a sufficient incentive to the Indians for the exercise of their natural inclination for pillage; and after the departure of the troops of General Kearny the Indians took prisoners the whole of the memorialist's party, and commenced an indiscriminate plunder of the property and baggage of the memorialist, and some of his moments totally destroyed all the valuable manuscripts, drawings, maps, and interesting documents, the result of more than twenty years' arduous labor, and upon which the memorialist placed his sole dependence for his future maintenance."

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE PHELPS.

The bill (S. No. 175) for the relief of George Phelps was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the allowance to George Phelps of $1,155 in full compensation for services performed by him as messenger in the Quartermaster General's Office, from December, 1859, to May, 1846.

Mr. PUGH. This is a claim for extra services, is it not?

Mr. IVERSON. Yes, sir; a different case from the other.

Mr. PUGH. I discover that this and the next bill are both bills for the payment of extra services. I hope the Senator will explain it, for I think we have an act of Congress which forbids persons in the employ of the Government claiming for extra services. There seem to be two of that class of cases here.

Mr. IVERSON. The report in the case sets forth the facts. I will read the law to which the Senator refers. It exempts this case. The act of August 26, 1842, the law to which the Senator from Ohio refers, is this:

"That no allowance or compensation shall be paid to any clerk, or other officer, by reason of the discharge of duties which belong to any other officer or officer in the same or any other Department, and no allowance or compensation shall be made for any extra services whatever, which may any clerk or other officer may be required to perform, and no greater allowance shall be made to any such clerk or other officer than is or may be authorized by law, except to waitmen and messengers, for any labor or services required of them beyond the particular duties of their respective station, rendered as such times as does not interfere with the performance of their regular duty."

This is a messenger or watchman—a class of officers exempted, by express provision of the law, from the operation of it—and the facts, as represented by General Jesup, present a strong case in favor of the claimant. If the Senate deems the facts, the report will show them.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to know the nature of the services, because I find, in the next bill, a messenger is to be paid for extra service as a clerk. Although the act of Congress may allow particular cases of payment to messengers, I think the Senate ought to be satisfied that the services were clearly of the nature of his duty; otherwise we overturn the principle of the act. I observe in one of these bills that a messenger is to be paid for extra service as a clerk. The whole law may be avoided by appointing clerks messengers, and giving them the salary of messengers, and then the extra salaries of clerks. The case requires some explanation as to the nature of the services.

Mr. IVERSON. The case of Phelps is for extra service performed by the messenger himself, and General Jesup's letter will explain fully the facts in the case.

Mr. GRIMES. Read the report.

Mr. PUGH. There was no report made on the Calendar. That was the reason I asked the question.

The Secretary read the report made at the first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, from which it appears that the petitioner claims for extra services as messenger, rendered in the Quartermaster General's Office, War Department, at night, and Sundays, after the closing of the public offices, from 1st December, 1839, to 1st July, 1846, six years and five months, at fifteen dollars per month, $1,155. Mr. Phelps was the regular messenger in the office during the period named, at a salary of $500 a year. The Quartermaster general states that the allegations contained in the memorial are true; that, in consequence of the pressure of business in the office, arising out of the Indian hostilities in Florida, he was obliged to remain in the office almost every afternoon, and often until late at night, and often a portion, and sometimes the whole of Sundays; and that Mr. Phelps was obliged to remain and close the office, &c.; and General Jesup adds: that the sum he asks is small compared with the amount of extra labor he has performed."

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

R. W. CLARKE.

The bill (S. No. 176) for the relief of R. W. Clarke was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for paying to R. W. Clarke, late assistant messenger in the office of Commissioner of Pensions, the sum of $225, in full compensation for extra services performed by him in that office as clerk, from January 1, 1850, to October 1, 1851.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICHOLAS UNDERHILL.

The bill (S. No. 182) for the relief of Nicholas Underhill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It will be a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Nicholas Underhill, of New York, upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of four dollars per month, from the 4th of April, 1859, for life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORNELIUS HUGHES.

The bill (S. No. 183) for the relief of Cornelius Hughes was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Cornelius Hughes upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 17th day of January, 1850, in lieu of the pension he now receives under the act of March 3, 1853.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REBECCA A. CORRELL.

The bill (S. No. 184) for the relief of Rebecca A. Correll was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to require the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Rebecca A. Correll, widow of Isaac Correll, deceased, late private in company D, eleventh regiment of infantry, United States Army, upon the pension list, at the rate of $3 50 per month, commencing on the 1st of June, 1854, and to continue during her life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ANN F. DERRICK.

The bill (S. No. 185) for the relief of Mrs. Ann P. Derrick, widow of W. S. Derrick, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. Its object is to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to account with and allow to the widow and children of W. S. Derrick, late chief clerk in the Department of State, for the time he performed the duties of acting Secretary of the Department of State, by appointment of the President of the United States, the same compensation as was then allowed by law to the head of that Department, deducting therefrom the compensation received by him as chief clerk of the Department during the same time.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand this bill, no far as it relates to Mr. Derrick, repeals the law of 1842. Is that so?

Mr. IVERSON. I do not know. I think these services were rendered before that.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask whether they were rendered prior to the law of 1842, just read by the Senator from Georgia, or since?

Mr. IVERSON. It was prior to 1842. The present chief clerk has been in the Department since before that time. These services were rendered prior to the passage of the law of 1842.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES MACCABODY.

The bill (S. No. 51) for the relief of James Maccabody was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $500 to James Maccabody, for losses and injuries suffered by him while engaged in the performance of his duty in the public service.

Mr. HALE. Is there any report in that case?

Mr. SIMMONS. This bill was passed at the last session, and is on the same principle as two or three other bills which have been passed this morning.

Mr. HALE. Very well. I will not object.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILLS JUDSON.

The bill (S. No. 186) for the relief of Mills Judson, surety on the official bond of the late Purser Andrew D. Crosby, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to readjust the accounts of the late Purser Andrew D. Crosby, and to allow credit therein for sundry sundries or rejected items to the aggregate amount of $1,196.877, which sum, together with interest thereon, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from the 25th of June, 1855, to the date of payment, is to be reimbursed to Mills Judson, being so much of the amount paid by him upon a judgment obtained against him as one of the sureties on the official bond of Purser Crosby.

Mr. BINGHAM. Read the report.

Mr. IVERSON. I think it is hardly necessary to read the report. I will state, in a few words, the character of the case. This man was surety of Mr. Crosby, while he was purser in the Navy. Crosby fell from the mast, and died on board the vessel, and in settling his accounts at the Treasury Department they fell deficient. An action was brought on his bond again; this surety, Judson, and judgment rendered against him for the amount of deficiency, which he has paid with interest, but since the death of Mr. Crosby some original vouchers have been discovered, which were not brought into the case when the account was settled; and this is to allow the Secretary to pay him back the amount shown by these vouchers.

Mr. BINGHAM. Where are the vouchers?

Mr. IVERSON. They are among the papers. The committee had them under investigation.

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not insist on the call for the reading of the report.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CURTIS GRUBB.

The bill (S. No. 187) for the relief of Henry G. Caron, administrator of Curtis Grubb, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment in the legal representatives of Curtis Grubb, deceased, surviving partner of the firm of Curtis and Peter Grubb, the amount of a certain final and complete certificate, numbered 235, letter "N," dated January 5, 1844, issued by Benjamin Stetle, commissioner for settling debts of the United States in the State of Pennsylvania, to Curtis and Peter Grubb, on account of cannons, shot, and shells furnished during the revolutionary war, not having been paid by the Register of the Treasury to be still outstanding and unpaid, which certificate amounts to the sum of $4,180.56, and upon which interest will accrue from December 16, 1844, the time of making the first application to Congress for relief, until the time of payment.

Mr. HALE. I should like to know something about this case.

Mr. CAMERON. This is one of those claims that ought to have been paid long ago. Mr. Peter Grubb was the owner of one of the only two furnaces in Pennsylvania, at the time of the Revolution, and the only place where cannon could be cast at that time. He fulfilled the demands of the Government during the war. He took whatever he could get. He took sometimes continental money; sometimes something a little better; and I recollect, on looking over the account, in the State of Pennsylvania, I found that he once took in payment a number of Hessian prisoners. [Laughter.] The Government would send him some prisoners, and charge him six pounds apiece, Pennsylvania currency, for the prisoners; and I remember reading amongst the papers that the old gentleman sent back six of those Hessians, and said they were unfit for duty. He paid six pounds apiece for them, and never got a cent in return. He was a man of great patriotism and large wealth; and he, or his son, never made any demand to be paid. He was settled by his son, and the family became reduced in circumstances, and looking over the accounts, they found this sum due. Everybody in Pennsylvania who remembers old Peter Grubb and knows his descendants is satisfied that the claim ought to have been paid a long time ago. I think the only thing in an amendment, to pay him back the amount he paid for the six Hessians who were returned. [Laughter.] But I will not insist on that.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLONEL WILLIAM THOMPSON.

The bill (S. No. 188) for the relief of the surviving grandchildren of Colonel William Thompson, of the revolutionary army of South Carolina, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle and adjust the account of William Thompson, late a colonel of the third regiment of South Carolina continental troops in the revolutionary war, and pay to his surviving grandchildren, William E. Haskell, Charles T. Haskell, Charlotte Rhett, widow of James S. Rhett, Mary E. Darby, widow of A. B. Darby, Caroline Lewis, widow of Dr. John A. Lewis, and Charlotte A. Goodwin, widow of Robert H. Goodwin, the sum of $5,625, being his five years' full pay as a colonel of cavalry, according to the resolve of Congress of March 22, 1793. It also proposes to direct the Commissioner of Pensions to issue, in the names of the grandchildren of Colonel William Thompson, a warrant for such an amount of bounty land as was provided for a colonel under the resolve of Congress of September 16, 1776.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will inquire, from the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, if this bill is based on the principle of the general bill allowing commutation of revolutionary half pay, which the Senate refused to pass upon full discussion?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I did not hear the bill read. My attention was not directed to it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The question is, whether this is one of those claims for commutation of half pay which were included in the general bill that the Senate refused to pass?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Let the bill be read again.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. It is a claim founded on the resolutions of Congress, and as such would have been embraced in any general law, such as was proposed by Mr. Evans, for instance, when he was here. There is no law providing for the case except this one which we are passing for the payment of this claim. It is one which the committee supposed to be due under the resolution of Congress to which I refer, and that it has not been paid. The only hesitation the committee had was whether it was proper for them to report bills in individual cases, while the Senate and Congress seemed to be unwilling to pass any general bill on the subject. This case appeared to be plain and simple, and I thought that it would not feel at liberty to reject it.

Mr. COLLAMER. I do not understand this case as the gentleman does. I understand the general law which we proposed in relation to the officers of the Army was a law to make up to those who had received their commutation the half pay for life. Now, this bill is for the commutation, not for half pay. The resolutions of Congress of 1778 were, that those who remained in the service until the close of the war should have half pay for life. By the resolution of 1793, they were to have five years' full pay in lieu of it. The general bill which has been reported is to make up the deficiency of those who took their commutation and make it equal to the half pay for life, which they say they were constrained into from the necessity of the war. I understand this to be the case, and that the officer has not had his commutation at all.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. COLLAMER. I see no reason in the world why the man should not have his commutation, for he which it had it. It would not come within the general bill at all.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. It would come within a general bill, if we chose to provide by general bill for the payment of all such cases; but we have provided by no law for the payment of any such case, and therefore it becomes necessary to pass these individual bills.

Mr. IVERSON. I move to postpone this bill until next Friday. It is one of those cases which, if passed, will be a precedent for thousands of others; and of course, it will give rise to the passage of a law for the payment of all revolutionary claims. I want it to be decided simply. I think it involves too great a principle to be decided by a thin Senate. Besides, I know my colleague would be very glad to take part in the discussion of this bill. He did take part in the discussion of the general bill, and I think a more full discussion and consideration, rejected that general bill. That general bill was based precisely on the same principle with this bill, as I understand it. I think it had better be postponed, and I move to postpone it until next Friday.

Mr. FUGH. I think the Senator from Georgia is mistaken. The resolution of 1789—I believe that is the date of it—at all events, that resolution about which we have had so much controversy, provided that all officers who would remain in the service from that date until the disbanding of the Army, should be entitled to half pay for life. Afterwards, on petition of the officers, Congress commuted that to five years' full pay. Now if this gentleman was within that resolution—that is the question I ask my friend from Kentucky—if he was within the contract, is it simply a bill to make good the contract. The opposition was based on the principle of the general bill which was offered to the general law by the Senator from Georgia, not now present, and myself, as well as many other Senators, was that it purporting to set aside the contract, and remit them back to the half pay for life. Therefore this bill, so far from coming out the principles of the general bill which was defeated in the Senate, is simply making good to the party what we then acknowledged good to him. They did, in nearly all the cases, receive commutation. If this gentleman did not, it is for some cause which he has not stated. My friend from Kentucky can state it. If he did not receive it, undoubtedly it is due to him; and I am sure that the argument of the Senator from Georgia, not present, would not be directed against such a case. That case is within the resolution.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I beg leave to read the report. It states the facts more clearly and distinctly than they remain in my recollection:

"The evidence submitted shows that there is no doubt that William Thompson was colonel of the third South Carolina regiment of mounted troops, from the 24th day of July, 1776."

Twenty days after the Declaration of Independence—to the close of the revolutionary war in 1783, and that he never received his commutation and bounty land, and died on the 26th of November, 1796.

These are the facts of the case, and the bill provides for the payment of the commutation.

Mr. PUGH. Then he is clearly within the resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves to postpone the further consideration of this bill until Friday next.

Mr. COLLAMER. Those officers who had been in the war were, in the winter of 1778, inclined to go home; and in order to induce them to stay in the Army, the resolution of 1778 was passed, that if they would remain until the close of the war they should receive half pay for life. Now this gentleman, according to the report, was in the Army at that time, and served to the close of the war; and, of course, was entitled to his half pay for life. But in 1783, in consequence of a good deal of talk about providing for men for life, (not at the request of the officers, precisely, as the Senator from Ohio has said), a resolution was passed that in lieu of this half pay for life they should have a commutation of five years' full pay in lieu of it; but they were to give their consent to this, and they did not give their consent to this, and generally did give their consent, and afterwards they received their commutation pay; that is, their five years' full pay. They generally received it, and the books show it. I have had occasion to examine them often in relation to many men, and almost uniformly I found their receipts, from which it appeared, by the books, that they had been paid the very amount now proposed to be paid to this man's grandchildren. The general bill proposed to be brought in, was a bill to pay them, pursuant to the first engagement, the half pay for life, although they received their commutation pay; and in the Senate, as has been stated; but it had nothing in the world to do with the commutation pay. It was rejected on the ground that they had received their commutation to their satisfaction, and almost all have no more. Now if this officer has not had that commutation, clearly he should have it.

Mr. PUGH. The point of explanation I want to know why he did not do it. There are many cases where the officer died; but it is very extraordinary that an officer should have remained in the service until the disbanding of the Army, and not have received it. The report does not explain that. The resolution was not as the Senator from Vermont supposed. According to my recollection, it was passed in 1784; at all events after the surrender of Cornwallis and after the hostilities had concluded for all practical purposes. It is a great mistake to say that resolution was passed to encourage the officers to remain in the service during the war. It was passed after the last gun was fired, and it was to prevent the officers from going home before the treaty of peace was ratified; and Congress simply intended that if they would remain in service until the Army was disbanded by act or resolution of Congress, they should have this half pay for life. It is well known that that resolution creating pensions for life, together with the resolution of the society of the Cincinnati, which was intended to be hereditary, produced a wonderful excitement throughout the country, and General Washington was troubled about it, and Mr. Jefferson, and others; and the officers themselves, to avoid that difficulty, applied to Congress to provide for it for five years' full pay; and Congress did commute it. That I say was a good contract, and that was our position before. What I intended to find out from my friend from Kentucky was, after the expiration of this gentleman's case. He was living at that time. If he had received it through the ignorance of heirs or anything of that sort the application had not been made, I could understand it. If he never received it by any cause, he is within the resolution; but it seems to me that the statement is defective in not explaining to the Senate why this gentleman did not receive the money which was then subject to his claim to the Treasury. There may be good reason for it. If so, I am certainly willing to vote for the bill.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I should be glad to endeavor, to remove any possible doubt from the mind of my friend, if I could give him any explanation.

This transaction happened a long time ago. The officer died in 1796. If there were to be great many instances of such neglect on the part of officers, it might be of some more force against the claim that no explanation can be made of the delay. But, in the infinite variety of human situations and circumstances, we must look for this sort of negligence; and our records furnish abundant evidence of it, not in this case only, but in many others. The gentleman must recollect that South Carolina was about as far from the seat of Government at that day, practically, in point of time, as it is now from San Francisco. It was a great deal more of facility to come from San Francisco here than there was in that day in getting from this gentleman lived in South Carolina. I cannot give any other account of it. There is none in the papers, and none furnished by the evidence. He lived until 1796, and then died. That was ten or twelve years after he was entitled to this allowance. I think this delay cannot be considered as creating much doubt as to the genuineness of the claim.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky, the chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, whether the committee made any examination at the Department to see whether this money had been actually paid or not, or have they just gone on the presumption that he actually died, and, being satisfied that he was an officer, and that the amount was due, instituted no investigation as to the fact of his having been paid? The Senator from Vermont says he has seen the record in some of these cases, and I dare say it is true. If the commutation was ever paid to Colonel Thompson, I take it the evidence is on the record of the Treasury Department.

Mr. COLLAMER. No doubt it would appear there.

Mr. IVERSON. I want to know of the Senator from Kentucky, whether the investigation has been made; whether the committee have gone there or sent there to ascertain the fact.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I am unable to give the Senator full satisfaction on that subject.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have looked at the papers, and think they are satisfactory. I wish to see a letter of the Commissioner of Pensions. In reply to a letter of Mr. Rhet, asking him particularly to examine the books and see whether anything was paid to this officer, whether for half pay or commutation, he said:

PERMISSION OFFICE, November 24, 1858.
Sir: In reply to your letter of inquiry of the 9th instant, I have to make the following statement:

The South Carolina regiment of rangers was placed on the continental establishment by authority of a resolution of Congress of the 9th day of July, 1776, and became the third regiment of the South Carolina line. The rangers, being a mounted regiment, were permitted by Congress to serve on horseback, or on foot. William Thompson, the colonel of the rangers, and who had served with such distinction in the defense of Fort Mifflin as to have received a vote of thanks from Congress, was continued in command of the regiment, and was raised to lieutenant colonel and the pay of a colonel of foot; and, in November, 1776, he was promoted to colonel of foot. From this time up to the close of the war, on all the rolls of the South Carolina regiment, and on all lists of officers of the South Carolina regiment, he will be seen that he was the colonel of the rangers, or colonel or commander of the regiment. Our records show that other regiments of the same line were organized at different periods during the war, and that the release of the officers included in the capitulation of Charleston, which was not until some time in 1780, the South Carolina regiment was not included in the list of officers killed and demoralized by the British invasion, that they performed very little service in the field, their operations being mostly confined to checking the progress of the British and Tories upon the Whigs. Still an organization was kept up, and the continental troops of South Carolina continued in service up to the very late period of the war.

Records and records are imperfect; yet we have rolls showing that the officers and soldiers of the South Carolina regiment continued in service, under a regular establishment, as late as May, 1780, and enlistments into the regiment were received as late as November, 1780, and also, that of the considerable number of commissioned officers of the South Carolina regiment on its master-rolls, one half, at least, served to the close of the war.

By reference to the Journal of Congress of the date of the 10th of July, 1780, it will be seen that the South Carolina line did not agree to the commutation of five years' full pay in lieu of half pay for life. Her quota, by the arrangement at the close of the year 1780, was reduced from three regiments, yet she appears not to have reduced her force in accordance with the congressional arrangement; and she continued to roll up her service until the close of the war, or until she was disbanded, and her regiments were all kept up until the close of the war.

It appears, then, that the officers of the South Carolina line, excepting such as died, resigned, or were dismissed the service, continued actually active to the close of the war. None were legally thrown out of the service, certainly in the third regiment, by being declared supernumerary. If Colonel Thompson had been in the service, as Colonel of the third regiment, he should be of record. As the South Carolina line did not consent to the commutation of five years' full pay, and consequently having no other alternative, it was the usual presumption against those, in other States, not returned as entitled to commutation, does not apply to this officer.

The fair presumption, from the rolls and records in this office, and from all accessible data, is, therefore, that William Thompson continued in service, as Colonel of the third regiment of the South Carolina line, on continental establishment, until the close of the revolutionary war.

I am, very respectfully, Sir, your obedient servant,
GEORGE C. WHITING, Commissioner.

CHARLES H. KERRY, Esq., Present.

I also find this letter from the Third Auditor:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
November 24, 1858.

Sir: In reply to your letter of the 17th instant, asking inquiry relative to the commutation pay of Colonel William Thompson, of the South Carolina line of the Army of the Revolution, I have to inform you that it does not appear, from the revolutionary records of this office, that he received commutation, nor is he returned as having been entitled thereto.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. J. ATKINSON, Auditor.

CHARLES H. KERRY, Esq., Director of the Interior.

There is still another letter, which I will read. It is from the Third Auditor's office, directed to General Shields, when he was chairman of the committee:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, THIRD AUDITOR'S OFFICE,
December 24, 1858.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, in which you state, that as chairman of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims of the Senate, you are directed to request that I will inform the committee with such evidence as this office affords in relation to the half pay which it is supposed that Colonel William Thompson, of the third South Carolina continental troops, may have received or been entitled to. In reply, I have to inform you that, upon an examination of the revolutionary records of this office, it does not appear that William Thompson, of South Carolina, has received half pay for life, or a commutation of five years' full pay in lieu thereof, nor, so far as he is returned for, does he appear to have received or been entitled for, such commutation.

With great respect, Sir, your obedient servant,
R. J. ATKINSON, Auditor.

HON. JAMES SHIELDS, Chairman Committee on Revolutionary Claims, United States Senate.

I think that makes the proof perfect.

Mr. IVERSON. I withdraw my motion to postpone.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN subsequently said: I wish to move a reconsideration of the bill we have just passed for the relief of Colonel Thompson's heirs. By an inadvertence, and the very common case of giving five years' full pay, we have robbed the heirs of Colonel Thompson of three years' half pay. He never received any commutation. It appears that the South Carolina line never came to any determination to receive the five years' full pay.

Mr. BENJAMIN. They actually refused it. Mr. CRITTENDEN. His heirs then are entitled to about twelve or thirteen years' half pay, which is more than three years' more than the bill actually gives.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Now let the bill lie over until we get an opportunity to consider it. I will call it up as soon as I prepare an amendment that is appropriate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will lie on the table, by common consent.

FRANKLIN PEASE.

The bill (S. No. 189) for the relief of Franklin Pease was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Franklin Pease of $10,000, in full compensation for the use of all of his inventions and improvements, and for his extra-official services in connection with the Mint of the United States and its branches.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND TITLES IN MAINE.

The bill (S. No. 191) to provide for the quieting of certain land titles in the late disputed territory in the State of Maine, and for other purposes, was read a second time, and considered as in Commu-tee of the Whole. It makes appropriations to pay the owners of land included by the State of Maine, but which, by the Ashburton treaty, fell within the British dominions, and to which these owners, who held under the State of Maine and Massachusetts, lost title by the operation of the treaty.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The attention of the Chair is called to an avowed clerical omission. It speaks of the "Secretary" instead of the "Secretary of the Treasury." That will be rectified by unanimous consent.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALIFORNIA CIVIL FUND.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 193) to authorize and direct the payment of certain moneys to the State of California, which were collected in the ports of said State as a revenue upon imports since the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, and prior to the admission of said State into the Union.

MR. BENJAMIN. That bill has never been referred to any committee, that I can see; and I believe it is a bill of some importance. I move to refer it to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES BELL.

The bill (S. No. 195) for the relief of the legal representatives of James Bell, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to William Cameron, administrator of the estate of James Bell, late of Chambley, in the province of Lower Canada, for the use and benefit of his heirs and legal representatives, and to such other persons as may show themselves legally entitled thereto, the sum of $329 31, that being the balance of principal found due to the representatives of Bell, upon the settlement of their accounts at the Treasury, under the act entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs of James Bell, deceased," approved the 30th day of June, 1834, with interest on this balance of principal, from the 30th of June, 1834, until paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MR. GAMES. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

JOHN C. CARTER.

The joint resolution (S. No. 15) for the relief of Lieutenant John C. Carter, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the accounting officers of the Treasury, in the settlement of the accounts of Lieutenant John C. Carter, of the United States Navy, to allow him the sum provided in the joint resolution of Congress, approved February 13, 1855, for such expenses as were incurred by him whilst acting as purser on board the ship Massachusetts, while undergoing repairs at San Francisco, California, deducting therefrom the sum which has been paid or allowed him on account of the same since the date of the passage of the joint resolution of 1855; but the amount allowed is not to exceed $955 36.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

F. M. GUNNELL.

The bill (S. No. 196) for the relief of F. M. Gunnell, passed assistant surgeon in the Navy, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. Its object is to allow to Assistant Surgeon F. M. Gunnell $156 for extraordinary expenses incurred by him in the discharge of his duty at San Francisco.

MR. FOLK. should like to know if there is any report accompanying the bill.

The Secretary read the report made at the first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, from which it appears that the petitioner, an assistant surgeon in the Navy, attached to the United States ship Independence, of the Pacific squadron, was ordered by Captain Josiah Tatnall, on the 17th day of September, 1855, to proceed to San Francisco, and report himself for duty at the United States naval rendezvous at that city, and to return to the ship when the rendezvous should be closed. Under this order he performed the duty assigned him twelve weeks in the city of San Francisco. His board, during the time on shore, amounted, according to the voucher filed by him, twelve weeks, at eighteen dollars, to $216. In view of the fact that in fixing the salary of his grade reference was had to its ordinary expenses, the committee deemed it but equitable, and in conformity with the provisions of law, to allow him an equal gratuity for any ordinary expense incident to public duty assigned him, properly incurred. Had the memorialist remained on board of the ship, in the discharge of his duties as an assistant surgeon, his mess bill would not probably have exceeded twenty dollars per month; deducting this amount from his expenses on shore, leaves the sum of $156, and for this the committee reported a bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MR. POWELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes thirteen, nays not counted.

SAMUEL HOLGATE.

The bill (S. No. 204) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of George Ashley, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Holgate, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $296 00, in full of claims and losses and other property of Holgate, seized by Commodore McDonough, on Lake Champlain, in the year 1814.

MR. PUGH. I should like to know how that bill has come up again. It has been rejected by the Senate, after a very full discussion, and I think two or three discussions. I understand that when a case is reported from the Court of Claims, it remains on the Calendar until it is disposed of; but this has been disposed of since I have been in the Senate, and so with the next bill on the Calendar. They have been debated at great length. This case and the next one are both old acquaintances that I think the Senate will recollect. This is a claim for the seizure of a vessel, and the appropriation of some lumber, during the last war with Great Britain, made by Commodore McDonough. The ship was libeled for dealing with the enemy, but it was condemned in the wrong district court. That is the whole case. The case stands on that point. It was condemned in the district of Vermont, when it ought to have been condemned in the district of New York, or perhaps vice versa; and the Court of Claims decided that the whole judicial proceeding was void, because it was in the wrong district, not because the facts were not well stated and well proved. The charge against the ship was that it was furnishing supplies to the enemy; the commodore seized the vessel and appropriated the property to the use of the United States, and the vessel was libeled and condemned for that very act; and on the mere quibbles that the case was tried in the wrong court, the Court of Claims have sustained the claim; but there is a fact behind it that the Court of Claims never looked to. This man brought an action, in the courts of Vermont, against the commodore, in trespass, on the ground that the jurisdiction of the district court in admiralty was not rightly taken, and on full trial by jury a verdict was given in favor of the commodore against the claimant. Now, if we stand on the conclusiveness of judicial proceedings, I say the verdict is a bar.

MR. IVERSON. Allow me to interrupt the Senator. Perhaps I can save his argument. The Senator says that this case has been decided by the Senate. If so, it has escaped my memory. I know it was under discussion two years ago, but my recollection is, that it was not finally decided; but if that be the case, there ought to be an end of the claim. I move to postpone it for the next session.

MR. PUGH. I believe, now that the Senator reminds me of it, the bill was defeated after a long debate, and towards the end of the session some Senator interposed a motion to reconsider. That motion was, perhaps, never disposed of. I am not sure, and substantially this case was disposed of by the Senate, and unless something new be brought up, I cannot vote for it.

MR. IVERSON. I move to postpone the case for the present. I think it is a good case, and ought to pass; but I am not disposed to debate the question so late in the afternoon.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

O. H. BERRYMAN.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 205) from the Court of Claims for the relief of O. H. Berryman and others.

MR. PUGH. I ask that that may lie over too. It has been considered, and I think rejected. At all events, the Senator from Georgia, who is absent, had a particular interest in the opposition. The case was postponed.

EMILIE G. JONES AND NANCY M. JOHNSON.

The bill (S. No. 206) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Emilie G. Jones, executrix of Thomas P. Jones, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Emilie G. Jones, executrix of Thomas P. Jones, deceased, of $2,450, in full for the services of Thomas P. Jones, a member of the board of examiners appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1843, entitled "An act to modify the act entitled 'An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam,'" approved July 7, 1838.

MR. HALE. I move to amend the bill by adding the claim of Mrs. Johnson, who is the co-petitioner of Mrs. Jones, and stands exactly on the same footing.

MR. IVERSON. I have no objection to that. MR. HALE. I move to amend it by adding the bill S. No. 212, as an amendment to this. It is: And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy, or the clerk in charge, or out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Nancy M. Johnson, administratrix of Walter R. Johnson, deceased, the sum of $250 in full for services of said Walter R. Johnson, as a member of the board of examiners appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1843, to modify the act entitled 'An act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam,'" approved July 7, 1838.

The amendment was agreed to.

THOMAS R. GEDNEY.

The bill (S. No. 207) from the Court of Claims for the relief of James L. Edwards, administrator of Thomas R. Gedney, deceased, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of $496 60, in full for all sums due to Thomas R. Gedney, as disbursing agent of the coast survey, prior to the year 1847.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYDIA FRAZEE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 208) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Lydia Frazee, widow of John Frazee, late of New York.

MR. IVERSON. I move that the bill be laid aside, and the House bill for the relief of the same party be taken up.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (C. C. No. 99) for the relief of Lydia Frazee, widow and administratrix of John Frazee, late of the city of New York, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to her $2,983, in full for the services of John Frazee, as architect and superintendent of the New York custom-house from the 3d of March, 1841, to the 21st of May, 1848.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS ALLEN.

The bill (S. No. 209) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Thomas Allen, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Thomas Adams, of $27,720.00, in full for printing twenty thousand copies of the Compendium of the Sixth Census of the United States, and furnishing the materials for the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUGUSTUS H. EVANS.

The bill (S. No. 210) from the Court of Claims for the relief of Augustus H. Evans was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Augustus H. Evans the sum of $800 in full for his services as clerk, in the State of Missouri, during the years 1835 and 1836.

Mr. HALE. Let the report be read. The bill does not say what he was clerk of. I do not care about it, if the chairman will say what it is.

Mr. IVERSON. I will take occasion to say that I do not know anything about it. I have not examined many of these cases from the Court of Claims.

The Secretary proceeded to read the opinion of the Court of Claims.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator from New Hampshire seems from what has been read, that this is a claim of a clerk for a land office for his salary; and the court find upon the evidence that it has not been paid, and is due to him. I do not think we can do any better than take that for granted.

Mr. HALE. I called for the reading, because the bill did not state what he was clerk of. I ask from some one cognizant of these matters, for I am not, whether these clerks look to the officer who employs them, or to the Government, for pay.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I understand they are paid by the Government. The Government authorizes a certain number of clerks in the office.

Mr. POLK. The Government pays them. I will also state that I know this gentleman, and know he was employed in the land office.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM GRIGER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 211) from the Court of Claims for the relief of William Griger.

Mr. POWELL. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow this bill to pass, or rather a House bill on the same subject?

Mr. POWELL. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to lay this bill on the table, and take up the House bill in its place.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (C. C. No. 96) for the relief of William Griger. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William Griger, in full for his contract made on the 18th of October, 1834, at Fort Smith City, with Captain French for lime-stone and mason work for the barracks at Fort Washita, in the Cherokee nation, $4,010.62.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIANO G. VALLEJO.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I made a mistake, as there is one more House bill, No. 92. I thought all the House bills had been passed. I move to take up the House bill No. 92.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (C. C. No. 92) for the relief of Mariano G. Vallejo, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to her in full, for the occupation by the troops of the United States, of a building on the square of Sonoma, in California, from May 30, 1848, to August, 1853, $8,500.

Mr. KING. Is there a report in this case?

Mr. IVERSON. I do not know the facts of this case. I will state, however, that this bill, which comes from the House of Representatives, reduces the amount of the judgment $4,000. The Court of Claims gave a judgment for $12,000, and the committee in the House cut it down to $8,500; and the House passed it in that form. I do not know the merits of the case.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Court of Claims gave a judgment for $12,600, and the House has reduced it to $8,500.

The Secretary read the report made in the House of Representatives, from which it appears that the petitioner alleges that in July, 1846, his private property, situated in the plaza of Sonoma, California, was taken possession of and occupied by the United States troops, and continued to be so occupied from that period until August, 1853, and for which he claimed as rent $20,000. The Committee reported a bill for the petitioner, allowing him $12,600. After an examination of all the testimony submitted to the court, the committee were of the opinion that the allowance of $12,600 is an extravagant one, and not justified by the evidence. The following allowance appeared to the committee to be not only fair under the proof, but liberal: rent from May 30, 1848, to November 16, 1848, at $200 per month, $1,100; rent from June, 1849, to July, 1851, at $200 per month, $5,200; rent from July, 1851, to August, 1853, at $100 per month, $2,500; total, $8,800. The Court of Claims allowed $12,600, as follows: from May 30, 1848, to November 16, 1848, at $200 per month, $1,100; from June, 1849, to July, 1851, at $250 per month, $6,500; from July, 1851, to August, 1853, at $200 per month, $5,000; total, $12,600.

Mr. KING. I should like to know on what authority the troops of the United States take possession of private property, and occupy it to the damage of the United States, in time of peace.

Mr. IVERSON. It was in time of war; during the Mexican war.

Mr. KING. In 1853?

Mr. IVERSON. In 1846.

Mr. KING. I thought the bill stated 1853. I ask that the report be read again. I think it is 1853.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It is from May, 1846, to August, 1853.

Mr. KING. I understood it was 1853. I think the matter is entitled to investigation elsewhere. If the War Department and the Army are not mixing private property and coming before the court, it is a matter that should elicit some inquiry else where, if such are the facts. I certainly see no authority for it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Let the report be read again.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. KING. I heard the last date. I did not hear the first.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POWELL. I now renew my motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 6, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayed by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. STOCKTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SERVICE ON COMMITTEE.

Mr. DIMMICK. I rise to a privileged question. I was appointed by the Speaker, some time since, one of a special committee of investigation, of which Mr. Hoard is chairman. Circumstances have since occurred which render it quite necessary that I should be absent from the city for a few weeks. Therefore, I ask to be excused from service upon that committee.

The gentleman was excused.

NAVY-YARDS.

Mr. FLORENCE, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy, in reply to the resolution of the House of March 1, 1860, calling for the evidence taken by the board of Survey, in relation to the condition of the navy-yards, be requested to transmit also the action of the Navy Department.

Mr. FLORENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM WATKINS.

Mr. WARBLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of William Watkins; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. TAPPAN. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. STANTON. Will the gentleman from New Hampshire postpone his call for a moment?

Mr. TAPPAN withdrew the call.

COMMITTEE DISCHARGED.

Mr. STANTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the petition of John B. Bowman, asking for a sale of the property belonging to the State of Kentucky, located at Harrodsburg, in the State of Kentucky; and also the remonstrance of the citizens of Kentucky, against the establishment of a cavalry depot at Harrodsburg, in Kentucky; and to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, in order that they may be sent to the Senate. I unask that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

SURGEONS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of Surgeon H. O. Mayo, in behalf of the corps of surgeons in the United States Navy; in which he refers to the committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WINNEBAGO INDIANS.

Mr. ALDRICH, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, for the removal of the Winnebago Indians, and the indemnification of the early settlers on their reservations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. HATTOX, one of the clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, informing the House that the Senate had passed a resolution and bills of the following title, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A resolution (No. 24) for the compensation of Rev. R. R. Richards, late chaplain to the United States penitentiary in the District of Columbia; An act (No. 145) concerning courts in the Territories;

An act (No. 229) for the relief of Angelina C. Bowman, widow of Francis L. Bowman, late captain in the United States Navy;

An act (No. 256) for the relief of Thomas L. Disharoon, of St. Louis county, Missouri;

An act (No. 295) for the relief of William B. Shubrick; and

An act (No. 375) to extend the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1851, entitled "An act to limit the liabilities of ship-owners, and for other purposes," to the Lake.

PORT AT PEMBINA.

Mr. ALDRICH also, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, for a fort or military post in the valley of the Pembina river; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ALEXANDER THOMSON.

Mr. PETTIT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Alexander Thomson, late United States consul at Maranhao, Brazil; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

AMERICAN CITIZENS IN MEXICO.

Mr. BRANCH, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, any information in his possession touching the reported expulsion of American citizens from Mexico, and the confiscation of their property by General Miramon.

NAVY-YARD IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. McRAE, by unanimous consent, presented the resolution of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to the Congress of the United States, in relation to the establishment of a navy-yard at the bay of Biloxi, in said State; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

KING AND SAMANIEGO.

Mr. HAMILTON, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the reports of the Court of Claims (No. 309) in the case of Thomas B. King, and (No. 307) in the case of Fernando Samaniego, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

BOUNTY LANDS TO SEAMEN.

Mr. ELY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill granting bounty lands to seamen on board of ships regularly commissioned by the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

UNITED STATES COURT AT BINGHAMTON.

Mr. DUELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for holding the circuit court and district court of the United States at Binghamton, in the State of New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HENRY R. CROSBY.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to communicate to the House the report of Henry R. Crosby, Esq., embodying facts and circumstances connected with the occupation of the Island of San Juan.

NAVIGATION OF HELL GATE.

Mr. BARR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill authorizing the formation of a company for the improvement of the navigation of the East river at Hell Gate; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ACCOUNTS WITH MINNESOTA.

Mr. WINDOM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to settle certain accounts between the United States and the State of Minnesota; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

BOUNTY LANDS.

Mr. HAWKINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill granting bounty lands to soldiers engaged in the Indian wars of Florida since the 3d March, 1856; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SARAH MURPHY.

Mr. NOELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Sarah Murphy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

PETER AND ALEXIS NATAKARE.

Mr. ASHLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Peter and Alexis Natakare; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ASHLEY also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for and facilitate the organization of the House of Representatives of the United States on the assembling of each Congress; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COOLIE TRADE.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask leave to introduce a bill and report to have printed and recommitted.

Mr. BRANCH. I object.

Mr. ELIOT. I only want to have it printed and recommitted.

Mr. BRANCH. I must object.

Mr. ELIOT. Then I call for the regular order of business.

MARGARET WHITEHEAD.

Mr. MILLSON. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the motion, which I submitted some time ago, to reconsider the vote by which the House referred to a Committee of the Whole House a bill for the relief of Margaret Whitehead.

I can in two minutes state the reasons which I have to urge in support of my motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order.

Mr. MILLSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill grants pension of five dollars per month to an old woman who is the widow of a boatswain in the Navy. At the last Congress a bill for her relief was reported here. It passed the House unanimously, and was sent to the Senate. It was reported to the Senate with a recommendation that it do pass, and it was put upon the Private Calendar. Some time afterwards, when it was taken up, some Senator objected to it, or urged as an objection to the passage of the bill, that it was extended the benefits of the law further than the law had ever gone; and, strange to say, the Senators were either not attending, or those attending did not seem to be aware that the law had always extended pensions to the seamen as well as the officers, although the statement was that seamen and petty officers and their widows were never entitled to pensions under the law. It was a very gross and remarkable error; but still it was an error, which induced the Senate to reject the bill. When I discovered it, I called on that Senator, and when I showed him the law and gave him the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions, he expressed great regret at it, and said he would take pains on any future occasion to repair the wrong of which he had been the unwitting cause.

All I wish to be done now is, that the House shall put the bill in the same attitude in which it would have been placed but for this unfortunate and singular misconception in the Senate. If the bill remains in the Committee of the Whole House, the probability is that it will hardly be reached in time to go to the Senate. I ask the House, if these considerations commend themselves to it as they do to me, that the reference be reconsidered. If they do not, the House will reject the motion to reconsider.

The question was taken on the motion to reconsider; and it was agreed to.

The bill was read. It requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Margaret Whitehead, widow of William Whitehead, late boatswain in the Navy of the United States, on the pension roll, at the rate of five dollars per month, from the 9th of April, 1854.

The question recurred on the motion to recommit the bill to a Committee of the Whole House; and it was not agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MILLSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. TAPPAN. I insist on the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the reception of reports from committees of a private nature. Reports are in order from the Committee of Elections.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Will the gentleman from New Hampshire yield to me, in order that I may propose to the House to take from the Speaker's table bill No. 303, and have it referred to the Committee on Commerce? The subject-matter of the bill is of great importance to many gentlemen in the city of New York and elsewhere. It refers to the guano trade. The bill has come from the Senate, and I wish to have it passed by this committee on Commerce, in order to bring it back to the House at an early day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that all the bills be taken from the Speaker's table for reference only.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that course will be taken.

Mr. TAPPAN. I have no objection to their being taken up merely for reference.

There being no objection, the following bills, &c., were taken from the Speaker's table, and disposed of as indicated below:

DISCONTINUED PORTS OF DELIVERY.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives, of March 26, 1860, requesting information relative to what ports of delivery, if any, were discontinued, &c.; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MARK ELISHA.

An act (S. No. 42) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Mark Elisha; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

GRANT OF LAND TO IOWA.

A joint resolution (S. No. 2) removing the restrictions on a certain grant of five sections of land to the State of Iowa; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

DESERTION AND ENLISTMENT.

An act (S. No. 46) to prevent desertion and to facilitate the enlistment of soldiers in the Army of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GUANO DISCOVERIES.

An act (S. No. 303) supplementary to the act entitled "An act to authorize protection to be given to citizens of the United States who may discover deposits of guano," approved August 18, 1856; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ARTHUR EDWARDS AND ASSOCIATES.

An act (S. No. 49) for the relief of Arthur Edwards and his associates; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. COLFAX. I desire to state that this matter has been under consideration by the Post Office Committee, and that we have unanimously reported a bill which is of precisely the same tenor as that passed by the Senate. I ask that this bill be placed upon the Private Calendar and substituted for our House bill, which is exactly the same.

It was so ordered.

SHIELDON M'KNIGHT.

An act (S. No. 30) for the relief of Sheldon McKnight; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

AARON H. PALMER.

A bill (S. No. 111) for the relief of Aaron H. Palmer; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

R. F. BLOCKER AND OTHERS.

A bill (S. No. 114) for the relief of R. F. Blocker, E. J. Gurley, and G. F. Davis; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A. F. SPENCER AND GURDON F. HUBBARD.

An act (S. No. 221) for the relief of A. F. Spencer and Gurdon F. Hubbard; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. COLFAX. That case has already been considered by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I move that the bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and printed. The motion was agreed to.

ABIGAIL NASON'S HEIRS.

An act (S. No. 324) for the relief of the heirs at law of the late Abigail Nason, sister and devisee of John and Deborah Nason; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

PROVIDENT ASSOCIATION OF CLERKS.

An act (S. No. 62) to amend the act to incorporate the Provident Association of Clerks in the civil departments of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

ALEXANDRIA AND HAMPSHIRE RAILROAD.

An act (S. No. 64) to authorize the extension and use of a branch of the Alexandria, Loudoun, and Hampshire railroad within the city of Georgetown; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN WASHINGTON.

An act (S. No. 300) directing the conveyance of a lot of ground for the use of the public schools in Washington city; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

ODD FELLOWS OF WASHINGTON.

An act (S. No. 232) to incorporate the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

An act (S. No. 104) for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Missouri, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

LOCATION OF BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS.

An act (S. No. 139) to authorize the location of certain warrants for bounty land heretofore issued; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

UNITED STATES AND PARAGUAY CONVENTION.

An act (S. No. 346) to carry into effect the convention between the United States and the Republic of Paraguay; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

APPEALS AND WRITS OF ERROR.

An act (S. No. 4) concerning appeals and writs of error; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

VACANCIES IN CERTAIN OFFICES.

An act (S. No. 5) to supply vacancies in certain offices; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SAMUEL J. HENSELEY.

An act (S. No. 249) for the relief of Samuel J. Henseley; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CONTRACTS ON CAPITOL EXTENSION.

Mr. MILLWARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That Senate Document No. 29, and Executive Document No. 22, be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, who shall inquire into the subject therein treated of, the action of the War Department, and of the officer in charge, in regard to the contract for the major repairs of the Capitol extension, and whether the late action of the War Department has been legal and right, or in violation of the legal rights of the contractors, Messrs. Biles, Bates & Hewes; with power to send for persons and papers, and leave to report at any time.

Mr. BRANCH. I must object to the resolution, unless that latter clause be stricken out.

Mr. MILLWARD. I will strike that out.

Mr. BRANCH. Then I will not object to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. WALTON, from the Committee of Claims, made an adverse report on the memorial of Adolphus Glavick; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAPPAN, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of Susanah A. Sawyer, heir of Archibald Montgomery; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOARD, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of William Hicks; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL H. TAYLOR.

Mr. TAPPAN, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, a bill (S. No. 100) for the relief of Samuel H. Taylor; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COLE & BARR.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Messrs. Cole & Barr; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MILES DEVINE.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 99 for the relief of Miles Devine, with a recommendation that it do not pass; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

THERESA DARDENSE.

Mr. THAYER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back Senate bill No. 31 for the relief of Theresa Dardense, widow of Abraham Dardense, deceased, and their children; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAULT STE. MARIE.

Mr. THAYER also, from the same committee, reported a bill in relation to the mission claims at Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM Y. STRONG.

Mr. TRIMBLE, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of William Y. Strong; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH D. GREEN.

Mr. ALLEY, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, made an adverse report on the petition of Joseph D. Green; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM MOREE.

Mr. LEE, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of William Moree; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MISSISSIPPI AND MISSOURI RAILROAD.

Mr. LEE, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of the Mississippi and Missouri Railroad Company; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM M'CORMICK.

Mr. LEE, from the same committee, made an adverse report in the case of the memorial of William M'Cormick; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS F. BOWLER.

Mr. ADAMS, of Kentucky, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Thomas F. Bowler, of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. THEAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution constituting Macon, in the State of Georgia, a port of entry for the time being, for the purposes therein specified, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

JOHN MONTY.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported a bill for the relief of John Monty; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES BELL.

Mr. VANCE, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of James Bell, late of Chambly, in the province of Lower Canada, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS WARE.

Mr. FERRY, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Lieutenant Francis Ware; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN WINSLOW.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the same committee, made an adverse report in the case of John Winslow; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN A. B. D'AUTRIEVE.

Mr. NOELL, from the Committee on Private

Land Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of John A. B. D'Autrive, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LAND TITLE IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, made an adverse report on the memorial of the citizens of New Orleans, for confirmation of title to two hundred and twenty-seven thousand eight hundred and fifty-three acres of land in the State of Louisiana; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS MADDEN'S HEIRS.

Mr. KENYON, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill No. 49, granting the right of preemption to a certain tract of land in the State of Missouri to the heirs and legal representatives of Thomas Madden, deceased; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

JACOB HALL.

Mr. EDWARDS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Jacob Hall; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM FISHER.

Mr. EDWARDS also, from the same committee, reported back Senate joint resolution No. 8 relating to the claim of William Fisher, late of Florida, deceased; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back Senate bill No. 71, for the relief of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that it be put upon its passage. It is granting power merely to this board of commissioners to expend money for educational purposes. I hope there will be no objection.

There was no objection.

The bill was read. It directs that the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions be released from the obligation imposed upon it by the fourth article of the treaty made between the United States and the nation of the Cherokee Indians, at New Echota, on the 29th day of December, 1835, which provides that the money allowed for the appraised value of the Union and Harmony mission reservations, should be expended in schools among the Osage and improving their condition; provided, that the said board shall expend the same money for the same purposes, among other tribes not provided with schools, which may seem proper in the judgment of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. I demand the previous question on the third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the bill received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. ETHERIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALMON W. BABBITT.

Mr. ALDRICH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of the administrators of the estate of the late Almon W. Babbitt, secretary of Utah; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL W. PUCKETT.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel W. Puckett; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN RANDOLPH.

Mr. BUFFINTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back House bill No. 336, for the relief of John Randolph, of Warren county, Tennessee, with the recommendation that it do not pass; which was laid upon the table, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK F. BROESE.

Mr. POTTLE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Frederick F. Broese, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SARAH BRASHEAR.

Mr. POTTLE, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of Sarah Brashear; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE F. MARSH.

Mr. ROYCE, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back House bill No. 8, for the relief of George F. Marsh; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANTON L. C. PORTMAN.

Mr. HUMPHREY, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Anton L. C. Portman; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL N. ELLIOTT.

Mr. DELANO, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Samuel N. Elliott and others, children of Nathan Elliott; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

REBECCA DAVIS.

Mr. DELANO, from the same committee, also reported a bill for the relief of Rebecca Davis, widow of Jesse Davis; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM HAYES.

Mr. DELANO, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of William Hayes, administrator of Colley Rucker; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE COMPTON.

Mr. DELANO, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of Catharine Compton, only child of Joel Callahan; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

ESTHER COLE.

On motion of Mr. DELANO, the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Esther Cole, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CHILDREN OF WILLIAM HUMPHREY.

Mr. BABBITT, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of the children of William Humphrey, a soldier of the Revolution; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALICE HUNT.

Mr. FENTON. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to report back to the House Senate bill No. 223 for the relief of Alice Hunt, widow of Thomas Hunt, with the recommendation that it do pass. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that it be put upon its passage at this time. It is a case of great merit. It passed the Senate without a dissenting voice, as I am informed. Mrs. Hunt, provided for in this bill—the widow of Captain Hunt, a brave soldier in the war of 1812, and a faithful and meritorious officer in the regular service to 1838, the year of his death—is worthy, and in pressing want of the relief which this bill will afford. I hope there will be no objection from any quarter.

Several MEMBERS. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Alice Hunt, widow of Captain Thomas Hunt, on the pension roll, and to pay her at the rate of thirty-five dollars per month from the 5th day of January, 1860, for life or widowhood.

Mr. FENTON. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation thereof, the bill received its several readings, and was passed.

Mr. FENTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KATE D. TAYLOR.

Mr. FENTON, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, an act (S. No. 250) for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brever Captain Oliver H. P. Taylor; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

ARCHIBALD MERRYMAN.

Mr. FENTON, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to Archibald Merryman; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CAROLINE E. CLARK.

Mr. FENTON also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Caroline E. Clark; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY SANFORD.

Mr. FENTON also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Henry Sanford; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MOSES GROOMS.

Mr. FENTON also, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to Moses Grooms; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. FENTON also, from the same committee, made adverse reports in the several cases of James H. Bradford, praying for arrears of a pension; Hector St. John Beatty, asking for an invalid pension for services in the war of 1812; and Henry Miller, asking for an increase of an invalid pension; which were severally laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

JUDITH NOTT.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of Judith Nott, widow of John Nott, late of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES VAN PELT.

Mr. FOSTER also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of James Van Pelt; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM W. DEHL.

Mr. FOSTER also, from the same committee, reported a bill to increase the pension of William W. Dehl; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DANIEL LUCAS.

Mr. FOSTER also, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to Daniel Lucas; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

KATE D. TAYLOR.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brever Captain Oliver H. P. Taylor, was referred to a Committee of the Whole House. I ask to have the motion entered.

The motion was entered.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made adverse reports in the several cases of the petitions of C. Melville Reeves, praying for a pension; Thomas Satterlee, praying for an invalid pension; Ezekiel Darling, asking for a pension; Silas Stevens, of Virginia, praying for an invalid pension; Charlotte Butler, widow of John Butler, praying for a pension on account of services and disabilities of her husband during the war of 1812; Nathaniel Wilbur, asking for a pension; John R. Tucker, asking for a pension on account of his father being killed at the battle of Fort Meigs, in 1813; Daniel Doland, praying for an increase of pension; Antoine Robedoux, asking for an increase of pension; James S. Rowland, a private in the war with Mexico, asking to be allowed a pension; Samuel Janney, asking for a pension; Edward Hardesty, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying for a pension; Isaac Allen, asking for an increase of pension; and Margaret Coward, widow of Thomas Coward, asking for an invalid pension.

SAMUEL REMICK.

Mr. FOSTER. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Samuel Remick, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

EDMUND MAYO.

Mr. BRABSON, from the same committee, made an adverse report in the case of Edmund Mayo; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

LEOPOLD SCHNEIDER.

Mr. BRABSON also, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to Leopold Schneider; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER MONTGOMERY'S HEIRS.

Mr. POTTER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of the children and heirs of Alexander Montgomery; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. POTTER. In this case I ask for the reading of the report. It is a peculiar case, in which a certificate of pension was granted, but the pensioner died before the delivery of the certificate. I desire to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. McQUEEN. I hope the bill will be passed. I am acquainted with the facts in the case. The agent of the parties sent the papers to me. They prosecuted their claim for a number of years. Finally they sent on the testimony, and the certificate issued; but after I sent it home, I learned that the party had died some five days before the certificate was received. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to pay to the child or children and heirs at law of Alexander Montgomery, late private in the revolutionary war, the amount due said Montgomery on the pension certificate which has not been paid to said child or children or heirs at law, by reason of the death of said Montgomery.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and, being engrossed, was subsequently read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McQUEEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROBERT PURCHASE.

Mr. POTTER also, from the same committee, reported a bill granting a pension to Robert Purchase, a soldier of the revolutionary war; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MARGARET PERRY.

Mr. POTTER also, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition of John Perry, for himself and surviving children of Margaret Perry; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE DISCHARGED.

Mr. POTTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions to ask that they may be discharged from the further consideration of the several petitions of Mary Douglas, Mr. Marshall, heir of Thomas Hoyt, and Martha Garrows and others; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, made an adverse report on the petitions of J. Andrew and J. Turk and Eleazer Huchcock, which were severally laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STOKES, from the same committee, made adverse reports on the petitions of William Walter, Catharine Welding, and Ellen Bowic; which were severally laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLORENCE, from the same committee, made adverse reports on the petitions of William A. Johnson and J. L. Harker; which were severally laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY F. BOWERS.

Mr. FLORENCE, from the same committee, reported a bill granting an invalid pension to Henry F. Bowers, which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES ART COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. TRAIN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill to define the power and duties, and fix the salaries of the United States art commissioners; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MAIL FACILITIES TO PIKE'S PEAK.

Mr. COLFAX. I ask to have a letter from the Postmaster General read.

The letter was read, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, April 6, 1860.
SIR: Referring to the communication of this morning in regard to lack of mail facilities in the Pike's Peak region, I would state that there never having been any post routes in the region till the act of March 25, 1859, it has been impossible for the Department to supply that section with mails. Nor is it possible now, until Congress furnish the appropriation for that purpose. It is, however, the policy of the Department to make the appropriation for this service, now incorporated in the general Post Office appropriation bill, should be passed at once, as the post routes for that region were in a special bill, and if Congress should be fit to consider therein, the Department would at once furnish the necessary funds under the act of March 25, 1859, to be obtained on reasonable terms, and advertise for regular contracts there, to take effect in July next.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

URBATO KING,
Acting Postmaster General.
Hon. BENJAMIN COLFAX, Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, House of Representatives.

Mr. COLFAX. I would state that Congress unanimously passed a bill establishing five post routes in the Pike's Peak gold region. During the entire of last year the people there had no mail routes at all, and had to depend on private expressmen, paying from twenty-five cents to a dollar for their letters. The same state of affairs would exist this year, unless Congress granted relief. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have instructed me unanimously, in accordance with the suggestion of the Post Office Department, to report a bill, and ask for its passage. It does not appropriate one single dollar that is not now estimated for and reported by the Committee of Ways and Means. There is simply this difficulty: The Committee of Ways and Means have reported an appropriation of $25,000 for this bill, while the general Post Office appropriation bill, which it is certain will not pass till the last day of the session. The Post Office Department says that, if that be the case, they will not be able to furnish mail facilities there this season; but that if this sum of $25,000 for mails in that region be put in a special bill, and that bill be passed at once, they can furnish those mail facilities under the act of 1859. There are people there by thousands. They have no army to protect them, no Government officers, and do not cost the General Government anything at all. I do think that we should at least give them mail facilities.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to discuss this question whenever the bill is to be put upon its passage; and I give notice to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. TAPPAN,] as well as the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COLFAX,] that I shall ask the attention of the House in opposition to the passage of the bill.

Mr. TAPPAN. Then I cannot give way.
Mr. COLFAX. Then I give notice that I shall on Monday endeavor to have substantial justice done to these people.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And I give notice that I shall on Monday resist it with all the influence that I can have on this side of the House.

EXECUTIVE INTERFERENCE WITH CONGRESS.

Mr. COVODE. Before a motion is put to go into Committee of the Whole House, I desire to submit a privileged question. I am directed by the special committee appointed to investigate charges of Executive interference with the legislation of Congress, to present a report. There was also a minority report presented. I ask to have them printed and referred back to the special committee.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would like to know what that report is.

The SPEAKER. The report is presented, with leave to the minority of the committee to present a minority report.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania had better withhold his report until the minority of the committee are ready to report.

Mr. COVODE. The minority have agreed that their report should be presented.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, let the minority present their report.

Mr. WINSLOW. I ask leave of the House to introduce a minority report.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the two reports will be referred back to the special committee, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not understand the policy of that course.

Mr. WINSLOW. If the House will take up this question to-day it will suit me just as well as at any other time.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to know from the gentleman from Pennsylvania when he proposes to take up this matter?

Mr. COVODE. Let the report be referred back to the committee, and we will bring it up when we are ready. The reason why we determined not to have it acted on to-day was, that this is private bill day, and we did not want to take up the time of the House with it.

Mr. TAPPAN. I only gave way to allow the minority to come in and be ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. The reports had better be printed and set down for some particular day. Then we will all know when it is to come up. Otherwise we would not know when this committee might come in with their report.

Mr. WINSLOW. Very well; let it be set down for Monday next.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, say Monday, then.

Mr. WINSLOW. I understand that the Judiciary Committee will present their report on Monday, and we have to have it printed. I suggest, therefore, that this report be received and printed, and made the order of the day for Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to that proposition?

Mr. FLORENCE. I object to its being made a matter of course.

Mr. HOUSTON. Probably the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not heard what the report is. I take it for granted that he has not, or he would not object.

Mr. WINSLOW. It strikes me that this is a matter of course.

Mr. FLORENCE. I understood that this was the final report of the committee. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. What is this? The SPEAKER. The report of a special committee.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I will object to making it a special order. I do not know what it is.

Mr. WINSLOW. I will state that the whole question is one of privilege, and can be taken up now, or at any time.

Mr. FLORENCE. Oh, no, not on private bill day.

The reports were postponed until Monday, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TAPPAN. I now insist on my motion.

UNITED STATES ART COMMISSIONERS—AGAIN.

Mr. TRAIN. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill fixing the salaries of the art commissioners was referred to a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. BRANCH. I would like to know if the bill was brought in by unanimous consent, or was reported from a committee?

The SPEAKER. No objection was made to its reception.

Mr. BRANCH. Well, I raise the point of order that bills brought in by unanimous consent for reference only, cannot be brought back by motions to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The bill was not brought in for reference. It was brought in as a report from a committee.

Mr. FLORENCE. I shall interpose another objection at this point. It is a bill of a public character, and was referred to a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. I intended to have interposed an objection at the time.

If I understand the bill, it fixes the salaries of certain United States commissioners. It is, therefore, a general bill, and should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and not to a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar; and I give notice that, when the motion to reconsider is called up, I shall discuss that point.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Mr. TAPPAN. I now insist on my motion, that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, [Mr. HAZEN in the chair,] and proceeded to consider the business on the Private Calendar.

This being "objection day," the bills to which no objection was made were laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that they do pass.

The committee considered the bills, &c., in their order on the Calendar, commencing where they left off on the last objection day.

REPRESENTATIVES OF PIERRE AYOTT.

A bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of the legal representatives of Captain Pierre Ayott.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I object to that bill. I want to discuss it.

HEIRS OF NEHEMIAH STOKELY.

A bill (H. R. No. 257) for the relief of Nehemiah Stokely, a revolutionary officer.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would like, if convenient, to have the statute of limitation read, that is referred to in that report.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Of course not; my object is to aid in the dispatch of business.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, and the gentleman will furnish the statute to the Clerk, it will be read.

Mr. BURNETT. I am opposed to this whole class of cases; and I object to the bill without any qualification.

Mr. COVODE. I move that this committee do now rise. It is no use sitting here having the bills read and objected to. This is as plain a case as you can find.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that, as I understood this case—and listened attentively to the reading of the report—there is not a particle of evidence that this claimant ever enlisted for the last three years of the war. The report is, that there is no record evidence of his service during the last three years of the war. But, even admitting that there is such evidence, I desire to say that these officers themselves came to Congress, and got five years' full pay; and now, when the youngest children they can have had must be more than fifty years old, their representatives come here to Congress for relief.

THE CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his motion. Mr. COVODE. No, sir; I insist on it. The question was taken, and the committee refused to rise.

HEIRS OF JOSEPH TRAVERSEE.

A bill (H. R. No. 259) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Traversee, a captain in the revolutionary war. [Objected to by Mr. Covode.]

ORPHAN CHILDREN OF JOSEPH JEWETT.

A bill (H. R. No. 259) for the relief of the orphan children of Joseph Jewett, a revolutionary officer, who was slain in battle. [Objected to by Mr. Covode.]

C. O. DUCLOREL.

A bill (H. R. No. 260) for the relief of Charles Olivier Duclouel, of the parish of St. Martin, Louisiana.

Mr. LONGNECKER. I object.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope gentlemen will not object to bills in this way. They are unconscious of the great wrong they are doing to claimants here. I hope they will not interpose objections, at least until they hear the bills read.

Mr. COVODE. The gentleman from Kentucky—

THE CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CURRY. I object to debate.

Mr. BURNETT. I hope the member from Pennsylvania may be permitted to say what he was going to say about me.

Mr. COVODE. The gentleman from Kentucky says that he is opposed to all these claims, and I see no use in my stating here.

Mr. BURNETT. I said that I was opposed to this class of claims. I repeat it. They are wrong upon principle. I have a right, as a member of this House, to object to any bill which I believe to be wrong, and I will not permit my comment by the member from Pennsylvania on my exercise of that right.

Mr. COVODE. I can object also.

Mr. BURNETT. You have no right to comment on my remarks.

THE CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Any member of the committee has a right to object to a bill; and when objection is made, the bill must be passed over.

R. K. DOEBLER.

A bill (H. R. No. 85) for the relief of R. K. Doebler.

The bill legalizes and makes valid the assignment by Samuel H. Dill, on land warrant No. 10117, for one hundred and sixty acres of land, issued 4th November, 1851, which assignment was made on the 28th of November, 1851, to R. K. Doebler.

The report states that on the 4th of November, 1851, a bounty land warrant No. 10117 was issued to one hundred and sixty acres of land to Samuel H. Dill, lieutenant in Captain Taylor's company, first regiment Mississippi volunteers, Mexican war; and that on the 28th November, 1851, the warrant was assigned to R. K. Doebler by Dill; but that the assignment was made prior to the passage of the act making land warrants assignable, and was therefore declared void by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who recommends, as the only remedy of the assignee, the passage of an act of Congress legalizing said assignment.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

VALERY LANDRY.

A bill (H. R. No. 261) for the relief of Valery

Landry, of the parish of Ascension, Louisiana. [Objected to by Mr. DEXL.]

FRANÇOIS GUILLOU.

A bill (H. R. No. 262) for the relief of the heirs of legal representative of Francois Guillou.

The bill confirms the heirs or legal representative of Francois Guillou, deceased, late of the parish of St. Landry, in the State of Louisiana, in their claim to that tract or parcel of lands known to the survivors of the southwestern district of Louisiana as section one hundred and eight, in township four south, range three east, and section seventy-eight, in township four south, of range four east, containing about one hundred and ninety-five acres, and that a patent shall issue thereon in ordinary course of law, provided that this act shall only be construed as a relinquishment of whatever title may now be vested in the United States of America, and shall in nowise interfere with any valid adverse claim of other third parties.

It appears, from the report, that Nicholas Lamthe, in 1797, transferred to Jacques Deshotels a tract of land of six arpents front by forty arpents back, containing about one hundred and ninety-five acres, which tract was sold by Deshotels to Francois Guillou in 1810, through whom it is now claimed. This six by forty arpent tract appears to be part of a tract of twenty-five by forty arpents acquired by Lamthe from one "Final," under the Spanish Government, though the title from that Government is not in evidence, and is said to have been destroyed by some fire; but all of which has, at different periods, been confirmed to claimants under Lamthe, except the tract now in question. Ten by forty arpents were confirmed to Helen Soileu, by the land commissioners for that district of country, in 1811. Under the act of Congress of 1819 and 1820, the commissioners divided the claims reported into eleven classes, placing the claims of Louis Guillou for nine by forty arpents, and of Francois Guillou for six by forty arpents, in the seventh class, the first six being confirmed. These two claims of Francois Guillou for fifteen by forty arpents covered the balance of the original twenty-five by forty arpents tract—only ten by forty of which had been confirmed up to that time. Louis Guillou afterwards made a new application for the confirmation of his claim to the line by forty arpents, under the act of 1820, and the same being reported favorably by the commissioners, was confirmed by Congress in 1826, leaving unconfirmed only the six by forty arpents of the original tract now claimed by the memorialist, as the representative of Francois Guillou, deceased. In view of the fact that there has been uninterrupted possession and cultivation of this tract by the claimants and their ancestors since 1797, and that the other parties, whose claims were upon the same basis, have been quieted in their titles, it is deemed that it will be but just and right to do the same in this case, at least to the extent of relinquishing whatever title the Government may have thereto, and preserving the rights of third parties, if any such there be.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

W. Y. HANSELL AND OTHERS.

A bill for the relief of W. Y. Hansell, the heirs of W. H. Underwood, and the representatives of Samuel Rockwell.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to W. Y. Hansell, and the heirs of W. H. Underwood, and the legal representatives of Samuel Rockwell, $30,000; but the balance of the sum of $60,000, reserved in the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee nation, (negotiated on the 22nd of December, 1835,) for the payment of said claims, and misapplied by the commissioners of the United States in the payment of other claims; the said sum to be distributed in the following manner: To W. Y. Hansell, $11,146; to the heirs of W. H. Underwood, $9,035; and to the legal representatives of Samuel Rockwell, $10,144.

It appears, from the report, that the memorialists were the counsel of the Cherokee nation, attending for the space of three years to a great multitude of cases in different circuits of the State of Georgia; that they were solicited by the commissioner who negotiated the treaty of 1835 to aid in the negotiation, with the assurance that their claims should be provided for in the said treaty; that the assurance was given by the commissioner, Mr. Schermerhorn, and the then President of the United States, General Jackson, and the sum of $60,000 was stipulated in the treaty to be applicable to their claims alone. This fact is acknowledged by the commissioners; and the fact that the treaty could not have been negotiated without the assent of the memorialists is also stated by Mr. Schermerhorn, the commissioner who negotiated the treaty. The claims of the memorialists were presented to the commissioners appointed to carry the treaty into effect, and were then referred to a committee of Indians, appointed under the twelfth article of the treaty, for the purposes therein specified, who made a report allowing $21,000 for three years' service of three gentlemen of high professional standing. Against this report the memorialists protested; but was finally agreed that this sum should be received as an advance, the commissioners expressly reserving to themselves the right to review the case and do what justice might require. Subsequent commissioners were appointed, who disagreed in opinion upon the claims, and on the suggestion of the Secretary of War, the commissioners referred the account to seven professional gentlemen of Georgia, with power to any three to act, five of whom united in an award, which was laid before the commissioners. In the mean time, the commissioners had directed a portion of the fund reserved for the payment of these claims to others, leaving only some eight thousand dollars of that fund expended, which sum the last board of commissioners, acting under the award, directed to be paid to the memorialists, reserving the whole amount of the reserved fund which remained under their control. The memorialists now claim that the balance of that fund, which was created for their benefit alone, and which has been applied by the commissioners of the United States to other purposes, is now due to them.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN JOHNSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 263) for the relief of John Johnson.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I think that claim is founded upon mischievous principles. The idea is, that a man who was with the army of a gentleman for five years, and never paid him when he was entitled to be paid, is preposterous. I must object.

CHARLES STILLMAN.

A bill (H. R. No. 264) for the relief of Charles Stillman.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles Stillman, the sum of $500, in full compensation for a chaland, or ferry-boat, used and appropriated to the public service by the officers of the Army of the United States, and the crew was with Mexico, in a ferry-boat for the transportation of troops and army stores across the Rio Grande, at Matamoros, during said war.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I do not like to object; but it is well known that all services of this character are paid by the proper officers. If this man has not received his pay, there must be some reason for it. I object.

Mr. STANTON. If the gentleman will bear the report read, he will see why this man did not get his pay.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Very well; I will withdraw my objection until I hear the report.

The report was read. It shows that at the commencement of the war with Mexico the petitioner was a resident of Matamoros, in the Republic of Texas, and the crew of the ferry across the Rio Grande at that place, and the crew of the ferry-boat, used in the transportation of passengers and freight across the river. That a few days before the capture of that place by the American troops under General Taylor, in 1846, the petitioner, and crew of the ferry, and the crew of the ferry-boat, were with Mexico, and the crew of the ferry-boat was exalted from that place by virtue of a proclamation of General Ampudia, the Mexican general in command of that department. That during his absence his boat was seized by the officers in command of the army of the United States, and used in the transportation of troops and army stores at the capture of Matamoros, and detained and used as a ferry-boat during the occupancy of that place by the army of the United States until it was worn out. A letter from the Third Auditor of the Treasury, however, states that the proof before him, on the application of the petitioner to that officer, shows that the boat was first captured by the Mexican army, and recaptured by our troops from the Mexicans, and that for that reason the claim was disallowed by that office. Although the Government is not bound to indemnify or make compensation to a petitioner for property captured or destroyed by an enemy in time of war, yet, if it is recaptured by our Government, the title of the owner is revived, and he may reclaim it; or, if it is retained for public use, compensation must be made to the owner. Two witnesses and the petitioner testify that the boat was worth $500. But the builder of the boat, whose testimony is taken by the petitioner, testifies that it was worth $500, and that he sold it to the petitioner for that sum.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

FREDERICK STEPHENS.

A bill (H. R. No. 265) for the relief of Frederick Stephens.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Frederick Stephens, of the county of Kane, and State of Illinois, the sum of fifty dollars, in full satisfaction for all claims on account of services rendered as a private in the company commanded by Captain James Sulich, in the regiment of New York militia, composed of one month in the war of 1812, and of all claims on account of loss of time, and expenses incurred by reason of sickness contracted in the service.

It appears, from the evidence submitted in this case, that the petitioner was drafted for the term of one month at Bainbridge, in the county of Chenango, and State of New York, about the 1st of September, 1814, as a private in the company of Captain James Sulich, in the regiment of New York militia commanded by Colonel Billinger. He served with Colonel Billinger for one month in the war of 1812, when he was taken sick, and with the permission of his captain retired from the lines to a place where he could be taken care of by his friends, and where he remained sick until some time after the company was discharged. It is worthy of some notice, that the name of Sulich is not borne upon the rolls of said company, and for that reason he never drew any pay, even for the time that he was in actual service. Owing to the death of his captain soon after, the company was discharged. He was never able to get the omission of his name upon the rolls rectified. The facts above set forth are proved by the affidavit of William Piercy, who was a soldier in the same company, and who conveyed the petitioner from the army to his friends after he was taken sick, at the request of his captain. The petitioner has proved his service of one month in the said faction of the Commissioner of Pensions, and been allowed one hundred and sixty acres of bounty land therefor. The petitioner prays to be paid not only for the actual service of one month in the war of 1812, but for the loss of time and expenses incurred during some six months of sickness, contracted in the service.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MISSOURI OSAGE HOSTILITIES.

A bill (H. R. No. 130) to pay the State of Missouri the amount expended by said State in repelling the invasion of the Osage Indians.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the State of Missouri the sum of $100,000, being the amount of money said State expended in repelling the invasion of the Osage Indians in 1837.

It is stated in the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Missouri, that the policy of the General Government has, during a course of many years, placed upon the border of Missouri said Arkansas an immense number of Indians, nearly equal, by actual computation, to the effective population of the two States. This policy, which yearly receives the sanction and adoption on the part of the Federal Government, has exposed that frontier to great and imminent peril from which the few forces of the United States upon that line are utterly unable to protect the citizens. Whenever a host of scout occurs among the Indians, the settlements of the whites become the theaters of their predatory excursions, and the retaliation which is thus provoked leads to murderous warfare. In 1837, an incursion was made of this character, on the part of the Osages, into the southwestern portion of Missouri, which it became necessary for the military authorities of that State to repel. Under the known rule of Indian warfare—which consists of a sudden and unexpected inroad, an exterminating massacre, and retreat—the military forces of the United States at that period in Missouri could not be summoned in time to meet the danger, and the only resource for defense and repulsion was in the State militia. A portion of them was ordered into the field, and the incursion was repelled, happily without much injury. In the prosecution, however, of this expedition, the State of Missouri was compelled to sustain and liquidate all the costs of the forces thus raised to defend its frontier and protect its citizens, which costs amounted to a sum of $21,146 90.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARTIN BURK AND CHARLES S. WINDER.

A bill (H. R. No. 266) for the relief of Brevel Lieutenant Colonel Martin Burk and Captain Charles S. Winder, of the United States Army.

The bill directs the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to credit the accounts of Brevel Lieutenant Colonel Martin Burk and Captain Charles S. Winder, of the United States Army, with the sum of $100 each, in being the sum of the moneys in their possession on board of the steamer San Francisco during the month of December, 1853, at which time the steamer was lost, and which sum now stands charged against Brevel Lieutenant Colonel Burk and Captain Winder upon the books of the Treasury, it having belonged to the recruiting fund of the United States Army.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. A. W. ANGOS.

A bill (H. R. No. 267) for the relief of Mrs. A. W. Angus, widow of the late Captain Samuel Angus, United States Navy.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Anne W. Angus, widow of Captain Samuel Angus, of the United States Navy, deceased, the amount of pay which he would have received if he had remained in the Navy from the date of his dismissal to the date of his death, at the same rate he was drawing when dismissed; and that she be placed in all respects as if he were as she would have been had her husband not been dismissed the service; said allowance to be in full of all claims of said widow.

It appears from the report that Mrs. Angus is the widow of Captain Samuel Angus, late of the United States Navy, who entered the service in 1799, became a lieutenant in 1807, a commander in 1813, and a captain in 1816. During his connection with the service he served with distinguished bravery, and his name and deeds have received honorable mention in our naval history. This heroic state there was wounded in the engagements with the enemy in the war of 1812, one of these wounds a severe one upon the head. The medical testimony submitted proves that this wound produced temporary fits of insanity, but he was entirely recovered, and was subsequently to some of his attacks he performed a cruise during which "his mind was rational." During one of his mental aberrations he wrote to the Secretary of the Navy a rude and insulting letter, for which he was summarily dismissed the service by the Secretary of the Navy, and ceased his administration. As soon as he became aware of the injustice he had unintentionally committed in dismissing an officer for an act for which he was not responsible, he wrote to his successor, Mr. Adams, urging the restoration of Captain Angus to the service, saying, "I am sensible that it comports with justice, as well as humanity, to reinstate him." He was not, however, reinstated, but was allowed a pension during life, which, had he not been dismissed, he would have been entitled to as an invalid pensioner, in addition to his pay. In consequence of his dying out of service, his widow was deprived of right a pension for life or widowhood under the existing laws, and she is obliged to apply to Congress for the passage of a special act, which she did, but was not successful until nearly nine years after his death, when five years' pension was granted her, which was renewed for a further period of five years, and expired on the 4th of March, 1853. The petitioner asserts that her pension was not adequate to meet the expenses of herself and family, and compelled by her necessities and the repatriation which she thinks is due for the wrongs inflicted on her husband and family, she asks to be placed in all respects as if the pay of a pension, as she would have been if her husband had not been dismissed the service.

Mr. BURNETT. I do not object to this bill; but I desire to inquire of the gentleman who reported this bill, how much, or how many years' pay, does this bill provide for?

Mr. DUELL. I will state that my colleague [Mr. SENECAY] reported this bill. He is not at this moment present.

Mr. CURRY. This bill provides for an appropriation of about sixteen thousand dollars; and I will say to the gentleman who reported this bill, in my judgment, it is a very meritorious case. The gentleman who reported the bill examined the case with great care, and the allegations contained in the memorial are fully sustained by the proof. This is a very proper case. When the insolent letter was written by Captain Angus, he was laboring under a mental aberration. This bill simply gives his widow the pay which he would have received if he had not been dismissed from the service.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARTHA SWILLING.

A bill (H. R. No. 368) to pay to the surviving children of the late Martha Swilling, widow of George Swilling, the pension that was due her to the period of her death under the act of 7th of July, 1838. [Objected to by Mr. BEAUFORT.]

JAMES LACEY, of TENNESSEE.

A bill (H. R. No. 369) granting a pension to James Lacey, of Grainger county, Tennessee.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of James Lacey, of Grainger county, Tennessee, upon the invalid pension roll, at eight dollars per month, beginning on the 1st of January, 1860, and to continue during the existence of his present disability.

It appears from the report, which was read, that James Lacey was mustered into the service the 5th of January, 1814, under Captain Adam Minell, of Carter county, Tennessee, and on the 18th day of May following was transferred to Captain Everett's company, the former being discharged; and that on the march from Fort Strother to the Horse-shoe Bend, the said Lacey took the measles, and, from being greatly exposed in various ways, the disease fell into his limbs, and he was confined to his bed for two months, and has never been well since, as the proof shows, and cannot at this time get his members into assistance, but for the want of nine weeks after he returned home. The proof shows that he was an able-bodied man before entering the service. The proof further shows that there have been several pieces of bone extracted from his hip. The said Lacey has applied to the Pension Office for assistance, but for the want of some proof that it was impossible for him to get owing to deaths and removals of witnesses, he was refused aid.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN MADDEN.

A bill (H. R. No. 370) granting a pension to John Madden, of Claiborne county, Tennessee.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John Madden, of Claiborne county, Tennessee, upon the invalid pension roll, at eleven dollars per month, beginning on the 1st of January, 1860, and to continue during the existence of his present disability.

It appears from the report, which was read, that John Madden enlisted under Captain Taylor, Pendleton district, South Carolina, in July, 1812; served five years, was discharged at Fort Crawford, and paid off at Montgomery, Alabama; then volunteered in consequence of his dying of General Jackson to Florida and Pensacola; was an orderly sergeant, and in loading his pistol, as ordered, it accidentally fired, and bursting, caused him to lose his middle finger and part of the fore finger, disabling him in that hand ever since.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move a clerical amendment to the bill. I know Mr. Madden. He is a constituent of mine, and lives in Campbell, and not in Clinch County. I move that "Campbell" be substituted for "Claiborne," wherever it occurs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON. I would inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee, (Mr. STOKES), who made the report, what reason there is for this bill, and why it is that the name of this party cannot be placed upon the pension roll at the Department without special act of Congress.

Mr. STOKES. The case has not been before the Department at all. From the facts and proofs in the case, it was clear to the minds of the committee that Mr. Madden was entitled to relief, having served in his country's service, and having received a wound.

Mr. STANTON. I do not propose to object to the bill. It is a small matter. The proofs show that he is entitled to it under the general law; and I do not see the necessity for the passage of this bill.

Mr. STOKES. It is as clear a case as ever was presented to this House. The rules at the Department are so stringent, that the Commissioner of Pensions is in the habit of rejecting claims upon mere technical objections. Because some surgeon was not living who saw this soldier wounded, and because such proof was not presented, this claimant was refused to have his claim acknowledged at the Pension Office. The committee was of the impression that the case was a good one; that the proofs were clear; and they, therefore, upon the grounds of equity and justice, have recommended that this bill ought to pass. This claimant received a wound in the discharge of his duty. [Cries of "Let it pass!"]

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am opposed to extending the law; and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the bill must be passed over.

CYRUS C. BLACKMAN.

A bill (H. R. No. 271) granting a pension to Cyrus C. Blackman, of St. Helena parish, Louisiana.

Mr. STANTON. Precisely the same objection applies to this bill that was made to the last bill.

JAMES MADDEN—AGAIN.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Upon an explanation which my friend from Tennessee (Mr. STOKES) gives me, I withdraw my objection to the bill granting a pension to James Madden, if I have the general consent to do so.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that all objections will be withdrawn to these pension bills.

Mr. STANTON. I objected to the other case upon the ground that I thought it was a case which ought to come in under the general law. I think it is right. I shall withdraw my objection, if the gentleman from Georgia withdraws his.

Mr. BURNETT. We cannot get along if gentlemen are permitted to withdraw their objections. I do not object to these cases, however.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the case of James Madden.

There was no objection; and 186 bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

CYRUS C. BLACKMAN—AGAIN.

A bill (H. R. No. 271) granting a pension to Cyrus C. Blackman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is objection withdrawn to this bill?

Mr. STANTON. I withdraw my objection. Let the bill and report be read.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Cyrus C. Blackman, of St. Helena parish, Louisiana, upon the invalid pension roll, at $22.50 per month, beginning on the 1st of January, 1850, and to continue during the existence of his present disability.

It appears from the report, which was read, that Cyrus C. Blackman was a lieutenant in Captain Hardin's company in the war of 1812, discharged at New York, wounded by a cut on the hand by an Indian, and has been disabled ever since. The proof shows that he is disabled three-fourths of his time. His middle finger was amputated, affecting his shoulder very much. He was in the battle of Lundy's Lane.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ADELAIDE ADAMS.

A bill (H. R. No. 272) granting a pension to Adelaide Adams, widow of Commander George Adams, United States Navy.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Adelaide Adams, widow of the late Commander George Adams, of the United States Navy, on the pension roll, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, and to pay her a pension at that rate from the 9th of June 1853, and continue during her widowhood.

It appears from the report, which was read, that the claimant, Mrs. Adelaide Adams, is the widow of Captain George Adams, of the United States Navy, who entered the Navy in the year 1818, and died on the 19th of April, 1856, at Baltimore, Maryland, of a disease contracted in the service. It appears that the only objection to allowing a claim at the Pension Office was owing to the construction of the phrase "line of duty." From the evidence submitted there can be no doubt that the disease of which Captain Adams died was contracted whilst he was in the line of his duty. Doctor James C. Palmer, a surgeon in the United States Navy, certifies "that the late Commander George Adams, before being detached from the receiving ship Ontario, at Baltimore, called my attention to the fact that he had a cough. He was soon after relieved from command of the Ontario, and passed out of my professional observation; but I learned, after the lapse of many months, that he had a constant cough, with other symptoms of pulmonary consumption. When next I had opportunity to observe, he was in an advanced stage of the said disease, of which he certainly died. I do believe, from a study of his history, that he had a continuous cough after leaving the Ontario, and it is my opinion that the disease of which he died probably originated with that cough; in which case, it seems to me a sufficient ground for its recognition to reimbursement of exposure incurred during a period when he was engaged in continuous acts of duty." Dr. G. W. Miltenberger, of Baltimore, who attended Commander Adams after he was detached from the Ontario, certifies, under oath, that the disease of which he died commenced in ravages while he was in charge of the Ontario. Lieutenant Henry Rolando, who served with Commander Adams on the Ontario in the year 1851, states that he remembers distinctly the sufferings of Commander Adams from "an inflammatory disease, accompanied with a cough, which I have no doubt was the development of the disease of which he subsequently died." Mrs. Adams has five infant children depending upon her personal exertions for support, and she is in very indigent circumstances.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

MICAHIAH LAWKES.

A bill (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of Micajah Hawkes.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Micajah Hawkes, of Eastport, in the State of Maine, on the roll of invalid pensioners, and to cause him to be paid a pension, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, being half of his pay proper, to commence with the 1st of January, 1853, and to continue during his natural life.

It appears from the report, which was read, that Micajah Hawkes was an assistant surgeon in the naval service of the United States in the war of 1812, and was acting in that capacity on board the Hornet at the time of the capture of the vessel.

It appears from the report, which was read, that that ship with the British sloop-of-war Peacock. He was honorably discharged May 10, 1813. It is equally clear that he is now totally disabled, at the age of seventy-four years, is dependent on his children. Three physicians and a surgeon of high standing in his vicinity give it as their decided opinion that his disability, which has been of long standing, is entirely in consequence of the accident which, as he alleges, befall him while in the line of his duty on board the Hornet. The chief point of difficulty in his case is with regard to the proof of the original injury. His own statement is, that soon after the Hornet was captured at New York he was called on to visit a sick man at one or two o'clock in the morning; the vessel at that time being under repair, and everything about her being in confusion and disorder. In passing to the patient he fell into the hold of the ship, and sustained a very serious injury of the small of the back, less serious at first, but which has constantly increased, until he has long been unable to move without help.

As to this original injury, Mr. Hawkes furnishes no statement but his own; nor can he do so. He continues to serve as assistant surgeon until honorably discharged, and the rolls furnish no proof of his disability. It further appears that there is but one other survivor of this cruise of the Hornet, namely, Commodore Forrest, now absent in command of the Brazilian squadron. His testimony cannot, therefore, be obtained at present; nor is it certain that it would avail the applicant anything if procured. The narrative of the applicant is consistent with itself, and with the opinions of the medical gentlemen on file. He produces no certificates of his disability, but his vicinity in favor of his application, and his integrity and honorable standing are heartily endorsed by Hon. STEPHEN C. FOSTER, of this House, and by Hon. T. J. D. FULLER. The applicant has given a truthful statement of his injury, and of its effects. The report of the medical gentlemen in asking for a pension has been, that by his practice of medicine he was enabled to support himself without calling upon the Government for that assistance which long since he was justly entitled to.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

TIMOTHY CAVAN.

A bill (H. R. No. 274) for the relief of Timothy Cavan, an invalid pensioner.

The bill was read. — Mr. BURNETT. When does the pension commence?

The CHAIRMAN. According to the bill, from the date when he was discharged for disability to the United States Navy, and to the date when he was granted a special act of Congress in 1849.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That is not allowable at all.

Mr. STANTON. I object.

NATHANIEL SMITH.

A bill (H. R. No. 275) for the relief of the children of Lieutenant Nathaniel Smith, deceased. [Objected to by Mr. CRAWFORD.]

HANNAH McDOWELL.

A bill (H. R. No. 276) for the relief of Hannah McDowell.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Hannah McDowell, widow of James McDowell, late a lieutenant in the third regiment United States rifles, war of 1812, upon the pension roll, under the act of February 3, 1853, at the rate of $12.50 per month, commencing on the 29th of July, 1854, and terminating on the 4th of July, 1859.

From the report, it appears that Hannah McDowell, the widow of Lieutenant James McDowell, applied for the benefit of the act of Congress passed the 3d of February, 1853, on account of the services of her said husband, who was a lieutenant in Captain Robert Campbell's company, third regiment United States rifles, in the war of 1812, and who was an invalid pensioner at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, commencing on the 29th of July, 1854, and terminating on the 4th of July, 1859. She now claims that her pension should commence at her husband's death—say May 29, 1854; and adduces, in support of her claim, the decision of Hon. Attorney General Black in the case of Mrs. Sarah Hunt, of Alabama, who died in 1854, on appeal, that her pension should commence from the date of the act, say February 1853, or from the date of her husband's death; and upon said decision, the Commissioner of Pensions did pay several cases; but in hers, as in others, refused to carry out the said decision, for the alleged reason that Congress made no appropriation for such cases.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

WEBSTER S. STEELE.

A bill (H. R. No. 277) for the relief of Webster S. Steele.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Webster S. Steele, of Illinois, on the list of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars a month, commencing on the 4th of December, 1859, to continue during his lifetime.

Mr. FENTON. I move to amend the bill by striking out "1859" and inserting "1857." This case was before the Senate last year, and they passed a bill allowing this individual a pension from that date. This bill failed in the House for want of time. The case having thus been satisfactorily made out to the Senate, I move the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

It appears, from the testimony, in the case, that Webster S. Steele was, in October, 1814, mustered into the service of the United States as a private in the company of Captain William Eels, of the New York militia, called out in the war of 1812 with Great Britain; that he was stationed, with the company to which he belonged, at Sackett's Harbor, in the State of New York, and there, while in the service and in the line of his duty, contracted a disease from hardship and exposure which has resulted in making him an invalid, and rendered him unable to obtain his support by labor.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

PAULING, WILLIAMS, AND OTHERS.

A bill (H. R. No. 278) for the relief of John Paulding, David Williams, Isaac Van Wert, and Sergeant John Champe.

The bill provides that, in consideration of the distinguished services of John Paulding, David Williams, Isaac Van Wert, and Sergeant John Champe, in the revolutionary war, they be granted one township of land to the heirs of John Paulding, one township of land to the heirs of David Williams, one township of land to the heirs of Isaac Van Wert, and one township of land to the heirs of John Champe, to be laid out and located on any of the unappropriated lands of the United States subject to entry, under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall authorize the same to be done as follows: The townships to the heirs of John Paulding to be laid out and located in the name of Joseph K. Paulding and John Paulding, of the city of New York, as trustees, to hold and convey said township of land, in equal shares, to the heirs of said John Paulding, deceased; the townships to David Williams, Isaac Van Wert, and Sergeant John Champe, to be laid out and located in the names of their several heirs, on satisfactory proof being given to the Secretary of the Interior of such names and heirships—the heirs in the several cases mentioned in the act to take by right of representation.

The Clerk commenced to read the report, but was interrupted by Mr. TAPPAN. As all the historical facts in reference to Paulding, Williams, Van Wert, and Champe were familiar to members, I move that the reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. BURNETT. I suppose members are familiar with all the facts connected with the capture of Major André. There is no doubt of that. This bill, I believe, contains a grant of just ninety thousand acres of land, according to my calculations. Now, I ask for the reading of the report, then I may see the reason the committee give. Why we should vote that amount of land, without naming the descendants, or showing who they are. I do not remember any incident connected with that transaction which would entitle the representatives of these parties to so large an amount of land.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky object to the bill?

Mr. BURNETT. I do not now. I want to hear the report read, that I may see the reason for the bill.

Mr. COX. General Washington promised Sergeant John Champe a township of land for services rendered by the American Army, and going to New York, for the purpose of taking Arnold, and Washington Irving has also written a letter, asking that the same amount of land shall be granted to the descendants of these other men. The land is to go to the descendants themselves, and not to speculators.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. How much land is granted by the bill?

Mr. COX. Only four townships.

Mr. BURNETT. I will propose this to the gentleman from Ohio. It is a very ungracious task for a member, in the discharge of his duty, to object to bills, and then to be commented upon in reference to doing so. Now, if the gentleman will give us the yeas and nays upon this bill in the House, I will have no objection to having it laid aside, to be reported to the House.

Mr. COX. I am entirely content with that.

Mr. COBB was understood to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama object?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I object, to remove all doubt.

JOHN W. TAYLOR.

A bill (H. R. No. 284) for the relief of John W. Taylor, and certain other assignees of preemption land locations.

The bill declares valid all assignments of preemption bounty land warrant locations, at any of the land offices of the United States, made in good faith prior to the 19th of October, 1852, and prior to the 21st of May, 1856, under instructions from the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the former date, and authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to cause patents to be issued, in the name of the assignee, on all such locations as now remain unsold and have not been patented.

It appears from the petition that, on the 23d day of March, 1852, Congress passed an act declaring all bounty land warrants assignable, and all valid certificates of location made with land warrants made assignable. By the same act, persons having preemption rights were authorized to locate the same with land warrants. That the then Commissioner of the General Land Office, Hon. John Wilson, construed said law as permitting locations made by preceptors, as well as by the holders of the warrants, to be assigned. He issued instructions to that effect to the registers and receivers throughout the United States, in October, 1852. In accordance with said instructions, quite a number of entries were made by preceptors in the years 1852 and 1853, which were afterwards assigned to other parties. The entries so made and assigned were all duly patented to the assignees as they were reached in their order in the General Land Office, until 1856, when the Secretary of the Interior overruled the opinion of the Commissioner, and decided that the law did not recognize assignment by preceptors, and from that time to the present patents have been withheld. The petitioner represents that he holds a certificate of location assigned as aforesaid, and that the Secretary of the Interior declines to patent it to him. The petitioner says that Hon. J. Taylor, then Secretary of the Interior, declared it as his opinion that equity and good faith require that parties situated as the petitioner should have their patents, and will recommend the passage of a law which will authorize him to issue the patents to the petitioner and others similarly circumstanced.

Mr. VANDEVER. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, and also the letter of the Commissioner of the Land Office, be read as a part of the report.

The letters were read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
WASHINGTON, February 27, 1860.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 26th inst., in relation to the petition of John W. Taylor, of Iowa, and in reply to inclose the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the matter, of this date, accompanied by the draft of a bill for the relief of certain assignees of preemption land claims.

The views of the Commissioner of the General Land Office are concurred in by this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. THOMSON, Secretary.
Hon. W. VANDEVER, Committee on Public Lands, United States House of Representatives.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 27, 1860.

Sir: I have the honor to return herewith a letter of the 6th instant to your address from Hon. William Vandever, chairman of the House Committee on Public Lands, with the petition of John Taylor, asking Congress to authorize the issuing to him in patent as the assignee of a pre-emption location, and to request him to instruct that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on the 10th day of October, 1852, did issue instructions to local land officers, deciding that assignments of pre-emption locations made prior to the 19th of October, 1852, were valid as those made at ordinary private entry; that many locations of this character were afterwards assigned to other parties. The individual petitioner is one of a class of persons whom it is proposed to relieve by legislation, by authorizing patents to be issued to the assigners of all pre-emption locations assigned under the authority of said instructions of the 19th of October, 1852, and prior to the 21st of May, 1856, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior. In the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior this legislation would be just and proper, and in that view I herewith inclose the draft of a bill which it is thought will cover the whole class of cases represented in part by the petition of John Taylor.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOSEPH R. WILSON, Commissioner.
Hon. Jacob Thompson, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BURNETT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether this bill is in accordance with the views contained in the letter of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. VANDEVER. The exact bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Then let it go.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES S. CAMPBELL.

A bill (H. R. No. 298) for the relief of James S. Campbell. [Objected to by Mr. BURNETT.]

MARY ANN HENRY.

A bill (H. R. No. 311) for the relief of Mary Ann Henry. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

PAULING, WILLIAMS, AND OTHERS—AGAIN.

Mr. COBB. At the earnest solicitation of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. Cox,] I withdraw my objection to the passage of the bill [H. R. 278] for the relief of the heirs of Paulding, Williams, and Van Wert.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is mistaken in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken. It was not the gentleman from Alabama on whose objection that bill was passed over. Objection was made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TAPPAN. I was about to suggest to the committee that as we have already done a good deal of work to-day, and for the purpose of relieving members, and especially the reading clerks, the committee should now rise, with the understanding—which I suppose was had last week—that the House will sit to-morrow. With that understanding, I move that the committee rise, and re-report the bills to the House.

Mr. PRYOR called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. TAPPAN. I withdraw my motion. I supposed that we might rise now, as the committee is worn out, and that we might meet and do more business to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I withdraw my objection to the bill for the relief of John Johnston.

Mr. BURNETT. I object to going back on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

JOHN BONDLES.

A bill (H. R. No. 312) granting a pension to John Bondles.

The bill was read. It requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John Bondles, of the State of Ohio, on the list of invalid pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 5th of January, 1859, to continue during his natural life.

The report was read.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That is a case for the Pension Office, and I do not know why it comes here. I must object to it.

Mr. MARTIN, of Ohio. I trust the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his objection. This is a very meritorious case.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand that the Pension Office indorse this claim; but I do not understand it. Still, I am willing to do anything reasonable.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the passage of House bill No. 312?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It is necessary to settle principles in disposing of these cases, and therefore I must make the objection.

PRIVATE BILLS PASSED.

Mr. BOOCOCK. This is Good Friday; and, as it is understood we are to meet again to-morrow for the purpose of attending to private business, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to. So the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BRANCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had instructed him to report back, with a recommendation that they do pass, the following bills, (two of them with amendments):

A bill (H. R. No. 85) for the relief of R. K. Doebler;

A bill (H. R. No. 263) for the relief of the legal representatives of François Guillery, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 264) for the relief of W. Y. Hansell, the heirs of W. H. Underwood, and the representatives of Samuel Rockwell;

A bill (H. R. No. 264) for the relief of Charles Stillman;

A bill (H. R. No. 265) for the relief of Frederick Stephens;

A bill (H. R. No. 130) to pay to the State of Missouri the amount expended by said State in repelling the invasion of the Osage Indians;

A bill (H. R. No. 266) for the relief for Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Martin Burke and Captain Charles S. Winder, of the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. No. 267) for the relief of Mrs. A. W. Angus, widow of the late Captain Samuel Angus, United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 268) granting a pension to James Lacey, of Grainger county, Tennessee;

A bill (H. R. No. 270) granting a pension to John Madden, of Campbell county, Tennessee, with an amendment;

A bill (H. R. No. 271) granting a pension to Cyrenus C. Blackman, of St. Helena parish, Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 272) granting a pension to Adelaide Adams, widow of Commander George Adams, United States Navy;

A bill (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of Micajah Hawkey;

A bill (H. R. No. 276) for the relief of Mrs. Hannah McDowell;

A bill (H. R. No. 277) for the relief of Webster S. Sterle, with an amendment; and

A bill (H. R. No. 284) for the relief of John W. Taylor, and certain other assignees of pre-emption land locations.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bills will be voted on en masse.

There was no objection.

The amendments to bill (H. R. Nos. 270 and 277) were agreed to and all the bills were engrossed, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TAPPAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bills were passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROPOSITION TO ADJOURN OVER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged question. We have passed a great number of bills to-day. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. TAPPAN. I desire to appeal to the House to vote down that motion. When we adjourned over last week, it was with the understanding that as Friday and Saturday of this week were to be objection days, the House would sit both these days.

The SPEAKER. No debate is allowable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FLORENCE. If the gentleman understood why it is desired that the House should sit to-morrow, I apprehend there would be no objection to doing so. Under the new rules, to-morrow will be objection day. We can continue on the Private Calendar, and if the gentlemen do not choose to come here, we can still go on and do business, if there be only a quorum.

Mr. BURNETT. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CARTRELL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered: Messrs REAGAN and BURNETT were appointed.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 68.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

Mr. TAPPAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BURNETT. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. TAPPAN. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays. It was understood last week that we should sit on Saturday of this week.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURNETT. I withdraw the motion to adjourn over.

Mr. ADRAIN. I move it.

Mr. TAPPAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. It is indispensable to the committees of the House that they should have to-morrow to transact business.

Mr. TAPPAN. I would say the gentleman and the House, that I am perfectly willing the House should adjourn over Saturday of next week.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 87; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Barksdale, Blair, Boteler, Bush, Burnett, John B. Clark, Clayton, John Cochran, Cocking, Crawford, Curry, Curtis, B. Winter Davis, Fenton, Garrett, Graham, Hazen, Hawking, Hill, Hughes, Jones, Keith, William Kellogg, Lamar, Logan, Mallory, Elbert B. Martin, McTernand, McLean, Montgomery, Steadman, Moore, Morrill, Nelson, Potter, Reagan, James C. Robinson, William Smith, Stearns, Stanton, Stevens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Stone, Thayer, Thomas, Vallandigham, Vance, Elliott B. Washburn, Webster, and Winter—51.

NAYS—Messrs. Charles F. Adams, Allen, Ashley, Ashmun, Babitts, Barr, Binks, Bowers, Branson, Bruce, Burnett, Brewster, Buchanan, Butterfield, Cary, Carter, Cobb, Coffey, Cox, James Craig, Davis, Delano, Dill, Dunn, Edgerton, Edwards, Eliot, Elbridge, Ferry, Foster, French, Frank, George, Howe, Hild, Harlan, John T. Harris, Helmick, Hoard, Holman, Howard, Humphrey, Hutchins, Jenkins, Jenkins, Francis W. Johnson, DeWitt C. Leach, Lee, Loomis, Lovell, Maynard, McKnight, Milton, Moorhead, Morse, Nixon, Noft, Olin, Olin, Foster, H. P. Olin, Pettit, Phillips, Quinn, Rice, Christopher Robinson, Royce, Schwartz, Scrantom, Sherman, Spaulding, Spinner, Stokes, Tappan, Thacker, Thomas, Train, Trimble, Vandever, Van Wyck, Verree, Waldron, Walton, Watson, and Woodruff—87.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

The question then recurred on the motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are several members present who desire to make speeches to-night in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I ask the gentleman from New Hampshire to withdraw the motion to adjourn, with a view of going into committee.

Mr. TAPPAN. I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BURNETT. After the occurrences of yesterday, I hope the gentleman will not make that motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. Those speeches have to be made at some time; and they might as well be made now as at any time.

Mr. BURNETT. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope that the House will vote that motion down.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I call for tellers on the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. VALLANDIGHAM and BURNETT were appointed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will state that the gentleman from Ohio, that my colleague [Mr. HARDEMAN] is entitled to the floor in committee; and I think he is not present.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have consulted the gentleman's colleague, and this motion is perfectly agreeable to him. He is present.

The House divided; and the tellers reported twenty in the affirmative—a further count not being demanded.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. SHERMAN to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

SHELDON McKNIGHT.

Mr. COLFAX. I was not in my seat to-day when the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was called. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House to report by Senate bill (No. 30) for the relief of Sheldon McKnight.

No objection being made, the bill was received, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CARITY BILL.

Mr. BURNETT. I now call the yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio. I am opposed to these debating societies.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN's motion was then agreed to. So the rules were suspended; and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. PETTIT in the chair).

Mr. BRANCH. I ask what is the business before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the bill of the House (No. 338) to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes, to authorize a loan, to regulate and fix the duties on imports, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRANCH. This being Friday, I make the point of order that, under the 30th rule of the House, the Private Calendar is under consideration in committee; and I submit that that Calendar must now be taken up.

Mr. SHERMAN. This committee is subordinate to the House. The House has resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If the gentleman will examine the Calendar of this committee, he will find that there is no private bill upon it. It is therefore too late for the gentleman to make his question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it is not competent for the Chair to take into consideration what are the rules of the House in relation to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDEMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRANCH. I understand the Chair then to overrule my question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the gentleman's question of order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will state that it was the understanding that the House should adjourn at four o'clock to-day. The clerks of the House are overburdened with business, and it will be impossible for them to get through with it unless the House does no more business to-day. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WELLS. I understand the gentleman from Georgia does not wish to go on with his remarks to-night, and appeal to him to yield me the floor to submit a few remarks which I have prepared. If gentlemen do not wish to hear me they can retire from the Hall. I should, of course, be very happy to have them remain and hear me; but as this is about the hour when most of the gentlemen here are in the habit of dining, I am perfectly content for them not to remain to listen to me.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from New York, with the understanding that I shall be entitled to the floor when the House shall again go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. That arrangement will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I must object.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I certainly object. I insist that when a gentleman obtains the floor he shall go on with his remarks, or else yield the floor altogether. If the gentleman from Georgia yields the floor unconditionally, I have nothing to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRANCH. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield for a motion that the committee rise?

Mr. HARDEMAN. I will.

Mr. BRANCH. I move that the committee rise. Mr. COLFAX. I hope that motion will be voted down. The objection that has been made comes from the friends of the gentleman from Georgia. [Mr. HARDEMAN.]

Mr. BRANCH. The friends of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Wells] are those who brought the House into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman is not a political friend of the gentleman from Georgia—not so claimed; and I trust that such a statement will not be made.

Mr. BRANCH. The gentleman from Georgia yielded the floor to make the motion that the committee rise. It is his desire that the committee should rise; and I want to see whether the House will force him to go on, at this late hour of a private bill day, against his will.

Mr. WELLS. I am told that the committee has refused to rise; and if that be so, the gentleman from Georgia has the right to yield to me. He has yielded to me, and I will now proceed with my remarks.

Mr. BURNETT. I appeal to the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw his motion that the committee rise. We are in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and we had better do what we can, instead of rising. Here is the gentleman from New York, ready to go on with his remarks; and I think we ought now to withdraw objection to his going on.

Mr. BRANCH. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia, if he desires to proceed this evening. If he desires to adjourn, I will insist on my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina, that I would prefer not to go on with my remarks this evening. In order to accommodate the gentleman from New York, I will yield to him, if that be the general wish of the House.

Mr. CLARK. Objection has been made. Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Yes, sir; I object. Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman from Georgia yields the floor unconditionally, I have no doubt he will get it when the committee again goes into session. That courtesy, under circumstances like the present, has never been denied that I am aware of.

Mr. HARDEMAN. With that understanding, I yield the floor unconditionally.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I have objected to the gentleman from Georgia yielding to the gentleman from New York. I insist on my objection reluctantly, but I insist upon it.

Mr. WELLS. I will proceed with my remarks.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield the floor unconditionally?

Mr. BRANCH. I stated that I would yield entirely to the wishes of my friend from Georgia. If he desired to proceed this evening, I would withdraw my motion that the committee rise; but if he desired to go on another day, and wished to retain the floor, I would insist on it. I understand that my friend from Georgia desires that the committee should rise, and that there should be an adjournment, rather than that he should go on this evening.

The question is whether the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will deprive the gentleman from Georgia of his opportunity. I have never known the committee to refuse to any gentleman what is now asked by the gentleman from Georgia, that, not desiring to proceed this evening, the gentleman should rise to let him go on another day. I insist on my motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia waive his privilege to go on with his remarks?

Mr. HARDEMAN. I understand that there will be objection to my proceeding when the committee is in session, another day, if I now yield the floor unconditionally. I do not like to lose my position; and, although I do not prefer it, yet I will yield this evening with my remarks.

Mr. BRANCH. If it accords with the concurrence of my friend, I will withdraw the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I want to see this House adjourn, and for that purpose I want to see this committee rise.

Mr. STEWART, of Maryland. I call the gentleman to order. The gentleman from Georgia has the floor, and I want him to go on if he wishes to proceed this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is not in order. The gentleman from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move that the committee rise to the next day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not the floor to make that motion.

Mr. HARDEMAN. I yield the floor for the present.

Mr. WELLS. The floor has been yielded, and I will go on. A question of incalculable moment.

Mr. BURNETT. I rise to a question of order. I understand that Jefferson's Manual has been consulted a part of the rules of this House. Now, that Manual is against the practice of reading speeches which has grown up here, and I want to put a stop to that practice. Members rise here and read speeches which go into the Congressional Globe and out into the country as if they were delivered here in this Hall in debate. It is in the House and in society in accordance with the rules of this House. The gentleman from New York holds in his hand a printed speech, which he proposes to read—he does not care how many may be present. He proposes that that speech shall go to the country as if it were delivered here in debate, when it has been set up in type and printed before he came into the House. He proposes to have it made a part of the printed debates of this body. It is a mere force. It is but a form; for it is no speech, and is such as was never intended to compose a presented debate of any deliberative body in the world. I make the point of order that he cannot proceed to read that paper. Let me read the language of Jefferson's Manual:

"For the same reason a member has not a right to read a paper in his place, if it be objected to, without leave of the House; but this is never granted, but when there is an intimation or gross abuse of the time and patience of the House."

I make the point that this reading of speeches is a great waste of our time.

Mr. SHERMAN. This point of order has been made many times, and it is never sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, putting his decision upon the ground of the uniform precedents on the point, and the general usage of the House, which has never been sustained.

Mr. BURNETT. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. Is my appeal debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal is not debatable.

Mr. BURNETT. I have to yield to that decision; but the Chair is equally wrong in both of his decisions.

Mr. HATTON. I hope now the gentleman from New York will be allowed to proceed.

The question was taken, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. WELLS. A question of incalculable moment is now before the American people for their decision—one which the American people only can decide. Not to Congress, not to courts, not to the American Legislature or judicial tribunals in the States, but to the people only, belongs the final decision of this question—a question fraught with the most momentous consequences, not only to themselves and their posterity, but to the race. Of what vast importance is it that the tribunal which is to decide this question should stand upon its high trust so as to advance the interests of humanity, by establishing its decision upon those principles of truth and justice which are the foundation of God's throne, and which alone can keep His footstool from destruction. Before the people we stand with the judicial power, and decide what may be irreversible, save by the fiat of the Father and Judge of all, each individual should strive to fit himself for the right discharge of his high function. He should ask that his affections may be purified and his intellect enlightened, that he may be able to rise above all selfish motives, and, unbiased by all disturbing influences, may act under the dictates of conscience and the inspirations of the Father. He should pray that prejudice and passion may not be suffered to cloud his reason, and that the Divine radiance from the Sun of Intelligence may illuminate his understanding. Then, with pure hands, an unclouded intellect, and affections radiant with love to God and man, each citizen, clothed with the judicial emblem, may fearlessly enter upon the discharge of his high trust.

Now, here, on the threshold of my argument, I bow my soul in humility before the throne of Eternal Justice, and, with the aid of His love, and the energy, which shall enable me to advocate, as I ought, the cause of man before the august tribunal of the people—august, because the people are images of God, end, clothed with sovereignty by Him, their high function is to exercise justice, and to afford the means for the service of their servants who sinke, execute, and decide the laws.

Of infinite importance is it that the source of power, the spring that feeds the stream, should be pure as the crystal; for if the fountain is turbid at its source, it will carry with it, in solution, the impurities of the fen and the morass from which it issues. Only as from a virtuous people, from the mountains of an elevated spiritual state in the individual man, roll the springs of power, through the channels of the law, will be found concentrated here an ocean of power, whose winds and waves even will but purify its depths, whose expended surface shall not only bear the weight of nations, but, under the beam of a Sun of Righteousness, shall send up the cloud and the mist, which, wafted to the remotest rim of its mighty realm, shall descend upon the humblest and the highest, in the dew and rain of equal and just laws, replenishing the fountains of its power, making their flow perennial, and our Union perpetual.

Now, in its application to man, is a rule of conduct commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong. Obedience to law, as thus defined, is an essential element of all well-being. No man, no society, no nation, no world, can revive in its appropriate sphere with its connection to law. All law is the will expressed of God or man. The source of law is indirectly God; the Creator of the universe must be its preserver, in its parts as well as in the mighty whole; and whether, by direct power and omniscience, He holds man in their spiritual spheres, or through His laws, nations in their fate, or individuals in their destinies, or whether He acts through instrumentalities of matter or of mind, the Divine is, indirectly, in all law, and is the law of law. However remote the source of the law, its connection is continuous and eternal. His will, whether expressed in His word or written on His works, is immutable, and embraces within its range the worlds of matter and of mind.

Unless man is self-created and self-existent, he must himself be subject to the will of his Creator, and the laws men make by permission, must accord with the law of God; must derive their sanction from their agreement with and subordination to the laws of God. If they were against His attributes of Justice and Mercy, they cannot bind the conscience of man, or be the basis of any law. Once clearly established that a human law is in direct and palpable opposition to the divine, and its force, its sanction as a law, is gone. It has ceased to be the will of God, and is no longer the voice of the people, and is the voice of a tyrant or a fiend. Whether it be a British stamp act, or ship-money act; whether the act of a King, or of a British Parliament clothed with the highest authority on earth; a decision of a Jeffreys, smiling the ermine of the bench, or the proclamation that Nebuchadnezzar made on the plain of Dura, or the decree of Darius, which, like the law of the Medes and Persians, altereth not; the teachings of Holy Writ and of the fathers of the Revolution instruct us that resistance to tyrants is obedience to God. And it is better to bleed as our fathers, suffer as Hampden, walk through the fire, as our fathers with Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, or be cast into the lion's den with Daniel, than to give the sanction of human law to crime against God and man.

The momentous question for the people to decide is, whether the nation, under the forms of law, is to sink into a realm of despots and slaves, or to rise into a glorious Republic of freemen? Whether sterility and death shall finally spread a pall over the land, or fertility and life make it jubilant with joy? Whether the savannas of the sunny South, and the green hills and valleys of the North, shall ultimately be tilled by the swart descendants of Africans or by our own Anglo-Saxons? Whether the mill shall resound to the crack of the overcracker's lash, or echo with the cheerful sounds of free labor? Whether the wide plantation, with its princely mansion and circle of huts, shall dot the surface of our western prairies, and education languish, religion perish, slavery or white slavery your joy, and your sons shall rise the cottager's humble dwelling, garnished with the woodbine and the rose; over whose happy threshold the free boy, with his merry laugh, bounds, with satchel in hand, at the tinkle of the school bell; and whose cheerful winter hearth, while the winds whistle and the snow descends without, gathers the sacred circle of home; the decent matron, careful of her children's heats, and minds, and bodies; the sturdy man, rough, but contented with the toils of life, glancing with proud eye upon the simple comforts that surround the casement of jewels that he calls his own, and watching with jealous care and manly pride the gradual unfoldings of those germs of mind into the graces of a genuine manhood and priceless womanhood; knowing that no rude hand may enter the golden hour of his life; and his wife, with willing heart to the sharer of his life-long joys and sorrows; sure that the nurselings of his care, around whose hearts are twined the fibers of his cure, will not be torn rudely from his embraces; sure that the daughter of his heart will be his sorrow meet him with glad smile and joyful lip; sure that the boy whom he expects to support in steps, as they grow feeble with age, will, at the appointed time, take his place, and supply his vacant chair; confident that the circle of home, knit together by ties of affection and duty, consecrated to works of use to the neighbor below, will be gathered again into a holier and happier circle on high, to dwell forever in God's wider realm of active rest and nobler kingdom of use above—the perfected fruit of obedience to the laws of God, which ripens the sun of liberty shines upon man and society with unclouded ray, and gives free scope, under the influence of free institutions, to the unshackled faculties of body, mind, and heart, to unfold into perfection?

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty; not vigilance in Congress or in the Executive, or in the President; not in lords or aristocracies; but in the people. Power, in its very nature, is cumulative and aggressive. The principle of attraction applies to all recipients of power, as well as to the globe of space. The rights of the people are the smaller; the aggregated mass the scattered particles; and nothing but the centrifugal will overcome or neutralize the centripetal force. Action, activity, ceaseless activity, eternal vigilance, is the preservative of all things. No recipient of the delegated power which infers only in the individual man is free from this attractive influence. A knowledge of this tendency made our fathers make this Government one of checks and balances. For this purpose, making the grants of power as limited as possible; separating, by as distinct lines as possible, the sphere of each body of power remaining in the people from that imparted to the States, or delegated to the Federal Government. In the Federal Government, separating and defining the functions of its various departments, thereby making the abuse or encroachment of power more easy of detection and enhancing the responsibility of the public servant; sedulously providing against the absorptive influence of power by the Government, by leaving the great bulk of individual freedom and sovereignty undelivered in the people, and by providing for the resumption, through peaceful methods, of any power delegated which the people might deem injurious to their rights; by short terms of office and frequent elections, keeping alive that active interest in governmental affairs among the people, upon the constant exercise of which the safety of the whole depends; lastly, by affording the amplest protection which the most sacred guarantees could afford to the absolute and inalienable rights of the citizen. The President, as Executive, will have no legislative, no judicial power, but his qualified veto was a check on Congress, and the legislative veto. The Senate, as a coordinate branch, in its right to make treaties and confirm nominations to office, was to be a check upon the executive functions; in its power to try im-peachments, a limitation of and check upon the judicial; in its authority to originate and to adopt, or reject or amend laws, a check on the executive; and, for the object of representation, and together with the Senate, the sole power to declare war, and to pass all laws within the limits of the Constitution. Independent of both the executive and the legislative branches; selected for their great learning, for their pure and spotless character; to observe the conduct of the other branches of Government; freed by the tenure of their office, and by their pursuits as jurists, from all motives of earthly ambition likely to conflict with the faithful discharge of their duties; with no responsibilities but to God and their own conscience—this Supreme Court of the Union is entrusted, as to the cherubim of old, the flaming sword of Justice, "which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life." Above all, and over all, the purifier of them all, the check on all, the source of all the powers of the Government, the eyes of the sovereign people, with eternal vigilance as their motto, watch the movements of the mighty mechanism of their hands, ready at the needed moment to correct, through the sovereign energy of their potent will, the first encroachment of any part upon the appropriate functions of another.

This Government of ours—thus constructed, thus guarded—is a mighty instrument of progress. But as it moves along the shining years, freighted with the hopes of humanity, the ceaseless, the fearless, the virtuous vigilance of the people can alone make its movements safe, can alone repress and confine its elements of power within their appropriate limits, and keep Government and people from being plunged into the gulf of despotism, down which the statistist Commonwealth have toppled into shattered fragments.

"The end of Government is to perfect
The human spirit."

The laws which should govern the individual man should steadily have this object in view—the perfection of the human spirit. All violations of the laws that govern the individual man delay or frustrate this end. The social laws which regulate man's relation to his fellow-man have all the elements of this perfection. Without obedience to the physical, moral, and religious rules, which are intended to govern man, as an individual and as a social being, there can be no true progress. By the operation of those laws, under the Providence of God, the experience and powers of the individual gradually unfold and grow into a genuine manhood. Robust and vigorous health attend only upon purity, temperance, and exercise. Cheerfulness of temper, serenity of mind, holiness of affection, and power in execution, consist best, if not only with robust and vigorous animal health, which is the fruit of obedience to the laws of our animal nature. A sane mind in a sound body, is a maxim not less true than true. But health of body is but the base, the foundation of the superstructure. Its sensational capacities are but the robes that gate through which the intellect images of the world without; the inimitable treasures that are gathered from the mine of the universe; the "wafted odors" that assail the sense of smell; the Hesperian fruits that melt into the joys of taste; the music of the woods;

"The many tones of air and earth and sea,
All instruments of melody, that cheer
Still air to music; yea, the stars that give
To every thought and love its vocal power."

the glories of nature, the purple flush of morn and eve, the "starry canopy on high," all the blended beauties of art and nature that stream upon the senses, the joys of touch, the fragrance of the air—all this sensational wealth, daguerreotypied upon the human soul in an image and likeness of the visible universe, with all its vast and complicated phenomena—these stores of wealth, which constitute the rudiments out of which the grand fabric of human culture is woven, and which, in its diversity, stately structures to adorn the slopes of all coming time—these are but the adornments of the vestibule to the temple of the soul; for all these may stand as stony statues in the dome of thought, as lifeless as the marble and as cold. Man may "Take the patient years,

To plow the fallow fields of history
For buried treasures;
"Gather the ripe fruits of all sciences;"
"Drink deep of the Hesperian spring;"

and yet sink below the level of the beast. Physical power, mental culture, vast attainments in art and science, literature, the love of knowledge, the useful, the Promethean fire decenda, until the vitalizing principle of love penetrates and permeates the done of thought—not self-love, not love of the world, not love of "the world's applause, the body's pleasure," but the love of the neighbor, the love of God; that love which makes the pathway of duty more joyous than beds of roses; that love which prompts to works of usefulness; that love which wears the crown of thorns and bears the bloody cross. When such love enters and fills the human soul, the stony statues turn to living flesh; the torpor of death springs into the energy of life; a glorious sunlight fills the thought; holy affections sail out in messages of love, and come back from their deeds of mercy, laden like bees with honey. From under the threshold of the done pours forth the river of life, fertilizing in its course the soil of sorrow. The done of thought is no longer opaque, but like a diamond, radiates the beams of the sun of right-ousness; for then man becomes the Shekinah of the Almighty. Through him streams the Divine wisdom; from his intellect flows the Divine science, the Divine power, enlightening, elevating, energizing every faculty of his nature. Then man glows in the image and likeness of his Maker, and the promise is fulfilled.

Such is an imperfect and hasty sketch of that perfection of the human spirit, which is the only legitimate aim and end of human government. When the human soul is so perfected, it is a heaven; it may be here on earth; for the kingdom of God is within us, and mental state depends, not so much on the amount of what we know, as on the purity of our motives and our hearts. Buried knowledge is a sepulcher; and whether it be a single grave or a pyramid, within it is nothing but dust. Slavery is the sepulcher of knowledge thus buried. It is a chain upon the body, a manacle on the mind, a heavy fetter on the heart, a dark, gloomy, and fearful growth—impossible to the slave. As well expect the rose-bud, encased in ice, to unfold its petals, as to expect the germs of intellect and affection in a slave to unfold into a genuine manhood or priceless womanhood. The slave, in the hands of his master, straining influence, save of fear, are cast aside. Mental culture is stopped in its beginnings, by a sensual, toilsome, and hopeless life. The rudiments, the alphabets of knowledge, are cut off from him. The fires of intelligence are smothered, and in their stead the smother pall of brutal ignorance and stolid indifference o'creepens the soul. Within its firmament shine no luminaries, twinkle no stars. The ample page of God's works written on the face of nature is dimmed and blurred; and the will of God, revealed in his word, is almost entirely lost. The "written word" of the Scriptures is denied. His affectional nature is perverted at its source. Self rules supreme. The fountains of affection are turned in upon himself. The outlets are all blocked up. He can become an image only of those pestilent poisons which receive but never issue forth the springs of the mountain—whose stagnant and stinky wave becomes the home of the reptile, and from whose putrescent surface rise the miasmatic vapors of death. His love cannot go forth, save in adulterous love to her whose chamber palls of lust should build around him a panoply of power to resist every impure desire. His affections cannot wear themselves in to the interests of his offspring, stimulating him to self-sacrificing toils for their temporal good, and to a stainless life, in the paths of duty and virtue. His love cannot be the love of his country, that ennobling element of moral and mental wealth, has no scope for action. No common interest makes him ready, like Winclried, to gather the spears of his country's enemies into his own bosom; no temple of fame lifts its airy dome in the distance, to which he the dormant energies of his soul, to climb the steep where it shines afar. The toil-worn body—the darkened intellect, the dwarfed and lighted affection—is the lot of the slave. Say not his lot is happy. If his inborn virtues lift him above the beast, it is not because his surroundings have tempted to the result.

Man is not man, and heaven, to which he is an heir, cannot be within him, save in the right and free exercise of his faculties of body and of soul. He must be free, and virtues are constituted amongst men that man may be free. For this end they derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed. They are instituted by men to protect man through men. All the powers of Government are imparted by men; all the powers are intrusted to men, and all the functions of Government are exercised by men, and are carried on for the protection of man; and all Governments should be under the influence of those principles of liberty, justice, and mercy which are intended for man. Kings have arrogated the Divine right to govern, impudently assuming that their power was descended directly from the Divine, not mediately through man; forgetting that the Almighty has said, "I have made a king in my anger," and that the Apostle has declared, "That there is no respect of persons with God." Forgetting that the Father of all has given to all one common nature, has clothed all with the like powers, and has prepared for all who obey His law one common destiny. Classes of men have arrogated to themselves the power and right to govern.

In the pride of wealth, class, or color assumed to have been lifted above the common level of humanity, and to have been placed by nature or by nature's God upon a higher plane of existence, and clothed with sovereign attributes; invested with the prerogative of God, and to be obeyed only, but all whom in their sinful pride they have placed below them.

But the corner-stone of our political Governments is the equality of all men. Kings, aristocracies, classes, are repudiated by the fundamental principles of the Declaration of Independence, and of our national and State constitutions. The long struggle of the Revolution, the glorious lives sacrificed on the altar of freedom, were to secure the privileges or liberty, which the colonists believed to be the birthright of every subject under the British Constitution and laws. The rights secured by Magna Charta, and the other great charters of British liberty, were claimed to be the natural and inalienable rights of all men. In their Declaration of Independence they declared "that all men are created equal," and endowed by their Creator with the inalienable right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." They repeated this doctrine in their subsequent manifestoes. In one form or another, almost every State constitution enunciated the same doctrine. They pointed to the work of Sydney and Locke as their text-books, and appealed to the Bible in confirmation of the natural equality and independence of the whole species. The flagrant inconsistency of the system of African slavery existing in the States, was everywhere proclaimed, was a frequent subject of regret and of painful study among the statesmen and patriots of the revolutionary era. Patrick Henry declared that it was a debt we owe "to the purity of our religion, to show that it is at variance with that law which warrants slavery." It has been admitted on this floor that, among the founders and fathers of the Republic, slavery was considered as morally wrong, and inconsistent with the principles of equality, and the natural and inalienable rights declared by the Declaration of Independence. Such were the sentiments of Jay, Hamilton, and Franklin, and hosts of northern men. Such was the almost unanimous voice of all the great men of the South. Eloquent extracts, showing the abhorrence of southern men to slavery, have been repeatedly published in newspapers and pamphlets.

Among the warmest opponents of the institution of African slavery, were Washington and La Fayette, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Patrick Henry, Pinckney; and scarcely a single southern State but what has borne testimony against the iniquity of African slavery, either in the debates in its legislative halls, by the promi-neous of its constitution, or the decisions of its judicial tribunals.

The early abolition of slavery, at the time of the formation of our national Government, was confidently expected. The first steps had already been taken which led to its extinction in over half of the original States. The action of the States prohibiting the slave trade, and the authority to Congress to prohibit it entirely in 1808, the branding the traffic as piracy, were all considered incipient steps in the abolition of slavery. Nothing is more clearly established by the history of the times, than that African slavery was considered a curse, inflicted upon the American colonies through the mercenary rapacity of British merchants, sanctioned by the British Crown—a blot upon the national catechism, all attempts to wipe out which, by the colonial Legislature, had been defeated by the British Government, and which, under the influence of our free institutions, was gradually but surely to be obliterated.

How terribly our fathers were mistaken, we now know. The seven hundred thousand slaves have grown into four millions. To the six original slave States have been added nine others, and the original area has been more than trebled, the single State of Texas, alone, having more territory within its bounds than is included within the limits of the six original States, and which the institution now exists. From hanging its head in penitence, the institution now rears its Gorgon front, and threatens to overwhelm all the Territories and all the States, or, like him of Gaza, in his wrath, pull down the pillars that support the temple of our country.

The ultimate aped of African slavery over the fairest portion of this continent, if not over the whole of it, or its ultimate extinction, is a fact raz, which is as capable of demonstrative proof, by logical reasoning, as any contingency in the future.

It is reasonable to suppose that the framers of our national Constitution, when they authorized Congress to abolish the slave trade in 1808, understood that doing so would necessarily ultimately result in the abolition of the institution itself, and a large number of the members, were in favor of the immediate abolition of the slave trade. The statesmen of Virginia saw, even in that early day, that slave labor was impoverishing the soil and the State. Even then, the contrast between Virginia and Pennsylvania, in which free labor mostly prevailed, was most marked in favor of the northern State. And not only patriotic, but interested motives urged the ultimate extinction of slavery. It was with indignation and regret that Madison and the opponents of slavery, in order to keep within the Union two southern States, submitted to the postponement of the prohibition of the African slave trade for twenty years. That father of the Constitution saw and said that the ultimate extinction of slavery would be thereby indirectly postponed, if not entirely prevented.

The revival of the African slave trade is indispensable to the perpetuity of African slavery. Whoever walks the streets of this city, or enters its dwellings, knows that Africans are seldom seen. Unlike our northern abolitionists, southern abolitionists, perhaps under the influence of a more genial sun, are working out the emancipation of the race by practical amalgamation. Cut off the inkly fountain from Africa, and but a few generations will pass, a few centuries roll away, before the traces of a negro population will be utterly obliterated. Blue and black race will take the place of the unchanging ebony, and flaxen curls that of the compacted twist. Our law books are not devoid of cases where greedy heirs filch the estates of the master's sons from them, and pocket the gold and sons. As the bleaching processes proceed, the repugnant becomes the attractive; amalgamation; and population, spreading over vast territories with virgin soils, will increase in the abject race with terrible rapidity. In the mean time, the fiery blood of the free Anglo-Saxon, mixed with the warlike physical capacity of the negro and mulatto, will produce a more restless and bolder population; more impatient of restraint—less subservient of punishment.

The gradual advancement of the negro race in the scale of mental capacity, and its consequent aspirations, is inevitable; whilst the sure results of labor, even if coerced, will develop and harden the physical frame. On the other hand, amidst the rise of the negro race, the Anglo-Saxon master must certainly descend. The exercise of despotic power necessarily breeds a swarm of vices, which in time will inevitably obliterate all genuine manhood. As the virtues can only grow through the exercise of that love to the neighbor which is the all of religion, the base of all true democracy, and the only sure foundation of government; so the opposite to universal fraternal love, the love of self and of freedom for self, which is the all of hell, the base of aristocracy, and foundation of despotism, breed a swarm of lusts and passions that ultimately destroys all that is lovely in manhood. With accelerated speed down the succession of generations, from parent to child, all that makes man noble and Governments beneficent, all records and deeds inculcating virtue, the calm consciousness of virtuous power is substituted the arrogance of selfish force. For the mild but potent persuasives of fraternal love, are substituted the lash and the chain.

As this retrograde course lapses down the vista of years, darkness and desolation gather over its path. The lights of love, beaming from free speech, radiating from the free press, and reflected and refracted from the free schools, free churches, and free institutions, are one by one put out, until one gloomy way, a path to engulfment, a final ruin, heaven is stretched above; and the masters stalk through the paths of life, amid the darkened and cowed minds of their miserable slaves, feeling beneath their tread the suppressed rumblings of that volcanic soil which is aggregating and intensifying its force to can the world in final ruin.

From these two causes—the ascent of the slave, the descent of the master—there is but one escape; and that is, the restoration to humanity of its God-given, heaven-descended rights. The final catastrophe will be the reign of Christ's law of love, which will bring men and nations into one universal fraternal concord.

At this moment, three mighty powers are in operation to spread human slavery over the Union—the President of the United States, the Democratic party, and the Supreme Court of the United States.

The impending crisis is upon us. The people are aroused; another stand is taken by the lovers of humanity to stem the torrent of aggressive despotism. In terrible array, fierce as ten furias, armed with holy truth, they are rushing forward, by new deeds of empire, to acquire new realms of empire. The blow to humanity and freedom is shot forth from under the ample shield of our national Constitution. Its toleration of slavery in the slave States is diverted into its sanction in the Territories. Its limitations on the exercise of despotic power are construed into sacred guarantees for its nurture and protection; and that charter of the rights of humanity and the palladium of our liberties is to become the potent engine of destruction to both. The President, who occupies the chair of Washington, directs the blow, and

Mr. BURCH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FRANK. No quorum being present, is there not some rule by which we can compel the attendance of the absentees?

Mr. SCOTT. Is it in order to move a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the motion to adjourn is voted down, it will be in order to move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and there were, on division—aye, 13, noes 12.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair votes in the negative, and the House refuses to adjourn. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTT. I move there be a call of the House.

Mr. BURNETT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at five o'clock and forty minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

Saturday, April 7, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GURLEY.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 85) for the relief of John C. Cuyler;

A bill (No. 262) for the relief of the legal representatives of François Guillaury, deceased;

A bill (No. 224) for the relief of W. Y. Hannell, the heirs of W. H. Underwood, and the representatives of Samuel Rockwell;

A bill (No. 264) for the relief of Charles Sullivan;

A bill (No. 263) for the relief of Frederick Stephens;

A bill (No. 130) to pay to the State of Missouri the amount expended by said State in repelling the invasion of the Osage Indians;

A bill (No. 266) for the relief of Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Martin Burke and Captain Charles S. Winder, of the United States Army;

A bill (No. 267) for the relief of Mrs. A. W. Arden, widow of the late Captain Samuel Angus, United States Navy;

A bill (No. 262) granting a pension to James Lacey, of Grainger county, Tennessee;

A bill (No. 270) granting a pension to John Madden, of Campbell county, Tennessee;

A bill (No. 271) granting a pension to Cyrus Blackman, of St. Helena parish, Louisiana;

A bill (No. 272) granting a pension to Adelaide Adams, widow of Commander George Adams, United States Navy;

A bill (No. 273) for the relief of Micajah Hawley;

A bill (No. 276) for the relief of Mrs. Hannah McDowell;

A bill (No. 277) for the relief of Webster S. Steele;

A bill (No. 284) for the relief of John W. Taylor, and certain other assignees of preemption land locations; and

A bill (No. 600) for the relief of the children and heirs of Alexander Montgomery.

The message further announced that the House passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (No. 71) for the relief of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; and

A bill (No. 232) for the relief of Alice Hunt, widow of Thomas Hunt.

The message further announced that the House ordered, on yesterday, April 6, 1860, the printing of the following documents:

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House, calling for information as to what parties delivered if any have been discontinued since the passage of the act of June 4, 1858—ordered at twelve o'clock and twenty-nine minutes.

Memorial of Surgeon Henry O. Mayo, in behalf of the corps of surgeons in the United States Navy—ordered at twelve o'clock and fifteen minutes.

Memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota for the removal of the Winnemago Indians, and the indemnification of the early settlers on their reservation—ordered at twelve o'clock and sixteen minutes.

Memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, making for a fort or military post in the valley of the Pembina river—ordered at twelve o'clock and sixteen minutes.

Memorial of the State of Mississippi, in relation to the establishment of a navy-yard at the Bay of Biloxi, in said State—ordered at twelve o'clock and sixteen minutes.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. PEARCE. I have been requested to present the memorial of a select committee of the directors of the Metropolitan railroad, in relation to railways in Washington and Georgetown, and to ask that the memorial itself may be read to the Senate.

The Secretary commenced to read the memorial.

Mr. CAMERON. I move to dispense with the reading of that paper. We have all read it.

Mr. PEARCE. I doubt whether anybody has read it. It has only been prepared this morning.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have read every word of it. The VICE PRESIDENT. If objection be made to the reading of the paper, the Chair will provide for its being put to a vote of the Senate without debate.

Mr. PEARCE. I leave it to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does not the Senator from Pennsylvania object?

Mr. CAMERON. Certainly. I do not object, if any Senator desires to have it read.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I submit to the Senator from Maryland that, on this side, we have all read it. I have, at least, very carefully.

Mr. CAMERON. If any gentleman want to hear it read, I shall not object. I desired to save time.

Mr. PEARCE. I did not propose to have the paper read through, but only the memorial; a few pages. It is not very long.

Mr. HAMLIN. Fifteen pages.

Mr. PEARCE. It is in fact about thirteen pages, printed in large type. I submit to the decision of the Senate, though.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Pennsylvania to object to the reading of the paper, the Chair will put the question to the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON. I certainly did not object. I only suggested the propriety of saving time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the memorial will be read.

The Secretary proceeded with and concluded the reading of the memorial; which is as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled: The memorial of Benjamin C. Taylor, David Benjamin, William H. Edes, Adolphus H. Fekreh, and Ferdinand W. Elmore—the first named president, and the others directors, the Metropolitan railroad—respectfully represents:

That they have been selected by their co-directors to prepare and submit to the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives a statement of facts in relation to the said company, by which the minds of Senators may be dispelled of the unfavorable impressions heretofore formed or expressed by them removed or corrected.

In making this statement, they disclaim any intention of reflecting upon the characters or impugning the motives of the two honorable Senators, members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who participated in its debate on the railway bill in the Senate on January 1st, but claim the right, as American citizens, to correct the errors of fact into which the Senators above referred to have fallen in regard to the said company.

On the 24 day of March, 1853, an act of Congress was approved, incorporating the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, which declares, "that whenever the State of Maryland shall by law incorporate a company to lay out and construct a railroad from any point, in connection with the Baltimore and Ohio canal, or at or near the Point of Rocks, in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, the right of way, not exceeding sixty-six feet wide, be and is hereby granted to such company." (See said act, Appendix A.)

The Metropolitan Railroad Company, which said company was so contemplated by the act of Congress above said, was organized on the 1st day of May, 1853, by an act of the Legislature of Maryland, which act of incorporation was subsequently amended by the Legislature of the State above said on the 6th of March, 1856. (See those acts, Appendix B and C.)

By the thirtieth section of the act of incorporation of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, the majority of the stockholders of the earnings of said road shall be paid to the stockholders until the entire road is completed to Hagerstown, but by the first section of the said act, it is provided, that it shall not be necessary to complete the said rail road in Hagerstown before any dividends of the net profits arising from the operation of said road should be declared. This section of the act was considered very curious by the stockholders, and prevented many persons from taking stock in the said company, and said secondary act of the 6th of March, 1856, gave additional strength and encouragement to the president and directors of said company.

Books of subscription to the stock of said company were opened by the commissioners named in the said act, and over ten thousand shares of the stock having been subscribed—amounting to the sum of $500,000—these same steps were taken to organize the said company, by the election of president and directors.

By an ordinance of the Board of Aldermen and Common Council of Georgetown, approved by Henry Addison, then Mayor of said town, on the 11th day of June, 1853, the said Mayor was authorized to subscribe to the said company, ten thousand shares of said stock, equal to $500,000. (See said ordinance, in Appendix F.) The said subscription was accordingly made by the said Mayor, in obedience to the said ordinance.

By an ordinance of the same boards, approved by the said Mayor on the 13th day of July, 1853, the following gentlemen, viz: David English, Evans Lyons, Robert P. Dodge, William H. Edes, and Ferdinand W. Elmore, were appointed as proxies to vote the stock of the said town, at any meeting of the stockholders of the said company. (See said ordinance, in Appendix F.)

The boards of Aldermen and Common Council of the town aforesaid refused to appoint Henry Addison, then Mayor, as one of the proxies aforesaid, to vote the stock of the said company, and the said Mayor, Henry Addison, of the 26th of February, 1854, he says:

"In view of the fact that the Mayor should be to maintain our credit unimpaired, by getting Congress in sanction the railroad subscription, and remove all questions as to its legality. This was done when the Mayor was authorized to amount to the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, and without it, no income could have been possibly received."

"My recollection is, that I then ask Congress to sanction that subscription."

Application was accordingly made to Congress, upon the recommendation of said Mayor, in relation to the said road subscription aforesaid, and on the 13th day of March, 1855, an act was passed, which authorized the Mayor to execute the recently assumed by said town in subscribing to the stock of the Metropolitan Railroad Company." (See said act, Appendix F.)

After the election of the president and directors of the said company, the first installment of $25,000, upon the stock subscribed by the said company, was paid on the 1st day of June, 1856, the corporation of Georgetown passed an ordinance to pay the second installment on their subscription to the stock of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, which was voted by the Mayor, Henry Addison (but the said ordinance was passed, notwithstanding the vote, by a two-thirds majority. (See said ordinance, Appendix G.)

The said Mayor then proclaimed that he would not sign the bonds of the corporation to meet this second installment.

After the passage of the ordinance of the 1st day of March, 1855, above noticed, Henry Addison, in his address "To the People of Georgetown," in the year 1855, on page 12 of 13, says:

"If I have succeeded in showing that our subscription was void, without authority of law, and therefore ineffectual and void, I can then return to my subscribers to pay such subscription? If it was void when made, it is forever void. It simply abounds, in every link an act done, performed, and completed in June, 1853, it is void, it is null, and void at that time, and yet that it is legal, operative, and valid, and not a subsequent thing. A void act cannot be confirmed by a subsequent thing. It is not in the power of Congress even, to declare it a thing, it is void act done and performed in June, 1853, should be void at that time, and at a future day."

On page 23 of said address, Mr. Addison uses the following language:

"I always believed that it was at the suggestion of Mr. Dodge, (the president of the Metropolitan rail,) and to gratify his personal animosity to myself, that the Board of Common Council, and the Mayor, were induced to take the affairs of that road. I felt that I had been grossly and injuriously insulted by a coordinate branch of the corporation."

To the memorial of the stockholders of the Metropolitan Railroad Company will be found the names of a large number of the stockholders of the said company, and the names of Georgetown, and quite a number of the influential and wealthy citizens of Washington city—praying that the power to construct the said road be given to the stockholders of Georgetown, and that the said power be given to the stockholders of Georgetown, who are not stockholders in said company.

The Board of Aldermen and Common Council of Georgetown, in the year 1853, by a unanimous vote, recommended that the franchise of the city markets should be given to the Metropolitan Railroad Company, and on the 1st day of March, 1854, four out of the five members who constitute the Board of Mr. TRUMBULL. I have no objection; but it struck me that if the Constitution was to be changed, or any recommendation of that kind made, it would probably come more appropriately from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GREEN. It affects the Territories only.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I have no kind of objection.

Mr. GREEN. I care nothing at all about it. The VICE PRESIDENT. What committee does the Senator indicate?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I indicate the Judiciary Committee, unless there is objection.

Mr. GREEN. There is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MARY WALBACH.

Mr. POWELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill No. 345, reported by the Committee on Pensions, for the relief of Mrs. Walbach, widow of the late Brevet General Walbach. This lady is over eighty years old, is very infirm, and in very straitened circumstances. I think it a very meritorious case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will assist the Senator in the form of a bill, but the Chief Clerk has gone to the House of Representatives to carry some bills, and it is difficult to find them here. The Chair will receive morning business, if the Senator will waive his motion until the return of the Clerk.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FITZPATRICK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 25) manifesting the sense of Congress towards the officers and seamen of the vessels and others engaged in the rescue of the officers and soldiers of the Army, the passengers, and the officers and crew of the steamship San Francisco, from perishing with the wreck of that vessel; with, with the papers on the file of the Senate relating to the subject, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

Mr. BENJAMIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 382) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Olivier Landry, of the State of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. WIGFALL, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 26) to continue the light-ship at the entrance to Galveston Harbor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James Myer, praying compensation for services rendered and losses sustained by him as quartermaster to the Mexican boundary line commission, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 383) for the relief of James Myer. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARLAN. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom the subject was referred, have instructed me to report a bill (S. No. 384) authorizing the sale of abandoned military reservations. I move that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, accompanying the bill, be printed.

The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the letter of the Secretary of the Interior was ordered to be printed.

OBSTRUCTION TO A STREET.

Mr. HAMLIN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to inquire by what authority K street north has been obstructed by the erection of a market-house thereon; and, in case of the expediency of making provisions for its removal.

ACCOUNTS OF ISAAC COOK.

Mr. WILSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to communicate to the Senate copies of all the newspapers from any agent or agents of the Post Office Department, in relation to the condition of the post office at Chicago, Illinois, during the service of I. Cook, as postmaster at said office.

Mr. WILSON subsequently moved to reconsider the vote on the passage of the resolution, desiring it to lie over, so that he might modify it; which was agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LATHAM. I submit a resolution of inquiry, and ask for its consideration now. It is connected with business that comes up for discussion Monday, and I hope it will be adopted.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish this body with copies of all correspondence or reports made by the present superintendents or agents of the Indian department, or by the special agents of the Government, J. Ross Browne, relating to the condition or management of the Indians and their reservations in California.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

COURTS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. GREEN. I ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill (No. 172) to establish a court in the western district of Arkansas. It is a formal matter, and will involve no debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the bill suggested by the Senator from Missouri has been found, and it is probable it will come up regularly first; but if there be no objection, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BROWN. Before the Senator from Missouri proceeds, I desire to ask whether at one o'clock District business will come up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will call up the District business at one o'clock.

Mr. GREEN. I move to take up the bill No. 172. It is a mere formal matter.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 172) concerning the courts of the United States in the district of Arkansas. It provides that there shall be a district judge of the United States for the western district of Arkansas, to wit, of $2,500, who shall reside in that district, and have the same jurisdiction and powers now exercised within that district by the judge of the district of Arkansas, whose jurisdiction and authority are to be hereafter confined to the eastern district of Arkansas, and also provides that there shall be hereafter two terms of the circuit court for the eastern district of Arkansas, on the second Mondays of April and October in each year.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to add, as a new section:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be incumbent on the attorneys, marshals, and clerks, of the district courts in the eastern and western districts of Arkansas, to reside within their respective districts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. Now I move an amendment in regard to the terms of the court. I move, in section two, line four, after the word "year," to insert "and four terms of the District court in the western district of Arkansas, on the second Mondays of March, June, September, and December;" in line five, to strike out the words "circuit court," and insert "court;" in line six, to strike out the words "district," and insert "two districts;" and in the same line to strike out the word "it," and insert "are;" so that the section will then read:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there shall be hereafter two terms of the circuit court of the United States held for the eastern district of Arkansas, on the second Mondays of April and October in each year, and four terms of the District court in the western district of Arkansas, on the second Mondays of March, June, September, and December, at the same place where the courts of the United States for the two districts of Arkansas are now held.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I should like to hear some reason why it is necessary to multiply these districts and officers.

Mr. GREEN. I do not want any discussion on this bill, because the time has nearly run out. I understand the Indian country, and it is indispensable to have a judge there always ready to adjudge Indian cases that arise in the Indian territory. The bill met the unanimous approbation of the committee, and I do not think there is any reason why we should object to it. The western district of Arkansas includes the Cherokee, Choctaw, and Chickasaw Nations.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I did not intend to interpose an objection to the bill; but I do not wish to be understood, as I am one of the Judiciary Committee, as being an advocate for the bill. I amply acquiesce in letting it come here.

Mr. GREEN. That is correct.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not disposed to interfere in regard to it, if the Senate think proper to pass it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to say a word or two in vindication of the action of the Judiciary Committee, and I think Senators will be perfectly satisfied about it. In the State of Arkansas there are now two districts. There are marshals and clerks in both districts, but there is but one judge. The western district of Arkansas comprises the Indian country, and the principal business of that court is to take cognizance of criminal offenses committed by Indians. The Indians are never able to give bail, and consequently, as soon as one is arrested, he is kept in prison until he is tried. The extent of the district is such, that it is utterly impossible for the judge of the eastern district to hold frequent courts in the western district. The extent of country is very great; it is an unsettled country; and in consequence of having a judge residing in the western district, who shall be there always to take cognizance of crimes occurring amongst the Indians, and have them speedily disposed of, making jail deliveries, instead of keeping prisoners in the State for six or eight months before they can give bail, the only additional officer is one judge. Already marshals and clerks exist. The judge in the eastern district cannot hold courts in the eastern district, by possibility, and also do the requisite business in relation to those Indians in the western district. If Senators would glance over the map, they would see that the district of country is enormous. If he were to travel all the time he could not attend to it. The bill then provides for no additional officer but a judge, who is to reside in the western district, and who will hold four terms a year, instead of two; and the bill provides that the marshal and clerk shall also reside in the western district. We are told there is an abuse in that respect now—that they reside in the eastern district, and that they are with difficulty found in the western district. The object is to take care of the Indians, and do what is just and humane towards them.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It is purely an Indian district. It is no district that was ever made for Arkansas, in fact. There were but a few counties in Arkansas when it was first organized. The district is a mere fiction. If Senators would glance over the map, they would see that the district of country is enormous. If he were to travel all the time he could not attend to it. The bill then provides for no additional officer but a judge, who is to reside in the western district, and who will hold four terms a year, instead of two; and the bill provides that the marshal and clerk shall also reside in the western district. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed, and was read the third time.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I understand from gentlemen that, although there are two courts now in Arkansas, there is but one judge there.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Yes, sir.

The bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message, from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HAYS, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 250) for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brevet Captain Oliver H. Taylor.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

A bill (C. C. No. 19) for the relief of Moses Noble;

A bill (C. C. No. 88) for the relief of Channer T. Seafie, administrator of Gilbert Stalker; city—some four or five million—who propose to throw the matter open to all the citizens.

Now, sir, it strikes me, in the first place, that if we are to grant a charter for a horse railroad in this city, and the citizens come forward with such a subscription and such a list of such fortune, and ask that it may be opened to the citizens generally, that books of subscription may be opened, on which all may take stock to a certain amount, and be interested, that is the fair, honest, democratic, and proper way of doing it, and a company. Sir, I must say that I cannot understand why a few gentlemen, some of them of means and some not of means, should be picked out and this privilege given to them, if it is a privilege, and they seem to consider it so, and a valuable one, when the citizens ask that it be laid open to all in this way.

I have received a communication this morning, which has been handed probably to all Senators, signed by Mr. Wallace, who calls himself president of the very company to whom the bill grants the charter, who objects very much to Mr. Vanderveken's being in. I do not know anything about this; but he states that, admitting Mr. Vanderveken as a stockholder would be paying him a bonus, and he does not see why he should be paid a bonus. That is a question of very valuable matter; that it is a bonus to own and hold stock in this company. That is Mr. Wallace's own idea in this printed paper here. If it is a bonus, if it is so great a privilege, I do not see why it should be handed over to Mr. Riggs and Mr. Todd, and three or four other men to make in kind of close corporation, in defiance of the wishes of people of this city, men of abundant means, who want the ordinary common course of proceeding in relation to corporations of this description to be taken, and the books may be opened in order that the inhabitants of the city may have an opportunity to build and own this road.

That is all I have to say. I have no knowledge of the matter, except just what I have stated. The amendment strikes me as reasonable, proper, and fair, and meets my own views, and I am in opposition, in opposition to schemes of a different description.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not mean to discuss this question, and I shall be very much obliged if the Senators if they will listen to the very little I have to say, and I will not say anything more. The committee considered the very proposition which the Senator from Maine now introduces—that of making this a joint stock company—and rejected it, for reasons which seemed to them to be good.

This is a privilege which Congress proposes to grant for the mutual benefit of all—over a street which belongs to the Government. The committee believed it better to grant that privilege to certain gentlemen of known and established reputation; so that, if it were exercised badly, we should know precisely who to blame, and on whom to call; so that, if Mr. Riggs and his associates failed to lay down the road and keep it in order, in the manner prescribed in the act, we should know the precise gentlemen upon whom censures was to be laid, and if you make a joint stock company, you know not who owns the stock. There may be three or four or five hundred of them. They may assign their stock. They have a set of directors; and you complain to them, and they say, we could do otherwise, but the stockholders in this concern require that we shall not expend their money to do this or that or the other. Inasmuch as it was the mere granting of a privilege, I say again, the committee thought it better to grant it to known persons of established reputation, who could be held to account for any violation of the bargain under which the grant was made.

Now, this thing of popularizing every little scheme of this sort is, I know, somewhat captivating. The idea of letting everybody have his hand in this scheme may be all well enough, and certainly I am as much for the people as anybody else; but who does not know how it will result? Men of straw will be sent to subscribe for the stock. It always so happens if it is supposed the stock is going to be profitable. I think I heard of gentlemen from the State of Maryland, Baltimore, named Brock; he can send over more Plug-Uglies, more fellows from Baltimore to whip everybody else off, and take the whole of this stock, than you could get clear of in a month, if he chose to do it; I do not say that he would. So with anybody else: mere men of straw might take the stock; do for a consideration, and in the end transfer it to somebody living in Baltimore, New York, or anywhere else. One man might own the whole of it under that sort of stockjobbing, if he only had the dashing impudence to subscribe for it in that way. Thus it would turn out that in the end the privilege was granted to a few parties. They, once or oft, that I have in no sort in this scheme of putting a railroad on the avenue at all; and if these people will only make a "Kilkenny fight" of it, and destroy each other, I shall be the best pleased man in the Senate; but when public opinion of the Senate and public opinion of the people indicated that you were to open the road on the avenue by putting a railroad upon it, I banded myself to have it done in the most proper, decent, and orderly manner. The committee agreed with me, and we reported a bill to grant the privilege to seven or eight gentlemen of known character and respectability—old citizens of Washington, known to everybody.

I am not surprised that there are appellations elsewhere; that there is an attempt to throw distrust over the action of the committee; that there are complaints that the committee have been partial to these half a dozen gentlemen. Sir, the committee was partial to nobody. The committee believed that, in proper deference to the interest of the Government, the privilege, if granted at all, was to be granted to gentlemen of known respectability. Now, to whom is it proposed to be granted? To Richard Wallace—a gentleman, I believe, born in this District—a man of very high character; how much money he has, I do not know; to Mr. George W. Riggs, an eminent banker; to Walter Lenoir, an ex-mayor; to John D. Hoover, an ex-marshal of the United States; James M. Carlisle, a lawyer of distinction and character, than whom, I suppose, no one stands higher at the bar of this city; Mr. William B. Todd, a gentleman of high respectability; to a man named Boteler, equally respectable; to Mr. George Harrington, a reputable gentleman; John F. Coyle, Walter S. Cox. I know all of them, except Mr. Cox.

Mr. PEARCE. I can vouch for him. Mr. BEARCE. I can vouch for the reputation of every one of them. How much money they may have, I do not know; but Mr. Riggs has money enough to build the railroad himself. Certainly they have an amount of reputation sufficient to guaranty the construction of the road. If I could get the whole city to sign a resolution to be glad to do it; but, as that cannot be done, I simply think it is better, when you grant the franchise, to grant it to persons who are known, and hold them responsible for any mal-administration of the law.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A word in reply to the Senator. He has said nothing of this proposition that will not apply equally to his own. He says, in the first place, that we are granting a privilege. Very well; that I stated. I presume it to be so. It is so considered. The reply to that is: if you bestow a privilege, why not bestow it on the best man, instead of to half a dozen men? Why not grant it to all the people of this city, who wish to take part in the enterprise, rather than to some six or eight, who are singled out to take it? The argument works against the Senator, in my judgment.

Again: he said they were gentlemen of known respectability. Why, sir, on this list which I have before me there are gentlemen of as high respectability as are found anywhere in this city—men of the highest fortunes, and of the very best standing. There are some four or five hundred of them; but they do not claim to take more than ten shares apiece. The Senator says that there will be men of straw among them. Why, sir, there are you men of straw? Just look at the list. I have it list certified here, from which it appears that Walter Lenoir's valuation is sixty-one dollars in this city; Mr. Boteler's, $930; Mr. Harrington's, $197. These are three of the corporators named in the bill. Take out two men, and there is not enough property in the whole of Baltimore to read and understand; and that these two men will put in any large amount of their property; one is a banker, and the other a capitalist. What are they to do? This bill was drawn originally for them "or their assigns"—nothing said about "associates" at all. It goes to prove something to my mind, and that is that there is no idea that these men are anything more than it is said some have represented them to be—merely men who have lent their names to the enterprise. Cannot they sell their stock just as well as those who take ten shares apiece? They must be obliged to sell their stock. From the necessity of this case, they must sell out. They were to assign their stock to their associates. The idea was to get a charter, and sell it to other persons, who want to build this road on their own speculation—men outside of this city as well as in it. If the stock is all taken by subscriptions of ten shares apiece by people of this city, it will then be likely to sell, or less likely to pay for it, or more likely to have the stock go out of the city, as if you grant it to half a dozen men who cannot build it, or who will not be likely to do so themselves, and who must, if necessary, sell the whole charter—or, at least, large portions of their stock—right out, in order to accomplish the purpose? All the argument the Senator has used applies with vastly more force to the proposition he has presented than it does to the proposition I have presented here, by way of amendment, in my judgment. If you adopt my amendment, the citizens will be likely to hold on to it, because it is among themselves in small quantities each, and would be likely to produce a good return; and I see not why men of small capital, who have a little surplus, should not be at liberty to put it in, instead of granting a charter to half a dozen men, the very idea of which is that it is to be sold to capitalists out of the city, who are to build the road on speculation.

As to the idea of responsibility: how are you going to hold these men responsible, if they sell out, they are not to be responsible, of course. If they do not choose to hold on to this stock, you cannot oblige them to do so. Their responsibility ceases the moment they part with their interest. But in my proposition, the ownership of the stock is in my judgment given to the directors are to be chosen from among themselves, instead of going to Philadelphia or Baltimore, or anywhere else out of this city; and in my judgment it is intended to go elsewhere from the manner in which the bill is drawn. The reasons why the committee have given are entirely unsatisfactory to me. I see reason for varying from the usual custom when you grant a charter which is likely to be valuable in a city, why the books should not be opened, and those of the city who have the means, and want to become interested in it, should not have the opportunity, instead of picking out half a dozen of their fellow-citizens, and giving it to them, and giving them alone a chance to make money out of it. I do not pretend to be any kind of a Democrat; especially according to the modern occupation of the term; but I like to see, in these matters at any rate, democratic principles carried out.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.) The question is on the first amendment of the Senator from Maine, to insert "or their assigns" in the bill, and the word "assigns," in the sixth line of the first section.

The amendment was agreed to. THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on his amendment to add the additional sections.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COLLAMER. There is a provision in the amendment that the books shall be opened within ten days after the passage of the act. There is a further provision that the books shall be published or published of the books in two papers in the District. Now, it seems to me that ten days is too short a time to make the publication and open the books. I move that that "ten" be altered to "twenty." There is also a time left blank during which the books shall be kept open, which I desire to have filled with "forty days."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Ten will be enough to give the notice.

Mr. COLLAMER. The books are to be opened within ten days, which I move to make "twenty," and then let them be kept open ten days after that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They ought to be kept open longer; say twenty days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will regard that as the sentiment of the Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I adopt the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. COLLAMER. There is one other thing necessary to perfect it, which is my idea. It is provided that if the subscriptions are more than the whole amount required, they shall be scaled; that would be by the corporators named; but it seems to me that the scaling should be by some person not a stockholder—a disinterested person.

move therefore an amendment—

Mr. FESSENDEN. The ratio of scaling is fixed among those already subscribed.

Mr. COLLAMER. Then my suggestion would be unimportant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, as modified; and on this question the yeas and nays are called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MASON. I should be inclined to go for the amendment of the Senator from Maine, if I thought the matter was of sufficient consideration to open it for general competition amongst the people; but it will require comparatively but a small investment—$250,000, I understand, for the whole; and although it may be that a railroad upon the avenue will be profitable, I should strongly suspect that the railroad connected with it, to run up Seventh street, will be a burden quite as great as any profit the other can bear; and I should apprehend, therefore, that if it is opened in this way, it will either disincite or disable those who really are prepared to make the road from doing it.

I think a railroad along Pennsylvania avenue, connecting the two cities of Georgetown and Washington, and extending to the Capitol, or beyond it, will be of very great public utility; but greater utility than any can believe but those who have experienced the practical advantages resulting in other cities from passenger railways; and my earnest desire—not personal, but as a representative of the people of the District in this matter—is that the bill may be that a railroad upon the avenue will be profitable, far more interesting that the road shall be made, than A, B, or C shall be benefited by it as an investment. Then we have had some experience—especially in railroad companies—the consequences of opening stock to general subscription. It may be that a railroad has been practiced, which have been alluded to by the honorable Senator from Mississippi, are familiar to every one; and there does seem to be a class of people, in other cities, in some way connected with capitalists, speculators, or persons who will subscribe to sell again—and I strongly apprehend the population of Washington is not exempt from them—who seem to degenerate into mere brutes, and sell their persons, and sell their muscle and their strength, to capitalists who are disposed to engross a subscription that is supposed to be valuable. The number of frauds that are practiced on occasions of subscriptions of this character—frauds that it seems impossible either to prevent or detect when they are made, but are known by the consequences—are such as would deter me from there being any more. It is to be ascertained than will be attained by opening this matter to general subscription) from voting for this amendment.

I was not present in the Senate during the whole of the remarks of the honorable Senator from Maine; but I understood him to advert to a report which I heard within a day or two, that one of the applicants for this work—Mr. Riggs, of this city—had declared in terms that he had no substantial interest in it, or designed to have none, leading to the belief that he had given up his own name, or was disposed to allow others to use his name for purposes of speculation. My personal acquaintance with that gentleman, my knowledge of the man as a citizen and a man of business, led me to discredit the statement when I heard it; and he called to see me within half an hour. Hearing as he did, through the chairman, that such a representation had been put in circulation, and that it had reached me, he called for the purpose of disclaiming it, and did disclaim it in the most plain, simple, and unequivocal manner—not for the purpose at all (I am sure) I do the gentleman justice in saying) of furthering the passage of this bill, but to do himself justice as a good citizen and a man of character. His interest in the subject is exactly that which the paper purports—nothing more and nothing less.

I did not mean to detain the Senate, but to express as briefly as I could the reasons that would induce me to vote against the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. One word in reply. It must be perfectly obvious to the Senate that if there is a chance that this will be taken by a rush in any way, as is sometimes done by men of straw, for the benefit of capitalists, the result will be only precisely what this bill proposes to do, without any previous motion; and that is, to make a charter for the benefit of capitalists to begin with. There is a possibility of doing, in the case of the amendment which I propose, what is done by the bill itself. So it seems that cannot be said by the bill. I do not see how the amendment can do that, but to begin with, which there is a possibility of having accomplished under the amendment.

Mr. FOOT. I desire to say that I have commented on this question for the present with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. YULEE.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Briggs, Clay, Cushing, Collamer, Fessenden, Hoar, Johnson of Tennessee, Nicholas, Pease, Pugh, Stedley, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Wade, and Wright—47.

NAYS.—Messrs. Anthony, Benjamin, Brown, Chandler, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Fitzgerald, Foster, Gove, Hamlin, Hammond, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Lane, Sumner, and Williams—19.

So the amendment of Mr. FESSENDEN was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. I propose to amend the sixth section of the bill in line three, by striking out "eighteen" and inserting "twelve." That will limit the time for the completion of the road to twelve months after the passage of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I hope that will be agreed to. I think twelve months quite long enough.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON. I offer this amendment:

And be it further enacted, That said incorporated company shall give to the corporate authorities of Washington city and Georgetown, semi-annually, one half cent on each passenger carried over said road, to be divided between said cities in proportion to their population; and the Secretary of each Federal census, the same to form a fund for the education of the poor of the said cities respectively.

I intend that the committee on the subject of the Committee on the District of Columbia have reported this bill proposed to make a donation out of their profits to the cities of Georgetown and Washington for the education of the poor. The committee, however, struck that out of the bill, and proposed to reserve the same for the poor. It is very extraordinary to me, if the corporators propose to give a part of their profits to these cities for the education of the poor, that the Senate should voluntarily and deliberately strike it out and refuse to allow them to do this act.

Mr. BROWN. Strike out the word "poor," and say it shall pass to the common school fund, and I will agree to it.

Mr. IVERSON. Very well; let it read: "for the maintenance and support of public schools in said cities."

Mr. CLINGMAN. I suppose the charge will be five cents a passenger. This will be equal to ten per cent. of the gross proceeds. I think it is probably rather too much. I do not know what the profits will be.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator has not seen their own estimates. The estimate of the company itself gives them six per cent. on the whole investment and all the expenses of the institution, and then a clear profit of $18,612 besides. Of course they have made the estimate of profits as they see fit. These are not their own figures.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator is a little mistaken about it; but let it go.

Mr. IVERSON. I have made no mistake, because here are the figures.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE. I now propose to submit an amendment, which has been asked for, in lieu of the one which I withdrew this morning, and which I had offered on Saturday last. This has been prepared on behalf of the Metropolitan Railroad Company by legal counsel, and is supported by him. I have the objections made by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN] last Saturday. I have looked into the law as announced by the Senator from Louisiana. I admitted on last Saturday the force of the point which he made, and I do not propose now to controvert what he then said, or to do anything more than to say that, if this amendment, as prepared, should be adopted by the Senate, I believe it will be in the power of the Metropolitan Railroad Company to remove, by action of their own, the objection then made by the Senator. That objection was, that inasmuch as the proposed extension of this road through the city of Washington was beyond the scope of the original bill, it was competent for any one of the corporators to obtain an injunction to restrain the directors from applying the money of the corporation to objects foreign to its original design. I believe I have properly stated the objection. Well, sir, there were some twenty-odd shareholders in the Metropolitan Railroad Company who remonstrated against this amendment on this proposition. They represented in value about $4,500 of stock, on which ten per cent. had been paid in—that is, $450.

The stock of this company is said to be valueless. The chairman of the District Committee [Mr. BROWN] has said that he considered it a myth and a humbug. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] has said that they never had any money. The fact has been stated, in the memorial presented to the Senate, that the sum of $50,000 had been called for and paid in, and the greater part of it, I admit, expended; but if these gentlemen be correct in their views, if this be a corporation without money, their stock is without value, and it will be very matter for the assenting shareholders to purchase out the rights of those who dissent. If you do, the objection of the Senator from Louisiana is removed, by all the corporators bring such assent to this act.

Now, sir, I do not mean to repeat what I have heretofore said to the Senate on this subject. I will very briefly state, however, that I believe this to be a very valuable franchise; that I believe, I think I may say I know, that if it be given to the Metropolitan Railroad Company, the railroad will be built, and the corporation, for I have seen the evidence furnished by able contractors, experienced in laying down railways of this sort, that they can construct it at the rate of a mile a week, and that in thirty days from the time they commence operations, they can build it. These are gentlemen of good business character, who have constructed railways in St. Louis and other places. I believe, then, that if this franchise be given to the Metropolitan Railroad Company, the convenience of the city of Washington, intended by the establishment of this corporation, will be effected as completely as if it be given to any other persons whatsoever. I believe that if it be given to them it will aid them—and is that I do not speak without warrant—in making the railroad, which they were originally incorporated to make, from Georgetown to the Point of Rocks; for I have been well assured, by gentlemen who are stockholders and directors in the company, that they have a direct offer from capitalists, if they can obtain this franchise, to invest $1,000,000 in the work, which, with their present subscriptions, will give them the means of accomplishing both projects.

I shall not vote for the bill introduced by the committee, for the reasons which have been assigned by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN], in as full a manner as I can. Why should we bestow a valuable grant upon a few individual gentlemen, however respectable? It is, in fact, putting a large sum of money into their pockets. If I were controlled by my personal regard for the gentlemen named in the bill, I should vote for it. But I am not a man whom I hold in the highest esteem and regard, I should, of course, give my vote for it; but I cannot be controlled by such a consideration. I think whenever we do a thing of this sort, we should do it in such a way as to effectuate, to the fullest extent, all public interests which may be involved in it. I believe we shall accomplish that purpose by giving the right to the Metropolitan Railroad Company; and though I will not say that this amendment, which I now present, avails the objection made by the Senator from Louisiana, I do say, as I have stated at large already, that the company will have the means of accomplishing for themselves that which will avoid all objection; in other words, they can buy out the vious; but it is plain enough to see that they will sustain some injury by it. There is no principle upon which such obligations can be placed upon persons undertaking to work for the public convenience, and except for the public convenience no one would think of granting this charter. But the Senate having shown some preference for retaining this section, I wish by my amendment to put a limitation on it. If by this bill it meant all the omnibuses, and I say, therefore, anything that he may have at the time they pay him, he may get all the old omnibuses in the city of Washington collected together; there is no telling what amount of old horses and of old omnibuses he may collect together for the purpose of making this company pay for the use of them, and before any such motive as that could operate on him, we ought to fix a period when he had those that were really necessary, and no more, for the public uses in which he employed them; and therefore the words ought to be inserted "on the 15th of December last." It was on that day that some imperfect arrangement was made between him and this company as to the compensation which he was to receive, and it was in reference to the stock which he then owned. The general terms of this bill will put it in his power. I do not know that he would do it; all I hope he would not—but it puts it in his power, and subjects these corporations to that imposition, if he chooses to practice it on them. I move, therefore, that after the words "used by him," there be inserted the words "on the 15th of December last."

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to know of my friend from Kentucky, on what principle this elevated section stands? If we are making a railroad for the benefit of the people, either of Washington or from abroad, we certainly have no excuse for charging a higher rate of fare, or imposing a burden upon the corporations that compels them to charge a higher rate of fare, in order to make good the loss of this individual. The same thing happens every time a railroad is constructed. It throws a stage line out of existence. There are street railroads in Baltimore, in Philadelphia, in Cincinnati, and I do not know how many other cities, but I never heard of a stage line being compensated a man whose business was simply superseded by a superior kind of business. Now, I have heard the argument repeated here, or rather the statement, half a dozen times.

Mr. KENNEDY. If my friend will allow me, I think I can correct him a little. In regard to the railroads built in the city of Baltimore, they did compensate the omnibus line.

Mr. PUGH. That was under the Brock grant.

Mr. KENNEDY. Under the grant that is there now.

Mr. PUGH. That grant has not been ratified by the Legislature of Maryland.

Mr. KENNEDY. It was not rejected on that ground.

Mr. PUGH. At all events, there is no principle on which it can be properly made, and the Senate has made this gentleman one of the corporations, by an amendment, and that too, as it seems, without the consent of the other corporations, according to the paper laid on our tables this morning. I was about to remark, when my friend from Maryland interrupted me, in what he said, that I stated in the Senate, I should think a dozen times, last session and this—that Mr. Vanderwerken has done a great service by establishing and running a line of omnibuses here. Is there any Senator who believes that he ran a line of omnibuses one hour except to make money out of them? They have run them one hour after they ceased to be profitable? Certainly not. He might just as well have been called upon, when he established that line of omnibuses, to compensate the hackmen whom he threw out of business, and to make good that corporation, if it is created by this bill, he is compelled to compensate every owner of a hack, or of a pair of horses, in the city of Washington; and the very same difficulty which was in the bill of the last session occurs in this section.

I did not intend originally to say anything more about this railroad. I give up that there will be a railroad in Pennsylvania avenue. I am overruled, defeated. I shall have to acquiesce. I am in hopes that the street through the city of Washington connecting the President's house and the Capitol—in a city which was not intended to be a commercial city; in a city which was established and laid out expressly for being the seat of Government of the United States—I did hope there was one street, or avenue, leading from the highest executive department to the highest legislative department of this Government and of the Union, into which speculators could not go; but the omnibuses, and the hackmen, and the stage lines, have a railroad; and I then wanted to put it on fair, squatter sovereignty doctrine. I wanted the corporation of Washington to regulate their own affairs. That has been defeated; I give that up. The amendment offered by the Senator from Maine is an ordinary corporation bill, and has been rejected. I see, therefore, that this bill is bound to pass; but I ask the supporters of the bill, is the eleventh section the price of buying off competition? Is it put in there to buy off competition? Is it a price paid for some influence that conduces to the passage of the bill? If not, on what principle does it stand? Certainly on no ground of public utility; certainly on no sound principle; for it takes money out of the pockets of the gentleman named in the first section of the bill—Mr. Walker, Mr. Rigg, and the hackmen. By what right does Congress compel them to buy out the property of another man? If it is intended that the charge to be paid for transportation is to be put at five cents rather than three cents, in order thereby to levy a fund off the public, and to make this gentleman, the omnibus and omnibus, let them state it. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, while I do not know this gentleman, Mr. Vanderwerken, and certainly have no ill will to him, I cannot vote for the bill while that section stays in it. If that section shall be taken out, I shall yield, as I am overruled on every other proposition. I move to strike out the eleventh section.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That was moved last Saturday, and voted down.

Mr. PUGH. I shall renew the motion when the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The gentleman's observation does not affect the amendment I offer. That goes to the end he wishes to attain, to some extent.

Mr. BROWN. I am not going to discuss this question. I am exceedingly anxious to have the bill disposed of. The District has other matters behind it as important to the people here. But the Senator from Ohio makes a comparison between omnibuses and hackney coaches, and says that if we buy out the omnibus line we must necessarily buy out the hackney coaches. Not at all. An omnibus driver starts at stated periods for the public convenience. He starts without a passenger; he goes straight along; he does not wait to be remunerated for starting, but he goes any way. He goes through the whole line. He may drive from the gate of the Capitol to Georgetown without getting a passenger, possibly, and I dare say has done it sometimes in summer. An omnibus goes regularly at stated periods. It goes like a railroad train; it goes straight along, and it is remunerated for starting, and so it does not. He waits until he is paid to go; he is no public convenience; he is a convenience to himself. Therefore, he does not stand upon the same footing with an omnibus proprietor. I repeat, again, what I said last Saturday, and I beg the Senator to recollect it, that this old fellow Vanderwerken, who, I consider, is as honest a man as God ever breathed the breath of life into, came here and established a line of omnibuses, and crushed out the monstrous abuses which hackney coaches practiced all over the city. Now, you propose to take up his business and establish a railroad. I want to see the old man protected; and therefore, as to the eleventh section, I am not going to strike it out.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The question now is not striking out, I understand, but simply on inserting the words proposed by my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment was adopted.

Mr. PEARCE. I move, in the fourth line of the third section, to strike out the words "and the width of the grooves of the wheels of the cars shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior." I do this, because I know that in some city railroads which have been established, in Philadelphia, at all events, great complaints have been made of the rail of the grooved pattern. Ordinary carriages, running on those tracks, are obliged oftentimes to go out of the way of the car which is coming, and the grooved pattern rails offer such resistance to the change in the line of direction of the wheels of the carriage, that it has often happened that the axles have been wrenched off, and the carriage has been broken down in the street. I understand there is a different pattern that is more adapted to approve one. The rail is flat, lying even with the surface of the street, and then there is a very gentle curve, quite sufficient, however, for all the purposes of the railway carriage used on such roads. They require a very small gauge; scarcely any at all. It is a very different thing from railway cars drawn by locomotives, laden with heavy freight, and thundering along with immense velocity. They require heavy grooves in order that the flanges may be kept in position, and the cars and locomotive be prevented from running off the track. That is not the case with these railway cars, which are drawn by horse power, and they ought to be so provided as to furnish the very least resistance to the wheels of ordinary carriages.

Mr. BROWN. I think so. I am not going to raise the question.

Mr. PEARCE. I offer the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE. I have another amendment. I move, in the same section, to strike out the words in the sixth and seventh lines, "not to be less than four feet, nor more than six feet," which relate to the gauge. I do not know so much about this myself, but I have been informed by those who are good engineers that there should be a provision that the width of the railway should be that of the tracks of ordinary carriages; and it is very necessary in the city, I am told, where the streets are narrow, and it may even be necessary here, that the track of the railway carriage should be that of the ordinary wheel carriage employed. I propose, therefore, to strike out these words and insert in their place the words "the gauge of carriages generally employed in Washington."

Mr. BROWN. That seems to be a little indistinct. Are all the carriages employed in Washington of the same width?

Mr. PEARCE. Pretty generally. I think I shall object to it. I am sure this company do not mean to resist making the track the width of the ordinary gauge of carriages; but I understand some of them are narrower and some are wider. This philosophy may do, but it seems to me it may do some harm.

Mr. PEARCE. I think not; and I am told by high engineering authority that it is a proper amendment. I know carriages have generally the same width of track in any given place.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know that I shall object to it. Let it go.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not think this amendment ought to be adopted. It seems to me there are two good reasons against it. One is, it is indefinite. I suppose all buggy-wagons and chaises are of the same width, and in the case of the horse-drawn carriage, they are of the same width, and so are the wheels of the same width, and that the wheels of one carriage follow precisely the wheels of another, what then? You make your grooves just the width of those carriages, which are all of the same width, and they get into the groove, and it is much more difficult to get out of them, and would be much more difficult to cross them than if the wheels were a little wider or a little narrower than the track of your road. When you have both your wheels in a groove, you have no room to move. You have a groove, and you have a groove and another out, you have a little angle to make with the wheel that is out, to get out of the other groove; but it is evident to my judgment that grooves just the width of the wheel would be the worst thing that could be done.

Mr. BROWN. I understand the object of my friend from Maryland is, that the rail on which the cars run should be the ordinary width of a carriage, and that the wheel is not to run in the groove, but on the top of the rail. The object is to run on the top of the rail, and not on the top of the rail. That, I think, is all very well, but I doubt very much whether the Senator's amendment meets the object he has in view.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move a little amendment at the end of the eighth section. That section provides that the Government may at any time alter the grade of the streets, but it does not provide that the railroad company shall be compelled to alter the level of their road in case of such change. I move, at the end of the eighth section, to read:

And in such event it shall be the duty of the said company to change the level of the said railway so as to conform to such altered grades.

Mr. BROWN. I think there can be no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the amendments made in as Committee of the Whole be voted on aggregately or separately?

Mr. BENJAMIN. There was one amendment adopted, which, I understand by a paper left on our table this morning, is in violation of the contract made between the parties. I supported the eleventh section last Saturday, on the ground that there was an equity in the claim of Mr. Vanderwerken under contract made with the parties, to be indemnified for breaking up his line for purposes of public convenience, and that it was a fair charge on the company. In addition to that indemnity, the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. LANS] stated that in the case of the grant of the franchise, which, I understood, by common consent was agreed to; but the other parties now say that was not in their agreement, and that after having got the eleventh section passed for an indemnity, he has obtained an addition of his name to those who get the privilege, which gives him a double indemnity in some sense. They say that originally their agreement with him was to buy out from him, without loss to him, whatever might be necessary for the purposes of their road; but the eleventh section was inserted as to make them buy out everything from him, even the old omnibuses, which they will not require; but having conceded that, in order that the equities in his favor might not obstruct the passage of this bill, he is added to those who own the franchise, and he does not think that is fair, if it was not understood by them.

Mr. COLLAMER. If the Senator will allow me, the Senator from Ohio proposes to take a separate vote on the section buying him out.

Mr. PUGH. I want a separate vote on making him a corporation, but as to the separate vote on the eleventh section, I shall move to strike out the eleventh section.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That is exactly what I want. If the Senator from Maine will withdraw the amendment making him a corporation, I am willing that the eleventh section shall stand; but not otherwise.

Mr. BROWN. I think I understand this matter. Mr. Vanderwerken is made a corporation. He then pays himself, necessarily, a pro rata share in the purchase of the stock. He is one of ten, and he pays one tenth for the purchase of his own stock. Now, in buying him out, he is placed in this condition: he is left here with a large amount of stock, coaches and horses, on hand, and he is not allowed to sell his property to his company, but is granted the privilege that they name one, and the two are to take a third one, and they agree upon the price. What hardship is there in making him one of the corporations? What hardship is there in requiring the company to pay him for his stock? To him it must be a very great hardship to break him up in his business without paying him anything, and to throw his sixty or seventy thousand dollars—certainly not less than sixty thousand, and perhaps seventy-five thousand—of stock upon his hands, with his business broken up. Why shall not this company take him as one of the corporations, and why shall they not pay him for his stock? They will only have to pay a pro rata share, and he pays his pro rata portion to himself. I see no hardship in it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the nature of the objection that is made to Mr. Vanderwerken being one of the corporations, as I alluded to it before. It is that it is giving him a bonus; that is to say, these gentlemen—if there are nine—consider this matter as they are getting ready a speculation, so infinitely profitable, and so much money to be put in their pockets, that they are not willing to admit Mr. Vanderwerken or anybody else as an associate. He must be kept out. That is just what I was pointing to before; they say that this thing is a speculation; it is understood that a great deal of money is to be made, and the Senate of the United States are insisting that this speculation put into the hands of eight or nine men, so that nobody else shall have any interest in it, although there are hundreds of citizens here, who are the people who are to use the road, that stand willing and ready and anxious to take a small share of this property. If the principle is right, that Mr. Vanderwerken is to be paid the value of his property, the principle is right, also, that he should be paid something for giving up the profits he would make by that property. He is selling his property at merely its value; and he is, at the same time, giving up his business, he is losing all his profits. It would seem to be no more than fair, if he is to be considered personally—he having to give up his property at a valuation, and giving up his profits, everything he makes—that he should be permitted to come in and share with these gentlemen, although he does not put a little money into his pocket thereby, instead of their having it all. I do not know, I certainly cannot conceive, any reason why they are entitled to any special benefit and favor, although it seems to me that they are. I shall vote to keep Mr. Vanderwerken in.

Mr. BROWN. I am very glad to hear the Senator say so. This company, to whom the committee have shown favors, so far as reporting a bill for them is concerned, have made a publication of an extraordinary character, and most offensive. Surely the committee never meant to show any particular favor to one company over another. The committee meant to protect the public interests and to do what was right; and that they should be so to the disadvantage of Mr. Vanderwerken, it was impertinent in this company to come in here with a publication, and dictate to us what we ought to do. This publication from the company, in favor of which we report, is most offensive to us, and it ought to be to the Senate. It does not seem enough to the committee. We are charged by Senators with having favored this company; and because we do not favor them to the extent that they want, they lay offensive cards upon your table. I denounce the card. They had no business to put it here. Let the Senate legislate as it sees fit, and let the company do as they please, and nobody from every quarter. The card is offensive. I am for this company, upon the ground which I stated this morning: that they are gentlemen of respectability, and will build the road; but if there is any job in it, if any gentlemen are jobbing around the Senate, if the object is to put this men out and to put that man in, as a mere matter of favor, I wish my hands in it. I want to take care of old Vanderwerken; and I do not believe that these gentlemen named in the bill do consent to this publication, if they do, so let the responsibility rest upon them.

Mr. PUGH. As is well known to the Senate, at the last session and this, I have opposed strenuously the giving of this grant to any body of individuals by name. I believe I did vote to subvert the proposition to give this grant to any body last year; but I did it to defeat the bill, for I finally voted against the bill on its passage. The Senate has decided otherwise. It has decided to give it to individuals by name. I acquiesce in that; cannot help it. The only point then is, that having been settled, we should not make these individuals down by any species of favoritism on the part of others. The Senator from Maine asks why these nine gentlemen, or eight gentlemen, named as corporations, should be preferred to everybody else, and he asks a question, and asks the same question; why should they? But the Senate has decided that. The Senate has voted upon their amendment, though I supported him in it.

But, sir, while there is no reason that the name of any other citizen of Washington should not be forwarded his name, there is a public objection that Mr. Vanderwerken should not be. He is the only man in the city of Washington against whom a reason can be shown for keeping him out of the bill; and what is that reason? That you have compelled the company to buy his property; not only his property, but what they call his horses, that his horses, that are capable of drawing street cars; those they might buy at a valuation very well; not such of his horses as will be suitable for the purpose; that they would be glad to buy; but you compel them to buy his omnibuses, for which they have no use, and never can have; and which they must sell at a loss. You compel them to buy out his old broken-down horses, which they cannot use; you compel them to buy old stage harness, which they cannot use. Then, after that, you insist on making him one of the participants in the profits of the enterprise; and I say it is a bill for the benefit of that man. You require these people, who you have allowed to be in the bill, in character and sufficient in responsibility, to build the road; and you refuse to allow them to build it, either for the public advantage or private advantage, until you have loaded it down by a double pension to one individual. The thing must be one way or another. If Mr. Vanderwerken is wanted to be a corporation, so be it. Then he may put in payment of his share of the corporate enterprise all the property that is useful for the enterprise; all his real estate; all his horses; all his harness, if they are suitable for it. He takes it at a valuation, and credits it with as much as his subscription to the stock. I do not object to that; but if you keep him in as a corporation, strike out the eleventh section, and I am satisfied; but, like the Senator from Louisiana, I want the Senate to decide not only on the bill, but on a corporation or not. If he is not to be, then I am willing to let the eleventh section stand.

I say that he is the only man, so far as I know, in the city of Washington, who ought not to be a corporation, simply because he already has a special benefit in another section of the bill. There is no reason, I grant, why any other citizen of Washington ought not to be added as a corporation. He is already provided for. It seems to me unkind; and I am perfectly satisfied that this doubling of his interest cripples the enterprise. I have no doubt there is some money in the railroad; otherwise the people would not be anxious to build it. I have no doubt it is a valuable privilege, running through a period of thirty years; but it is not a mint; it is not a place; you may very easily get rich, but you must be prudent; and if you keep pensioning, not only Mr. Vanderwerken, but his old horses and old omnibuses, upon the concern, you very soon eat out the villa, and you will have no railroad, or a very indifferent one. These parties have made an arrangement with the company, and they have an arrangement; the Senate has sufficiently approved it. These gentlemen have made an arrangement with him. They offer to stand to their contract. They offer to pay him for things they do not want, provided he is not to be a corporation. Now it is asked that they shall not merely buy him out, but they shall divide with him. It seems to me—I do not use the word job in any offensive sense—that the whole object of the bill is to provide for one man.

If the Senate will return to the proposition of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSLEDER], and let two or three corporations be created to receive the two or three commissions, and strike out the eleventh section, I would be better satisfied with the bill; but I say if you keep Mr. Wallace and Mr. Lenox and those gentlemen in the bill, do not load them down with pensioning, and you will have no railroad. Therefore, the Senate will refuse to include this gentleman's name as a corporation, or else strike out the eleventh section; I don't care which. Therefore, as this amendment has been separated at the request of the Senator from Louisiana, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I only wish to say one word in reference to something that fell from the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSLEDER]. I did not doubt that there was some profit to be made out of this bill, as he says, and I do not regret that. I have no objection to the application of the Senate to my remarks, because I understood perfectly well that these parties would make some money, and I have no objection to their making money. My object has been, as the Senator from Kentucky observed his name, there is a public objection in the shortest possible time, and by parties whom I felt and knew to be responsible. I therefore desired that this privilege should be given to these corporations, and if the profits that could be made out of it amounted to anything worth while for eight or nine of them, I would be very glad of it. I do not envy them any profits they may make out of it. I desire to see the public accommodated, but I felt that by throwing this thing open to the public at large, and converting it into a mere stock-jobbing operation, hundreds would be interested in it; and where hundreds are interested in a work of this kind, they do not do it as well as five or six; and the result would be badly managed—carelessly managed, probably—if so many people had a small interest in it each; whereas, if a few people had large interest, it would be properly and efficiently managed. If they shall make money, very well. It may make it something for each one, but not enough to be divided among very many people. I do not see, from the calculation made by the committee, that there can be possibly over twenty or thirty thousand dollars a year made out of this enterprise, and that on an investment of several hundred thousand dollars.

The reason I desire to strike out Mr. Vanderwerker's name is this: it looked to me very much like an attempt at imposition. The eleven section of the bill carried an indemnity to him as far as anybody could desire, situated only by a spirit of strict justice, and he would not have ever anything he had put on his line, paying him a fair value for it, even though the company might not want it. It was some sacrifice to impose on them at the start; but the committee reported to us in substance that it was not worth doing, and then, him, that, in order to pacify his opposition, they would buy out his stock, and thus have no further trouble in relation to this grant. That was reported to and voted upon by us. When that was done, he comes in and asks to be imposed as an associate, against their will. I do not think it fair. It looks very much like what is called in common parlance "gouging," and therefore I will vote against it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Suppose they buy out his stock at a valuation and stop there; what compensation does he get for giving up his business?

Mr. BENJAMIN. He gets all the compensation he contracted for. Having made a contract, I presume he is well able to take care of his own business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, in line six of the first section to insert "Gilbert Vanderwerker;" and on that question the yeas and nays are called for.

Mr. CAMERON. I have no objection to the condition of the bill now; but I know something about these passenger railways, and I desire to say a word or two in relation to them. I have been, since the question was first started, exceedingly anxious that a bill should be passed to make a railroad by somebody—I do not care by whom—in the streets of this city. I think a road of that kind will be of great service to the city, and a great advantage to persons who come here; and last year I did all I could to secure the making of a road. I was told that it would be necessary for the purpose, it would be vetoed. I am told now that any bill we may pass will be vetoed. I am told that the President has a notion that a railroad passing along the city would be a monument against his administration, against his wisdom, and all that sort of stuff. I think it is a good deal older than most of us, and perhaps has outlived the time. [Laughter.]

But, in relation to Mr. Vanderwerker, it seems to me that if he gets paid a fair price for his stock, he ought to be content. He has got no profit out of the railroad. I know all about these railroads. There is no profit in them, unless they happen to belong to two or three persons, who manage them as an individual would his own property. I have no doubt that all this excitement about profits will be dissipated in a year or two. These gentlemen have heard of great advantages, and they come here expecting, every one of them, to make a fortune out of the road. None of them will do so. The city and strangers coming here will be made benefited by the road; but, so far as we are concerned, it is of no consequence to us who makes it. I shall vote for any set of gentlemen who I am certain will make the road in the shortest possible time.

I think it is just justice to Mr. Vanderwerker that he should be paid something in consideration of his enterprise in starting an omnibus line for the benefit of the community. He has certainly made no money, but has benefited us by coming here and reducing the price one half. It is right that we should take care of him; but if we compel these people to pay a fair price for all his stock, old and new, he ought to be content; and therefore I shall not vote to put his name among the corporators, not because I believe there is to be any profit in it, but I think it is fair to let gentlemen who are going to put money into this enterprise, that they should be permitted to select their own associates—men who are agreeable to them, and who will be certain to pay all the money which they promise to pay.

I do not object to this subject; but just to say that I think all those people who expect to make great profits out of this road will be disappointed, while we shall be benefited by having the road made; and I shall vote against putting in Mr. Vanderwerker.

Mr. BROWN. When Mr. Vanderwerker is made a corporator, he will be one of eleven, as the bill now stands. He will, therefore, pay to himself one eleventh part of his own stock. The eleven gentlemen associated pay to one man for the whole road. What hardship is there in that?

Mr. PUGH. He gets the ten elevenths of the profits.

Mr. BROWN. But the company only bring in another man. Take any other kind of business, let half a dozen gentlemen associate together, and we get my friend from Ohio is one, to keep up his individual business, out of which he is making profits, and which the community at large has accepted, and he and his five associates break up his business; he becomes one of the company; he is not the object of our undue obligation to pay him. It seems so to me.

Mr. IVERSON. I do not know Mr. Vanderwerker, and never have seen him, that I know of, in my life. I feel no particular interest in him, except so far as I consider him greatly a benefactor to this city, and to the public generally who visit Washington city, and therefore I am inclined to protect him as far as I can. He came here and instituted this institution of omnibuses, I think, when it was a mere experiment, and he did not know whether he could make anything out of it. He has contributed largely to the interest and convenience of people who have congregated here, as well as the interest of the people of the city. I think he deserves a good deal of credit; and it is right, therefore, that in giving this franchise to him, we should give him, in return, his interest; and I am glad the committee have so done, by compelling the corporators to buy him out, and give him a fair and liberal price for his stock; and I think he ought to be interested in this company. He was one of the original parties that, two years ago, got up this concern; and probably went as far in making it a popular thing as any other member of the concern. I am inclined, therefore, to favor him, and not only make the company buy him out, and give him a fair price for his stock, but to give him an interest in the concern itself.

"The Senator from Pennsylvania thinks nothing is going to be made out of this road. I differ with him altogether. I think it is going to be one of the most profitable and valuable franchises that will ever be given to any citizen of this country."

Look at it. According to their own estimate, which they have made and presented to us in figures, they will make fifteen per cent. upon the amount of their investment. They allow six per cent. on the cost of construction and equipment, $15,496 31; and then, after paying all expenses, it leaves them a net bonus of $18,612 96, which will be about nine per cent. more—equal to fifteen per cent. annually on their investment, according to their own showing. They have exaggerated their expenditures, doubtless, and lessened the probable amount of their receipts, so as to make this as little obnoxious to Senators as possible; but look at it. The first item of expenditure is, "cost of real estate in Georgetown and Navy-Yard, $50,000." Who can believe that it will cost $50,000 to buy the real estate in the two cities that will be necessary merely for their depots? I do not believe it will cost half the money. I say nothing about the cost of their cars and horses. That may be a proper estimate; but then they say:

"Distance from Navy-Yard to Georgetown, four and a half miles, making nine miles of double track, at $10,000 per mile—$94,500."

It will not cost half the money. I have had some experience in the construction of railroads. I have been a contractor upon railroads, and I have been president of a railroad company, and I know something about the cost of construction. Sir, the heavy T iron which is necessary to sustain the burden of the most profitable road in your country, does not cost more than $5,000 a mile. T iron which would weigh thirty-five pounds to the lineal yard can be put down here in the city of Washington for $5,000 a mile; but they put the cost of the road at $10,500 a mile. They will be no grating to the most profitable road; and do put down the superstructure and lay the iron; and, instead of costing $10,500 a mile, I will venture any amount that it will not cost more than half the money. Then, again:

"Distance from Treasury Avenue, along Seventh street, to M Street, four fiftihs of a mile, making one mile and three fiftihs at $10,000 per mile, double track, $16,600."

And they add $30,000 for "miscellaneous expenditures." After this exaggerated amount of cost for the construction of the road, they put down $30,000 for miscellaneous expenditures, making the whole road and equipment cost $28,275 30. Sir, I will risk my judgment that the whole work can be accomplished for $15,000; and, instead of giving fifteen per cent. upon the actual amount of cost, this company will probably make from twenty to thirty per cent. annually. That is my deliberate opinion. I do not think they will make less than twenty per cent. clear of all expenses, for they have got their experience here at a very high figure. They put down:

Expenses for working the road, per annum.

Twenty-four drivers, at $5 per week.....	16,800 00
On this line, $200 per month.....	2,400 00
Forty-four conductors, at $600 per annum.....	26,400 00
Ten switches, at $45 per annum.....	4,500 00
Twenty engines, at $1,000 per annum.....	20,000 00
Twenty-two engines.....	6,175 00
Two clerks.....	1,800 00
Two clerks.....	1,800 00
Post feed—.....	1,245 00
Car oil.....	125 00
Car oil.....	300 00
Office expenses, stationery, fuel, &c.....	500 00
Bundling, not enumerated.....	5,000 00
Estimated that in ten years the horses will be valued at, and the total destruction of the track, cars, and horses, one tenth per annum.....	90,227 50

Total expenses for working the road, per annum, $90,227 50

They have got all the expenses which they will probably incur at an exaggerated figure, and the whole expenses are only $90,000 a year, and the average receipts are $130,000. They make that estimate by taking the present receipts of Mr. Vanderwerker with his omnibuses, and adding fifty per cent. to them. That is for the present population; but as the population of Washington and Georgetown increases, of course their receipts will grow; and instead of receiving $143,000 a year, in the course of a few years they will probably go up to $200,000 a year. It is an enormous franchise; and I think that they can very well afford to pay Mr. Vanderwerker, and take all his stock off his hands, at a fair price, and let him take some portion of their stock. I shall therefore vote for sustaining the old man.

Mr. HAMLIN. There are a variety of opinions in this Hall in relation to what proposition suggests to be considered. There are many who think no road at all should be built, and for that purpose of testing the question—and I shall vote for it myself—I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. BROWN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 12, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cuy, Fessenden, Grimes, Hamlin, Hunter, Johnson of Tennessee, Nicholson, Pearce, Post, Briggs, and others.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Benjamin, Bigler, Briggs, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Hiram, Hoole, Pennington, Foster, Gwin, Hendricks, Hendricks, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, King, McKim, Mitchell, Nelson, Seward, Simmons, Sumner, Tilden, Tracy, Wade, and Wood.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment to insert the name of Gilbert Vanderwerker in the first section.

Mr. PUGH. I shall vote for it and I shall deliver the call for the yeas and nays. We can have a division on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bingham, Brown, Chandler, Colman, Doolittle, Pennington, Hamilton, Hiram, Irwin, Johnson, of Arkansas, Johnson, of Tennessee, Kennedy, Powell, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Simmons, Steamer, Ten Eyck, Wright, and Wilson—30.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope we may take the question on the other amendments together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole was, in line six, section one, after the word "their," to insert "or associates—30."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. LANE. I should like to get rid of the bill now. I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. BROWN. We have just had a vote on that.

Mr. BENJAMIN. We have had no vote on it since this gentleman has been forced on associates who do not want him. I am willing now to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole was, in section three, line four, to strike out "a grooved pattern," and insert, "a most approved pattern," to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole was, in section six, line three, to strike out "eighteen," and insert "twelve;" so that it will read "or associates—30."

Unless the said railroads shall be commenced within six months from the passage of this act, and be completed within twelve months, this act shall be null and void.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole was, at the end of section eight, to insert: "And he further covenanted, That the stockholders in said company shall be liable, each in his or her individual capacity, for all debts and liabilities of the said company, and proportionately to the amount of stock held by each."

Mr. FESSENDEN. If this is to be confined to half a dozen people who are to build the road, I think the last clause of that section should be stricken out. I move to strike out the words "to the amount of stock held by each." It is to be confined to half a dozen men.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole was, in section eleven of the bill, line three, after the word "him," to insert "or on the 16th of December last;" so that it will read:

"That said body corporate shall buy of Gilbert Vanderwerker all the real estate, houses, outbuildings, and barns, used by him on the 16th of December last, &c."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made in Committee of the Whole was to insert, as a new section:

"And he further covenanted, That said incorporated company shall pay over to the corporate authorities of Washington city and Georgetown, semi-annually, one half cent on each passenger carried over said road, to be divided between said cities in proportion to their population, as ascertained as each Federal census the same; to form a fund for the maintenance and support of public schools in said cities, respectively."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUSH. I have no objection to a proposition requiring these companies to pay a reasonable proportion of their net profits to the corporate authorities; but this bill has first a provision requiring all their property to be taxed according to the railroad rates, and then it proposes to give one half cent on every passenger paid of five cents. In the first place, it is a proportion of the gross revenue, and it is a very large proportion. Having already loaded the company down, I am satisfied that if we require them to pay one half cent for every passenger, they getting but five cents a passenger, they cannot make the road. I am anxious that no portion of their profits should go for the support of schools, but after having those provisions adopted, I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that this amendment lays it on rather too thick. He had better either go to the net proceeds, and take a proportion of them, or reduce the proportion of gross proceeds. This is a tax on the gross revenue of the company; not on its income.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If this bill is to pass, and we are to give a charter to a company to build a road, let us treat them decently, and not as if we wanted not only to prevent their making any profits, but to take money out of their pockets. The committee have fixed the rate of fare. They suppose it to be just, proper, and right. If it is a just and proper rate, if it affords a sufficient reasonable remuneration, I see no ground, as the Senator from Ohio says, why we should take so much out of the gross receipts. If you will say that they shall pay a certain proportion of their profits, or what they receive over a certain amount of profit, I am willing to agree to it; but it strikes me that this proposition is entirely unreasonable to be put on any company. I am anxious for this bill to stand, and I am free to say, and I wish it to pass to think they ought to be treated decently.

I have another word to say, and it is this: I do not see any reason why the people of Georgetown and Washington should not do as every other people do, and all the cities—support their schools and educate their children. I am opposed to the idea that we must tax everybody who comes here to support their schools, and the further idea, which seems to be advanced, that we must be making appropriations continually. People of this kind do not want to educate their children, and why these people cannot do it. If they are indisposed to walk up and do their duty in that particular, I see no reason why we should be taxed to do it. I see no reason for holding out inducements to them to educate their children, which every other people meet with cheerfulness.

Mr. IVESON. I do not see how this will create any additional tax on the people who are going to use the road. The Senator from Maine has certainly failed to demonstrate that this cannot be inserted by this bill to charge five cents for each passenger, and I want to know of the Senator if he will guaranty that, if this amendment is defeated, the company would only charge four and a half cents?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir. I say this: it is to be presumed that the committee made a proper estimate with regard to what would be the income of the company and the expenses of the company. They have given them liberty to charge five cents. That either is or is not a proper remuneration. If it is too much, reduce it, but if it is nothing more than proper, where is the good sense of my saying that they shall pay out of the gross receipts, without reference to the profits, a given amount in order to support schools in this city?

Mr. IVESON. The Senator from Maine is making a very good computation of the committee. The facts are these: This company came and memorialized Congress, and in their memorial they proposed to pay this very thing to the corporation. They said, "if you will give us this franchise, and allow us to charge five cents a passenger, we will pay a certain portion of the proceeds to the corporation of Washington and Georgetown to educate their children." The committee struck that out, and did not propose to impose that obligation upon them. The company themselves, and all the cities, and all the people, as I had the paper a little while ago and exhibited to the Senate, that after paying six per cent, on the whole amount of their investment, and deducting all their expenses, according to their own showing, there would be a clear bonus of $18,000, which cent to nine per cent, more, or less.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then the proper course is to strike down the price to be received.

Mr. IVESON. If you strike it down to three or four cents, I will vote for it; but as long as it is at five cents, I will vote against it. If the bill will be, if you refuse this amendment, that instead of giving the half cent for the education of children here, you will put it in the pockets of this corporation. That is the result. I say that, as they have themselves proposed to give this to the corporation for the benefit of the children of the district, (and they can very well afford to do it), I see no reason why we shall not permit them to do it. I offer the amendment in conformity with the proposition of the company themselves; and the Senators, in their exuberant liberality, propose to exonerate them from a burden which they themselves propose to inflict. According to their own showing, they will not only make six per cent, on their investment, on an extravagant estimate of their expenditures, according to my opinion, but they will make nine per cent. more on that investment according to their own showing, which they have exhibited here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. A very good argument against the bill.

Mr. IVESON. That may be so; but I am in favor of the bill, notwithstanding they will make these large profits; because I want the railroad constructed, and I am willing they should make profits, provided we have the road. It certainly will not injure the community to give them this privilege. The community now have to pay five cents for riding in omnibuses. They will have to pay no more than five cents to ride in a railroad car, and certainly the change will be an agreeable and profitable one for the community. I am for the bill, such as it is. I am not a socialist we shall take half a cent of that, and give it to the benefit of the public of the two cities. According to their own showing, they will make twelve per cent, on the amount of their investment, even receiving only four and a half cents a passenger.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator from Georgia has made a statement, I think at least twice, which I am very sure is not well founded. The Senator is mistaken. The persons named as corporators have never made any proposition as he has stated—proposing to give a certain amount of the earnings of their road—no such thing. I think I am right in my recollection: I am confident I am. Their first proposition was to pay a certain per cent on the net profits of the road, and not on all other taxes. That was their proposition, and the Senate committee deemed it wise to strike out that, and let them be taxed like other persons, and let the taxes be fixed at a proper rate. That was their proposition to relieve themselves from taxation, and the committee thought it not advisable to accede to it for two reasons: first, there might be trouble in hunting up net profits on which to make any assessment; and secondly, they ought to stand precisely as everybody else stood, assessed for the full value of all their property.

Mr. CAMERON. While listening to the Senator from Georgia, I prepared an amendment, which I think will be better than the half cent proposition he talks about. I will read it:

Provided, The said corporation shall pay to the treasury of Washington and Georgetown, for the benefit of the school fund, five cents, per passenger, on all railroads, which shall be in full of all taxation on said railroads.

I prefer that it should be left to the corporations of these two cities to assess them in proportion to the value of their property, and not to have anything to be taken from their income. I would rather it should be a portion of their actual profits. I do not believe, as I said before, that there is going to be any great profit. The Senator from Georgia differs with me. I see in his calculation of the profits of this road. I think I have had more experience than he has had in the making of railroads, and I have never seen a railroad made for the amount of the estimate on which it was based—neither city nor general railroad—none. They always lose, and it is a fact that it is always a great deal more to be done after a railroad is supposed to be finished than anybody not acquainted with that business can imagine.

I look on this railroad as a convenience to us, to the citizens of Washington, and to all strangers who come here. I would do nothing to interfere with the gentlemen who invest their money in it. They will find before they have done that it will cost them more money than they imagine, and they will find when they come to get their dividends that they are very much mistaken. If we shall derive benefit. If as you tax them at all, it is fair you should tax their income, and take a portion of their profits; but if you charge one half cent on each passenger, without regard to the profits, you make the public pay that half cent and you take one tenth of the whole income. Ten per cent. is a very large portion of the income. I take it that if a five-cent fare is too much, public opinion will cause it to be reduced. I do not think it is too much. It has not been found too much anywhere; but if it is, public opinion will compel this corporation, after they shall have made the road, to reduce it. I think it is right that the public says is right. If we are going to leave the road says, let us treat them liberally; let us induce them to make it. I do not care about this proposition; but if anything is to be done I will offer it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he would not consent to modify his proposition, so as to give to these cities one fourth or one third of the net profit above six per cent. Then they will get their six per cent., the interest on their outlay, and of the net profit above that, divide two thirds to these corporations, and one third to the cities, and let the cities have a right to inspect the books.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I shall be very glad to suggest to the Senator from Georgia, who has offered this amendment, that he has expressed it certainly with the fullest power, and I believe it is very generally understood. It is evident that the Senate is becoming thin, the attendance is but small. There is a quorum here, I believe—barely a quorum—and a very little more discussion of the matter, in which so few of the members feel any interest, I think will soon end off what now constitutes a quorum. But I suggest to those who feel interest enough in the bill to continue to amend it, to let us vote. Really, if a proposition is made now by the Senator from Georgia, to lay it upon the table, I shall feel bound to vote for it, for one; and I am under the impression, from what I see and hear around me, that a motion of that kind will come very near carrying, unless a quorum should fail to be present. I think it is about discussed to death, if ever a small meeting of the Senate meets in extremity. It is at the last extremity now. It is in its last gasps. If passed not in any shape, there is certainly intelligence enough here, after three hours' debate to-day, to comprehend it; considering that several years before have been devoted to it. I really do hope the Senator from Georgia, in his good temper, which is always marked and distinguished—we know that is so—will insist upon having a vote on this matter, and let us get along with it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I beg leave to call the attention of gentlemen to the proviso of the fifth section of this bill, which gives the Congress of the United States the right "at any time within ten years after the completion of said roads" to "alter, fix, and regulate the fare chargeable on said roads for and during the next ensuing five years." That is the power of Congress. If they shall find that the privilege which we now grant is profitable, that these stockholders receive an exorbitant percentage, we can reduce the fare at any time that we please. I think that is a sufficient security, and that there is no necessity of any law to be taxing this bill with this or that bonus to Georgetown or to Washington city. I want the fare reduced to the lowest possible grade, and therefore I prefer to rely on this security, and have the fare reduced, and the public in that way will derive the most universal and general benefit from it.

Mr. IVERSON. The yeas and nays have been ordered on this amendment, and of course I have no right to withdraw the call, and cannot, therefore, conform to the amiable wishes of any one from Arkansas. I am in favor of the amendment, and I desire the question to be taken upon it. The Senator from Maine says that the company have never proposed anything to educate the children here; but here it is in their own hand-writing. Here is their own estimate, which they have printed and laid on the tables of Senators. They make their estimates of the amount of investment and the net profits, and then they say, "out of which is to be paid the sum stipulated to the support of the public schools in Washington and Georgetown."

That is their own statement. They therefore make the proposition to pay a sum out of the net earnings to the public schools of Washington and Georgetown. My amendment is only carrying out their own proposition, as I understand. Here is their own estimate. Certainly Senators have not looked at it to see what this company will make, according to their own showing. "They estimate that the expense of the work will be $238,000; and then, after taking out all the expenses of keeping it up, the taxes which they will pay, repairs, insurance, and all the expenses that the company will be called upon to pay, they make a net profit of $18,000, or about six and a half per cent. of their capital invested." They give all their expenses; they add six per cent., which is $15,466 upon the amount of investment; and then that leaves them annually a bonus of $18,612, which, according to my calculation, would be six and nine per cent. more. They have already taken out the six per cent. on their capital, and they say they will make a bonus of $18,000 besides, which of course will be about eight or nine per cent. in addition to six; so that, according to their own showing here made, as favorable to them as possibly they exhibit that they will make about from twelve to fifteen per cent. annually on the investment. Now, I say they can tell us how to pay something out of that for the education of the children in Washington and Georgetown.

Mr. POLK. I fear we are not getting through with this bill to-day, and it is important that some executive business should be attended to; and I move that we go into executive session.

Mr. BROWN. If we pass this bill we can transact all of our District business in twenty minutes.

Mr. POLK. I have no objection to next Saturday being appropriated for this business; but I want an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BROWN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 26, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Briggs, Chandler, Clay, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Green, Grimes, Hunter, Lane, Nicholson, Polk, Pike, Southard, Trumbull, and Wright—16.
NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Benjamin, Bigler, Bingham, Blair, Clingman, Colquhoun, Crittenden, Doolittle, Foster, Fox, Fowler, Gwin, Hamlin, Hartson, Humphreys, Iveson, Kennedy, Lane, Mason, Russell, Sewall, Sidel, Sumner, Ten Eyck, and Wilson—26.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. I move to postpone the bill until next Saturday, and make it a special order.

Mr. BROWN. I hope not. I do hope most earnestly we shall finish the bill.

Several Senators. Let us pass it.

Mr. GREEN. If we can pass the bill with one vote, I am content.

Mr. BROWN. Do not talk, and we will soon pass it.

Mr. GREEN. Very well. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole, on the motion of the Senator from Georgia, to insert as a new section:

And he further enacted, That all incorporated companies, and all the corporations of the District of Washington and Georgetown, semi-annually, one half cent on each passenger carried over said road, to be divided between the cities in proportion to their respective populations at each Federal census; the same to form a fund for the maintenance and support of public schools in said cities and towns.

Mr. CAMERON. Would it be in order for me now to offer my amendment as a substitute for that? ["Let us vote."] Very well.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand that there is a proposition to amend this section in another report, and therefore I shall vote "aye."

The result was then announced—yeas 21, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bigler, Brown, Chandler, Fitzpatrick, Green, Grimes, Hartson, Iveson, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, Nicholson, Polk, Pike, Southard, Sidel, Ten Eyck, Wigfall, and Wilson—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Bingham, Briggs, Cameron, Clingman, Colquhoun, Crittenden, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Hamlin, Humphreys, Johnson of Arkansas, King, Lane, Mason, Russell, Sewall, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wade—22.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole are disposed of.

Mr. HAMLIN. On consultation with the committee, I am authorized to move an amendment in the third line of the fifth section, to strike out "ten years after its completion." That will give Congress control of the fare after five years, instead of ten years, as it is now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move the amendment which I offered in Committee of the Whole. The amendment is to open books and make it a joint stock company.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I suppose we all understand it. Let us dispense with the reading.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not desire it to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading will be dispensed with.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand the Senator from North Carolina has an amendment to make to it.

Mr. BRAGG. The effect of the amendment, of which I am in favor, is to open books for subscriptions generally; but objection was made to the limitation of ten shares to each individual, at least for a certain time, that mere men of straw will be procured to come forward, by persons really interested, and take up the stock in that way. The objection was not well founded, in the small number of shares. I offer an amendment to obviate that objection, by inserting after the words "500," in the second section of the amendment of the Senator from Maine:

And to that end no subscription shall be allowed or received for stock, unless the person offering to make such subscription shall first make affidavit, before the person authorized to receive such subscriptions, that the same is done for and in fact and in truth for him or herself, and not for another; and any person who shall take a false or corrupt oath touching such subscriptions, shall be held in habeas corpus, and be subject to all the pains and penalties thereof.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I suggest that does not amount to anything. A man comes forward and makes affidavit that he intends it as a bona fide subscription. So he does; but it does not amount to anything, for he can transfer his stock the next day.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It can certainly do no harm.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, as modified.

Mr. CLINGMAN. We ought to have the yeas and nays. I take it this is an important amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. IVERSON. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. If this amendment of the Senator from Maine is adopted, it will be by way of substitute for the original bill, I understand.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; only additional sections.

Mr. BROWN. It substitutes a joint stock company.

Mr. IVERSON. What I want to ask the Chair is, will the amendment itself be open to amendment after its adoption by the Senate?

Mr. CLINGMAN. Certainly. It is an additional section, and will be open to amendment.

Mr. IVERSON. Not after it is amended.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Additions can be made to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is now open to amendment, and will not be after it is adopted.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have paired off with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. FRANK.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 22, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bigler, Bingham, Briggs, Cameron, Colquhoun, Fessenden, Green, Grimes, Hartson, Humphreys, Iveson, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, Nicholson, Polk, Pike, Southard, Sidel, Sumner, Ten Eyck, and Trumbull—22.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clingman, Crittenden, Doolittle, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Hamlin, Iveson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Lane, Mason, Rice, Sebastian, Sewall, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, and Wade—18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. I think the further consideration of the bill to-day would not be profitable, and I therefore move an executive session.

Mr. BROWN. I hope not. We have been worried in the Committee on the District of Columbia for four years with this bill, and I hope the Senate will settle it, if for nothing else, to relieve the committee from the eternal annoyance of these people.

Mr. SLIDELL. I would prefer to have this question disposed of; but it appears to me that there is an imperfection in this bill, which ought to be supplied.

Mr. LANE. Well, I withdraw my motion. Mr. SLIDELL. In section five it is provided that "the privileges hereby granted shall continue for the term of thirty years," and there is no disposition in the bill which indicates what shall be done of the railroad when those thirty years shall have expired. It seems to me that the proposed charter should revert to the cities of Washington and Georgetown. The inconvenience to the public may otherwise be very great. There is no provision at all for the extension of this charter, nor is there any disposition attempted to be made of the road at the expiration of thirty years. I therefore offer the following amendment, to come in after the second line of section five:

And at the expiration of said term, the road, with all its fixtures, running stock, and material of every kind, shall become the property of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in proportion of the respective populations of said cities, as they may be shown to exist by the general decennial census of 1890.

Mr. BROWN. My objection to that is: that you dispose of private property by direct act of Congress. By your bill, you grant this franchise for thirty years, and leave it to yourself the right to alter, amend, or change the charter at pleasure. The Senator from Louisiana proposes, after thirty years, by direct act of Congress, to violate a compact with these parties, if they accept your bill, to dispose of two hundred and fifty or three hundred thousand dollars' worth of property. That is unjust. Whatever thirty years' experience shall show to be right, Congress doubtless will do. I think the bill is right as it was originally drawn, and therefore I shall vote against this amendment.

Mr. CAMERON. The amendment, I think, is all wrong. It is more than probable the Senator from Louisiana and I shall not be here thirty years after this, and probably no man who subscribes to the stock will be living thirty years after this; but we will not mind that. We will leave it to their families, supposing it to have value for all time to come. It would be wrong to destroy the value of it. I do not think any man would buy the stock at thirty years' purchase. I think you defeat the whole object of this bill, which is to make a railroad for the benefit of Congress. When we shall die, and all about us be dead and forgotten, Congress will be here; somebody will be here representing this great country, and they will dispose of this matter thirty years after this as they think wise. I would not take that stock at one-fourth its par value if you put this amendment in, and I do not believe anybody who has a dollar to spare will put it into the road with such a provision as this in the bill.

Mr. SLIDELL. It is a simple question for their honor, whether they will accept this franchise on the terms proposed to them by Congress. If they do not choose to accept it, of course no injury is done them; no burden is imposed on them. I do not recollect whether it was the Senator from Mississippi, or the Senator from Pennsylvania, who said the bill was a species of confiscation—one or the other certainly. Now, I can appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania for a case which ought to be within his recollection. A canal connecting New Orleans with Lake Pontchartrain was made at the expense of upwards of two million dollars. The Senator from Pennsylvania was one of the principal contractors, I believe, for the making of that canal. By the terms of the charter, the canal, with all its fixtures and property, reverted, at the end of the term, to the franchisee for thirty, forty, thirty or forty years—to the State. It is quite as competent for Congress to impose such a condition as any other condition, as one of the terms of the franchise. I think it is eminently just and proper, because although it is not for any benefit to derive from it—one who has any personal advantage from a provision of this sort—we ought to be careful, to some extent, of posterity. What will be the situation of Pennsylvania avenue thirty years hence when this franchise expires, if there are any allowed to tear it up and destroy it? A friend near me has suggested that perhaps it might be as well to omit the running stock and materials; and, with the consent of the Senate, I will strike that part out, and simply provide that the road and its fixtures shall revert to the city corporations. I think it an eminently proper provision. I do not know that I shall vote for the bill at all; certainly not without this provision.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President—

Mr. CAMERON. Let me have the floor for a minute.

Mr. LANE. I will make a suggestion; and then the Senator can see whether he will want the floor. The bill is now in a shape which I do not very well understand, and do not like very well; and I should like to have a little further time to look at it, and have the amendments all printed, and set apart next Saturday for its consideration. It is necessary to transact some executive business this evening; and, with a view of going into executive session, I propose that the amendments adopted be printed, and that this bill be made the special order for next Saturday.

Mr. BROWN rose.

Mr. LANE. I hope the Senator will interpose no objection to that; for I want time to look at this bill. I want time to think of it, and to understand it, and to vote with a knowledge of the character of the bill and its provisions; and I am aware that an executive session is necessary—inasmuch as it is indeed—and ought to be attended to this evening.

Mr. BROWN. The proposition to postpone this question to next Saturday is a proposition to give outsiders—not that I say my friend from Oregon wants it, but that is what it amounts to—an opportunity to get in a conflict with one another, to embarrass us, annoy us, worry us, and bedevil us, as they have done all day to-day with this railroad proposition. This is our proposition. It does not belong to this company, or that company, or another company. It belongs to the people. The privilege of making a railroad upon the avenue, do it now; do it to-day; do it at once; do it independently of it like Senators; and do not postpone it to give one company an opportunity of conflicting with another. That is all the work we need. If I had listened to the Saturday to the advice of my friend from Arkansas, and insisted on a vote, I should have got clear of the annoyance of this bill. For four long years this bill has been a thorn in my side. I want the Senate to let it lay. You have got very near to consummation of it. For God's sake, this evening dispose of it; let us be done with it. I am tired and sick at heart with it. Give the franchise to anybody; but for God's sake, take it out of my hands.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to say a single word in reply to the Senator from Louisiana. He has made a mistake in regard to the charter of the canal he referred to. It is true that canal was, by its charter, to go to the State; but he has forgotten that that was a bonus for a bank charter. The charter of the canal was the right to operate for thirty years, and then return it to the State as a bonus for the right of banking, out of which they made a good deal of profit; but the fact that the right of the company was limited to thirty years, made the canal self-sustaining. It was of great service to the city of New Orleans, and to the surrounding country. I remember the circumstances very well. There are to me a great many pleasant associations and recollections connected with that canal. Among the rest is, that I made it clear of two hundred and twenty thousand men in New Orleans, who held, then, great power and who treated me with great kindness and hospitality, and they are now both Senators here. But he is mistaken as to its pecuniary effect to the company. It was entirely valueless because of the great expense of its construction.

Now, I want this railroad made, and I do not care who makes it; and I want the people who invest their money in it to have a fair compensation for their investment. It will be a benefit to all of us. Why not pay them properly; and why should we differ about who is to make it? Let anybody make it. I have voted for the amendment of my friend from Maine; but if that does not meet the approbation of the Senate, I will move to reconsider. [Oh, no!] I want the road made, and I will give it to anybody who will make it.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. POLK. Oh, no! let us have an executive session. We must have an executive session to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. I insist on my motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to move a reconsideration of the Senate's vote on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. LANE. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment? I think now it is very manifest to every Senator that we cannot get through with this bill this evening. I stated before that it was absolutely necessary that executive business should be transacted this evening. It is very important that it should be, and I hope Senators will agree now to go into executive session; and I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator indulge the Chair in referring some House bills?

Mr. BROWN. By taking up House bills, I do not like to have it assumed that the motion of the Senator from Oregon is going to be adopted. I think the Senate will dispose of the bill to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object to the reference of the bills?

Mr. BROWN. I insist on taking the questions as they come.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, as modified by the mover.

Mr. LANE. Have I a right to make a motion for an executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator to withdraw it.

Mr. LANE. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is in order.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LANE. I desire to offer two or three amendments to the bill, and I want to talk about them, and I am not ready to do it now; and I ask delay, that I may have time to prepare the amendments and the reasons why I shall go in favor of the amendments I shall offer; and I ask the Senate therefore to postpone further action on this bill. There is no occasion for hurry; there is no reason why it should be pushed right through the Senate without giving us time to understand the bill; and in its present shape I do not understand it. I desire to understand it; and I therefore ask again that this bill be postponed until next Saturday, or until any other day you please, and that we now proceed to executive business; and I hope the Senate will permit us to have an executive session.

Mr. BROWN. There is not a man in all this wide Republic to whose appeal I would yield more readily than to my friend from Oregon; but if this bill is postponed to Saturday, and Saturday, and from Saturday to Saturday, it will be postponed to all eternity. There will be somebody always ready with just such appeals as my friend makes to-day. He ought to recollect that this bill has been here for four long years. It cannot be allowed that a bill of such importance, a particular Senator who will be postponed a whole week. I have got sick and tired, and the Senate will excuse me if I say disgusted, with this thing. I want to get clear of it, and I hope the Senate will not adjourn without disposing of it in some way.

Mr. POLK. I think that whenever and as long as there shall be a Senator in this body who stands affected towards the bill as the Senator from Oregon says he does, we ought to postpone it, if it takes four years to get it through. I must say that this bill has been amended in such a way as to make it a very different proposition from what it was when it came from the committee. Senators have other amendments to offer. This Senator from Oregon has amendments to offer, and he wishes to prepare them and make his appeal, to prepare them, and I think it is important to get through with the bill this afternoon. It is now half-past four o'clock, and I do not see that we are much nearer to an end, or any nearer, in fact, than we were four hours ago. I must say that I propose to go into executive session. It is important that some executive business should be transacted. I repeat, that it is very important that it should be transacted. It will not take long; but I know if this bill is gone on with until it is disposed of, we shall not have a quorum here to go into executive business. I hope, therefore, that the proposition of the Senator from Oregon will be accepted.

Mr. BROWN. It turns out as I predicted in the early part of the day. You have got a parcel of capitalists here, who are fighting one another. Here is your Metropolitan Railroad Company and your citizens' company, and this company in favor of which the committee reported. They fight one another. Sir, there is nothing of substantial public interest in this contest. It is an attempt to make private profit, and why should this grave Senate yield to an idea of that sort? Why not select one of these claimants and say, "we give you the right to lay this road," and be done with it; not wait a week until somebody may get up some scheme to embarrass us more the next Saturday than we are embarrassed to-day.

Wait a week, and the ingenuity of these people will get up all manner of schemes upon you, as they have done last week. If I had yielded to the request and solicitation of my friend from Arkansas, and my friend from North Carolina, last Saturday, I would have urged the passage of this bill; we should have had it over, and been done with it. Wait a week longer, and you will be still more embarrassed. I beg of the Senate to dispose of the question to-day. We have had in the District committee no more business, more in this portmanteau, more remonstrances, and more of everything that annoys a committee, over this question, than we have had over everything else beside. I beg and implore the Senate to dispose of the question, and let us be done with it; decide it any way, I do not care, so long as I may finger how, so that you take it out of my hands.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have but a single word to say. I have refrained from entering into the debate to-day. I always regard it as a very ungracious task to oppose that which may be deemed by some of my own constituents a matter of interest to them. I can only acquiesce in and endorse the views of the honorable Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in saying that I myself have been so persecuted, so harassed and annoyed by this question, which has resolved itself simply into one between the ins and the outs, that I am myself now inclined to move the indefinite postponement of the whole thing. This is the third year since I have had the honor of a seat on this floor that I have been annoyed with this piecemeal bill. Much has been said in regard to the vast profits to result from this franchise. I myself do not accord at all—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend his remarks until order can be restored in the Chamber? It is utterly out of the question to transact business with so much confusion.

Mr. KENNEDY. I have but a word or two to say, and that is to enter my protest now to the postponement of this bill. I have been here to-day, with a full understanding here that I give now to the Senate that, rather than be subjected to the annoyance that I have been for three years to the detriment of my other important business here, I am prepared to move the indefinite postponement of the whole thing, and to wash my hands of it forever. If we are to go into executive sessions here upon the ere of a final vote, by which this whole question is to be carried over, and be renewed at some other day, I know perfectly well myself that it is in renewal of the whole subject on new schemes, and amendments and new projects, to be harassing us, from hour to hour and from day to day, and I wash my hands of it now.

I am prepared to vote on the bill. I have carefully considered and weighed the views that have been presented to the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which I am a member. I have acquiesced in the report made by that committee in favor of the bill on your table. One party, constituents of my own, have presented no views that have had weight with me. I have regarded—I say it with deference, not meaning to impugn the veracity, the honor, or the character of any gentleman—the corporations of the Metropolitan bill as being here under false pretenses, and upon that view I have acted. I wish the question disposed of now. I voted for this bill substantially last year. I made my remarks then—which have been considered very ungracious on my part, as seeming to oppose the interests of my own people—but I have acted in accordance with my honor and my sense of justice and of truth in the matter. I beg that the question may be taken to-day.

Mr. LANE. One single word, and I will not trouble the Senate again with this question. I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FENNER] was adopted as a substitute for the bill as presented to the Senate. It is a new bill. It is one that I have not seen. It has not been printed; and the bill pending now is not the one introduced by the committee. It is not anything like the bill presented by the committee.

Mr. KENNEDY. It is substantially. Mr. LANE. Not at all. It is different in all its provisions. It is not the same corporation by any means. I want the bill printed, so as to be able to examine it. I have been more fortunate than other Senators in relation to this matter. I have had no annoyance. I have never spoken to a gentleman, and no living than to me, outside of the Senate Chamber, on the subject. I have read none of the memorials; none of the remonstrances; none of the printed papers, and nothing like in relation to it. I have read the bill. I read it as it was reported by the committee and printed, and as I found it on my files, and I understand it as it came from the committee, but this is a new proposition that I do not understand. I want to look at it; to see it. I desire time to consider it and understand it; and I hope the Senate will not press a vote. I do not see what inconvenience there can be in letting it go over. Who is there that will feel that he will be annoyed in relation to this bill before next Saturday? I will venture that I experience no annoyance—not a particle. Now, with these remarks—

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Oregon will allow me, I have voted steadily against adjournment and adjournment to to-morrow with a view to finish this matter; but I do not see how we can resist what the Senator from Oregon says. He wants to examine the bill. I think we had better acquiesce at once, and I am prepared to do so; and I think if he will let the question be taken we will agree to go into executive session, and let the bill go over.

Mr. LANE. Then I will say no more, with the hope that the bill may be postponed, and that we may have an executive session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I make that motion, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to inquire what is the state of the case. Is Saturday of next week set apart for District business? ["No."] Then this will go over as the unfinished business until Monday if we now go into executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the order, as the Chair understands.

Mr. HARLAN. I ask the Senator from Illinois to withdraw his motion for a moment. I desire to move a reconsideration of the vote on one of the amendments which has been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will receive that motion, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine was adopted. I do not ask the question to be taken on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before putting the question on the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, the Chair will cause some House bills on the table to be referred.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as introduced to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (No. 85) for the relief of R. K. Doebler—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (No. 262) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francois Guillory, deceased—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (No. 264) for the relief of Mrs. Y. H. H. Underwood, and the legal representatives of Samuel Rockwell—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (No. 264) for the relief of Charles Stillman—to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

A bill (No. 265) for the relief of Frederick Stephens—to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

A bill (No. 130) to pay to the State of Missouri the amount expended by said State in repelling the invasion of the Osage Indians—to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

A bill (No. 266) for the relief of Brevet Lieutenant Colonel Martin Burke, and Captain Charles S. Winder, of the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

A bill (No. 267) for the relief of Mrs. A. W. Angus, widow of the late Captain Samuel Angus, United States Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (No. 269) granting a pension to James Lacy, of Granger county, Tennessee—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 270) granting a pension to John Madden, of Campbell county, Tennessee—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 271) granting a pension to Cyrus C. Blackman, of St. Helena parish, Louisiana—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 272) granting a pension to Adelaide Adams, widow of Commander George W. Adams, United States Navy—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 273) for the relief of Micajah Hawkins—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 276) for the relief of Mrs. Hannah McDowell—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 277) for the relief of Webster S. Steele—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 284) for the relief of John W. Taylor, and certain other assignees of preemption land locations—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 600) for the relief of the children and heirs of Alexander Montgomery—to the Committee on Pensions.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Now I renew the motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 7, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. BROCKTON. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

APPOINTMENT ON A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. NISBICK a member of the committee appointed under the resolution submitted by Mr. HAZARD on the 6th ultimo, to supply the place of Mr. DIMMICK, excused.

RATE D. TAYLOR.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. I desire now to call up the matter I moved yesterday to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill (No. 250) for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brevet Captain Oliver H. P. Taylor, was referred to a Committee of the Whole House. I desire to put the bill upon its passage; and before that is done, I desire to make a few remarks.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. TAPPAN. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. GURLEY. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. ELY. I ask the gentleman from New Hampshire to yield to me a moment.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. It will occupy not more than two minutes to pass this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks the unanimous consent of the House to put the bill for the relief of Kate D. Taylor upon its passage.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. I desire to make a simple explanation of the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If the gentleman is allowed to make his explanation as an argument in favor of taking it up, but not assuming that it is up, I have no objection to hearing it.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, APRIL 10, 1859.

NEW SERIES, No. 101.

Mr. FLORENCE. The gentleman from Kentucky has his motion to reconsider, and he cannot be deprived of the right to be heard.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the motion to reconsider is debatable, and the gentleman from Kentucky can avail himself of that right, if he desires.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Dr. Captain Oliver H. Taylor, on the pension roll, at the rate of thirty-five dollars per month, from the 17th of May, 1858, for during life or widowhood, deducting the amount received through the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury, at the rate of $36 66 2/3 per month, under the fifteenth section of the act of 16th of March, 1852.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to hear the report read, or an explanation made of the case.

From the report, which was read, it appears that the husband of the petitioner was a cadet in 1842; brevet second lieutenant dragons, 1st July, 1845; brevet first lieutenant, 4th February, 1847; brevet captain, September, 1852; killed in conflict with an overpowering band of Indians in Washington Territory, 17th May, 1858. The petitioner has been allocated five years' half pay at the rate of $26 66 2/3 per month, as a widow of a first lieutenant of dragons. She now pays the half pay of captain of dragons, as her late husband was a brevet captain, and discharging the duties of a full captain at the time he received the wound in the battle with the Indians, and from which he died as above stated. It appears that in the battle of the 17th May, 1858, between the United States forces under Colonel Steptoe and several tribes of Indians, and while Colonel Steptoe's command was in retreat, under the force and pressing pursuit of the Indians, "the difficult and dangerous duty was assigned to Captain Taylor and Lieutenant Gaston of flanking the column; that in their heroic efforts thus to protect the main body from the availing arrows, they both fell severely with wounds and loss of blood." It also appears that the petitioner herself was left to support her two infant, orphan children, and is destitute of means for their maintenance.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question to see whether I understand this bill. If I understand it, the effect of the bill will be to give the petitioner thirty-five dollars per month instead of twenty-six dollars?

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir, and during her widowhood instead of for two years.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. Hays, their Chief Clerk, informing the House that the President of the United States did, on the 6th instant, approve and sign an act (S. No. 81) for the relief of Elizabeth M. Cooke, widow of Major James H. Cooke, late marshal of the district of Texas; and an act (S. No. 302) in relation to the return of undelivered letters in the Post Office.

Also, that the Senate did, on the 5th instant, order to be printed the memorial of Duff Green, President of the Sabine and Rio Grande Railroad Company, in the State of Texas, praying such amendment of the powers and privileges of said company as will enable them to extend their road to the Pacific at or near Mazatlan.

Also, that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A resolution (No. 15) for the relief of Lieutenant John C. Carter;

An act (No. 51) for the relief of James Macca-bay;

An act (No. 96) for the relief of Olivia W. Cannon, widow of Joseph S. Cannon, late midshipman in the United States Navy;

An act (No. 119) for the relief of A. M. Mitchell, late colonel of Ohio volunteers in the Mexican war;

A bill (No. 174) for the relief of William Mosey;

A bill (No. 175) for the relief of George Phelps;

A bill (No. 176) for the relief of R. W. Clarke;

A bill (No. 177) for the relief of John R. Nourse, deceased;

A bill (No. 182) for the relief of Nicholas Underhill;

A bill (No. 183) for the relief of Cornelius Hughes;

A bill (No. 184) for the relief of Rebecca A. Correll;

A bill (No. 185) for the relief of Mrs. Ann P. Derrick, widow of W. S. Derrick, deceased;

A bill (No. 186) for the relief of Mills Judson, surveyor on the official bond of the late Patser Andrew D. Crosby;

A bill (No. 187) for the relief of Henry G. Carson, administrator of Curtis Grubb, deceased;

A bill (No. 189) for the relief of Franklin Peale;

A bill (No. 191) to provide for the quieting certain land titles in the late disputed territory in the State of Maine, and for other purposes;

A bill (No. 192) for the relief of the legal representatives of James Ball, deceased;

A bill (No. 194) for the relief of F. M. Gunnell, a passed assistant surgeon, United States Navy;

A bill (C. C. No. 206) for the relief of Emilio G. Jones, executor of Thomas P. Jones, deceased;

A bill (C. C. No. 207) for the relief of James L. Edwards, administrator of Thomas R. Godney, deceased;

A bill (C. C. No. 209) for the relief of Thomas Allen, and

A bill (C. C. No. 210) for the relief of Augustus H. Evans.

MILES DEVINE.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish to enter a privileged motion. Yesterday I reported back from the Committee of Claims a bill (S. No. 99) for the relief of Miles Devine, with a recommendation that it do not pass. It was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table.

Before I resign the floor, I wish to suggest that the large number of private bills which have been brought in from the Senate should be taken up, and referred to their appropriate committees.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. ELY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That all public documents of which extra copies are ordered to be printed by this House, previous to the Thirty-Fifth Congress, which have not been delivered, and are now in possession of the officers of this House, shall be equally distributed among the members thereof for distribution among their respective constituents.

Mr. PETTIT. I move that the resolution be referred to the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. FLORENCE. That is the better way to dispose of it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would like to know what documents are referred to here? Are they books, or are they Patent Office reports and such documents, that are printed for distribution? What are they?

Mr. ELY. In answer to the gentleman from Alabama I would say that I refer to the public documents of which extra copies were ordered by Congress prior to the Thirty-Fifth Congress.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand they were printed prior to the Thirty-Fifth Congress; but I want to know what documents are intended to be included in this resolution?

Mr. ELY. I mean all the public documents that are in possession of the officers of the House, not distributed, and that were printed prior to the Thirty-Fifth Congress.

Mr. HOUSTON. It seems to me very strange, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from New York cannot tell what these public documents are; and I therefore object to the resolution.

Mr. PETTIT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama, that a reference to the report of the Secretary of the Interior shows what these documents are. The various volumes referred to in the resolution are set out by catalogue in the report of the Secretary of the Interior. There is a large mass of miscellaneous matter, beginning with the reports and Journals of the First Congress under the Constitution, and coming down to the present time. Of some books there are but a few sets. Of some the sets run up to a hundred. With two exceptions—the works of John Adams and the works of Mr. Jefferson—there is nothing else but what I have already indicated. The matter has been before the Joint Committee on the Library during the last two Congresses. There is doubt, at this time, as to the construction of the law passed by the last Congress and it is the purpose of the committee to attempt to have the question settled by a matter of legislation, which it will bring before the House during the coming week, if an opportunity be afforded.

Mr. HOUSTON. I objected to the resolution, but with the explanation of the gentleman from Indiana, I am willing to withdraw it, and let the resolution go to the Joint Committee on the Library. So far as I understand the subject, I believe that it is utterly impossible to make anything like a fair distribution of these books among the members; and it is much better for the Committee on the Library to report some plan by which they may be deposited in the library institutions and schools of the country.

Mr. PETTIT. The gentleman from Alabama is probably familiar with the act of last Congress on this subject.

The resolution was referred to the Joint Committee on the Library.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. GUILLEY. The Committee on Printing have instructed me to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House, one thousand extra copies of the bill to provide for the retirement of the claims of officers and soldiers of the revolutionary war, and the widows and children of those who died in the service.

The resolution was adopted.

GEORGE FISHER.

Mr. EDWARDS. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate resolution relating to the claim of George Fisher was referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

The motion was entered.

WILLIAM H. SCOTT.

On motion of Mr. ANDERSON, of Missouri, the case of William H. Scott was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. TAPPAN. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

MEMORIAL AND CHARTS OF MISSISSIPPI SOUND.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the reply of the Secretary of the Treasury to the resolution of the House of Representatives of March 2, 1863, calling for the memoir and charts of the Mississippi sound, and for information relative to appropriations for the naval and military defenses of the Gulf coast of Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and to be printed.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Mr. TAPPAN. I now insist on my motion, that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House. (Mr. BRANCH in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the business on the Private Calendar.

This being "objection day," the bills to which no objection was made were laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that they do pass.

The committee considered the bills, &c., in their order on the Calendar, commencing where they left off yesterday.

ABRAHAM CRUM.

A bill (H. R. No. 313) granting a pension to Abraham Crum.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Abraham Crum, of the State of Ohio, on the invalid pension roll, and pay him a pension, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 1st of April, 1858, and to continue during his natural life.

It appears from the report that Abraham Crum enlisted as a private soldier under Lieutenant Becker, in August, 1812; and was afterwards attached to the company of Captain Elletts in the eighteenth regiment, commanded by Colonel Miller; that he continued in the service, and was in many battles, until the 25th July, 1814, when the battle of Landy's Lane was fought. In that engagement the mercenary acted as color guard under General Jessup; that, while in the line of his duty as a member of said guard, a bomb-shell was thrown in the midst of said guard, and five men out of the six were instantly killed by the explosion; that the petitioner was severely wounded and burnt in the face by said explosion; that he was taken off the field, bearing in his hands the flag of his regiment, by order of the adjutant.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

EMMA A. WOOD.

A bill (H. R. No. 314) for the relief of Emma A. Wood, widow of the late Brevet Major George W. F. Wood, of the United States Army.

The bill instructs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Emma A. Wood, of Utica, New York, widow of the late Brevet Major George W. F. Wood, of the United States Army, on the pension list, at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month, to commence on the 29th day of April, 1856, and to continue during her life.

The petitioner sets forth that her husband, Brevet Major George W. F. Wood, late of the United States Army, was a cadet, and entered the Army at the age of nineteen years, in 1828, and died at Indianola, Texas, November 9, 1851, while engaged in the military service of the United States; that he served in the Florida war until its close; was stationed at different military posts until the spring of 1846, when he went to Mexico; was in the battle at Monterey, afterwards joined General Scott's division, and was engaged in the "army of invasion" under that officer during the war, after which he returned to New Orleans, bringing up the rear guard; that in consequence of having contracted in Mexico a disease known as "chronic diarrhæa," while in the line of his duty, he was confined for several months in New Orleans, and that he never recovered nor was entirely free from said disease. He was appointed assistant quartermaster March 3, 1847; and subsequent to his sickness at New Orleans he was on duty at Jefferson barracks until 1849, when he was ordered to accompany the troops stationed on the Oregon river; he remained at Fort Kearny until 1851, when he was ordered to the principal depot, in advance of Fort Washita, west of Arkansas, on upper Red river; he arrived at Preston in October, 1851, and remained until the fall of 1852. He was then ordered to Austin, Texas, where he remained until the spring of 1854, when he was ordered to Indianola, Texas, to take charge of the depot at that point in April, 1854, where he continued on duty until his death in November of that year.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The report disposes of this case; but I will not make any objection to the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman who reported this bill will consent that the pension shall commence from the passage of the act, I will not object.

Mr. MARTIN, of Ohio. I will agree to that. The bill was amended accordingly; and was then laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ANTHONY W. BAYARD.

A bill (H. R. No. 315) for the relief of Anthony W. Bayard.

Mr. WHITELEY. I would inquire of the gentleman who reported that bill if he has not been since dead? Twenty-Ninth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the bill?

Mr. WHITELEY. Yes, sir; I object.

ELMIRA WHITE.

A bill (H. R. No. 316) for the relief of Elmira White, widow of Captain Thomas R. White.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire those who report these bills, to report the reasons why the Pension Office does not allow pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the bill?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I am compelled to object to it. There is no satisfactory reason given. We might as well throw open the Treasury at once.

ANTHONY W. BAYARD—AGAIN.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill for the relief of Anthony W. Bayard again. The committee considered it a very meritorious case; and I hope the gentleman from Delaware will withdraw his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to call upon any gentleman for his reasons for objecting. The bill is objected to.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I ask unanimous consent to go back to that bill, in order that the gentleman from Delaware may have an opportunity of withdrawing his objection.

Mr. GARRELL. I do not object to the bill; but I object to going back.

SMITH & HUNT.

A bill (H. R. No. 317) for the relief of Smith & Hunt, of Toledo, Ohio.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I object to that bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the title of the next bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to make an appeal to the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. By unanimous consent I can be permitted to do it, and I presume there will be no objection. Will the gentleman from Georgia give me his attention?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the gentleman from Illinois making an appeal to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. TAPPAN. I must object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Why do you object?

Mr. TAPPAN. Because I have a right to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will withdraw my objection, if the gentleman from Illinois can give any good reason why I should do so.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will be allowed to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has once been propounded to the committee, and objection has been made.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to make a statement in behalf of one of our associates, [Mr. WADSWORTH, who is absent from the House.]

Mr. TAPPAN. I objected because I want to get on with the business; but I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Illinois making a statement to the committee?

Mr. BURNETT. The bill is objected to, and there is no necessity for any statement.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Kentucky hear one word?

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the gentleman from Illinois is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not understand that there is any objection.

Mr. COX. I think there is no objection to his proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair twice propounded the question to the committee, and objection was made each time.

Mr. COX. Who objected?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. The objection is withdrawn.

Mr. TAPPAN. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection?

Mr. BURNETT. I do hope that hereafter, when objection is made, the Chairman will insist on it. I did object, and I object now, because we had passed the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the right of the gentleman from Kentucky to object, and the Clerk will report the next case.

MAJOR JOHN F. HUNTER.

A bill (H. R. No. 219) granting a pension to Major John F. Hunter.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John F. Hunter on the list of invalid pensioners, and pay him a pension, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, from the 27th of January, 1858, and to continue during his natural life.

From the report it appears that John F. Hunter was a major in the eleven infantry during the war with Mexico; that on the night of the 19th of August, 1847, just previous to the battle of Contreras, he, together with the troops belonging to his regiment, was compelled to be out in a storm of rain, the severity of which was unparalleled. On account of such exposure he was seized with rheumatic pains, &c., which continued to such an extent that the tendons and leaders of his arms became so inflamed and swollen that he has been unable to use his hands since for the purpose of earning a living.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ANDREW E. MARSHALL.

A bill (H. R. No. 318) for the relief of Andrew E. Marshall.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Andrew E. Marshall, of Pennsylvania, who was a private soldier in the Mexican war, upon the pension roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 13th of April, 1857.

It appears from the private in this case, that Andrew E. Marshall was a private in Captain John Hersey's company, K, first Pennsylvania regiment, commanded by Colonel F. M. Wyndkoop, enrolled and mustered into the service of the United States on the 16th of December, 1846, to serve during the Mexican war; that he was discharged on or about the 26th of July, 1848, at Pittsburgh, with the rest of the company, on account of disability produced by running sores, the result of typhoid fever, brought on by exposure at different times from the commencement of the siege of Puebla, in September, 1847, until returned as unfit for duty. It further appears that the exposure was all in the line of his duty, and that previously he had been a hearty and sound soldier.

Mr. COBB. I call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BENNETT] to this case. He objected just now to the time when the pension of a widow was to commence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is not in order.

Mr. COBB. I propose to make this bill conform to the rule adopted by the committee in that case, on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama object to this bill?

Mr. COBB. I move to amend it so as to make the pension commence from the time of the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the bill?

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. MOORHEAD. It is too late to object.

Mr. COBB. Not at all.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The gentleman did not object to the bill; he offered his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was lost, and the Chair propounded the question to the House: Is there any objection to the passage of the bill?

Mr. MOORHEAD. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw his objection.

Mr. COBB. I will withdraw it, if the gentleman is willing that the bill shall be so amended as not to make a distinction between a widow and a gentleman.

Mr. BURNETT. Would it be in order for me now to offer the amendment offered just now by the gentleman from Alabama?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes so.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I move to amend the bill so as to make the pension commence running from the passage of the bill.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I will accept that amendment, rather than lose the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

COLONEL BENJAMIN WILSON'S HEIRS.

A bill (H. R. No. 319) for the relief of the heirs of Colonel Benjamin Wilson, deceased.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. COBB. I should like to know how much money that bill appropriates?

Mr. VANCE. I think about two thousand dollars.

Mr. BURNETT. I am opposed, as I said yesterday, to this whole principle of going back eighty years, and voting from the public Treasury money for the benefit of the descendants of revolutionary soldiers, and making special cases of relief. If the principle is to be recognized, let a general bill be passed that will apply to all.

Mr. MALLORY. I rise to a question of order.

Debate is not in order.

Mr. VANCE. If the gentleman objects, let him do so in many words. I want to reply to his speech, if he is allowed to make one.

Mr. BURNETT. Very well; I do object.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky withdraw his objection, provided a vote by the yeas and nays may be taken on it in the House?

Mr. BURNETT. No, sir.

JAMES CRAIG'S HEIRS.

A bill (H. R. No. 320) for the relief of the heirs of Rev. James Craig, deceased.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to ask the gentleman who reported that case whether the property which it is proposed to pay for was destroyed by the enemy in consequence of its being in the hands of American troops?

Mr. VANCE. That is certainly the fact. The facts are fully set forth in the report. The claimant's ancestor had a large milling establishment, which was used as a grain depot by the American troops, and it was destroyed by the British troops in consequence of this fact.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object to this claim.

CHARLES JAMES LANMAN.

A bill (H. R. No. 340) for the relief of Charles James Lanman. [Objected to by Mr. PAYOR.]

JAMES PHILAN.

A bill (H. R. No. 342) for the relief of James Philan.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. OLIN. I object.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. It is a very small amount. The services were rendered to the Government.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to make a statement in reference to this bill, and I am sure there will be no objection. I reported this case last year, and it is a very meritorious claim.

Mr. PRYOR. I object to debate.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman will hear the explanation, he will not object, I am very sure.

Mr. HOARD. My colleague [Mr. OLIN] objected to the claim; but he does not object, as I understand, to the statement being made.

Mr. OLIN. Certainly not.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I am satisfied the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection to the bill if he understands the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The rules of the House require that such cases as are taken up, shall be decided without debate. If there be no objection, the bill may be laid aside, but no debate can be allowed.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. The committee may do anything by general consent, and if no one expresses an objection, the gentleman from Tennessee may certainly make his statement.

Mr. COVODE. 46 object to debate.

So the bill was passed over.

DR. EDWARD JARVIS.

A bill (H. R. No. 343) for the relief of Dr. Edward Jarvis. [Objected to by Mr. PAYOR.]

SILVSTER DAY.

A bill (H. R. No. 344) for the relief of the legal representatives of Sylvester Day, late a surgeon in the United States Army.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of the late Sylvester Day, a surgeon in the United States Army, the sum of $400, in reimbursement of that sum paid for medical services at Alleghany Arsenal.

It appears from the report that the deceased was an assistant surgeon in the United States Army, and stationed at Alleghany Arsenal, Pennsylvania.

After having faithfully performed his duty for a long series of years, in December, 1849, he became unable, in consequence of impaired health, to perform the services required, and the commanding officer of the post contracted with a private physician for the necessary assistance.

This arrangement was disapproved by the Surgeon General, and it was intimated that it might become necessary to assign another medical officer to that post. Dr. Day, fearing that this might result in his displacement from his quarters, assumed the payment of the expense of the necessary services.

It appears from the report that Dr. Day remained at the quarters (having been placed upon the sick list) until the 21st of February, 1851, when he died. The memorial asks the reimbursement of the sum of $425, paid by Dr. Day and his representatives for the services thus rendered, being at the rate of thirty dollars per month from December 26, 1849, to February 21, 1851, on the ground that the medical officer is entitled to relief from duty during his own sickness as well as other officers, and that it is unequal and unjust that he should be deprived of his means of support during such sickness.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS FILLEBOWN.

A bill (C. C. No. 91) for the relief of Thomas Fillebown.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Thomas Fillebown the sum of $439, in reimbursement of the loss of the services of the commissioners of the Navy hospital fund from February 7 to May 16, 1827, and for commissions on the disbursements of said fund between the years 1825 and 1829.

Mr. BURNETT. If I understand it, that case has been rejected by the Court of Claims.

Mr. HUTCHINS. Not at all.

Mr. BURNETT. It must have been, or else how came it before the Committee of Claims?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. All reports from the Court of Claims go there.

Mr. HUTCHINS. It was reported favorably upon by the Court of Claims.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I have no objection.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I object. The gentleman from New York made an objection to the bill for the relief of James Philan, one of the most meritorious cases on the Calendar. And now I desire to say, that if gentlemen on the other side are object to our cases, without understanding them, I will object to everything.

Mr. OLIN. I will say to the gentleman, that I think I understand the case to which the gentleman from Mississippi alluded; and I objected to it with the understanding I had. I do not mean to object factiously to any bill; let it come from where it may.

Mr. BURNETT. I think if the gentleman from Mississippi understood this case he would not object.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will state that the Senate have passed a bill precisely similar to this. I ask the consent of the committee to substitute the Senate bill for this.

There being no objection, the Senate bill was substituted, and was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

DAVID MYERLE.

A bill (H. R. No. 345) for the relief of David Myerle.

Mr. MALLORY. The report in that case is voluminous, and I will, without having it read, state that I make objection to the claim for two reasons: first, upon the merits of the case; and secondly, because of some knowledge I have of the matter aside from what is related in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to object to the case before the bill and report are read.

Mr. MALLORY. I object to it. I object now, because I wish to save time.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will say that there is no report from the Court of Claims in this case. This comes from the Committee of Claims. That committee have investigated all the facts of the case, and have reported in its favor upon its intrinsic merits.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is not in order, and the case will be passed over, objection being made.

P. P. HALL.

A bill (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of the legal representatives of P. P. Hall.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of P. P. Hall, deceased, the sum of $400, which payment shall be in full for the services of P. P. Hall in taking the seventh census in California.

It appears from the report, which was read that P. P. Hall was an assistant marshal in taking the seventh census in California, but his returns never reached the Census Office here, they having been destroyed by fire in the configuration at San Francisco on the 3d day of May 1851. Soon afterwards Mr. Hall died, and his heirs applied to the Interior Department for compensation for his services. The Department replied that there was "no authority to make compensation for returns lost or destroyed, therefore the heirs must apply to Congress for relief." In another letter, dated February 2, 1860, Secretary Thompson says: "The only data in possession of the Department, whereby to form an estimate of the amount of his services, consists of the deposition on oath made subsequently to the loss of his returns. As there is no reason to suppose that this deposition does not fairly represent the amount of labor performed, I have directed an estimate to be made therefrom of what Mr. Hall would have been legally entitled to upon the same basis of payment as made to the other assistants." The result of this examination would make it appear that Mr. Hall would have been entitled to about four hundred dollars addition."

Mr. BURNETT. The name in Hall is the report and Hall in the bill—which is the right one? Mr. TAPPAN. I think it is Hall. I move that it be amended.

The amendment was agreed to. The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES PHILAN.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee that it will recur to House bill No. 342, for the relief of James Craig. I understand that objection which was made to it will be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to a recurrence to that bill?

There was no objection. The bill directs that $250 be paid to James Phelan, for his services in prosecuting — Craig, indicted before the district Federal court of the United States for the northern district of Mississippi, under the appointment of Hon. Samuel J. Gholson, on a charge of robbing the United States mail.

It appears from the report, which was read, that Mr. Phelan was called by Hon. S. J. Gholson, United States district judge for Mississippi, to aid the district attorney at the trial of one Craig, who was charged with robbing the United States mails. The fee charged by Mr. Phelan was $250, which the Department of the Interior declined paying, on the ground that the employment was not authorized by the "head of the Department," or by the authority of the President of the United States. In reference to the charge, Hon. REUBEN DAVIS, of the House of Representatives, writes:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 23, 1854.

I know, of my personal knowledge, the services charged for by Mr. Phelan were rendered by him, and as a lawyer, I give it as my opinion that the charge is not too high. I should have charged not more than five hundred dollars for the same services. I demanded Craig.

Respectfully, REUBEN DAVIS.

The Secretary of the Interior, in a letter dated May 26, 1854, says: "I have a personal knowledge of the case, and have no doubt that the services were rendered; neither have I any doubt that if the necessity of the employment of additional counsel in this case had been brought to the attention of the Honorable General or my predecessor by Judge Gholson or the district attorney, such employment would have been authorized at a reasonable compensation." On this letter HON. REUBEN DAVIS indorsed as follows: "This case came up suddenly. The bill of indictment was found at the time the trial was in progress. In my estimation, a necessity for the employment of Mr. Phelan, and the distance from Pontotoc to Washington was so great that it was impossible for Judge Gholson to have communicated with the authorities at Washington city."

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES CRAIG'S HEIRS—AGAIN.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to recur to a bill (H. R. No. 320) for the relief of the heirs of Rev. James Craig. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FARKSWORTH] objected to that bill when it was up, and I think, under some misapprehension. If the committee will consent, I will make a statement. Mr. FARKSWORTH. I understand that the report in that case does not state that the property referred to was in the occupation of the American Army.

Several MEMBERS. Yes it does. Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his objection.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope that that objection will be withdrawn, and that there will commence an era of good feeling. I want to recur to a case in which the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WADE], is almost, if not interested.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to the case of Rev. James Craig?

There was no objection. The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the heirs of the Rev. James Craig, deceased, late of Lexington, Virginia, namely, to James Craig, Edward C. Craig, John A. Orgain, and Ann, his wife, — Carver, and Maria, his wife, Rebecca Gregory, George E. Gregory, Richard C. Gregory, and James C. Gregory, the sum of $10,000, in full compensation for property belonging to said James Craig, which was destroyed by British troops under Colonel Tarleton, in 1781, in consequence of its being in the use of the American Army.

It appears, from the report, that James Craig, a minister of the Gospel at the time of the war of the American Revolution, and residing in Lunenburg County, Virginia, was a lending, active, and distinguished patriot. Being a man of considerable property, he owned, with other species of it, common at that time to Virginia farmers, a very large milling establishment, located on a stream called Flat Rock creek. Said milling establishment consisted of a large saw manufacturing mill, a corn mill, and a fulling mill. There were also located near to these a house used for receiving grain, and a house used for dyeing cloth, and also a blacksmith's shop. During the progress of the war, this milling establishment became a place of deposit and storage for supplies of grain and provisions for the American troops. Mr. Craig himself being actively engaged in collecting said supplies, and aiding by every means in his power the patriot cause.

In the year 1781, the contest was transferred from one State, where it had been carried on with great animation, chiefly by the Virginia, in October of that year both the campaign and the war were closed by the brilliant and ever-memorable victory at Yorktown, in that State. But in the early part of the year the line of operations was greatly in the country around to Londonburg. And to meet the wants of the American troops, Parson Craig had collected at his mills, about the month of July, in the year 1781, a large quantity of grain and provisions, some from his own and some from his neighbors' stores. At that time the British officer, Colonel Tarleton, with a detachment of troops, being in that vicinity, and hearing of Parson Craig's activity and zeal as a patriot, and of the supplies which were in store at his mills for the use of the Americans, marched to his estate, took Mr. Craig himself prisoner, carried off a number of negroes, two of whom were never recovered, and burned and destroyed the whole, or nearly the whole, of the said establishment, with the supplies of grain, provisions, &c. The flour manufacturing mill, the corn grist mill, the cloth fulling mill, the house used to receive grain, and the blacksmith's shop, were all consumed and destroyed, with the contents of each, including implements, fixtures, tools, utensils, &c. That these ravages, and the imprisonment of Parson Craig himself, were all owing to his aiding the British army in the war, and to the fact that said mills were in the use of the American Army, or filled with supplies for their use, cannot admit of a reasonable doubt; and it would be just that his heirs should be compensated for the entire loss. But not to violate usage or transgress the principle clearly established in such cases, it has been determined to allow for nothing more than the property devoted to the use of the American troops at the time of its destruction, and destroyed on that account.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

KEDWARD JARVIS—AGAIN.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I want the committee to hear a word in reference to the case of Smith & Hunt, to which I desire it to recur.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no interest in this Private Calendar. I have never made a caption objection since my service commenced upon this floor. There is a bill upon the Calendar, for the relief of Dr. Jarvis, of which I know nothing, except from my examination of the bill and report. Mr. BURNETT. It is a just case, and objected to by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. PAVEN]. I understand that objection will be withdrawn if the bill be recurred to.

Mr. PRYOR. I will withdraw my objection to that bill. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor; and if a case is to be recurred to, the one stated by him must be first disposed of.

SMITH & HUNT.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The bill I refer to is House bill No. 317, for the relief of Smith & Hunt, of Toledo, Ohio. It is a case in which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WADE] takes a great deal of interest. I understand objection was made to the bill by the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman is mistaken. I did not object to the case he indicates; objection was made by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will hear the bill and report again read. I understand that the object of the bill is to pay $20,000 to this firm for freights and expenditures upon certain railroad iron.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the bill be laid aside, I will agree that there shall be a vote taken on it in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia object to taking up the case?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will not say that I will object to it. I want to hear a statement from the gentleman from Illinois.

There being no objection, the case was taken up again.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. My name appears as having reported this bill. It was reported, and I am, I think, the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. WADE. He takes a great interest in the case. He investigated it with great care. He has been called from the city by sickness in his family, and he has written here to ask that it be taken up and passed. I think that the case is one of very great interest. I understand that the gentleman will let it go into the House. If a separate vote is wanted upon it, I will not object.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I understand that this is a case for the payment of commissions for freights, &c., of which the claimants have been deprived by the action of the Government. It is a case appealing to the equity and justice of this House, and I trust that it will be passed.

Mr. BURNETT. I have examined this case with a great deal of care, and I do not agree with the gentleman from New York. I suggest, however, to my friend from Toledo, [Mr. CRAWFORD], to withdraw his objection, and to let the bill go to the House, with the understanding that it shall be voted on separately, upon the yeas and nays.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If that be the understanding, I will not object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That is my proposition.

The bill directs that there shall be paid to Smith & Hunt, of Toledo, Ohio, the sum of $296,90, being the amount paid by Smith & Hunt as freight and freights on the Toledo and Cleveland railroad in bond from New York city to Toledo, Ohio.

It appears from the report that during the years 1853 and 1854 the petitioners were storage, commission and forwarding merchants, resident and doing business at Toledo, in the State of Ohio, the same being the port of entry for the United States collection district of Miami. During the said years of 1853 and 1854, the petitioners, as such carriers and commission merchants, brought from New York city, under the provisions of the warehousing act, in bond for the payment of the duties thereon, to Toledo, four thousand tons of railroad iron, and paid freight, storage, &c., the charges thereon; the said iron having been imported into the port of New York for the Cincinnati, Logansport and Chicago Railroad Company. These charges, paid by the petitioners while the said iron was in bond, constituted a legal lien on said iron in favor of the petitioners, to the amount of $296,90, subject, however, to the prior lien of the United States for the payment of the import duties chargeable on said iron. While this railroad iron was in the legal custody and control of the petitioners at Toledo, as above stated, subject only to the paramount lien of the United States for the duties chargeable against the iron, the said railroad company was insolvent and unable to pay the duties due the Government on said iron, or to pay the duties thereon. The petitioners, on the same, and that this fact was fully made known by the petitioners to the then Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to House bill No. 317? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it understood that there shall be a separate vote upon it in the House? [“Yes.”] [“Yes!”] There is a report of the Secretary of the Treasury which I would like to have read.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will not call the previous question upon the bill in the House.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD JARVIS—AGAIN.

Mr. BURNETT. I now ask the unanimous consent of the committee to go back to the bill (No. 343) for the relief of Dr. Edward Jarvis, which was objected to by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAY.]

Mr. WALTON. The gentleman has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

HENRY EITING.

Mr. WINSLOW. I ask the consent of the committee that the act (S. No. 91) for the relief of Henry Eiting may be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. There was some misunderstanding about the matter. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES JAMES LANMAN—AGAIN.

Mr. WALTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to go back to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 340) for the relief of Charles James Lanman, which was objected to by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. PRYOR. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. NOELL. I do not object to the consideration of the bill; but I believe we are getting into a system of doing business which will embarrass us, and I give notice that after this I shall object to going back.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

ANTHONY W. BAYARD.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to go back and take up the bill (H. R. No. 315) for the relief of Anthony W. Bayard. It was objected to, and passed over; but the objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. CURRY. I object.

OLIVER HARRIS.

A bill (H. R. No. 347) for the relief of Oliver Harris.

The bill and report were read.

Mr. BURNETT. I must object, unless there can be some something from the Department to show that this man has an equitable case; and there is nothing in the report, or anywhere else, of that character, that I know of.

HANNIBAL GRAHAM.

A bill (H. R. No. 348) for the relief of Hannibal Graham. [Objected to by Mr. CRAWFORD.]

PETER ROBERTSON & SON.

A bill (H. R. No. 349) for the relief of Peter Robertson & Son, of St. John's, Newfoundland, owners of the British brig Jessie.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Peter Robertson & Son, owners of the British brig Jessie, for losses incurred by reason of the rescuing of the passengers and crew of the American ship Northumberland, in December, 1857, when in a sinking condition, and conveying them to Cork, Ireland, the sum of $7,598 75, or so much thereof as it may be necessary; provided the proper proportionate part thereof, according to the number of British subjects rescued, shall be paid by the British Government.

From the report, it appears that the British brig Jessie, the property of Peter Robertson & Son, of St. John's, Newfoundland, while on a non-fishing voyage in the month of December, 1857, fell in with the American packet ship Northumberland, in a foundering condition. That by great exertions and at personal risk, during a violent gale and heavy sea, the passengers and crew, consisting of more than sixty persons, some of whom were women and children, were transferred on board the Jessie, which was then necessarily put under way for Cork, Ireland. That the delay consequent thereon brought up the voyage, which was of a lucrative character, and entailed heavy expenditures upon her owners. That for these disbursements and contingent profits lost the proprietors of the Jessie believe themselves entitled to some compensation from this Government. The loss resulting from this humane conduct of the captain of the Jessie amounts to $7,598 75.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCIS HÜTTMANN.

An act (S. No. 78) for the relief of Francis Hüttmann.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust the claim of Francis Hüttmann for return of tonnage and light duties illegally exacted and paid by him on Persian, Danish, and German vessels as the port of San Francisco, California, and to pay him the amount due, with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from the date of the exaction of the duties. Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. This is a Senate bill, which comes to the House with no report. The facts are so simple that no report is necessary; and, with the consent of the committee, I will state that, in 1849, Hüttmann entered in the port of San Francisco four vessels—one a Danish schooner, one a Hamburg bark, one a Hamburg brig, and another a Peruvian bark—and paid duty upon them to the amount of $549. Tonnage dues are not exacted by our laws from vessels of those countries with which we have reciprocity treaties. These tonnage dues, with interest thereon, amount now to $900; and the purport of the bill is to refund that sum.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would ask the gentleman from New York whether those treaties were subsequent to the exaction of these dues, or prior thereto.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. They were prior thereto, and they continue up to the present time. The Department has recommended the repayment of the dues.

Mr. BURNETT. I move to amend the bill by inserting in the provision, that the amount shall not exceed $900. If that amendment is adopted, I shall not object to the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

TENCH TILGHMAN.

An act (S. No. 79) for the relief of Tench Tilghman.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Tench Tilghman, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, for losses sustained by him in consequence of his appointment to a consulate, which was abolished by the Spanish Government while he was on his way to take charge of the same.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. This bill is in the same position as the last one to which I called the attention of the committee. General Tench Tilghman, of Maryland, was appointed, in 1849, as consul to Mayaguez, Puerto Rico. While on his way, he was notified by the Government that the consulate had been suppressed. Our Government was not aware of it, until notified by the Spanish Government. Upon receiving that notification, they informed Mr. Tilghman of it. The object of this bill is to recompense him for his expenses upon that journey. These expenses have been recommended to be paid by two Secretaries of State. The Committee on Commerce asked for a bill particulars, and that bill amounted to $1,025, allowing only a reasonable rate of expenses.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Did he enter upon the discharge of his duties?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. He did not enter upon his duties; nor did he receive any compensation.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ARTHUR EDWARDS AND OTHERS.

A bill (H. R. No. 221) for the relief of Arthur Edwards and others.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been informed that, by order of the House, a Senate bill has been introduced for the House bill; and the question will be on the Senate bill.

The bill was read. It directs the Postmaster General to audit and settle the account of Arthur Edwards and his associates, for transporting the United States through mail in their steamers, during the years 1849 and 1853, and intervening years, from Cleveland, in Ohio, to Detroit, in Michigan, and from Detroit to Cleveland; from Sandusky, in Ohio, to Detroit, in Michigan, and from Detroit to Sandusky; and from Toledo, in Ohio, to Detroit, in Michigan, and from Detroit to Toledo; and to allow and pay them not less than $28 60 for each and every passage of the steamers between said places, during that time, when the mails were on board.

The report was read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I object to the bill. Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would say to the gentleman from Georgia that I have examined this case, and am satisfied the bill ought to pass.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will state my objection to the bill. I take it for granted—

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order for the gentleman to debate the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I examined this matter, and the bill ought to pass.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to say that I understand the bill to give extra compensation for carrying the mails from 1849 to 1853.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman is under a misapprehension.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I misunderstood the meaning of the report.

Mr. COLFAX. If there be no objection, I will state the facts of the case.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. COLFAX. Those men were carrying the local mails between Cleveland, Sandusky, Toledo, and Detroit, receiving therefor the pitiful sum of $2 25 per trip. They were also sometimes required to carry the through mails. They declined to do so, at first, on the ground that there was no appropriation made to pay them. The agent of the Post Office Department assured them that he was instructed by the Department to say, if they carried these through mails, they would be paid a reasonable compensation. Under this assurance they carried the through mails, often at great inconvenience. They frequently had to wait an hour and an hour and a half for the arrival of the mail trains, to receive the through western mail from them. When the matter was submitted to the Department, the only question was, how much they should be paid. General Cass, now Secretary of State, saw Mr. Campbell, the Postmaster General, on the subject. The Postmaster General promised to set it up, but upon a close measure of business the matter was overlaughed and neglected.

There is no question as to the service having been performed; no question as to its having been by authority. The evidence, which is voluminous, shows that sometimes they carried as much as one hundred and twenty-eight bags—over eight tons—of through mail matter; for all which, continued as it was for four years, they have not received a single cent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask the gentleman from Indiana how much is appropriated for the carrying of this mail?

Mr. COLFAX. Twenty-eight dollars and sixty cents for every time that they carried the through mail. The Postmaster General is to determine how many times that was. The mails were carried during the season of navigation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. How long is that?

Mr. COLFAX. About six months.

Mr. STEVENSON. Why has payment been denied so long?

Mr. COLFAX. It was delayed by Postmaster General Campbell, who told General Cass that he would have the account examined and settled; but it was overlaughed and not paid, and the present Postmaster General cannot now pay it, as it occurred under a former administration, unless Congress should ratify it. The bill was unanimously reported by the Senate Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; it was passed unanimously by the Senate; and it has been unanimously reported by the Post Office Committee of this House.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. It is the cheapest mail service that has been ever rendered in this country.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have examined the bill, and believe it ought to be passed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I withdraw my objection; and I pledge myself to make no further objection.

because of the fact that members appeal to me to withdraw objections, and they make it a personal matter.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that all these appeals are entirely out of order; and the Chair has made every effort to suppress them. No member of the committee has a right to call upon another member, who may have objected, to give a reason for his objection. It is out of order, and a breach of the rules of the House. The Chair has done all he could do to suppress it. Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Does the Chair say that one member of the committee may not, by unanimous consent, appeal to another member?

THE CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. COLFAX. I beg pardon of the gentleman from Georgia. I only desired to state the facts for the information of the committee; and I understood distinctly from him that he was willing to hear them. If I objected, and a member satisfied me that the bill was a just one, I should cheerfully withdraw my objection.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no reference to the gentleman from Indiana, because he was proceeding by the express permission of the committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We have to allow discussion under pressure, and contrary to the rules of the House.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to know how much money this bill appropriates?

Mr. COLFAX. It allows $28 for each trip. The trips were for four years. They were performed by the authority and sanction of the Post Office Department. It is a reasonable amount; and my impression is that it ought to be higher. As to what the aggregate amount will be, I have not calculated.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee, while I call out an additional answer from the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will be heard. There was no objection. Mr. BURNETT. The first objection to this bill is its vague and indefinite character. It proposes to give to mail contractors for extra services—the gentleman from Georgia was right when he so stated it—from 1849 to 1853, as much per trip. Neither in the bill nor report is the time stated that it took to make these trips, the number of trips made, nor the amount of money to be drawn from the public Treasury.

But the gentleman from Georgia is applied to to withdraw his objection; and we are called upon here, by unanimous consent to permit the bill to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass, while it neither fixes the amount to be paid, nor the number of trips made, and while it does not have a single recommendation from the Post Office Department that the bill ought to pass—not one so far as we have it before us. Now I say to gentlemen that they may appeal to me; and when I make an objection here, if the objection be based on merits, I will not withdraw it for any appeal. Believing that the bill is wrong, I do object to it.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

ALLEN L. PORTER.

A bill (H. R. No. 351) for the relief of Allen L. Porter. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

SCOTT, HOUSE, AND HOUSE.

A bill (S. No. 22) for the relief of John Scott, Hill W. House, and Samuel O. House. [Objected to by Mr. KILGORE, of Michigan.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is now three o'clock, and we have a bill to vote upon in the House by yeas and nays. I move, therefore, that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GARTRELL demanded tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. GARTRELL and SCHWARTZ were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—yeas seventy-one, nays not counted. The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS PASSED.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BRAXTON reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had the Private Calendar under consideration, under the 30th rule of the House, and had instructed him to report back the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 312) granting a pension to Abraham Crum;
A bill (H. R. No. 314) for the relief of Emma A. Wood, widow of the late Brevet Major George W. P. Wood, of the United States Army, with an amendment;

A bill (H. R. No. 319) granting a pension to Major John P. Hunter;
A bill (H. R. No. 318) for the relief of Andrew E. Marshall, with an amendment;

A bill (H. R. No. 320) for the relief of the heirs of Rev. James Craig, deceased;
A bill (H. R. No. 342) for the relief of James Phelps;

A bill (H. R. No. 344) for the relief of the legal representatives of Sylvester Day, late a surgeon in the United States Army;

A bill (C. C. No. 91) for the relief of Thomas Fillebrown;

A bill (H. R. No. 346) for the relief of the legal representatives of P. P. Hall, deceased;

A bill (H. R. No. 349) for the relief of Peter Rogers and Sons, of St. John's, Newfoundland, owners of the British brig Jessie;

An act (S. No. 78) for the relief of Francis Huttman, with an amendment;

An act (S. No. 79) for the relief of Tench Tilgham, of Toledo, Ohio.

A bill (H. R. No. 317) for the relief of Smith & Hunt, of Toledo, Ohio.

THE SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the bills will be voted on en masse, excepting House bill No. 317, on which a separate vote is desired. There was no objection.

The amendments were then agreed to; the House bills were engrossed, and then the bills were read the third time, and passed.

SMITH & HUNT.

A bill (H. R. No. 317) for the relief of Smith & Hunt, of Toledo, Ohio, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask the yeas and nays on that bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. They were ordered. It was the unanimous understanding in committee that they should be taken. It was also understood that a brief statement of the case, pro and con, should be presented for the consideration of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not propose to call the previous question.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I think that the friends of the bill should present it in its most engaging aspect, and those who dissent from the view thus presented will, of course, present the opposite views. I give way, therefore, to the gentleman from Illinois to give the reasons why the House should pass the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I do not want to state any further reason than is stated in the report. I will say to the House, however, that Mr. WASH, who has served in this House many years, and who is known to be one of the most careful men, and best lawyers in the House, has given this case a very attentive consideration. The report, which is here under my name, was made by him, and I think the case fairly stated in it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire, my very briefly, to make a statement for the consideration of the House.

Mr. TAPPAN. Will the gentleman give way one moment? Are there not some other bills that are not counted?

THE SPEAKER. This is the only bill undisposed of.

Mr. TAPPAN. I move to reconsider.

JAMES CRAIG'S HEIRS—AGAIN.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to inquire about bill No. 320, for the relief of the heirs of Rev. James Craig, deceased. It was objected to, and there was an agreement that the yeas and nays should be called. That cannot be one of the bills that has been passed. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FARNSWORTH) objected, but afterwards withdrew his objection, on the condition that the vote would be taken by yeas and nays in the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If required.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. With the permission of the House, I will state that I was instrumental in getting Mr. FARNSWORTH to withdraw his objection. The remark which he made to the committee was to this effect, that he desired the privilege of demanding a vote upon the bill, and of making a division, which he should not pass. Mr. FARNSWORTH is not now in the House; and I make this statement in the hearing of his friends, that they may do the same for him as he would perhaps do if he were present.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to say one word in explanation of the position which I took in the House.

THE SPEAKER. The bill was passed. Mr. BURNETT. Then it was passed by mistake, and I shall be compelled to move to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. There was an express agreement, and I so marked on the Calendar, that on this bill the yeas and nays should be called.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that course should be taken. The vote will be regarded as reconsidered. The question will be on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. CURRY. When that bill was before the Committee of the Whole House, I offered an amendment to it, which was adopted. Subsequently to the adoption of my amendment, the gentleman from Illinois objected to the bill. Afterwards, while I was sitting at my desk, the bill was called up again, and laid aside, to be reported without amendment. I think that unanimous consent might be given to having the amendment offered here.

THE SPEAKER. If there be unanimous consent, the amendment may be considered.

There being no objection, the amendment was offered, and agreed to, as follows:

Provided, however, That the money hereto appropriated shall be paid to the heirs of said James Craig, in person, or to such agent or attorney of said heirs as shall appear to the accounting officer of the Treasury to be in no way interested in the same, or any part thereof.

The bill was then engrossed, and read the third time.

Mr. BURNETT. I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation the bill was passed.

Mr. TAPPAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House was passed; and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. STANTON. I think the House that it is hardly proper that that should be done. If by any accident it should be discovered that any bill has been improperly passed, we ought to be able to correct it.

Mr. TAPPAN. I believe it is understood that they are all right now.

Mr. STANTON. That may be, but I cannot see the necessity for the motion.

THE SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire waive his motion?

Mr. TAPPAN. Yes, sir; I am willing to waive it. My object was to have the bills disposed of.

SMITH & HUNT—AGAIN.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill for the relief of Smith & Hunt, of Toledo, Ohio.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I really have no feeling of repugnance to this bill, and I propose to occupy not more than five or six minutes upon it; and then I will leave it with great good temper to the judgment of the House.

I understood the facts of this case to be these: A certain railroad company in one of the western States—I do not remember which now, but I think Ohio or Illinois—imported four thousand tons of railroad iron. The iron was shipped by their order to a house in Toledo, this house of Smith & Hunt—I do not know if Mr. Smith is any kinsman of mine, but he is a very clever gentleman. The goods were brought to Toledo at their expense and charge, and were there bonded, in conformity to our revenue laws, to the Government of the United States for its duties. While they remained there in that position, the railroad company, desiring to use the iron at another place, and not being prepared to pay their duties, directed it to be shipped to a place upon the Ohio river, and under the ice, as then existing, and as now existing, the goods were landed for that place. The company, in the mean time, while the goods were in transit, managed to get hold of them in violation of all the duties it owed to its contract and engagements, and it was the iron upon the road. The Government of the United States sent an agent to assert its right to the goods for the payment of the duties, and they recovered possession of the iron, and the duties were paid. In the mean time, there was a subordination on the part of Smith & Hunt, and the expenses which they had paid upon the shipment of the iron from New York to Toledo, and the question is about those expenses, amounting to about nine thousand dollars.

Now, why should the Government of the United States be made responsible for this claim? No one pretends that the Government of the United States, in all its action in connection with this subject, did anything more than assert its unquestioned legal right. The United States had a right to their lien upon these goods for the duties, and they asserted that right. They asserted that right, and ultimately received the amount that was due them—no more, and no less. It so happens, however, that in consequence of these conflicting liens, this particular commission house, which was making a profit out of the transaction, failed to secure their lien upon the goods, and in consequence of the possession of the railroad company, and as to their claim, I suppose, coming under another obligation, they thus losing possession of the goods. But they did not lose possession of the goods. I want gentlemen to understand, by my fault of the United States, and the whole question for this House is, shall the United States make good the bill of the commission house for costs and charges paid by that house, for which the United States were in no sense whatever, in the slightest degree, responsible.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I desire to see if I understand this case. I understand this railroad iron to have been shipped from Europe to Toledo, Ohio, and there bonded, and in the possession of these warehousemen, and the gentleman to say that the revenue laws allowed the railroad company to have it ordered by the United States to Evansville, Indiana, or some other place, where it might be bonded; that the United States did order the iron out of the hands of Smith & Hunt; and that the bonds of Evansville, by a trick of the railroad company, it was stopped in transit, and thereby these men lost their iron. Are those the facts?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman will understand that the goods in Toledo were under bonds to answer the demand of the United States, the duties to be paid under those bonds whenever the goods were consumed by the railroad company. Under the law they had a right to have them transferred to another port. The company, in obedience to the law, regulating such questions, and in conformity with their unquestioned right, directed the public agent at Toledo to ship these goods to Evansville, in Indiana. They gave bonds to answer the demands of the United States at that point, and the goods accordingly, as the United States was bonded to be shipped. It is true, that on the way the company, by a trick, got possession of the iron; but it was by a trick which the United States were not a party. They had nothing to do with it. The company complied with the law, and the United States complied with the law. The goods were bonded and shipped to Evansville, Indiana, and, on the route, the company managed in some way to get possession of them. But it was no fault of the United States. It was no fault of these gentlemen either, it may be; but the company stopped the goods in transit, and the goods were lost. They did not want the goods at Evansville, but at Logansport, where their road commenced.

Now, that being the case, I ask what fault the Government of the United States committed which should subject it to this demand? Do you mean to say that the Government of the United States is to embarrass itself by the private contracts of individuals? Do you mean to say that the Government should become responsible for goods brought and bonded to the United States? You do so as if you make the Government responsible for the amount. There is no escape from it, wherever there are these ports of entry; and I am sorry to see a disposition here to extend the system. The other day, Macon, in Georgia, was made a port of entry.

Mr. GARRELL, Only temporarily.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Now, then, that being the state of the case, I ask what merit there is in it? Why, sir, as I said, a bill was passed the other day sinking Macon, in Georgia, a port of entry. Well, if the Government enters upon the system of making these interior towns ports of entry, and Macon, and if the principle upon which this bill is based is to be recognized, there is no telling the amount which the Government will be called on to pay in the shape of damages.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Were these claimants the owners of the warehouse at Toledo, or how do they claim their share? Were they merely the consignees of the iron, or were they the agents of the Government for warehousing the iron?

Mr. PETTIT. They were both.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Yes, sir; they were commission agents at Toledo. They had the iron transported to Toledo, and there received it, as consignment, into their warehouse; which, for that purpose, became a bonded warehouse of the Government.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. What I wanted to inquire was, whether the Government owned the warehouse, or whether it was merely the private warehouse of these parties?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It was their private warehouse.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Then the whole case is a matter of private contract, and has no more in it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have now presented the facts of this case substantially as I understand them. I repeat, that if I have not understood the facts, the Government of the United States has committed no wrong, yet it has done nothing that is not in conformity to law. Mr. Guthrie was Secretary of the Treasury at the time. He understood the law and his duty, I take it for granted, as well as any man here; and he sought to enforce the law to all the stages of the route. I repeat, that the Government of the United States has proceeded strictly in conformity to the law in every particular; and it is not even alleged that it has not done so.

Mr. MAYNARD. Before the gentleman from Virginia takes his seat, I wish to ask whether there could be a claim, in fact, sustained any actual loss in this transaction?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I think they have. As far as I am informed, the law failed thus far to collect their costs and charges on the iron.

Mr. MAYNARD. Then, is it not incumbent on the Government to reimburse them?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That brings me to the consideration of the question which the gentleman suggests. The question I ask is, whether these parties have not a substantial demand upon the railroad company? They have such a demand. Nobody questions that. On the contrary, they have brought a suit in Toledo, and recovered the costs and the charges they had paid on account of their importing this iron. I say, they have recovered a judgment against the company; but was not the judgment, in this case, that the claimant was negligent, as I understand—utterly incompetent? But is that an answer to the question why Uncle Sam should foot the bill?

Mr. COX. It is a question of equity.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Ohio, if, because these parties fail in enforcing their claim against the railroad company, that is a sufficient reason why they should come to the Government of the United States and ask us to appropriate a sum sufficient to reimburse them? For it comes to that, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that these parties come here, and, without any pretense, have done nothing that is not in conformity to law. These petitioners have a private demand on this railroad company for the money they had advanced, but which they have not collected because of the insolvency of the company, and they now come here, and, without any pretense, peaching the good faith of the Government in any particular, demand that their losses shall be made up to them. I say there is no law, nor is there any equity, to sustain the claim, and it involves principles which are dangerous and alarming for the country.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, obtained the floor

Mr. PETTIT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me, for the purpose of making a statement of the facts connected with this claim to the House. Mr. WASHINGTON, of Illinois, then said: I have wished to hear any further statement in reference to the facts of this case, I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia has, in the main, made a correct statement of the facts of this case. I follow him; but his statement embraces some errors which, perhaps, I can correct more conveniently by referring to the prominent facts of the transaction.

It is hardly necessary to say that this was British iron. It came to New York to the care of Smith & Hunt as consignees, and was sent to the railroad company. They laid, therefore, from the beginning, a possessory right over the property. Under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in pursuance of the course which is pursued under the warehousing system, Smith & Hunt, having received the iron, caused it to be transported to the Port of Toledo. This was a recognition of their right to direct the transmission of it from one warehousing depot to another. Now I beg the House to consider that the possession of the iron continued with them up to this time. They had their right of possession, and they were to retain it until its arrival at Toledo where they acquired a new right. The Government had no warehouse at Toledo. It became necessary to provide a private warehouse. Smith & Hunt had a warehouse at Toledo; and the gentleman suggested that to store the iron in their warehouse, receiving their receipt for it, they binding themselves by the act to stand responsible to the Government for the duties due on the iron. Here was a second right of possession over the iron—a double right; first as consignees for their advancement of charges, which entitled them to possession; and next, by the possession given them by the Government.

The railroad company had no control over this matter; and whenever it was subject to be removed, it was not on order of the railroad company; or it was upon their order, and at all steps in the process, having obtained the consent of Smith & Hunt as consignees; and as they were acting in the character of consignees and bailees, they were entitled to have the first satisfaction for the advances which they had made upon it, before they could be called upon to satisfy the claims of other parties but the Government. I believe I am correct so far in stating the facts of the case.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have only to say that the facts, as stated by me, are not controverted in the report, nor even by the parties themselves. The iron came into their possession, and if they had rights above those of the United States, I ask why it is that they did not avail themselves of their rights? If they lost their claim through their own negligence, they ought not to come here for redress.

Mr. PETTIT. I have stated the facts just as they exist in the report. Before the iron had reached Toledo, this railroad company was notoriously bankrupt, and the Secretary of the Treasury was notified of that fact. The stock of the company was worth nothing, and it was at that step in the process of the work was being made at that time. But it became desirable that those persons who stood in the position of bondholders should obtain possession of the iron, as security for their own payment, without the necessity of paying the claims of Smith & Hunt for costs and charges, for which they had a lien upon the iron; and the sequel of the transaction was only the execution of that purpose. A person affecting to have connection with this company made application to the Secretary of the Treasury to have the iron removed from the bonded warehouse, to the place of its new destination. The warehouse was situated of Lake Erie, to Evansville, in the southwest part of Indiana. Sir, it ought to have been within the knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury, if it were not, that when he was asked to transfer this iron to the bonded warehouse, the point is its new destination. The warehouse was three hundred miles from any point of this road; almost twice as far as the port of Toledo. Such a request was enough to arouse suspicion.

Mr. HOARD. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to what the report of the Treasury says in this respect. He says:

"The law gave the latter the option to enter the iron for consumption at Toledo and pay the duties there, or to enter to transportation in bond to some other port, and carry it away from Toledo. But the Department has said that the company intended to do this. It is a matter as to how to take away the lien of Smith & Hunt, and has no power to prevent them from transporting the iron from the port of Toledo to another port, in giving the requisition by the regulations under the warehouse laws."

Mr. PETTIT. I submit that that is not a correct interpretation of the law.

Mr. HOARD. It is the interpretation of the present Secretary of the Treasury upon the rights of the parties.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That is the test. I want the gentleman from Indiana to make this plain. If he does it, I will be glad to see the bill passed. Had these gentlemen, Smith & Hunt, superior rights to those of the United States?

Mr. PETTIT. Smith & Hunt's right was one of possession, consented to both by the railroad company and by the Government, confirmed equitably by large advances of money which they had made, which established a lien everywhere allowed, and which made their possession absolutely against the railroad company, until their charges were paid. The United States had but one right, and that was to demand that its duties should be paid. Beyond that, it had no right. It had no right of possession, except as accessory to this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with a distinct knowledge on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury that this company was insolvent, with the knowledge that there was a purpose of diverting this iron and diverting that lien, the order was made which did this large injury to Smith & Hunt, when they were present protesting against the act and ordering to the Government the full amount of its duties. I repeat, that Smith & Hunt tendered to the Government, for the purpose of saving their lien, the full amount of its duties.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask this question to the gentleman. He said, in his opening remarks, that these men had a double lien upon this property. I want him to tell us why, if they had equal or superior rights, they could not have asserted their lien?

Mr. PETTIT. If the gentleman will hear me through, I will reply to the point he has made, and will show why that second right, derived from the Government itself, was one which the Government could not defeat until first Smith & Hunt were put in that position where they got all their own. But I wish to go on and state these facts.

Mr. STEVENSON. Where was that money tendered, and why was it refused?

Mr. PETTIT. I will answer the gentleman. It was tendered to the collector of Toledo, in his office in the city of Toledo, and the Government here was notified that fact.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like the gentleman to tell me whether the transfer of the iron from Toledo to Evansville, or the order of transfer, was protested against at the time by these claimants?

Mr. PETTIT, of Virginia. No, sir, it was not.

Mr. GOCHIL. I object to interruptions of the gentleman's speech, until after he makes all his statements. If he is allowed to proceed without interruption, he will make a statement, probably, that some of us can understand. That will not be the case if twenty or more men are allowed to interrupt him at every step.

Mr. PETTIT. I will avoid being interrupted hereafter. But it is most convenient here to answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee. [Mr. MAYNARD.] The question is as to whether these parties did any act in the character of a protest against the removal of this iron from their possession. Smith & Hunt, as shown by this report, did protest against it in terms; and, in addition, attempted to protect their rights by the intervention of the courts of Ohio but, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, the United States district attorney, supported by the marshal and a posse, entered their private warehouse and took possession of this iron and gave it into possession of the agent of this railroad company. Have I answered the gentleman from Tennessee?

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look at what was occurring at the time, for it was not all accomplished in a few days; the transportation of this iron having dragged on many days, as it was moved forward, in small parcels, by canal boats. The Secretary of the Treasury, at the moment, absent from Washington. The shipment of this iron, according to the shipping bills, did not contemplate that it should go further than Loganport, less than one hundred and fifty miles from Toledo. It came to the knowledge of the collector at Toledo. The shipment of the iron was made in the way at Loganport, and was diverted from that point, and was being laid down upon the road, and he communicated the fact at once to the Department of the Treasury, at Washington. The acting Secretary of the Treasury here in Toledo, and for the removal of the lien of the iron, Mr. Guthrie was at Louisville. The agent of the railroad company went to Louisville, and obtained from him there an order countermanding and subverting the order of the acting Secretary here. In pursuance of that order countermanding the order of the acting Secretary, this property, by the violent act of the officers of the United States, was removed from the possession of Smith & Hunt.

I have said that Smith & Hunt, at the time of receiving this iron in Toledo, besides the possessory right belonging to them as consignees, derived an additional right, from the fact that they became, by the Government's consent, the private warehousemen of the Government, and executed to the Government their receipts for this iron. It is a legal consequence of this fact that it was not the duty of the Government to remove this property by the violent and arbitrary action of its officers. This is the reason why, in answer to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH.] I have called attention to this point. So that the wrongful action of the Government in its official order which diverted the control of this property from Smith & Hunt and impaired and destroyed their lien, and the act of violence by which it was seized from their possession, are alike undefeatable.

Mr. STANTON. There is one fact which I wish to inquire about, and which will be no conclusion. I want to know by what authority this property was taken out of the possession of Smith & Hunt? Was it by order of the Secretary of the Treasury, by the United States marshal, or by the party which claimed it?

Mr. PETTIT. It was done by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, made at Louisville, countermanding the order made by the acting Secretary of the Treasury at Washington; and then the possession of the iron was put by force, through the instrumentality of the United States marshal, into the hands of the Government.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for the previous question.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I want to say a word or two, and I hope the call for the previous question will be withdrawn.

Mr. PETTIT, of Illinois. Having an hour after the debate is closed, I will yield a part of my time to the gentleman.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word in justification of the vote I propose to cast upon this bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman a portion of my time for that purpose.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I examined this question at the last Congress very carefully, and it was fully of the impression then that these applicants, Smith & Hunt, should be remunerated. I have now a general recollection of the facts, and upon that general recollection I have pronounced my opinion and voted thus far, and propose now to do hereafter. My recollection is to this effect: That Smith & Hunt had a lien as special warehousemen. Whether they had assignments, or not, is immaterial to the question, in my judgment. It would strengthen their claim, to be sure, but the Government is not simple to sustain this case. The goods were entered at the port of New York. They were entered for this railroad company. They were transported under the warehouse act from New York to Toledo, a port of delivery. They were put in bond; and when they were withdrawn from the duties were obliged to be paid to the Government. Smith & Hunt were the special bonded warehousemen. They asserted that they had a lien for their warehouse dues. The Government asserted that it had a lien for its duties. As warehousemen, they undoubtedly could claim a lien for a certain amount of duties to the Government; those assigned, or they who entered the goods at the port of New York, alone having that power. The lien, therefore, of the Government of the United States was at that time, as it always must be, in order to allow the Government to perform its functions, superior to the lien of any individuals, in whatever capacity they may be, and which

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Do I understand that this claim is simply for warehouse dues?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. For the charges that accrued to Smith & Hunt, and for which charges they professed to hold a lien, and to which charges they undoubtedly did hold a lien as against everybody except the United States.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. When they became, by their own consent, the owners of a warehouse, did they not convert the goods into the warehouse free from all that lien?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. No, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to ask the gentleman—

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I cannot yield now. I am merely stating these facts in defense of my own vote; and after I have finished, I will answer the gentleman's questions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the gentleman says that the Government of the United States had a superior lien. Now, does he hold that an individual lien is superior to the lien of the Government? Is the superior lien before he can take the property to satisfy his own lien?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. As an abstract question of law, the gentleman from Georgia is right; but if he will listen to what I have to say, he will understand that this proposition, as an equitable proposition, is equally as clear as the legal one which he has proposed for my consideration, namely: that if the Government possessed a lien, and used that lien designedly for the destruction of individual property, that Government should, by all rules, be obliged to compensate for the injury which it does.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman say that the Government did this thing designedly?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I must proceed with my statement of the facts of this case; which facts are necessary for a proper understanding of this case by the House. In reference to these custom-house laws, the laws of the land require reform, and demand reform, for they are oppressive and unjust to the people, and have caused great injuries done by the operation of these custom-house laws. Under this warehouse law, and the regulations of the Department which depend upon it, is it that the Government is authorized, in parts where there are no ports of delivery, to transport goods, and to make constructive warehouses along the route. And so all along the line of this railroad the Department were authorized to, and did, make constructive warehouses; so that, in fact, an ambulatory warehouse was all along the route of this railroad, and there were no laws of the company required that it should be created.

And thus it was, in passing this railroad iron from Toledo to Evansville and elsewhere, that the railroad iron was secured by the company itself and laid down upon the rail, and at the time it became a constructive warehouse along the route, these gentlemen here claiming relief was destroyed, even after the lien of the Government was destroyed by the payment of duties to the Government. I say this: that under the administration of the warehouse law, the Department unwarrantably creates these constructive warehouses along the route, and having done so in this instance, furnished an instrument in the hands of these bondholders, or the corporators of this railroad company, by which, having discharged the lien of the Government for their duties by the payment of them, they were enabled to make claims for the injury done by spiking the rails upon the road. This is the wrong done in this case. Therefore it was that I gave my assent to this bill; and although the lien of the Government is first in order, and should be discharged according to the laws of the land, yet that lien has been seen to be a constructive warehouse, and the Government having indicted a wrong, it should remedy that wrong.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Did not these gentlemen—Smith & Hunt—have such a lien upon the iron as to give them the right to pay the duties, in order to protect themselves?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. No, sir. If they had that right and did not avail themselves of it, they would be no redress here.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. It would seem that they had the right, by making a tender to the Government; and when they did that, their rights were superior to those of the Government; and when the Government, by its power, by its political force, took the iron from their hands, punishment, the Government became, not only equitable, but legally, liable to pay their bills. I understand these gentlemen did tender to the collector at Toledo the amount of duties due to the Government on the iron. They were the assignees; they were legally they had an interest in this iron; and they had the right, in order to protect themselves, to make a tender to the Government. They did so so; and from that time, it seems to me, that their rights were paramount to the rights of the Government.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. If the facts assumed by the gentleman from Maine be correct, there can be no doubt at all about this question; for in that case, the tender of the amount of the lien would be a discharge of the lien. But in this case, Smith & Hunt were not the persons who carried the goods in the port of New York; they were entered in the names of other persons, and these men were only special warehousemen.

Then, if that be right, the position which I originally took is the one which now presents itself to my consideration: whether the Government, having injuriously administered its right of lien, and its power over this merchandise, so that the apparent and legitimate lien of other parties was injured, should not in equity be held responsible for the loss sustained thereby.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on its passage,
Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I have agreed that the yeas and nays shall be called on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. I propose to the gentleman to let the vote first be taken by division, without calling the yeas and nays. Then, if any gentleman who can, we can have the yeas and nays.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Very well. The question was taken by division, and the Speaker declared that the "yeas" had it.

Mr. BURNETT. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 48; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Adams, Aldrich, Allen, Ashley, Balch, Bangs, Barlow, Brainerd, Briggs, Bullfinch, Burck, Butterfield, Carter, John C. Calhoun, Colla, Cowley, Cox, James Craig, Curry, Deland, Duell, Dunn, Edgerly, Edwards, Elliot, Fly, Ferry, Ferguson, Foster, Frank, Gresham, Hale, Hall, Hattin, Hendrick, Howard, Hughes, Huclien, Francis W. Johnson, William Kellogg, DeWitt C. Leach, Loomis, Marston, Charles D. Rice, Maynard, McKelzie, Myers, Moorhead, Merrill, Moore, Nelson, Reed, Pettit, Potter, Potter, Postle, Rieker, Christopher Robinson, Royce, Schwartz, Scott, Sherman, Spalding, Spenser, Stanton, Ross, Tappan, Thayer, Young, Van, Trumbull, Van Wyck, Walden, Wallcut, Townsend, Washburn, Edwin B. Washburn, Tarant Washburn, Thomas Wells, Wilson, Windom, Woodruff, and Woodson—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Thomas L. Anderson, Ashmore, Branch, Briggs, Burdett, Burch, John C. Calhoun, Chandler, Conkling, Cory, Edmundson, Garrett, Garrett, Gilman, Hamilton, John T. Harris, Hindman, Howard, Hutcheson, James, Joseph, Jackson, Jones, Leach, Leach, Mallory, Elbert B. Martin, McVernard, Milson, Montgomery, Lohan T. Moore, Steadman, Stone, Niblack, Smith, Smith, George S. Rogers, James W. Rogers, William Smith, Stratford, Stevens, Stevenson, Stokes, Thomas, Underwood, and Vance—48.

So the bill was passed.

During the vote.
Mr. ASHMORE stated that Mr. KERR was paired off with Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. BENHAM with Mr. OLIN.

Mr. BRANCH said: I ought to state that Mr. BURLINGAME was called out of the House to-day, and I agreed to pair with him on all questions, in a political character that might come up. Not considering this question a political one, I have voted myself. But I ought to make this statement in justice to Mr. BURLINGAME. It is on political questions that we are paired.

Mr. CRAWFORD stated that Mr. FARNSWORTH having been called away from the Hall on some necessary business, had asked him to pair off with him. That was the reason why [Mr. CRAWFORD] did not vote on this bill. If he had voted he should have voted "no."

Mr. CURTIS said: I have paired off on political questions. I do not know whether this is a motion or a matter of Mr. Hays, to print it was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DUNN stated that Mr. KILGORE was paired off with Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. VAN WYCK stated that Mr. GRAHAM was paired with Mr. DANIEL.

Mr. FRANK stated that Mr. KENYON was paired.

Mr. OLIN moved to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. BRANCH. I object. This is on the passage of a bill, and the names should be read.

The vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. THEAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that he had examined and found truly enrolled, bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (C. C. No. 12) for the relief of Moses Noble;

An act (C. C. No. 82) for the relief of Charles T. Scenic, administrator of Gilbert Stalker;

An act (C. C. No. 92) for the relief of Mariano G. Vallejo;

An act (C. C. No. 93) for the relief of Lydia Frazer, widow and administratrix of John Frazer, late of the city of New York;

An act (C. C. No. 96) for the relief of William Geiger; and

An act (H. R. No. 243) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. James Buchanan, his Private Secretary, informing the House that he had approved and signed an act for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York; and a joint resolution constituting Macon, Georgia, a port of entry for the time being, for the purposes therein specified, and for other purposes.

JOHN SONDLERS.

Mr. GARTRELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw his motion for an instant.

Mr. GARTRELL. I will do so.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. There was a private bill before us yesterday (H. R. No. 312) granting a pension to John Sondler, and I objected to it. With a view to correct, if possible, the injustice I then perpetrated, I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of that bill, and to have it put upon its passage.

Mr. BURNETT. I do not recollect the case; but the gentleman ought not to have objected unless he had good reason for his objection; and if he had, he certainly ought not to come back now and ask to have the committee discharged.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I misunderstood the case.

Mr. GARTRELL. I renew my motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at twelve o'clock and fifteen minutes, p. m.) the House adjourned till Monday.

IN SENATE.

Monday, April 9, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. CUMLEY.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of Captain W. B. Franklin, in charge of the Capitol extension, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, on the feasibility and expense of moving the Senate Chamber from its present position, so that it will take in the windows on the north end or east or west side of the Capitol; which was ordered to lie on the table, and a motion of Mr. Hays, to print it was referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a letter of the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, the papers in the case of Augustus Steele; which was ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 313) granting a pension to Abraham Crum;

A bill (No. 314) for the relief of Emma A. Wood, widow of the late Brevet Major George W. F. Wood, of the United States Army;

A bill (No. 319) granting a pension to Major John F. Hunter;

A bill (No. 318) for the relief of Andrew E. Marshall;

A bill (No. 320) for the relief of the heirs of Rev. James Craig, deceased;

A bill (No. 342) for the relief of James Phelan;

A bill (No. 344) for the relief of the legal representatives of Sylvester Day, late a surgeon in the United States Army;

A bill (No. 346) for the relief of the legal representatives of P. H. Hall, deceased;

A bill (No. 348) for the relief of Peter Rogerson & Son, of St. John's, Newfoundland, owners of the British brig Jessie; and

A bill (No. 317) for the relief of Smith & Hunt, of Toledo, Ohio.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 78) for the relief of Francis Huttonsman, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

Also, that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate:

A bill (No. 89) for the relief of Tench Tilghman;

A bill (No. 126) for the relief of Thomas Fillebrown.

The message further announced that the House had ordered, on Saturday last, the 7th instant, at twelve o'clock and for the purpose, the printing of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House called for a memoir and charts of Mississippi sound, and for information relative to appropriations for naval and military defenses of the Gulf coast of Mississippi.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BROWN. I received from Dr. Charles B. New, of Mississippi, a series of resolutions which he represents to have passed and been adopted by a convention held at Nashville, on the 10th of October, 1859. Dr. New was a prominent member of that body. The convention was called for the purpose of taking into consideration the grievances of southern planters, especially the navigation of the Mississippi river, and the proper means for preventing the overflows that annually occur on that stream. Dr. New requests me to have these resolutions referred to a select committee.

I must decide complying with that request, and ask the Senate to receive the resolutions and communication, and I move to refer them to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZPATRICK presented the petition of Archibald G. Campbell, praying to be allowed to enter the northwest quarter of section thirty, in township eighteen, range nineteen, in the old Cahawba, now the Greenville, land district, in the State of Alabama, at $1 25 per acre, or to take it up in a survey land warrants, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of members of the Senate of Pennsylvania, praying that a pension be granted to Mrs. Mary Bennett, widow of Captain Charles W. Bennett, late of the revenue service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWARD presented testimonials in favor of Captain George C. Stouffer, of the ship Antares, for his gallant conduct in rescuing the officers and soldiers of the Army and other passengers from the sinking steamer San Francisco, in 1854; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Nathan Wilkins and others, praying that the heirs of the militia of the Indian war, and of the war of 1812, may be placed on the same footing in regard to bounty paid as those who served in the war with Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a communication from Grinnell, Munroe & Co. and others, praying the amendment of "An Act to limit the liability of ship-owners, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1851; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of James A. Galloway and Lewis Kent, praying that pensions may be allowed the soldiers of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Francis Bates and others, praying that pensions be allowed to the survivors of the militia of the war of 1812, who served fourteen days, or were actually engaged in battle, and to the widows of those who have died or may hereafter die; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON presented a petition of Amory L. Babcock and others, citizens of Sherborn, Massachusetts, and the petition of Noah Field and others, citizens of Weymouth, Massachusetts, praying the repeal of the fugitive slave law of 1850, the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia and in the United States Territory, the prohibition of the inter-State trade, and the passage of a resolution pledging Congress against the admission of any slave State into the Union, the acquisition of any slave Territory, and the employment of any slave by any agent, contractor, officer, or Department of the Federal Government; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FITCH, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of Captain W. B. Franklin, in charge of the Capitol extension, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, on the feasibility and expense of moving the Senate Chamber from its present position, so that it will take in the windows on the north end, and side of the Capitol, reported in favor of printing the usual number; and the report was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print the message of the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, the correspondence between the judges of Utah and the Attorney General, with reference to the legal proceedings and condition of affairs in that Territory, reported in favor of printing the usual number; and the report was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred papers in relation to the claim of Stephen Bunnell, a quartermaster's sergeant in the war of 1812, to a pension, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 220) for the relief of Anson Dart, reported it without amendment.

Mr. LANE, The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 145) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the completion of the geographical survey of Oregon and Washington Territories, have directed me to report it without amendment. I ask that the papers accompanying the bill be printed.

The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the papers were ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the memorial of Nancy Stout, widow of Joseph Stout, a soldier in the war of the Revolution, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

MICAHIAH HAWKES.

Mr. THOMSON. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the House bill (No. 273) for the relief of Micajah Hawkes, have directed me to report it without amendment, and recommend its passage. I shall be gratified if the Senate will take it up now, and put it on its passage. The Committee on Pensions have had the case before them heretofore, and made a favorable report.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of Micajah Hawkes, which proposes to place his name on the invalid pension roll, at the rate of fifteen dollars a month, being half of his pay proper, to commence January 1, 1853, and continue during his natural life.

Mr. KING. In there a report in that case?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is.

Mr. KING. Let it be read.

The Secretary commenced to read the report.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the call. I have heard a satisfactory explanation of the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN R. BARTLETT.

Mr. BRAGG. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of John R. Bartlett, late commissioner to run the boundary line between the United States and Mexico; and also the memorial of Thomas W. Tansil, late quartermaster of that commission, have instructed me to report a joint resolution. If there be no objection, I ask that the joint resolution be put on its passage now, as it merely refers this matter to the settlement of the Department of the Interior.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. No. 27) authorizing the settlement of the accounts of John R. Bartlett, late commissioner of the United States to run and mark the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, and for other purposes, was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the accounts of John R. Bartlett, late commissioner of the United States, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, upon principles just, fair, and equitable to Bartlett and to the United States, and in conformity with the usage in such cases; and also to ascertain, in making the adjustment, whether Bartlett has received a credit in his account with the Government, and of the money of Guadalupe Hidalgo, if any, made by Thomas W. Tansil, late quartermaster, and commissary of the boundary commission, to officers and men in its employment, and claimed by Tansil to be due to him at the time of his turning over his transfer list of the officers and men, by order of Bartlett, to George W. Thurber, his successor; deducting from the amount such sums as have been paid to Tansil, so as to ascertain the balance, if any, due to him by Bartlett. On the adjustment of the accounts, the amount, if any, ascertained, is to be paid to him. If it shall appear that he has not received and satisfied any amount that may be ascertained to be due by him to Thomas W. Tansil.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHICAGO HARBOR.

Mr. CLAY. On Friday last, when I was detained from the Senate by indisposition, the House resolution No. 11, being a resolution to provide for the manner of expending the balance of an appropriation for the works and piers in order to preserve and secure the light-house at Chicago, Illinois, was called up by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS], and was passed by the Senate. I presume the Senate did not at this time enter into the reasons; but I will do so to-morrow, with the indulgence of the Senate, in deference to the convenience of others.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire to state that before I came into the Senate on Friday morning, I received a message that there was a bill pending in which I felt an interest. I came in and made the motion to take up this joint resolution, without noticing the absence of the Senator from Alabama. It occurred to me immediately after the resolution was passed, and on reflection I remembered, that I had made a personal request of him that he should not call it up for action in my absence. In view of that, I did not think it proper that it was not courteous for me to call it up in his absence. For this reason I feel bound to move a reconsideration, to give him an opportunity to submit his objections to it. Then I shall ask the Senate to make a test question against reconsideration; but I intend making the motion to reconsider the purpose of letting the question go over until to-morrow morning, when we can take the vote. I now move that the vote by which the resolution was passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was recorded; and, by common consent, it was passed over until to-morrow.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. WILSON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BROWN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 385) to incorporate the Prospect Hill Cemetery; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KENNEDY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 386) explanatory of an act entitled "An act supplementary to an act to authorize notaries public to take and certify oaths, affirmations and acknowledgments in certain cases," passed twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WASHINGTON JAIL.

Mr. HALE. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to a single fact. Some time since there was a resolution introduced into the Senate, and passed, instructing that committee to inquire into the state of the prison in this city. I have had occasion to visit it within a day or two; indeed, I did yesterday, and I do think that the prison of this city would be a disgrace to any savage people. I found it filled with blacks, from head to foot, from turret to foundation; and I suppose the fact that the arts and crafts of this city have failed to account for that; but, in the midst of all that, I found a white boy, about thirteen or fourteen years of age, a resident of this city, who, by the order of some justice, who, I suppose, thought there was a law for it, was taken from the protection of his mother, without the suspicion of crime or the allegation of it; but the justice thinks some two or three weeks hence he may have a justice's trial, in which it will be convenient to have this boy testify; and in this city, by order of law, that boy has been torn from the protection of his mother's house, and locked up in the midst of the crime and filth of the filthy jail that can be found on the face of God's earth, and that boy has to stay there for two or three weeks. That is the condition of this prison; and I do beg the Committee to take care that if they inquire, they will give some attention to it; and if the chairman of the committee is here, I wish he would inform us if there is to be anything done in that respect.

Mr. BROWN. I am ready to answer the inquiry of the Senator. The committee has, for several years had this subject under consideration, and have constantly agreed with the honorable Senator, and three or four times been prepared to report in favor of no appropriation for the construction of a new prison; but every time we get the question up we are met by some influence against building a house on the old site, or on any new site that we have been able to select. That is the trouble. If the outside influences were disregarded in the Senate, we should long since have settled this difficulty; but reports of Congress are born down by the influence brought in through members of this body. More than four years since—I think about five years, now—we reported an item in the appropriation bill in favor of constructing a new prison. It was attacked from every quarter; and there was no more to be got out of the old site; for that was offensive to everybody, and destroyed everybody's property. Then we tried to have it put near the arsenal, where the penitentiary now stands; and we were not by any influence, saying that it would not do, because that ground was wanted for the arsenal extension. We then proposed to purchase a piece of ground. Everybody wanted to sell. We could not get from one place, because other people would come and say, "You pay that person too much;" and thus we were thwarted at every point, and have been since. If the Senate will agree to stand by the committee, you will have a proposition before you before to-morrow night to build a prison on a model plan—a proper one, such as ought to be erected; but we want to know, before we bring our report here, if these pestiferous outside influences are to overturn us, as they have done heretofore—not only on this question, but on half a dozen others. That is the whole case.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say a word about this jail. There has been a good deal of talking about it here. All that the chairman of the District Committee has said in relation to the efforts that have been made to make the jail is true; and we have had a great deal of patriotic indignation here about this jail. It is a very bad one, I agree; but I should like to have some gentlemen tell me what obligation we are under to build a jail here. I should like to have gentlemen tell me what obligation there is imposed on the General Government to expend his money dollars to build a jail for this District? When they answer me that question, I will go with them to build it.

Mr. BROWN. A single word. I know this discussion is out of order, but I will answer the honorable Senator from Maine why we are under an obligation to build it. The country that settles these people are our courts; the marshal and his deputies who take them into custody are our officers. The prisoners are fed at our expense, because they are arrested by our authority; and, being our prisoners, we are under an obligation, as the Government, to furnish a prison-house in which to incarcerate them, as much as for Portland is bound to furnish a jail there, or any county in the Senator's State is bound to furnish a jail. The Federal Government furnishes court-houses in all the States for the accommodation of its courts, and when the States refuse to receive prisoners, it is compelled in all the States to furnish its own prison-houses. There is the whole explanation. They are our prisoners. The Mayor of this city never sent a man to jail here in his life, nor did he order his local officers to go and men to lock-up in the city, to station-houses, and not to the county jail. Those who are sent to prison in this city are sent there by the authority of the Federal Government—by officers bearing its commission. Therefore, they are the prisoners of the United States; and the United States is as much bound to furnish a house in which to retain them as prisoners as it is to furnish houses in the States in which to try civil or criminal offenses.

FORT ATKINSON RESERVATION.

Mr. HARKAN. I move that the Senate take up the bill (S. No. 371) for the relief of certain settlers in the State of Iowa. This bill, as it is now proposed substantially, passed the Senate at the last session; and it will consume no time, I suppose.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 371) for the relief of certain settlers in the State of Iowa, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to declare the east half of section eight, section seventeen, and the east half of section eighteen, in township ninety-six north, of range nine west, in the State of Iowa, formerly reserved for Fort Atkinson and an Indian agency, and since released and abandoned, as being no longer needed for public uses, to be subject to the ordinary disposition of the public lands, and the same conditions as are provided by law; and that such persons as may have hitherto settled thereon, and who would have been entitled to the right of preemption under the act of September 4, 1841, had the reservation not been made, be entitled to preemption in the same manner in accordance with the provisions of that act, by making proof, payment, and entry at the proper district office within twelve months.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CITY OF BATON ROUGE.

Mr. SLIDELL. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up a private bill that I am sure will not lead to any discussion when the bill is read, with the report of five or six lines. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 378) to relinquish the title of the United States to certain lands occupied by the city of Baton Rouge, in Louisiana.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. By the bill, all the right, title, interest, or claim of the United States in and to the land occupied by the city of Baton Rouge, lying between Florida street on the north and the South Boulevard on the south, as shown by an original map of the city, on file in the office of the clerk of the sixth judicial district court of Louisiana, at Baton Rouge, on the 14th of March, 1860, will be relinquished to the Mayor and Council of the city of Baton Rouge, in trust for the general use and benefit of the owners of lots therein, according to their respective interests. This act is only to be construed as a quit claim on the part of the United States, and is not to affect the interest of the parties, nor to preclude a judicial investigation in relation to the title to all or any portion of the lands relinquished.

Mr. SLIDELL. Let the Secretary read the report. It is very short.

The Secretary read the following report:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the Mayor and Council of the city of Baton Rouge, have the honor to report:

That from the titles and documents produced by the petitioner, it appears that a considerable part of the city of Baton Rouge was laid out on certain lands granted by the French and Spanish Governments long anterior to the revolution of Louisiana to the United States; but that said grants never having been presented to any board of commissioners for confirmation, the lands still appear as public lands on the maps of the Land Office, and the claims are enforced by appropriations not for the city but for the interest of the United States, and it is recommended that appropriations that have been so made to Congress for the past several years be discontinued.

The Committee on the General Land Office, to whom the matter was referred for information by the committee, has drafted one answer for the purpose of putting an end to the matter, and it is recommended, approving the same, now recommended to pass.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire whether this land has been used by the United States for any public purpose heretofore.

Mr. SLIDELL. Never. It forms part of the town of Baton Rouge. I suppose there are three or four different proprietors. It is an ancient title.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD LANDS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Arkansas, to report a bill, and ask that it be passed.

The bill (S. No. 387) for the relief of certain actual settlers on land granted to the State of Arkansas for railroad purposes, was read the first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will state to the Senate that the bill relates entirely to lands that have already been granted to the State of Arkansas for railroad purposes. I will read the concluding part of a letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which bears on the subject, so that the Senate may see what it is.

He says:
"I have before me herewith inclose the draft of a bill, in accordance with your request. The effect of this will be, if introduced into a law, to confirm the preemption rights upon the lands which were reserved for the purpose of 'marking the line of the roads on the face of the earth,' under the date of the filing of the maps or plats of survey of the line of the roads."

The bill provides that those parties who settled on lands upon the line of the Cairo and Fulton road, and were preparing for preemption, and have since, under the belief that they were entitled to them, matured those preemptions, and paid their money into the Treasury of the United States for the same, if it turns out they were previously granted to the railroad, shall be entitled to the land, provided the State of Arkansas will release her interest. If the bill is not passed, the parties who have paid into the Treasury of the United States for these lands the price asked by the Government, will have to call upon the Government to refund their money to them. They will then lose all their improvements, and the benefit of all their labor go to the railroad company. I do not know that the act itself will be a welcome one to the stockholders in the railroad; because it calls on them to release their title to valuable lands, together with the improvements thereon, the labor of others have placed on them. I do not think it right, however, that the railroad should get the benefit of the labor of these people. The Government having already received pay for those lands, is only asked to consent to a release on the part of the State or her legal representatives, or in other words, the railroad stockholders, and to allow the railroad to take other lands in lieu—those other lands being specified. Where the lands thus released by the railroad company are within the six-mile grant, they are to take other lands within six miles in place of those released. Where the lands are outside of the six miles, and within the fifteen miles, then the railroad company may take lands within nine miles outside of the six in lieu of those they release, or may go out on any other of the public lands that are subject to private entry. These are the conditions of the bill. I ask that the Senate allow it to be passed. The Government loses nothing whatever by it.

The bill was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed, read the third time, and passed.

CAPTURE OF MEXICAN STEAMERS.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the following resolution, and, as I see the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations is not in his place, I merely offer the resolution, to lie on the table for the present:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to enquire by what title or title the steamship, or ship, or vessel, belonging to the United States, has undertaken, in time of peace, and without the sanction of Congress, to use force against the vessels of other nations, or of Mexican waters, and, after a bloody encounter, to capture the same, and bring them, so-prevented prize-of-war, into a port of the United States, looking to the capture of the same, and also to consider if any action of Congress be required to prevent the recurrence of such a collision and such mistaking to make prize of war and prisoners in time of peace.

M. C. GRITZER.

Mr. BIGLER. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 238) for the relief of M. C. Gritzer. It will take but a minute.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $379 77, to be paid to M. C. Gritzer, out of the patent fund, for compensation and damages on account of the rescinding by the Government of a contract made with the Commissioner of Patents, on the 30th of March, 1857, for the execution of descriptions and illustrations of the Patent Office report for that year, before the work was completed; this sum, if received, to be in full satisfaction for his claim under the contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must call up the special order at this hour, which is the unfinished business of Saturday. The Secretary will read the pending amendment.

Mr. BROWN. On Saturday we made a good many amendments to the railroad bill, which has complicated the question all the way through. I shall certainly not dispose of it before half past one o'clock, at which hour, I know the Senator from South Carolina desires to address the Senate; and I think, perhaps, the better way would be to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Saturday, and that the bill and amendments be printed, there have got to be so many of them, and they are so complicated. Senators say, "Do not take Saturday." I am sure I shall get no other day but that for the consideration of District business.

SEVERAL SENATORS. See Thursday.

Mr. BROWN. I am willing to take Thursday, if Senators will allow us to have it. Then, I propose Thursday, and that this bill and the other District bills be postponed until that day, and made the order of the day in the order in which they impious ignorance bow to the wisdom of God's decrees?

Mr. President, we have seen what this spirit has accomplished for England; what it has accomplished for the race emancipated. Now let us see what it would do for the United States if the anti-slavery party can succeed. Let us regard this matter in relation to the northern States, the free States they are in a commercial aspect, and then in its effects on the industrial classes, the honest, hard-working men and women of the country.

I find from official authority that the exports of the country in the year 1859, were $478,392,092. Of these, the

Free States furnished exclusively.....	$5,981,490
Free and slave States together.....	$4,417,492
Slave States exclusively.....	$5,000,000

It is stated that one third of that eighty-four million justly belongs and should be credited to slave labor, or to the slave States, as they are called. Thus the value of the exports for the year 1859, from the slaveholding States, would be over two hundred million dollars.

The commercial and navigating interest of the country, which is almost entirely at the North, feeds, lives, and fattens on these exports. To what extent these branches of industry are involved, would be a question not only to those who are concerned. But, sir, in times past—in 1788—there were some wise men in New England, as there are some now. They understood this business; and I will ask to read from the debates of the Massachusetts convention, showing to what extent they regarded their interest involved in the carrying of the southern productions. I will ask my friend to read for me from Elliot's Debates, volume 2.

Mr. WIGFALL read, as follows:

"But it is not only our coasting trade—our whole commerce is going to ruin. Commerce has been established on a trade law, which shall continue the importation of foreign goods to the ships of the producing or consuming country. And such a law, we should not expect to be adopted for the good of our nation; nor would British vessels be the carriers of American produce from our sister States. In the States south of us, the largest share is agreed to be fourths of the produce are exported, and three fourths of the produce are made in British vessels. It is said that our exporting timber, our half the property goes to the carrier; and of the produce in general, it has been computed that, when it is shipped for London from a southern State to the sum of $1,000,000, the British receive one fourth of the sum $300,000, in the means of freight and charges. This is money which would be in the hands of England, more than the money which would be in the hands of the United States. It is said that the British receive as much more than the United States. —Extract from the speech of Mr. Dawes, in the Massachusetts Convention, Elliot's Debates on the Federal Constitution, vol. 2, p. 58.

Mr. CHESNUT, from a second extract from the speech of Mr. Phillips, a member from Boston:

"But we see the situation we are in. We are verging towards destruction, and every one must be sensible of it. I suppose the New England States have a treasure offed to them better than the mines of Peru; and it cannot be to the disadvantage of the southern States. Great Britain and France come here with their vessels, loaded with our carrying our produce to those countries in American vessels, navigated by our citizens. When I consider the extensive trade carried to the States south of us, and the commerce, viewing matters in this light, I would rather sink all this commerce to sea, than into the power should be withheld from Congress."

There was a Mr. Russell in that convention, who seemed to have a very lively conception of the benefits of this trade. After showing that the carrying trade would increase the navigation interests of New England, furnish a nursery of seamen, give employment to the people, &c.,

"There (he said) were some of the blessings anticipated from the adoption of the Federal Constitution; and so conceived was for its utility and necessity, that while he resisted them, the good of the country and the people might not be our dearest voice, if he was allowed, he would hold up both hands in favor of it; and he concluded, if his mind was not convinced to be true with his heart, in this all-important decision, he would cut it off as unworthy of him, and less it should infect his whole body."

—Idem, pp. 138. If you take the estimate furnished by Mr. Dawes, of one third, you would have as the profit of freights some sixty-six million dollars annually; but this is too large, for the North would not get it all. I have a closer and more correct estimate, which shows that the profit for the exportation of the produce of slave labor by the ships of the North amounts to $36,000,000 annually. If you add the $150,000,000 in value which the northern States sell in manufactured articles to the South, or if you include the West, with another $50,000,000, you have $300,000,000 that the northern States sell annually to the South, the slave States, which slave labor enables them to buy. Add, also, the profits of the coasting trade, which are very great, and of which the North has a monopoly, and then superadd the bonus of $50,000,000 annually which is derived from the importation of raw sugar, which is a small price of their manufactures to that amount, and you may have some conception of the importance of slavery and of the South to the people of the North.

Destroy these resources, and what becomes of the shipping, manufacturing, mercantile parts of your States, and of the vast interests dependent on them? One cannot fail to see at a glance. Now let us regard its effects on the industrial classes, individually, the honest hard-working men and women of the country. There are three articles of tropical production, chiefly of slave labor, which touch very closely the necessities and comforts of the laboring people of this country; and those are sugar, coffee, and cotton. The sugar consumed in the United States for the fiscal year 1858-59, was:

Of cane, by slave labor.....	950,007,863 lbs.
" by free labor.....	42,153,017 "
Domestic maple, and from Pa-
ciety, (free).....	79,520,000 "
	1,072,330,880 "
Strike off slave-grown sugar.....	950,007,863 "

And there will be left..... 121,623,017 " in supply the wants of the country, and would be about one sixth of the necessary quantity. Nearly two thirds of this would be maple sugar. But if we regard the cane sugar alone—which is that chiefly fit for general use—and strike out that produced by slave labor, you will have about one twenty-fifth the quantity left in the country to supply its demand.

What effect this would have upon the enhanced price of this article, which has become such a necessity, as well as a luxury to the people, and how far it would be put out of the reach of the poor and laboring man, one may well imagine. We may from some distant shore, however, import to the United States of England in 1840. I quote from Prior's Progress of the Nation, page 547:

"The cost to the people of this country (England) of the differential duty on sugar, imposed for the benefit of the English sugar planters, is estimated to be £1,000,000, the cost, exclusive of duty, of three million seven hundred and sixty thousand seven hundred and ten hundred weight retained for consumption in 1848, was £2,136,375, calculated at the Atlantic average prices. The cost of a like quantity of Brazil or Havanna sugar, of equal quality, would have been £2,135,361, and, consequently, we paid in one year £1,001,694 (over twenty-five million dollars) more than the price which the inhabitants of other countries in Europe would have paid for an equal quantity of sugar. This, however, is an extreme view of the case. If our markets had been open to free trade to the sugar of all countries, the price of foreign sugar would have been lower than it is now, while that from the British possessions would have been lower; and it may be confidently said that, even in that case, the saving would have been more than four millions of money."

Thus, on a diminution of about one eighth of the supply, the cost was more than double. What the cost or the price would be if only one sixth of the supply in the country, I leave Senators to imagine.

The article of coffee furnishes a condition of things not less striking. The amount produced in the world, in the year 1859,

From slave labor.....	422,000,000 lbs.
From free labor.....	320,000,000 "

Total..... 742,000,000 " Amount of coffee consumed in the United States, in 1859, 222,882,550 lbs.; say, one third less than the whole production of free labor. Strike out the production of slave labor, and you leave a little more than enough to supply one single country. What would be the price of coffee, occasioned by a diminished supply of more than one half? Senators may well imagine, from what I have said in relation to the condition of affairs in England, in 1840, touching the cost of sugar. Those two articles may then be considered as beyond the reach of the every-day and hard laborer, when you abandon the products of slave labor.

In relation to cotton, it is still more striking. The amount produced in the world in 1858-59, not including local consumption, except in the United States, was, by slave labor:

	Bales.
United States.....	3,351,481
Brazil.....	125,000
	3,976,481
By free labor:
East Indies.....	510,000
Egypt.....	101,000
West Indies.....	7,000
	618,000
Total.....	4,614,481

Consumption for same period:

United States, north of Virginia.....	769,218
Elsewhere in United States.....	167,433
	937,651

The remainder is consumed in other parts of the world.

Strike off that produced by slave labor, and the supply will not be sufficient even for the northern market.

Then strike out this article of cotton, with which sustaining humanity is enabled to clothe itself abundantly with decency and cheapness, and cease to consume the seven hundred and fifty thousand bales in your factories in the North, and thereby destroy the investments for that purpose, by which you are enabled to make profits and pay wages to the thousands dependent on them, and what becomes of the power, the prosperity, the respectability of your States? Your commerce gone, your ships decayed, your industry paralyzed, your people unemployed, or, if employed at all, pressed to the maximum of labor with the minimum of wages—thus deprived of the easy means of procuring the necessities and comforts of life: cursed by fanaticism, anarchy and demagogues come upon your ruin, grim ruin, gloom over your unhappy land—and why? Why do the anti-slavery party purpose a course so unchristian and destructive? Is it because slavery is a sin? Sir, it does not concern them under the provisions of our Constitution; they have naught to do with its intermeddling in self-righteous and unseemly; but if it is a sin, it concerns us much. I need not urge upon God his high regard for truth, and if you pursue your inquiry to its source, is it a sin? Do you say it is against the law of nature, which is the will of God? How do you get at the will of God in this particular? Do you go to His revealed word? Then I say to you, search the Scriptures, for they were written for your instruction, and if you pursue your inquiry to its source, is it a sin? THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 11, 1859.

NEW SERIES.....No. 102.

point you to Tunis; I point you among yourselves, compare the condition of the freed negroes morally, mentally, and physically, in the colonies, with the condition of the slaves here, and draw your own conclusions. In the general march of human progress there is no one interest of humanity which has advanced more rapidly than the institution of African slavery in the southern States. It has stood the test of every trial. In spite of the efforts of the anti-slavery party, so well calculated to retard its improvement, it has gone on improving and to improve, until its mission and its end shall be accomplished. Its mission is to subdue the unbroken regions of the warm and fertile South, and its end is the happiness and civilization of the human race, including the race of the slave, in all respects.

But, perhaps, some Senator, as I have heard already, perhaps some Senator, for my testimony, Now, Mr. President, for the impulses of the human heart, rightly instructed and educated, I have great sympathy and respect; but we are told that the human heart is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," and when it is set on fire by the wind of passions, surely it is the most unwise and unsafe of all guides, and ought not to receive either sympathy or respect.

History and experience prove that the negro has now reached a new degree of civil liberty. His own good, as well as the good of the world, require that he should be guided and restrained. Yet the anti-slavery party weakly and wickedly attempt to force emancipation upon us.

But, Mr. President, it may seem strange that a Senator from the South should seek to advocate the interests of the North. The truth is good for all sections; and while I am not unwilling to contribute facts and arguments that may enable all to perform a common duty, I have a purpose beyond. I desire to show the world the wisdom and folly of the anti-slavery party. I desire to point out its tendencies to the people of my section. I desire to reassure the people of the South of its impregnable power. I desire to convince them of the capacity of our system to maintain its moderation and its moderation. I desire to show, from deep conviction, to say, that unless this madness shall cease, the sooner she puts herself on that reliance, the better for her, the better for civil liberty, and the better for mankind.

I have spoken hypothetically. I have supposed that this party shall be triumphant. I will now say that it cannot be triumphant. I will say to the anti-slavery party, you cannot abolish slavery; no, not though you have opened to you all the treasures of Exeter Hall. There is but one way by which you can abolish slavery; that is, to destroy your factories, burn your mills, and cease producing the products of slave labor, and induce England and other European Powers to do the like; desolate your country, and with it some others; and then you may. But you have not the nerve to do this. You cannot do it, and you cannot accomplish it in any other way. You may do that which is so disastrous to us, but fatal to you. You may destroy our system of governments, and my word for it, you will. Great Britain is not so ready at this time to make direct and destructive war on our system of slavery. It turns out that the combined production of free and slave labor is insufficient for the supply of the civilized world. The factories of Great Britain and her whole power and prosperity rest on it, and she knows it. She, therefore, cannot do it, and she gets her system of slavery fully developed, and then you may look for the blow. To show you that this is true, I will ask my friend to read an extract from British authority:

Mr. WIGFALL read, as follows:

"The entire failure of a cotton crop," says Mr. Ashurst, "which is ever over, would be a disaster, perhaps for ever, all the manufacturing power of the world, though the growth in any one year be only one million of bales of cotton. India, Egypt, and the United States, and all the cotton-growing countries would be involved in losses which, in many cases, would amount to irretrievable ruin. Millions of our consumers would become deprived of employment and food—and, as a consequence, the million tons could, in a moment, be converted into a political, social, and commercial, such as cannot be compensated without active and direct aid."

These considerations strongly point to the necessity of encouraging the growth of cotton in the British colonies in India, in Africa, and in the West Indies, and the perils which we are to incur in our relying so exclusively for our supply, as we do at present, upon the products of African slavery.—London Quarterly Review, January, 1859, p. 4.

Mr. CHESNUT. Thus, Mr. President, it appears that while England is torturing her ingenuity to relieve herself of her dependence upon us, while she is resorting to every possible method to build up her own system of slavery in Africa, in Asia, in the West Indies, we find the anti-slavery party of America going hand in hand with her. We find the anti-slavery party of America doing all they can to destroy that which gives this country its commerce and power. It is not a fact that it does not occur to you that this party is, in effect, a foreign party? It is a British party; and if the people of the United States are so far afflicted as to aid in its success, may God have mercy on their faculty, for they know not what they do.

Mr. President, I have said in the preceding misconception of our system of governments might be found one of the important causes of the present unsatisfactory condition of the country. As to the foundation and principles of government, we differ far and wide. Our party in this country seems to hold that the Declaration of Independence is the basis of the Constitution, and argue as if the Federal Government derived its powers from that famous instrument, and was organized for the express purpose of carrying the same into effect. It may seem, still, it is not so, when the anti-slavery party generally come to speak of the powers and duties of the Government, in relation to the domestic affairs and social systems of the several States, they strangle their opinions, and argue on these about equal opinions.

The purposes of the Declaration of Independence were clear and specific; which were to announce an existing fact; and, in defence to the opinion of the world, to assign the reasons which induced and justified that fact. Besides this, it had no other end. It is true, still, it is a fact that that instrument saw fit to announce certain political and social dogmas, some of which are true and philosophic, while others, in the sense in which they seem to be understood and used by the anti-slavery party, are fantastic and false; yet they seize on that last and present them as indubitable evidence of the correctness of that theory which they advocate. By what authority the dogmas of the Declaration of Independence are made the basis of the Constitution, or how they are made as principles of the Government, I am unable to say. Those who take that course must prove a fact in contravention of history and in the face of well-established truth.

The Constitution rests upon no such rickety basis. It arose out of the necessities and convenience of the States. It was formed for a local purpose; which was, to institute a common Government for common purposes, practical and plainly apparent in the instrument itself. Although the States were free and independent, still they were feeble, and not much respected by the other Powers of the earth. In order to preserve the liberty and independence which they had so lately won, and to enjoy peacefully the incidents flowing from such a condition, it became necessary that they should unite more closely and concertedly their power, to be exercised in matters of foreign relations through a common agent.

The exterior relations among themselves were embarrassing, and forebadowed conflict and disaster. Hence, also, it became both convenient and necessary, for the continuance of peace among the States of this kind, that they should be regulated and controlled by the same common agent. In all matters arising under these two relations, it was supposed that the common agent could exercise the combined powers of the States more conveniently and beneficially than each State could for itself. To accomplish this, the Constitution was adopted which formed the Government. To carry into effect these objects was and is the main purpose of the Government. The interior and domestic affairs of the States were never intended to be affected by it, except in special cases provided, or in so far as as the proper exercise of the powers granted to the common Government would necessarily do so. The majority of the States in the fundamental idea, and the relation which the State governments and the Federal Government bear to each other is not that of inferior to subordinate, but as parts of one system, deriving their powers from the same source; namely, the people of the States severally. The people of each State has two governments, neither complete, inasmuch as it exercises a portion of its sovereign powers through one separately, and another portion conjointly, by agreement with other States through another power; namely, the Federal Government, its appointed spheres, and within the limitations, exercise the sum of powers that constitutes a complete Government.

But sovereignty resides neither of these Governments. They exercise only the powers delegated to each respectively. It is not a sovereignty in each of the several States, which initiated both, precisely in the same manner and to the same extent as it did before the adoption of the Constitution. The people of each of the several States, therefore, can, in no manner, be delegated to either or both. This results from the sovereignty of the States and the nature of the compact between them. I use the words "States" and "people of the States," in this connection, in the same sense.

From this doctrine it results that the Constitution rests on the will of the States; and that the Government formed by it is purely Federal—can have no other purposes, powers, or principles, than those derived from the Constitution itself; which are all delegated, defined, and limited. What the States intended to do, and what they did not intend to do, they did not intend and did not agree to cannot be imported; and I feel a curiosity to see how any one of the Republican party can point out in the Constitution, as among the delegated, defined, and limited powers of the Government, their favorite and fantastic dogmas announced in the Declaration of Independence.

There are yet others of the anti-slavery party, embracing in their number many able and distinguished men—chiefly those who have rescued themselves from the wreck of the old Whig party, by uniting their fortunes with a more promising cause. These, while they agree with us as to the history of the Constitution, do nevertheless hold, that by ratifying it, the States surrendered their sovereignty, at least to the extent of the delegated powers, which are irrevocable; that the Federal Government is that of a single unit, extending over all the people of the United States as a single community, united socially, and not politically, as States; that the Government therefore has national and not Federal powers; that the exercise of the extent of its own powers, and has the right by force of arms to exact obedience to such interpretation from the States who made it. They deny that the several States who are the custodians of the record, as the Federal Government, the delegated powers, have any right to judge of the infractions of the Constitution, and the mode and measure of redress. If I had time, I would go into a complete and full refutation of all these fallacies; but it is not now in the line of my purpose to argue them. Perhaps it may become proper to mention another occasion.

These doctrines break down all the barriers of the Constitution, and prostrate the States, consolidate the Government, and enable it, by construction, to absorb all of the reserved powers. Instead of a Federal Government, as intended by specific purposes, with its powers defined and strictly limited, it becomes a Government for any and every purpose that a majority may desire. In fact, its purpose and character being entirely changed, it is a mischievous and odious despotism; the meanest and most hateful of all—a vulgar despot.

ism of mere numbers. Beneath the incubus of such a monster civil liberty would die in a day.

The theory which holds that the dogmas of the Declaration of Independence are the principles and powers of the Government, and the theory which consolidates the Government, which holds that we are united socially as one people, and therefore may rightfully intermeddle with each other's concerns, and by construction would permit majorities to extend the action of the Government beyond the limits defined by the Constitution, leave the amplest scope for the violent clash of all those adverse opinions pertaining solely to the social system and domestic affairs of the several States—the shock of which now shakes the Confederacy from center to circumference; whereas the true view would confine all conflicts to political questions arising under the Constitution, and legitimately within the sphere of the common Government.

If the people of New England and Ohio and other States could but understand the true relations of the States to each other, and of the Federal Government to the States; that outside of the purposes of the Government, and beyond the powers expressly enumerated in the Constitution, they are, in fact, as foreign to each other as are Great Britain and France; and would demean themselves in accordance with the logic of such a belief, peace might be restored, and our system of governments, like the great system above, move harmoniously on, yielding daily light and life and happiness for generations to come. But this may not be.

The idea that there exists an "irrepressible conflict" between the two systems of labor prevailing in the States, is fanciful and superficial. No such conflict exists. On the contrary, the two systems mutually aid each other. There is, however, a conflict—a conflict of ideas irreconcilable. The opinions of those who give life and energy to the anti-slavery party touch the very life of the society, the relations of man to both and to each other, are radical and revolutionary. If these prevail, there can be no peace, North or South; for they are bred in confusion, and will develop anarchy. These gentlemen seem to believe that the Government may be improved into a sort of machinery which is invented, can be patented, and may be made in the same mould to suit the customers of every clime, whether of Asia, Africa, Europe, or America. They argue as if society was the artificial, and not the natural, system. Hence they speak of the natural rights as matters outside of, and in antagonism to, the claims of society, and of which society deprives him.

According to this theory, his relation to society and government is naturally one of war. Thus they would lay the foundations of government in anarchy. This fatal error arises, too, out of the untenable postulate that all men, under all governments, are naturally and equally entitled to liberty, without reference to the well-being of society or to their own future enjoyment of power. It is thus in the very face of history, in the face of nature, and in contravention to the every day experience of the world, they hold "that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Let us see whether these rights are original, absolute, and unlimited, or qualified, relative, and subordinate. That all men are not created equal, especially the negro, as compared with the white man, I think our opponents begin to see, and are partially inclined to admit. I draw this inference from certain passages in the speeches of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] and the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD].

First, the Senator from Illinois holds this language in a speech which he delivered here early in the session; he confesses the inequality of the races, in my judgment:

"I know that there is a distinction between two races, because the Almighty himself has marked it in their very faces, and in any judgment which is not otherwise, produce perfect equality between these races."

The inference I draw from that is, that the Senator from Illinois begins to see, and is inclined to admit, that the African is not the same as the white man. I also quote from the Senator from New York a passage, which I think points to the same conclusion. He says:

"Suppose we had the power to change your social system: what warrant have you for supposing that we should create negro equality among you? We cannot, and would not. We will only give level, that the equality which our system of labor works out is the equality of the white man."

In the South the equality of the white man is already established. It is not the equality of the negro that the system works out. I infer from that, that the Senator from New York begins to see the inequality of the races, and is inclined to admit it. I therefore pass over that subject; take it for granted that mankind are not equal, because the fact states them in the face. We have only to make profert. Bring one of each into court, and who acknowledges the equality? No one.

That all men are endowed with life is unquestionable; but whether it may be rightfully taken away, without the consent of its possessor, is another question. This goes to the root of society. Its well-being, its preservation, upon which the existence and development of the human race depend, often require that it should be done. Hence it is done in every age, in all countries, and under every form of government, it has been done. Thus we have the testimony of all ages and all mankind that even this precious boon may become rightfully aliened or taken away, and is made subservient to the safety and well-being of society.

When gentlemen affirm this inalienable right to liberty, what do they mean? Do they predicate this right of man in a condition of absolute solitude, and disconnected from human society and all government? If they do this, we can have no quarrel with them, for they speak of a condition in which man has never been found in history, and in which he cannot exist. Their argument, therefore, must be inconsequential and futile. But if they affirm this as a perfect right in a political condition, and thus speak of civil liberty, their assumption is no less absurd. The idea of civil liberty is complex. It embraces not only the liberty of the individual, but also the civil and political idea. It comprehends grants and restrictions, and the rights and duties of the citizen. In fact, the liberty of the citizen springs out of, and is wholly dependent on, constitution and government. To assert, therefore, that liberty thus derived and thus sustained is an original, independent endowment, which cannot be rightfully taken away, is to assert an absurdity.

We hold to the teaching of the great Saggiere, that as the human race cannot exist, continue, or develop without society, no society without government, and hence the political, including the social, is the natural condition of man. It is never otherwise found. The individual, therefore, must be subordinate to the social, and government may rightfully exercise just so much power as is necessary to secure peace and internal violence and injury. And the citizen ought to possess as much liberty as he is fit to enjoy, and as may be consistent with the well-being of the State.

I will not leave here to read an extract from Mr. Calhoun, which, pursuing the idea of Aristotle, shows the limits of comprehensibility, yet so succinctly and clearly, that I will adopt it:

"It follows from all this that the quantum of power on the part of the Government, and of liberty on the part of individuals, instead of being equal to each other, according to their different conditions. For, just in proportion as a people are ignorant, stupid, and vicious, the power necessary for their governance in peace, in order to preserve society against anarchy and destruction, and to secure the greatest and individual liberty less and less, until the lowest condition is reached—where absolute and despotic power becomes necessary on the part of the Government, and the citizen liberty extinct. So, on the contrary, just as a people rise in the scale of intelligence, virtue, and patriotism, and the more perfectly they become acquainted with the nature of Government, the less for which it was ordered, and less it ought to be administered, and the less the tendency to anarchy and disorder, the more necessary and the power necessary for Government becomes less and less, and individual liberty greater and greater. Instead, then, of the equal right to liberty, equality is claimed by those who hold that they are all born free and equal, liberty is the noble and highest reward of the noble and moral development, combined with favorable circumstances. Instead, then, of liberty and equality being born with men, instead of all men and all citizens being equally entitled to them, they are high prizes to be won, and are in their most perfect state not only the highest reward that can be bestowed on our race, but the most difficult to be won, and when won, the most difficult to be preserved."

Mr. CHESnut. Here, Mr. President, is a theory of government comprehensive and just; the only theory upon which any free Government can permanently maintain liberty. It is the basis of that system of freedom which prevails in these States, and the social policy which makes England a great and free country; it is the system on which the British constitution rests, and no other system can ever be permanent, exist where it will.

But, again; when gentlemen affirm a right to the pursuit of happiness as an original endowment, what do they mean? Is happiness to be alienated or rightfully taken away, what do they mean? Do they mean to assert that every man may, at his will, pursue his notion of happiness without restraint of human law, or regard to the well-being of society? If so, where will it lead? Men often form their ideas of happiness. The happiness of many, it is true, consists in pursuit of noble, useful, and innocent employments. Such have a right to pursue them. But the happiness of some men consists in turbulence and brutality; some in carnage; others love self; some in idleness, in ease, while others seek happiness in the bold walks of highway plunder; while some, again, revel in revenge, treason, and murder. Ay, pursue your happiness, gentlemen, all, without restraint of human law. You but exercise a God-given right, which is the doctrine for the race of Browns, with pike, and torch, and flaming hate!

But, gentlemen, you do not mean this. You cannot. You are compelled to take these rights with our interpretation, and with the limitations and restraints which are the basis of human law and human life. But if you do this, you are honestly bound to cease to produce them in proof and reproof against us.

Mr. President, a notable experiment of these principles of unqualified liberty, fraternity, and equality, "has been tried in the world. We have seen constitution and government improvised by philosophy, but "the constitution would not walk." Philosophers could not make the men to live under it. These men required a government growing out of their passions, and capacities. So they trampled on the pearl of philosophy, and soon turned to rend the philosophers. Thus will it ever be. The government must grow and be suited to the people. With these wild ideas, the men of France, no matter how wise, and how virtuous, very soon for a little while. All barriers, all Nationalities, all restrictions were broken down—the world was one. Le genre humain was the only bond, and le genre humain of all races, colors, classes, and costumes, showed themselves very joyous—almost exultant—at a feast of pillage and blood. But when they were led on by Anarchists Cloutz. Notable Anarchists! Glorious Cloutz!—type of man which is to be seen again in America. Happy men! for they were all free and equal, and fraternized. They were all free and equal, and fraternized. And this time mixed with women, in long queues, swinging to and fro from the doors of all the baker's shops in the city, crying "Bread or blood!" Was such cry ever heard in American city? How ominous!

Liberty and equality, liberty and equality, fraternal and fraternal. Henceforth fraternity disappears; but, happy men, they are all free and equal; free at least to drink each other's blood, and equal in diabolical atrocity. And is this all liberty, fraternity, and equality can accomplish? Has been a guide and chastener of man's savage heart, pure religion? Can not these new-born principles do something for that? Yes; do not see them bring the painted courtesan—symbol of divine renege—which they have made a bodily renege? Happy men! Are they not still free and equal? Ah, but they have not witnessed the new type—symbol of the anti-slavery God, emblem of murder and treason—the gallows, now higher and holier than the cross.

The truth must not be blind-like causes will prevail. Happy men. Are not these same ideas of unqualified liberty, fraternity and equality, communism, agrarianism and infidelity, now sedulously and thick throughout the literature and teachings and preachings of the anti-slavery party of the North? You may depend upon it, gentlemen, these seeds will spring up and bear bitter fruit for you.

I cannot erase from my mind the impressions made by events and the condition of things around me. I believe that the active, characteristic principles of the Republican party of this day in America are identical with the Bed Republicanism of France. Here it has changed its complexion. "It has blacked its face," that is all. If these ideas of which we have been speaking are pressed into action—nay, more, if they be not speedily arrested and made to atone, civil liberty dies when they triumph, and our system of government ends. Then, gentlemen, too late will come your lamentations—as come they surely will. You will be held as "false theorists of false liberty"—hollow chanters over the ashes of a dead Republic, "destroyed by yourselves."

In such an event I will feel some consolation, arising from the belief that we have done our duty, and from a deep conviction that the South, under wise counsel and firm action, can hold these principles at bay; that she will weather the storm, and be able to reconstruct the temple of her safety on a firm and enduring basis.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I thought, Mr. President, of saying something about these resolutions at some time or other. I do not like, though, to weary the Senate; and, indeed, I am not anxious about the peculiar time. I thought of asking the Senate to allow me to make a short explanation of my views on this subject before the vote is taken. I do not know what is the wish of Senators. I am ready to acquiesce in it, whatever it may be.

Mr. CLAY. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that, as the author of the resolutions is not here—he is detained, as he is probably advised, by serious indisposition—it would be better just to let them lie over. They can be called out at any time. I think they will be here to-morrow, unless something should occur to prevent it. They may go over without any formal assignment of them.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If it is understood that I do not lose my right to keep the floor by that course, I have no objection to it.

Mr. CLAY. That will be according to you, no doubt.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would rather know, however. We shall ascertain to-morrow, though, what the result of the resolutions does or does not do.

Mr. CLAY. If any other person be prepared to go on now, I suggest to the Senator to let him do so; or if the Senator himself is prepared, let him go on now.

Mr. WADE. I barely wish to say that I am anxious for a vote on the homestead bill; and to-morrow I shall feel it my duty, if no other Senator moves to take it up, to move to take it up, and, if I can, to keep it before the Senate until we dispose of it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama. Indeed, I prefer, in what I have to say, that the Senator from Mississippi should be here. I think that is all right. I will consent to that course, if it is agreeable.

Mr. WIGFALL. I beg leave to introduce a bill, and ask its speedy printing.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.) The resolutions under consideration must be first disposed of.

Mr. CLAY. I move to lay them on the table for the present, so that they may be called up at any time.

The motion was agreed to.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. WIGFALL. I ask leave to introduce a bill, as an amendment to the homestead bill, and I ask that it be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. I have an amendment which I intend to offer to the homestead bill. I intend to offer it as a substitute for the whole bill. It is substantially a bill to cede the public lands within the limits of the land States on certain conditions therein mentioned. It is one which I think the representatives from all the land States may well vote for in preference to any other proposition which has been made, and it is one which I think the representatives of the old States should greatly prefer to the homestead policy, and by which it is proposed to obtain something to the Treasury from the public lands. I move that it be printed.

Mr. PUGH. The Committee on Public Lands already have this subject of ceding the lands to the States under consideration, by virtue of a resolution of the Senate. I would suggest to my friend from Texas, and my friend from Alabama, that their bills be read by their titles twice, and referred to that committee and printed. They are then both in the power of the committee under that resolution, and it will be in the power of the Senators to offer them as amendments.

Mr. CLAY. I would accede to that proposition of the Senator from Ohio, if the Senate would receive the homestead bill along with them; but I do not want to bury my bill in the Committee on Public Lands while you are passing the homestead bill.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator can move to have his bill printed, and then can offer the printed copy as a substitute for the homestead bill. My object is, in case the homestead should be defeated, or substantially amended, that the committee may not lose their hold on the question in that phase.

Mr. CLAY. I will have no objection, if it was as simple as I have referred to the same one. If I lose none of my rights, by the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, I shall not object.

Mr. PUGH. Certainly not. I ask that the bill be read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and both printed.

The bill of Mr. WIGFALL (S. No. 388) to dispose of the public lands in the States, and the bill of Mr. CLAY (S. No. 389) to cede the public lands within the limits of the land States, on certain conditions therein mentioned, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PUGH. I move that the bills be printed. The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORTNEY, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President.

A bill (S. No. 250) for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brevet Captain Oliver H. P. Taylor;

A bill (S. No. 233) for the relief of Alice Hunt, widow of the late Henry Hunt;

A bill (S. No. 71) for the relief of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. I now move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the Indian appropriation bill. My object is to make what progress we can this evening, and have it the first business in order for to-morrow.

Mr. WADE. I hope that motion will not prevail, for I am very anxious to dispose of the homestead bill. I do not believe there will be any great debate on the subject; I believe those in favor of the bill do not wish to debate it, and I am anxious for a vote on it, and if this motion does not prevail, I will not make that bill up; and I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. What is the question before the Senate?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. To postpone all prior orders.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. That is the motion; but in the absence of that motion, what would be before the Senate? I understand the homestead bill was left as the unfinished business on Thursday, and would come properly before the Senate now.

Mr. CLAY. I think the unfinished business is the bill to grant a pension to Mrs. Humber. Mr. HUNTER. I hope the motion will be put, no matter what the unfinished business may be. If my motion succeeds, the Indian appropriation bill will come up.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POE.) The Chair will say to the Senator from Tennessee that the bill indicated by the Senator from Alabama is the first business in order.

Mr. CLAY. That is the unfinished business. Mr. JOHNSON. Do I understand you to stand the Chair to say, that when business is taken up on private bill day, a private bill which is left unfinished supersedes public business on Monday?

Mr. CLAY. You are mistaken. The facts are these: prior to taking up the resolutions of the Senator from Mississippi, which were discussed by the Senator from South Carolina, on motion, the Senate took up a bill to grant a pension to Mrs. Laura C. Humber, the mother-in-law, and while that was under discussion, the hour arrived for the special order, and thereupon the Chair called up the special order, and the bill for the relief of Mrs. Humber was not disposed of; hence it is the unfinished business, and first in order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. It would be the unfinished business of the morning hour, but not the unfinished business of Thursday last, which now comes up in regular order.

Mr. CLAY. It was not taken up in the morning hour. It was at half past one o'clock. The bill was being discussed when it went over.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I understand the motion before the Senate to be to postpone all prior orders, and take up the Indian appropriation bill.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the motion made by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I have only a word to say. The homestead proposition has been before the country for years. It was introduced at an early day of this session. The friends of the measure have given their attention to it, and others on the right and on the left, I think, the time has arrived when we ought to have definite action on the subject. It is proposed to take up the Indian appropriation bill. Is there anything in relation to it that is so pressing on the country? It makes appropriations for the next fiscal year, commencing the 1st of July, 1860. If you pass the bill to-day, it makes no appropriations contingent to meet any emergency now existing; but they commence on the 1st of July next.

But, it seems to me a measure of so much importance as the homestead proposition, affecting thousands, not to say millions, demands as much consideration as appropriation bills which will carry themselves through by their specific gravity. If the Committee on Finance was to throw itself against them and resist their passage, they would pass themselves lives through this House. There is no danger of the appropriation bills. Whenever you want to take money out of the Treasury, to appropriate millions out of the people's pockets, there is no difficulty in getting the appropriation scrip through. Why, then, press them with so much pertinacity to the exclusion of all other bills?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WADE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Briggs, Brown, Chesnut, Clay, Claiborne, Crittenden, Edwards, Hammond, Hemphill, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Lane, Latham, Mason, Polk, Powell, Sebastian, Sill, Tillam, Van Dusen, and Wilson.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bingham, Candler, Clark, Colburn, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Fox, Foster, Grimes, Harlan, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Nicholson, Pugh, Rice, Shepard, Simmons, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—24.

So the motion was not agreed to.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business at the time the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the special order was a bill called up on motion of the Senator from Alabama; and that is now the question before the Senate.

Mr. WADE. I move now to postpone all prior orders, and take up the homestead bill of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CLAY. I trust the Senate will dispatch this little bill. It is one which I am sure appeals as strongly to the justice and more strongly to the charity of the Senate than any which has been considered here for a long time.

Mr. MASON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I paired off with the Senator from Minnesota. (Mr. WILSON.) Do you believe I have given one vote. I shall not vote now, having paired.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bingham, Chandler, Clark, Doolittle, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Fish, Ford, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Harlan, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Nicholson, Pugh, Rice, Stewart, Sumner, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Trumbull, Wallis, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Benjamin, Briggs, Brown, Chas. C. Clay, Cleggman, Crittenden, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Hammond, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Lane, Morgan, Polk, Powell, Sebastian, Sibley, Thompson, and Wigfall—22.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 280) to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain.

MR. THOMSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, April 9, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Thomas H. Stockton.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

ALEXANDER THOMPSON.

MR. PETTIT. On Friday last, House bill No. 567, for the relief of Alexander Thompson, late consul to Maranhão, Brazil, was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Commerce. It appears by the Journal, that it was erroneously referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I ask that the correction be made.

It was so ordered.

BILLS ON LEAVE.

The SPEAKER, Under the rule, the Chair will now proceed to call the States and Territories for the introduction of bills on leave, commencing with the Territory of Nebraska.

WAGON ROADS IN OREGON.

MR. STOUT introduced a bill making a grant of lands, in alternate sections, to the State of Oregon, to aid in the construction of certain wagon roads therein; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SIMON GONOR'S HEIRS.

MR. BOULIGNY introduced a bill confirming the claim of the heirs, legal representatives, and assigns of Simon Gonor to a tract of land; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

J. F. POIRET'S HEIRS.

MR. BOULIGNY also introduced a bill confirming the claim of the heirs, legal representatives, and assigns of Jean Florentine Poiret, (P. P. C.) to a tract of land; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

MR. LEACH, of North Carolina, introduced a bill to repeal an act entitled "An act to regulate the compensation of members of Congress," approved August 16, 1856; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Mileage.

CHARLES RADCLIFF.

MR. WELLS introduced a bill for the relief of Charles Radcliff; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

PASSENGERS AND FREIGHT.

MR. JOHN COCHRANE introduced a bill for excluding all Government vessels, foreign or otherwise, from carrying passengers or freight, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BREAKWATERS AT BUFFALO AND OSWEGO.

MR. SPAULDING introduced a bill to authorize the payment to the State of New York of expenses of the construction of the breakwaters at Buffalo and Oswego; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DAKOTAH LAND DISTRICT.

MR. THIAYER introduced a bill to constitute the Dakota land district, and to provide for the admission to the House of Representatives of a Delegate therefrom; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MR. GROW. I move to reconsider the vote by which that bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It should go to the Committee on Territories.

If I understand it, it proposes to organize a Territory.

MR. THIAYER. It does not propose to organize a Territory. It is to provide for the sale of the public lands.

MR. GROW. Very well. Then I will withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER, By express rule, the motion to reconsider would not be in order.

MICHAEL L. BAILEY.

MR. MORRILL introduced a bill granting a pension to Michael L. Bailey; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PENSION BILL.

MR. WASHBURN, of Maine, introduced a bill giving full pay pensions to the widows of officers, seamen, and marines, who have died or may die in consequence of wounds or injuries received while in the public service; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER having concluded the call for bills on leave, proceeded to call the States and Territories for resolutions, beginning with the Territory of Kansas.

SURVEYOR GENERAL OF WASHINGTON.

MR. STEVENS, of Washington, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of retaining the salary of the surveyor general of Washington Territory, re-elected on the 1st of March, 1859, and to report by bill or otherwise.

BOUNDARIES OF CALIFORNIA.

MR. SCOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to authorize the President of the United States to enter into a convention with the State of California, to run and mark the boundary lines between the territories of the United States and the State of California; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

ARTHUR EDWARDS AND ASSOCIATES.

MR. LEACH, of Michigan, submitted the following resolution; upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 39, being a bill for the relief of Arthur Edwards and associates, and that the same be considered as if it had failed.

MR. HOUSTON. I desire to know whether it will not take two thirds to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of that bill?

The SPEAKER. It will take a two-thirds vote to pass the resolution, as the Chair understands.

MR. HOUSTON. I should like to have the bill and report read.

The bill was read. It directs the Postmaster General to audit and settle the account of Arthur Edwards and his associates, for transporting the United States through mail, in their steamers, during the years 1849 and 1853, and intervening years, from Cleveland, in Ohio, to Detroit, in Michigan, and from Detroit to Cleveland; from Sandusky, in Ohio, to Detroit, in Michigan, and from Detroit to Sandusky; and from Toledo, in Ohio, to Detroit, in Michigan, and from Detroit to Toledo; and to allow and pay them not less than twenty-eight dollars and sixty cents for each and every passage of said steamers between said places, during the aforementioned time, when the mail was on board.

It appears from the report, which was read, that the claimants were the managing owners of the steamboats Arrow, Baltimore, Southerner, John Owen, and Bay City, between the years 1849 and 1853, inclusive; that during that time their boats were employed by the persons having charge of the United States mails to transport the same to and from the following ports on Lake Erie: on steamer Arrow, on Sundays excepted, at both ways, between Sandusky City and Detroit, from the 1st of March to the 1st of December, 1849; also from the 1st of March to the 1st of December, 1850; also from the 1st of March to the 1st of December, 1851; also from the 1st of March to the 1st of December, 1852; and on steamer John Owen, from the 1st of March to the 1st of December, 1853. On steamer John Owen, between Toledo and Detroit, daily, from the 31st of March to the 30th of December, 1851; and on steamer Arrow, from the 31st of December, 1851, to the 31st of December, 1853. On steamer Southerner, between Detroit, Michigan, and Cleveland, Ohio, daily, from the 7th of March to the 21st of November, 1850; also from the 19th of March to the 21st of November, 1851; and on steamer Baltimore, from the 12th of April to the 21st of November, 1852.

They transported both the through and local mails during the above-mentioned periods, but have been paid for transporting the local mails only, at the rates allowed under the order of the Postmaster General of 1st March, 1849, instructing the postmasters to "discharge the mail, to make up and forward mails daily between their respective offices in boats making the greatest expedition, at one cent each for letters, and half a cent each for newspapers, to be paid at the office to which the letters or newspapers were delivered;" notwithstanding the through mails were transported at the request of the Department officials, with the understanding that the claimants should be compensated therefor. That they applied to the Postmaster General for compensation for said service, but he has refused to make such compensation, although, as the claimants are informed and believe, it has actually been done in several other like cases. That, whatever may have been the usage, the claimants received and carried said through mail at the request of the postmasters and special agents of the Department, and have faithfully transported the same during the time above specified, and the Government, having derived the benefits and advantages of such transportation, are bound to pay a reasonable and fair compensation therefor. That the service was performed, as claimed, with the sanction of the Post Office Department and under the express orders of its officials. The proof thereof is abundant and conclusive.

It is also clear and indisputable that the claimants have incurred no compensation for transporting said local and through mail beyond what was allowed for carrying the local mail alone, and the ground assumed by the Department is, that the amount allowed for the local mail was understood to be in full for the whole service. No evidence appears to sustain this assumption of the Department. On the contrary, the testimony of the postmasters and special agents upon that point shows that the captains of the claimants' boats uniformly demanded pay for transporting the through mail, in compensation for the local mail, and of which demands the Department was advised at the time.

The Court of Claims declined to report a bill for the benefit of the claimants, because the express contract testified to by A. C. Harris, the special agent of the Post Office Department, made by him with the claimants, and authorized, as he avers, by the Post Office Department, does not appear by the testimony to have been expressly authorized by the Postmaster General himself. But the committee are of opinion that when an agent of the Post Office Department testifies that a contract made by him, within the fair scope of his agency, was sanctioned by the Post Office Department, it may fairly be inferred, in the absence of any testimony to the contrary, that it was authorized by the Postmaster General himself, the head of that Department. That the service was performed the court had no doubt, but for any compensation beyond what the claimants received for the local mails "they must depend upon the discretion of Congress." The equitable right of the claimants to compensation for the service was, therefore, not denied, and the decision of the Court of Claims should not, in the opinion of the committee, prejudice the appeal to Congress for a just remuneration. That the service which the claimants performed under the assurance and expectation of remuneration was in the interest of the Department and useful to the public, and such as would have been incumbent upon the Department to supply, aside from the local mail service, there can be no doubt.

It appears, from the testimony of Mr. Harris, that the captains of the claimants' boats used every means within their power to facilitate the through mails; and that it often occurred that the mail could be got to the claimants on the arrival of the boats by the time of leaving; and in such cases the captains, at his request, delayed starting their boats from half an hour to an hour and a half, until the mails could be put on board. Every accommodation, therefore, seems to have been extended to the claimants; and the Department, by its efficient or regular service could have been performed had they been regular contractors. In view of all the facts in the case, the committee believe that the claimants are justly entitled to a suitable recompense for their services. The amount paid for carrying the local mail appears to have been a very moderate one, from the fact that it was for letters; but one third of the amount, (namely: three cents,) to which the Department was limited by law, by computing the number of letters the claimants bore during which they carried the mail, it appears that the average compensation received (being for the whole time $10,544 95) would be less than three dollars and seventy-five cents per passage. Calculating the through mail to be (at the average of the testimony) seven and five-eighths times as fast as the local mail, at the ratio of compensation received, it would amount to $28 60 per trip, which the committee believe should be paid to the claimants for said service.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I make a point of order upon that resolution, if I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers a resolution to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the consideration of a certain bill, and bring it before the House.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So I understood. I now make the point of order, that the gentleman has no right during the morning hour, at this time, to move to discharge the committee from the consideration of the bill, and put it on its passage. No business is in order, under the new rule, during the morning hour, except the call of the States and Territories for bills and resolutions; and I submit that the gentleman has no right to move to bring up a bill to be put on its passage until the expiration of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the motion of the gentleman to be in order. It is not a motion to suspend the rules; it is a resolution brought in by the gentleman from Michigan, under the call of that State for resolutions; and the Chair supposes that, in order to pass the resolution, he must have a two-thirds vote, the effect being to change the order of business.

Mr. BURNETT. Suppose I propose to debate the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has called the previous question.

Mr. BURNETT. Then that destroys the effect of the new rule which we have adopted. If a gentleman may take the floor and move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of a bill, and put it on its passage, the rule which we have adopted for the offering of resolutions during the morning hour, on each alternate Monday, is of no avail.

Mr. HOUSTON. It seems to me that if the Chair will look for a moment at the point presented, possibly he may reach the conclusion that the resolution which the gentleman from Michigan offers is really nothing but a motion. If that be so, and if I have the right under this new rule to offer a resolution, but not to make a motion, I cannot take advantage of a call of the States for resolutions, and introduce a motion in that shape. If it would not be in order to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of that bill, and thereby bring it into the House, and put it upon its passage, then it would not be in order to introduce a resolution upon a call of the States for the purpose of accomplishing the same thing; for that would operate—though not so intended—as a fraud upon the rules. I think it is important for the success of the new House of the United States that the Chair would rule correctly upon this point; and I am inclined to think that if he will consider the point which has been made, he will decide the motion to be out of order.

The SPEAKER. Upon the present understanding of the Chair, he decides the resolution to be in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Under the new rule?

The SPEAKER. There is no change in the rule, so far as the decision of this question is concerned, that the Chair can perceive.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The decision of the Chair, if carried out, would defeat the entire object of the new rule, and deny to the other States and Territories which have not been called, the privilege of submitting their resolutions. If the morning hour had expired, then the resolution would be in order; but if the morning hour has not expired, then, I think, his decision is evidently wrong. I would therefore ask the Speaker to have the rule read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the rule to be read.

The 26th rule was read, as follows:

"All the States and Territories shall be called for bills on leave and resolutions on each alternate Monday during each session of Congress; and if necessary to secure the object on said days, all resolutions which shall give rise to debate shall be overruled, and the rules of the House already established; and the whole of said days shall be appropriated to bills on leave and resolutions, until all the bills and resolutions are called through. And the Speaker shall first call the States and Territories for bills on leave; and all bills so introduced during the first hour after the call of the States and Territories shall be referred to the appropriate committees: Provided, however, That a bill so introduced and referred shall not be brought back into the House until the motion to reconsider it."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the Speaker will hardly now insist on the decision which he has pronounced.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask that the practice of the House under the rule may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The previous question may be moved on a resolution submitted under a call of the States, and thus prevent the debate which, under the rules, requires it to lie over."—Journal, 28th, p. 102; 1, pp. 110, 128.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the decision he has made to be founded upon the practice of the House. The Chair decides the resolution to be in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not understand the gentleman from Georgia as questioning the practice of the House under the old rule. The point is that under the new rule it would not be in order to make a motion to suspend the rules during the morning hour to bring this bill before the House; and if the effect of the resolution is to accomplish the same thing, then the resolution is not in order.

Mr. MOORE, of Kentucky. I submit the question of the motion that no debate is in order.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BURNETT. I understand that it will take two thirds to pass the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I ask if it will not take two thirds to second the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I call for tellers on according the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CASTRA and Cox were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—aye, 75; nay, 81; a further count not having been demanded.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined, and had found truly enrolled; bills of the following title, which were signed by the Speaker:

An act (S. No. 250) for the relief of Kate D. Teylor, widow of the late Breck Captain Oliver H. P. Taylor.

An act (S. No. 71) for the relief of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; and

An act (S. No. 233) for the relief of Alice Hunt, widow of Thomas Hunt.

ARTHUR EDWARDS AND ASSOCIATES—AGAIN.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do I understand the Speaker to say that the vote about to be taken is upon the introduction of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is not upon the introduction of the resolution; but upon the passage of the resolution. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and two thirds must be had before the resolution can be adopted. If the resolution is adopted, it will have the effect to bring the bill before the House for its action.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then let the resolution be read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 136; nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Charles F. Adams, Greys Adams, Admrs. Adair, Allen, Alfrey, Thomas L. Anderson, William C. Anderson, Adam A. Baldwin, B. B. Bagley, John B. Baker, Butler, Burlingame, Brainerd, Bryson, Briggs, Buford, Blake, Boies, Boulogne, Butterfield, Campbell, Carey, Carter, John L. Clark, Collier, Cook, Cooper, Cowen, Covode, Cox, Curtis, Davidson, H. Winter Davis, Dawes, Delano, Scott, Dunn, Edgerton, Edmunds, Edwards, Elliot, Dwyer, English, Elder, Farrar, Farnish, Ferry, Foster, Foster, Frank, French, Giddens, John G. Gurley, Hale, Hall, Hamilton, Hammon, George T. Harris, Hartley, Batson, Helms, Hickman, Howard, Howard, Humphrey, Hutchins, Jankin, Francis W. Kellogg, William Kellogg, Kenyon, Kilgore, Larnache, LeVell C. Leach, James M. Leach, Lee, Loomis, Lovett, Malster, Marston, Charles H. Martin, Maynard, McMillan, McKee, McKnight, McPherson, Montgomery, Lebas, T. Moore, Moulton, Moore, Morse, Nelson, Nichols, Nixon, Olin, Perry, Keith, Porter, Potter, Pottle, Quarles, Rice, Christopher Robinson, Rogers, Rusk, Stansbury, Scott, Seelye, Sedgwick, Seward, Sherman, Sigsbee, Spaulding, Williams, Stoddard, Stokes, Stratton, Tappan, Thayer, Thayer, Thompson, Train, Trimble, Van Wyck, Walker, Walcott, Watson, Caldwell, C. Washburne, Webster, Wells, Wilson, Windom, Woodruff, and Woodson—136.

NAYS—Messrs. Beach, Brewster, Barry, Clegg, Clifton, Cobb, Burton Cragg, Crawford, Curry, Fiske, Garrett, Gurnell, Hawkins, Holman, Houston, Hughes, Jackson, Johnson, Keith, Lester, Leach, Legan, McCarren, McKee, Miles, Milton, Sydenham Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Noell, Phelps, Fryer, Pugh, James S. Buchanan, Radin, Sumner, William N. Smith, Sigler, Stillworth, Stevens, Thomas, Underwood, Vailandham, Whiteley, and Winslow—46.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the vote,

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, stated that his colleague, Mr. M. RATIN, was called home by the severe illness of his wife.

Mr. BOULIGNY stated that his colleague, Mr. LAWRENCE, was paired with Mr. CASE.

Mr. NIBLACK stated that Mr. STEWART, of Maryland, was paired with Mr. MILLWARD until Thursday next.

Mr. AVERY stated that he was paired with Mr. KILLINGER for to-day.

The vote was then announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now before the House for action. Shall it be read a third time?

Mr. LEACH, of Michigan. I call for the previous question on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman from Michigan to permit me to offer an amendment to the bill. This bill, sir, ought not to pass in its present shape.

The SPEAKER, of Maine. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BURNETT. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw the call for the previous question, and permit me to move an amendment, which will serve to prevent any fraud being practiced upon the Government.

Mr. LEACH, of Michigan. I must insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has; but the main question has been ordered, and the bill must now be disposed of.

Mr. BURNETT. Has not the main question been ordered only on discharging the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill?

The SPEAKER. No, sir; the main question is ordered on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. Is it in order to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the main question was ordered on the third reading of the bill?

If it is, I would ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BURNETT] may get his amendment before the House.

Mr. LEACH, of Michigan. I cannot yield for any such purpose as that.

Mr. MALLORY. If that amendment is not allowed to come in, and this bill is to be pushed pertinaciously upon the House, without a chance to perfect it, I do not know but that I will be forced to vote against it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish the Chair to tell the House whether the last vote was not upon discharging the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. That was on the resolution itself, and when that resolution was adopted, the bill was brought before the House.

Mr. HATTON. There are a number of gentlemen who would like to hear that bill again read, in order that we may accurately understand its terms.

The bill was again read.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. LEACH, of Michigan. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The previous question has exhausted itself upon the third reading of the bill; and I ask whether, the morning hour having expired, it is not in order to demand that we shall proceed to the consideration of the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That does not change the nature of my proposition. The main question has not been ordered on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is before the House in the regular order of business, and it must be disposed of.

Mr. BURNETT. I submit to the Chair whether, the morning hour having expired, and the main question not being ordered upon the passage of the bill, the bill is now before the House? The previous question has exhausted itself upon the third reading of the bill. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CRAWFORD) has been answered that the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired; but it appears to the Chair that the bill must be disposed of.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Can I move that we shall proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The morning is in order except the passage of this bill.

Mr. HATTON. I call the gentleman to order. The previous question has been demanded; and debate is not in order.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire again to appeal to the gentleman from Michigan to withdraw his call for the previous question, in order that I may propose an amendment to the bill. I want to perfect the bill before it is passed. I want to protect the Government against fraud.

Mr. LEACH, of Michigan. I insist on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. BURNETT. The amendment I propose is to authorize the Postmaster General to require proof of each mail carried.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. That is, in the bill already.

Mr. BURNETT. No, sir; the bill only provides that he shall not allow more than twenty-eight dollars a trip.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. COLFAX. I hold in my hand the affidavit of the special agent of the Post Office Department who ordered these mails to be carried. Mr. Edwards did this service by instruction of the Post Office Department.

Mr. BURNETT. I object to debate, unless both sides can be heard.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 128; yeas 49; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Adams, Aldrich, Allen, Almy, Williams, C. Anderson, Ashley, Babbitt, Banks, Bingham, Blair, Blake, Boister, Boulogne, Brainerd, Brighton, Briggs, Brinson, Buffum, Burdick, Burlingame, Butterfield, Caudwell, Carter, Chase, John R. Clark, Coffey, Conkling, Cooper, Corwin, Covode, Cox, James T. Craig, Curtis, Davidson, H. Winter, Davis, Deady, Deane, Deane, Conkling, Edwards, Elder, Eli, Elmer, Farnsworth, Ferry, Florence, Foster, French, Gilmer, Good, Green, Garfield, Hale, Hamilton, Harts, Hild, Himes, Hiram, Hiram, Hindman, Howard, Hughes, Humphrey, Junkin, Francis W. Kellogg, William Kellogg, Kenyon, Kilgore, Larrabee, DeVitt C. Leach, Lee, Loomis, Lovejoy, Mallory, Mason, Maynard, McCreeland, McKean, McKim, Mr. Pherson, West, J. Moore, Moorhead, Moore, A. Isaac, Morris, Morse, Nelson, Niblack, Nixon, Olin, Pendleton, Perry, Pettit, Porter, Potter, Potts, Reagan, Rice, Rice, Christopher Robinson, Royce, Russ, Schwartz, Sherman, Sedgwick, Sherman, Spaulding, Stevens, William Stewart, Stokes, Stratton, Tappan, Thacker, Thompson, Train, Tremble, Van Wyck, Waldman, Walter, Wells, C. Washburn, J. Washburn, Webster, Wells, Wilson, Woodruff, and Wolcott—128.

NOES.—Messrs. Boyce, Bennett, Burnett, Clifton, Cobb, Burton, Craig, Crawford, Curry, Edgar, Johnson, Hayes, Russell, Schwartz, Sherman, Sedgwick, Sherman, Spaulding, Stevens, William Stewart, Stokes, Stratton, Tappan, Thacker, Thompson, Train, Tremble, Van Wyck, Waldman, Walter, Wells, C. Washburn, J. Washburn, Webster, Wells, Wilson, Woodruff, and Wolcott—49.

So the bill was passed.

During the vote, Mr. HILL stated that, not having an opportunity to understand the merits of the bill, he voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HOARD stated that, for the same reason, he likewise voted in the negative.

The vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. LEACH, of Michigan, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEAMBOAT ANTELOPE.

Mr. MALLORY. I was absent when my State was called, and I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill to change the name of the steamboat Antelope.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second time; and referred to the Committee on Commerce and Canals.

SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. MORSE. I ask leave to present a resolution.

Mr. WINSLOW. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the report made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COVODE) from the special committee on alleged corruptions at elections.

Mr. MORSE. I have the floor. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to communicate to this House, at the next session, copies of all correspondence, copies of all correspondence with foreign Powers, and copies of all correspondence with our naval officers and consuls on the west coast of Africa, relating to the subject of the African slave trade, with the instructions given said officers and consuls not heretofore sent to either House of Congress; a copy of the instructions adopted by England and France for the government of their naval officers in identifying the nationality of vessels suspected of being engaged in the slave trade on the coast of Africa, and communicated to the Government of the United States, with a request to assist with them in their adoption; the number of slaves taken and sent to the United States by our African squadrons, specifying the number condemned in our courts as slave traders, and not heretofore communicated, and the number, and any later in part of the United States, before sailing for the coast of Africa, or after their return from said coast, specifying the number condemned, the instructions given to officers of the United States in ports of call, and the instructions are stated out in reference to the prevention of the slave trade; and also all information of the President whether any further legislation is necessary to secure a more effective fitting out for slave trade voyages in ports of the United States, and for the punishment of persons engaged therein; and any information in possession of the United States which will tend to show the extent of the African slave trade, the mode of carrying it, and the best and most efficient means of extinguishing it.

Mr. BOCCOCK. With the consent of the gentleman from Maine, I will insert in that resolution a clause to this effect:

Also, that there shall be communicated to this House, at the next session, copies of all correspondence, copies of all correspondence with foreign Powers, and copies of all correspondence with our naval officers and consuls on the west coast of Africa, relating to the subject of the African slave trade, where said vessels were built, in, or out of port, and, by whom fitted out.

Mr. MORSE. Certainly. We want all the information we can get on the subject. I accept the amendment.

Mr. RUST. I ask the gentleman to have inserted in his resolution a clause calling for information of the places of nativity and present residences of the commanders, crews, and owners of vessels so condemned.

Mr. MORSE. I accept the modification. I am in favor of getting all the information possible upon the subject before the House.

Mr. KEITT. As far as the resolution has developed itself, I will not object to it per se. In order, however, that amendments should be put upon the resolution properly, I suggest that it be laid over. If that be not agreed to, I must object.

Mr. MORSE. Then I move that the rules be suspended, in order that I may introduce the resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Maine cannot do that, if the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WINSLOW) insists upon taking up the privileged question.

Mr. MORSE. I have been referred to the SPEAKER. The Chair has not entertained that question.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Chair cannot avoid entertaining it, if the gentleman from North Carolina insists upon it. The gentleman from North Carolina called on that privileged question before this resolution was read. If he desires, he can insist that it shall be now proceeded with.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is in order before the House.

Mr. MORSE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Chair decide that the gentleman from North Carolina cannot take the floor on his privileged question?

The SPEAKER. That question will come next.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am very glad that the Chair has adopted the miller's rule—first come, first served. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes the ground that is sufficient unto the day of the evil thereof. [Renewed laughter.] When the gentleman from North Carolina presses his point it will be time enough for the Chair to decide.

Mr. HOUSTON. I press it myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the resolution is in order.

Mr. KEITT. I withdraw the objection. My only object was to get the amendments in.

Mr. MORSE. I call the previous question upon the resolution.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Let the resolution, as amended, be read.

The resolution, as amended, was read.

Mr. HINDMAN. I desire to offer an amendment. I move to amend by adding—

And also the cost per annum, since the date of the Ashburnton massacre, of the African squadron, the number of slaves on board of captured vessels, and the cost of their support and return to Africa.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. MORSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

Mr. GROW. I desire to ask the consent of the House to set aside some days for the transaction of territorial business. I would suggest Wednesday and Thursday, the 21st and 22d days of May. But I will defer to the question of the admission of Kansas, which comes up to-morrow.

No objection being offered, an order to that effect was made.

Mr. WINSLOW obtained the floor.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I desire, before the gentleman from North Carolina raises his question of privilege, that he will allow me to introduce a bill for reference. I listened attentively when the States were being called, but I did not hear Illinois called.

Mr. WINSLOW. I have no objection, if the House has not.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, then introduced a bill to repeal part of an act therein specified; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I desire also to offer a resolution.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object to the gentleman from North Carolina holding the floor and farming it out in this way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot yield the floor if it is objected to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKENS, their Secretary, informing the House that the President had approved and signed an act (S. No. 46) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to make presents to the abolitionists Helen Blood and Sarah Bond, of Oswego, in the State of New York.

Also, that the Senate had passed an act (No. 172) concerning the courts of the United States in the district of Arkansas, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

EXECUTIVE INFLUENCE, &c.

Mr. WINSLOW. I now ask that the report of the select committee, of which Mr. COVODE is chairman, be taken up.

Mr. HICKMAN. Before anything is done upon that matter, I trust that the gentleman from North Carolina will allow me to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary upon the matter of the President's protest to the action of that committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I object.

Mr. HICKMAN. It will take but a few minutes. I desire to have the report read and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WINSLOW. I must object to having the report read to the House. I will not object to having it printed.

Mr. HICKMAN. I suggest that the matter I now desire to bring before the House is a matter of the highest privilege. The Committee on the Judiciary was authorized to report at any time, and I desire to make that report now, to have it read, to have an order made to print it, and then to postpone the consideration of it until some future day. It will take but a very few minutes, and I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. WINSLOW. I know of no degrees of privilege in this House. All privileges question stand upon the same footing. I am willing that the report should be printed without being read.

Mr. COVODE. I suppose I shall be entitled to the floor upon the matter called up by the gentleman from North Carolina. I will move to postpone the consideration of the report, for the purpose of allowing Mr. HICKMAN to get his report in to be printed. I move to postpone the consideration of the report until Wednesday week.

Mr. WINSLOW. I know of the floor, and I call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the gentleman has a right to have the report read.

Mr. COVODE. And then I will move to postpone it for a week.

Mr. WINSLOW. If the gentleman can get the floor to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I rise to a question of order. I cannot hear a word of what is going on, as there are some thirty or more members upon the floor, all talking. I object to any further proceeding until the House is brought to order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will preserve order, and take their seats. It is very difficult to hear, when there is so much talking in the room. The point made by the gentleman from Georgia is that one and we must have order. The Chair is crying out "Order!" all the time.

Order being restored, the Clerk read the majority and minority reports.

Mr. WINSLOW took the floor.

Mr. COVODE. I was going to state that, as this report—

Mr. WINSLOW. I cannot give way for any motion.

Mr. COVODE. I can make a motion if I have the floor.

Mr. WINSLOW. I have the floor, and I cannot give way to any motion. If the gentleman wants to address the House, I will give way for that purpose.

Mr. COVODE. I will address the House, and then make my motion.

Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman cannot do that. It would be taking an unfair advantage.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WINSLOW. I will yield to the gentleman from New York in a moment.

Mr. COVODE. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether it is in order for a minority of a committee to bring the majority report before the House, thereby controlling the action of the House upon it?

Mr. WINSLOW. I suppose it is the right of anybody to call up anything at his pleasure. I would for the chairman of the committee to do so; and, as he did not call it up, I took it upon myself to do it, as I think I have the right to do.

Mr. COVODE. My object in postponing this matter is to give opportunity to Mr. HICKMAN to get in his report. I am satisfied that the investigation upon that subject will cover this whole ground. Therefore, with the leave of the gentleman—

Mr. WINSLOW. I cannot give way to any motion.

Mr. COVODE. After having made inquiry, to see whether this matter was going to give rise to debate, and being informed that it would, I suggested that I would move to postpone it to a day certain, to allow Mr. HICKMAN to get in his report from the Judiciary Committee. I am satisfied that the report of the Judiciary Committee will cover the whole ground covered by the minority report in this case.

Mr. WINSLOW. The report of the Judiciary Committee cannot possibly give rise to a question at all similar to this.

Mr. HOUSTON. This question of privilege involves the right of a witness.

Mr. HICKMAN. I rise to a point of order, and I wish to have it submitted to the House. It is in the minority of the committee to have the right, under parliamentary law, to make a report and to produce the report of the majority and their own at the same time, and ask the House to take action on them. I raise the point, that this whole matter is regularly presented to the House, and I make a decision of the Chair upon it.

Mr. WINSLOW. The minority of the committee had leave to report on Friday, and this morning was assigned for its consideration, as the Chair will recollect.

Mr. HOUSTON, of Maine. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania had the floor, and that when he made the report, it was postponed until to-day. And to-day it was competent for the gentleman from North Carolina, or for any other gentleman, to move to take it up, but when he did, I submit, the gentleman who made the report of the majority of the committee is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WINSLOW. The Chair has assigned the floor already to another gentleman.

Mr. HOUSTON, of Maine. It seems to me that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor whenever the report is taken up; and I understand that he does claim the floor to make a motion in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania claim the floor upon that ground?

Mr. COVODE. I do.

Mr. WINSLOW. How can the gentleman get the floor when the Chair has assigned it to me? Under what rule of the House is it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that, under the rules of the House, the proposer of a proposition is entitled to the floor whenever the proposition is taken up, if he claims it. Such has been the practice under the rules.

Mr. WINSLOW. I ask for the reading of the rule in regard to assigning the floor.

The SPEAKER. The 34th rule, as follows: "No member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee; but a member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close the debate. Provided, That where debate is closed by order of the House, any member desiring to speak in connection therewith must explain any amendment he may offer, &c."

Mr. WINSLOW. That is not the rule I desired to have read. I asked for the reading of the rule in reference to assigning the floor to the member first presenting the question.

Mr. COVODE. It is under the rule which has been read that I claim the floor.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Until a member states for what purpose he rises, the Speaker cannot tell whether he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WINSLOW. The member stated distinctly that he rose to a privileged motion, and the Speaker assigned the floor to him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to state his view of the question. The gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. Wadsworth) has addressed the Chair, and says he rises to a privileged question. What that privileged question is, it is impossible for the Chair to tell, but as the gentleman says he rises to a privileged question, the Chair gives him the floor. It seems, then, that the gentleman rises to a subject on which he would give the gentleman in the House the right to open and close debate. Now the question is, whether the mere fact of the gentleman from North Carolina getting the floor under these circumstances can deprive the gentleman from Pennsylvania of his right, he being chairman of the committee that reports the proposition. It is the decided opinion of the Chair that he cannot be deprived of it.

Mr. WINSLOW. Suppose the chairman of the committee does not choose to open the debate; can nobody else speak?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as the proposer of the matter, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRANCH. I submit this as a matter of fact and of order at the same time. As I understand it, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of this special committee, reported this matter on Friday last, and had it, on his motion, postponed until to-day.

Mr. COVODE. No, sir; upon my motion. I wanted the question postponed till Thursday next, for the purpose of letting Mr. HICKMAN's report come in, believing that it would cover the whole of the legal grounds involved in this matter.

Mr. BRANCH. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on Friday last, reported a measure, and moved to have it postponed to a given day. The fact of the House having overruled the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and ordered the matter to be taken up at once, settles all. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submitted a motion to dispose, temporarily at least, of the question which he had brought before the House; and I now submit to the Chair that the fact of his having made that motion has satisfied the requirement of that rule which gives him the right to open the debate. In parliamentary language, debate does not mean the discussion of a question on its merits, but it means the making of a motion to dispose of it.

Mr. HATTON. I rise to a question of order. Mr. BRANCH. I am on the floor on a point of order.

Mr. HATTON. I submit that, after the Chair has decided the question, it is not in order for the gentleman from North Carolina to debate it.

Mr. BRANCH. Submit to the Chair whether, while I am on the floor on a point of order, another member can rise to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. No, sir; not if the gentleman is proceeding in order.

Mr. HATTON. I do not understand the gentleman from North Carolina as making a point of order. He, sir, is discussing the propriety of the decision of the Chair already made, which, under the rules, he has no right to do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina will please state his point of order.

Mr. BRANCH. I have stated all I wish to state.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HATTON. If gentlemen wish to appeal from the decision of the Chair, let them do so. They have the right, in this manner, to be raising a debating society of the House, especially as there is nothing before it to discuss.

Mr. WINSLOW. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the chairman cannot be deprived of his right to open and close debate on this question.

Mr. BRANCH. Does the Chair decide that the motion to postpone is not the opening of debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not received any such point of order.

Mr. BRANCH. The point of order that I submitted was, that as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on reporting this measure, moved to postpone to a day certain, he thereby exercised his right to open and close debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania claims that he has a right to open the debate; and while he has the floor to do so, he has the right to make whatever motion he thinks proper.

Mr. WINSLOW. The Chair has not stated my point; which is, that the floor having been assigned to a member, and that member occupying it, it cannot be taken from him. And then, allow me to state, with all due respect to the Chair—I do entertain a great deal of respect for the Chair—that it is exercising an extent of arbitrary

Mr. HICKMAN. Certainly not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the majority and minority reports are received, and they will now be read.

Mr. HICKMAN then read the report of the Committee on the Judiciary; and subsequently the minority views of Mr. HORTON and of Mr. TAYLOR were submitted.

Mr. HINDMAN. (interrupting the reading of Mr. TAYLOR's report.) If the gentleman from Louisiana will permit me, I would suggest that he suspend the reading. It is now quite late, and he may go on and finish the reading in the morning.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will do so if such be the wish of the House.

Mr. HICKMAN. I have no objection to that course; but I wish, before the House adjourns, to move that the majority and minority reports be printed, and that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until to-morrow week, after the morning hour.

Mr. HOUSTON. If my friend from Louisiana wishes to finish the reading of the report, of course he has the floor and has the liberty to do so.

Mr. HICKMAN. Of course I do not wish to interfere with his reading of the report.

Mr. HOUSTON. If, however, he wishes that the House should now adjourn, and finish also reading in the morning, I think we should adjourn.

Mr. TAYLOR. I yield to the wishes of the House. If they wish to adjourn now, I will give way, with the understanding that I have the right to finish in the morning.

Mr. HINDMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana will understand that I am desirous, as are we all, to hear his report. I asked him to give way merely on account of the lateness of the hour.

Mr. HICKMAN. With the understanding that the gentleman from Louisiana shall have permission to read his report in the morning, I will now move that the reports be printed, and be postponed until to-morrow week.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I hope that day will not be fixed. I move to amend that motion by striking out "one week from to-morrow," and inserting "the 10th day of May." Many of us will be completely unable to attend the Charleston convention.

Mr. HICKMAN. I have no objection to that. Mr. MAYNARD. I hope that day will not be fixed. Some of us will desire to be absent in Baltimore at that time who may wish to take part in the debate.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest that it would be better to allow the matter to lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. HICKMAN. I prefer to insist on my motion that all the reports be printed and postponed until to-morrow week.

Mr. PHELPS. I would ask the gentleman to include in his motion to print, also the special message of the President upon the subject, and the resolutions constituting the committee.

Mr. HICKMAN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the question of postponement had better lie over till to-morrow.

Mr. GROW. To-morrow is the day fixed for the Kansas bill. I want it understood that this is now to interfere with it.

Mr. HICKMAN. I will withdraw that portion of the motion which relates to postponement.

The motion to print the reports, together with the special message of the President and the resolutions on which the Governor's committee was constituted, was adopted.

Mr. HINDMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And thereupon (at ten minutes past five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

Tuesday, April 10, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GREENE.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a statement showing the amount of revenue collected annually in each collection district from June 30, 1854, to June 30, 1859, together with the amount expended and the number of persons employed in each district; which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion by Mr. HAMLIN to print the report was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 29) for the relief of Arthur Edwards and his associates.

ARREST OF FRANK B. SANBORN.

Mr. LANE. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 82) to amend the fourth section of the act for the admission of Oregon into the Union.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will allow us to present memorial.

Mr. LANE. This is a bill that nobody will object to, I am sure; and it is very necessary that it should be passed; but I will yield.

Mr. SUMNER. If it is only for a moment, I shall not object.

Mr. LANE. I yield the floor.

Mr. SUMNER. I have a memorial, Mr. President, from Frank B. Sanborn, of Concord, in Massachusetts, setting forth a gross attempt to kidnap by certain persons pretending to act in the name of the Senate of the United States.

The memorial is authenticated by his affidavit before a notary public. It sets forth that on the evening of the 3d of April, certain persons who had been prowling about his neighborhood, under the shelter of night, with a fraudulent pretense, drew him to his door, seized him, handcuffed him, and then by force undertook to convey him to a carriage.

By the courageous interposition of a refined lady, (his sister,) neighbors were aroused; the village was next aroused by the ringing of bells, and the great friend of the oppressed in our country—our great civil corpus—arrived on the ground. By the intervention of that writ, he was taken from the custody of the kidnappers. The next day a hearing was had before the supreme court of Massachusetts; and Chief Justice Shaw, in giving his opinion, pronounced the justice of Massachusetts, whose opinions, I believe, are respected in every part of the country, representing the full bench, without undertaking to pass upon the question of jurisdiction in the Senate in this matter, went on to declare that the power delegated to the Senate by the Congress of the United States could not be delegated to another, and that therefore all these proceedings were void, and the prisoner was discharged.

Now, Mr. President, this act, it seems to me, is conspicuous both from the person against whom it was directed and from the place where it was attempted. It was directed against Mr. Sanborn, a quiet citizen, engaged in the instruction of youth, a scholar of excellent attainments, of perfect purity, and much beloved by his friends and neighbors. He was arrested in Concord, in his own seizure was once attempted, which began that revolutionary contest which ended in independence. I submit, Mr. President, that a person like Mr. Sanborn, having suffered this outrage at the hands of persons claiming to act in the name of the Senate, has a right to redress in this body, and I submit still further, that this body owes something to its own character; it ought to wash its hands of such an outrage. I offer his memorial and ask its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary; and that the Senate may better understand it, I think it ought to be printed. I move also its printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, if there be no objection. The question on printing will be taken up by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MASON. I shall, of course, not make the slightest objection to the presentation of this memorial. I do not know its contents; but I would object, if it be in order, to its being printed or distinguished from any other memorial that comes from any citizen of the United States. The statement that has fallen from the Senator from Massachusetts, as the facts cannot be known to him, I suppose is a statement based on what is contained in the paper. I do not know what the contents of the paper are; but I know that the following are the facts, so far as the Senate is concerned, or the committee of the Senate, at whose instance this process issued.

This man, Sanborn, was in correspondence, either with the man who was not long since hung in Virginia for his conduct as a traitor and murderer at Harper's Ferry, or with some of his associates; I do not recollect which. I do not remember now the extent of his correspondence. A correspondence that was found with the papers taken on the person and among the effects of Brown, at the time he was captured; and thus his name, and his connection with that affair, whatever it was, was brought to the knowledge of the committee of this body. He was summoned in the usual manner—by a letter of request to appear before the committee, as a witness, to give whatever information might be in his power connected with the inquiry submitted to the committee. He wrote a letter to the chairman of the committee, acknowledging the summons, and protesting that he had no disposition in the world to be disrespectful or discourteous to the Senate; but, as far as I recollect his letter, which I have not seen now for two months nearly, he either said that he would attend, or that he would give reasons for non-attendance; I do not remember which. Eventually, however, he refused to attend.

Mr. FITCH. The chairman will recollect that the reason for not attending was, a pretended fear that his life was in danger here.

It is a matter of course that this was a part of it. Amongst the other things alleged in his letter was, that he had reason to apprehend that if he came to Washington he would be subjected to personal violence. There were some vague intimations of that sort, which I confess I did not consider.

However, it resulted that he refused to attend on the summons of the committee; and, at the instance of the committee, a warrant was issued by the Senate against him—as against certain other persons—to be taken into custody and to arrest him and bring him here for contemptary. The Sergeant-at-Arms was sent to Boston—I do not recollect whether with the warrant for Sanborn; I presume, though, it was, but I do not remember particularly about that; he was sent to Boston, at any rate, some way. He was there, I recollect, and the witnesses against whom the warrants were directed after a reasonable time, that he should depose his authority to the marshal of the United States at Boston, or some of his deputies. The Sergeant-at-Arms, as is known, did treat one witness somewhat roughly. He afterwards ascertained that this man Sanborn, his authority was depuied by him, as I presumed he had a clear right to do—I did not examine the subject very particularly—to one of the deputy marshals of Massachusetts. So far the facts are known to me.

Now it appears, by a subsequent correspondence with the marshal of the United States at Boston, and with the district attorney of the United States at Boston, that when the warrant of arrest was served upon this man Sanborn, at Concord, he refused to attend, and he afterwards refused to attend them, by personal resistance; and, as they inform me, it was not until they found that it was impossible to take him under the warrant, except by force, that he was subjected, as he ought to have been subjected, to the confinement of his person in the city of Boston. He was afterwards informed by the correspondence with the marshal and with the district attorney of the United States, rescued by a mob in the town of Concord; and after he had been taken out of the possession of the officer who had him in custody, a writ of habeas corpus was issued; and, upon the trial of that writ of habeas corpus in the city of Boston, he was discharged by the judges of the supreme court there, whose opinion I have read—I presume it was a correct copy which I saw printed in the Boston papers. He was again taken into custody, without inquiry into the authority for making the arrest, they were satisfied in law that if the Sergeant-at-Arms was properly warranted in the arrest by the process of the Senate, he could not depuie that authority; and upon that ground Sanborn was discharged on the habeas corpus.

I think these facts are due in reply to the statements that have fallen from the Senator from Massachusetts. What subsequent proceedings may yet be taken, I am not advised. I have not yet received the formal return made by the officer, the deputy of the Sergeant-at-Arms, upon the warrant; but I understand that it will be here in the course, probably, of the day—in some few hours. It is delayed until they can get certified copies of the proceedings in court. When that arrives, I will be further advised.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the memorial read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate of the United States:
Respectfully represents, P. B. Sanborn, of Concord, Massachusetts, that when he, as a benighted man, refused to obey the summons of the "select committee" of the Senate, and has desired, in a legal and proper manner, to contest his rights as a citizen, of which he has before this informed the Senate, by the memorial of February 18, 1860, submitted to them on the 27th of February, 1860, after persons claiming to act under the authority of the Senate, have unwarrantably usurped power, and disgraced themselves, by their acts and doings; that on the 27th of the said 18th of April instant, between the hours of nine and ten o'clock, p. m., he was called to the door of his own house by a young man, who handed him a fraudulent letter, and that, while in the act of taking this, he was seized by another man; that to his often-repeated demands for the names and addresses of these men he could get no sufficient or definite answer; and that, on his refusing to go with them, unless he could see the precept under which they were acting, he was violently seized, his arms were torn from him, handcuffed, and there, without hat or shoes, was dragged by these men and three others, who had been called by a white dog, from his house into the streets, where he was violently pushed, lifted, and shoved to and upon a carriage, which was standing in front of his house; that great efforts on his part, assisted by those of others, were made for preventing these men from placing him in the carriage, and, his hands being given to his neighbors and friends, he was again surrounded by them, when, in the confusion and tumult of himself and others, the ruffians finally gave their names as "Fessenden," "McNair," "McNair," "McNair," "McNair," "Foss," and, for their authority, read a precept, purported to be directed to Dunning R. McNair, Sergeant-at-Arms of the United States Senate, and to the "Honorable the Vice President of the United States, commanding the arrest and bringing before the Senate, by the said McNair, of your name, and of the name of the person named Mr. Sanborn, to appear before the Senate, and to answer to the said precept was a clause, by which the said McNair professed to be his authority to issue Carthage, and to state that none of the four men holding him were known to your memorialist, or to any of his neighbors then present, and that, in the absence of authority, or indication of authority, as represented to me, I will say I do not wish, if any-wildly as it may seem, to be responsible for the arrest; but it seems to me that the proper disposition of this paper is to lay it on the table, at least until we get the official return made upon the warrant of the Senate. I move to lay it on the table for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made to the reference of the paper to the Committee on the Judiciary, the Chair suppresses the motion of the Senator from Virginia has precedence, to lay on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. That is not a debatable question.

Mr. MASON. Certainly, I withdraw it if the Senator wishes to say anything.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to remark that the memorial does set forth a great grievance, and it is authenticated by the oath of the memorialist, and it asks for remedy; and now I understand the Senator proposes to lay the memorial on the table. Is that customary with this body when memorials are presented, containing important facts properly ascertained, and from responsible persons, and which ask for the action of the Senate?

Mr. MASON. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I said I would move to lay the memorial on the table, only to await the official, formal, legal return of the process of the Senate, which refers to the very matters to which the memorial relates, that they may be considered in connection, if they are considered at all. That is what I intended to say.

Several Senators. That is right.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Why could not this be referred now, and get rid of the memorial for the present, and refer also that official return when it comes, and see no necessity for delaying the matter. If that return also is necessary for the consideration of the subject, let it be referred when it comes. I see no reason why the memorial should not be referred.

Mr. MASON. The Senator from Kentucky would like me to suggest that this matter is in charge of the committee of which I am the organ, and I respectfully submit to that Senator—and I know there is no Senator to whom I could more respectfully make the submission—that it would be possibly better to permit the organ of that committee to suggest the direction that the thing should

And, as in duty bound, will ever pray.
CINCINNATI, April 6, 1860. B. SANBORN.

CONGRESS, April 6, 1860.
COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, ss.
County of Middlesex.

Then personally appeared the above-named P. B. Sanborn, and made oath that the facts contained in the above Memorial are true according to his best knowledge and belief.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my seal notarial this 6th day of April, in the year 1860.
NATHAN P. NORTON, Notary Public.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President—
Mr. MASON. The Senator will allow me to make one word in objection. My impression was that I had sent this warrant by Sergeant-at-Arms, to Boston, with the instructions that I mentioned, to depute the authority if he could not find the man; but I am corrected in a conversation with the Sergeant, and find that I had sent this warrant, together with another for the arrest of a man named Redpath, of Boston, to the marshal, the authority of the Sergeant being deputed here before the paper went away. When the Sergeant was sent to Boston, he was sent there with a warrant to arrest the man who is here now, (Hyatt); but it seems that I had sent this warrant to the marshal of the United States, and with a deputation from the Sergeant, here, some time in the month of February—and my letters from the marshal subsequently informed me that the process had not been served, after many attempts to find this man Sanborn, because he either absented himself from the State or was concealed and kept out of the way. He was unable to find him up to the time that he made the arrest, according to his statement.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to correct one error into which the Senator has fallen. He stated, it will be remembered by the Senate, that Mr. Sanborn was taken from the custody of those who were also a majority of the Sergeant, nothing is within my knowledge except what is authenticated by that paper under oath, and there the statement is express that he was not taken from the custody of these pretended officers except by the intervention of the writ of habeas corpus, sustained by the posse comitatus of the neighborhood.

Mr. MASON. The Senator will allow me to say in reply that that course I have no personal knowledge, nor has he, of the circumstances. The representations made to me, according to my recollection—and I think it is distinct, for I was immediately informed by telegraph, and afterwards by letter from the marshal—are, that after Sanborn was arrested by the deputy of the marshal, he was taken into the custody of the officer by a tumultuous body of people, whom I call a mob, and that thus being out of his custody, the lebas corpus was issued. Those are the facts, as represented to me. I will say I do not wish, if any-wildly as it may seem, to be responsible for the arrest; but it seems to me that the proper disposition of this paper is to lay it on the table, at least until we get the official return made upon the warrant of the Senate. I move to lay it on the table for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made to the reference of the paper to the Committee on the Judiciary, the Chair suppresses the motion of the Senator from Virginia has precedence, to lay on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. That is not a debatable question.

Mr. MASON. Certainly, I withdraw it if the Senator wishes to say anything.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to remark that the memorial does set forth a great grievance, and it is authenticated by the oath of the memorialist, and it asks for remedy; and now I understand the Senator proposes to lay the memorial on the table. Is that customary with this body when memorials are presented, containing important facts properly ascertained, and from responsible persons, and which ask for the action of the Senate?

Mr. MASON. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.
Mr. MASON. I said I would move to lay the memorial on the table, only to await the official, formal, legal return of the process of the Senate, which refers to the very matters to which the memorial relates, that they may be considered in connection, if they are considered at all. That is what I intended to say.

Several Senators. That is right.
Mr. CRITTENDEN. Why could not this be referred now, and get rid of the memorial for the present, and refer also that official return when it comes, and see no necessity for delaying the matter. If that return also is necessary for the consideration of the subject, let it be referred when it comes. I see no reason why the memorial should not be referred.

Mr. MASON. The Senator from Kentucky would like me to suggest that this matter is in charge of the committee of which I am the organ, and I respectfully submit to that Senator—and I know there is no Senator to whom I could more respectfully make the submission—that it would be possibly better to permit the organ of that committee to suggest the direction that the thing should take. What I shall propose to do with it, I am not advised; but I only ask that it shall lie on the table until the warrant comes back which the Senate issued, with a formal, legal return upon it, showing by the officers to whom it was intrusted, what were the facts connected with the subject, as they understand them. That is all. After that, the Senator from Massachusetts may take it up and propose any disposition of it he thinks proper. My motion was only with a view to await the process, which will be here in a day or two.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand, then, from the Senator, that he expects a return from the officer to that warrant.

Mr. MASON. Certainly. I received a letter—I think I have it in my pocket—from the district attorney. I should state that as soon as I was advised that this process had issued to release the witness, I telegraphed to the marshal and directed him to engage the services of the district attorney to defend the arrest; and last night I received a note from the district attorney—being one of several I have received from him—telling me that the warrant would be returned. I have telegraphed to the marshal to send back the warrant and make upon it a formal return of the facts that attended the release of the witness; and I got a letter from the district attorney last night, in reply to that, saying that it would be sent, and was delayed only until they could obtain properly certified copies of the proceedings in the court. It will be here, I presume, in the course of the day. I move to lay the memorial on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. I consent, but with great reluctance, however, to let it lie on the table to await the return of the process; but I do that with the understanding that then it shall be referred.

Mr. MASON. No; with the understanding on my part that the Senator may call up the petition and make any proposition he pleases in reference to it. What course I may think it prudent or wise to adopt, I am not prepared to say; possibly I may consent that to the reference; but I do not commit myself to that. The Senator may call it up and make any motion upon it he thinks proper. What may be my action on that, I do not know.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved and seconded that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANE. I now move to take up the bill (S. No. 53) for the amendment of the fourth section of the act for the admission of the Territory of the Union, so as to extend the time for selecting salt springs and contiguous lands in Oregon.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator will allow us to make reports.

Mr. LANE. This is a bill that ought to pass, and I am sure there is no objection to it.

Mr. CAMERON. I have no objection, as soon as I get permission to offer a petition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is in order.

Mr. CAMERON. Does not a single objection prevent the bill being taken up in the morning hour?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope we shall be allowed to get rid of this petition in the morning. I have always understood the rule of the Senate to be that petitions were first in order in the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state again, for the information of Senators, the ground on which he has acted, and it has been sustained by the Senate. After the fourth hour has been read the Chair first calls for memorials; then for reports of committees. That is the regular order of business; but it is in the competency of the Senate to take up any business it chooses, and it is always in order for a Senator to move to take up a bill.

Mr. LANE. After the fourth hour has been read, if I can have an understanding that the bill will be taken up afterwards. It is important that it should be taken up and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon insist on the motion?

Mr. LANE. I prefer to have the bill taken up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, to take up the bill indicated by him.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Several of us have petitions and reports to make; and it is not customary to insist on taking up a bill while there is business of that kind to be presented. I do not know how long the bill will take. At any rate, I will call for the yeas and nays, if the Senator insists on his motion, to see if the morning business is to be postponed.

Mr. LANE. I am not disposed to be in the way of Senators with their business; but I am sure I have not taken much time of the Senate. This is a bill in relation to lands granted to the State of Oregon under the provisions of the law providing for her admission, by which the lands granted must be selected within a given time. That time is about expiring. These lands have been given for the advantage of the State of Oregon; and they have not had an opportunity, for want of the meeting of the Legislature, to provide means for locating the lands; and as it is entirely local, relating to her interests exclusively, and providing for selecting lands granted to the State by law, I trust that Senators will allow it to be taken up and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion to take up this bill the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. TRUMBULL. I trust the Senator from Oregon will not persist in a motion to take up a bill before we have relieved the legislative business. He will gain nothing by this. The resistance to his motion is not opposition to the bill which his wishes to call up. It is because we wish to relieve ourselves of these papers.

Mr. LANE. I will do any thing in the world to oblige Senators. If they say "withdraw it, and let it be," I will do so. I am willing to yield. Let them present their papers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the motion may be withdrawn, the yeas and nays having been ordered. The Chair hears no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAMILIN presented resolves of the Legislature of the State of Missouri for the establishment of a uniform decimal system of weights, measures, and currencies, fixing the standards or units of each measure, with their sub-divisions or multiples in the most concise and simple manner; and that the more effectually to promote this desirable reform, a special national commission be recommended for the purpose of producing a uniform system of metrology throughout the commercial world; which were referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the memorial of Abraham Edwards, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GREEN presented a communication from T. T. Grant, of St. Louis, Missouri, relative to the judiciary act of 1793, and in favor of changing the time allowed for taking appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GRIMES presented papers relating to the claims of Miriam Hungerford, Jacob Paulin, Milton Carpenter, Nathan Fish, and Buren Hungerford, to indemnity for Indian depredations in Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TEN EYCK presented the petition of William C. Morris, for himself and the representatives of Joseph Morris, deceased, an officer in the revolutionary war, praying commutation pay; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented the petition of Joseph D. Greecy, praying compensation as a clerk in the Post Office Department; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DAVIS presented a petition of citizens of Jackson, Mississippi, praying the erection of a suitable building at that place for a post office; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented the petition of Miriam Davis, widow of Lot Davis, who died of wounds received in the Dartmouth prison, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of citizens of the township of Upper Tulpehocken, Pennsylvania, praying that a pension be granted to Michael Lauck, a soldier in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of Livingston, Coalbrook & Co., Lyon, Shaker & Co., and other manufacturers of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a law to prevent and punish fraud in the use of false labels, trade-marks, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SIMMONS. I present a petition of citizens of Washington and Georgetown, praying that the bill to prohibit corporations in the District of Columbia from issuing notes or bills of any kind for circulation in the District may be passed by a vote. I move that it lie on the table, and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will lie on the table, and the motion to print will go to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. TEN EYCK, it was Ordered, That the petition, on the files of the Senate, of the representatives of Joseph Morris, late a major in the revolutionary war, praying commutation pay, be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLAY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 301) for the relief of certain persons who made entries in the district of lands subject to sale at St. Stephens, Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GRIMES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the memorial of Hester Stoll, widow of Urban Stoll, late a soldier in the Army, praying a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 300) for the relief of Hester Stoll, widow of Urban Stoll. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITCH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire into the expediency and propriety of relieving A. M. Fridley, late agent for the district of Minnesota, of the United States, judgment obtained against him in the district court for the second district of Minnesota, in consequence of his having, under orders of the Indian department, disobeyed an injunction obtained against him in said court in regard to the payment of certain moneys belonging to the Winnebago Indians, submitted a report, accompanied by a joint resolution (S. No. 28) for the relief of A. M. Fridley, late agent for the Winnebago Indians. The joint resolution was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. TEN EYCK, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Hetty G. Dorr, daughter of John D. Alvey, postmaster of the American army, at headquarters, during the revolutionary war, praying that she be paid for the relief of her father and soldiers of that war, or their widows and orphans, may be so construed as to include his heirs or legal representatives, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on the Districts of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, praying for authority to extend the Washington branch of their road to the Potomac river, and across the same, by means of a pile structure connected with the Long Bridge; and the bill (S. No. 377) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to extend the Washington branch of their road to the Potomac river, and across the same, by an extension of the present structure known as the Long Bridge, for the purpose of connecting the railway services and a sufficient set of tracks, reported the bill with amendments.

Mr. NICHOLSON, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Catharine Wilkie, daughter and only heir of Joseph Ezine, praying relief on account of the military services and sufferings of her father during the revolutionary war, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Joseph C. G. Kennedy, praying a repeal of the joint resolution of December 23, 1852, relative to the salary of the secretary of the census board, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 302) for the relief of Joseph C. G. Kennedy. The bill was read and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph C. G. Kennedy, praying indemnification for damage to buildings belonging to him, done while they were used by the Government, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 303) for the relief of Joseph C. G. Kennedy. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of the establishment of a daily mail between some point on the Mississippi river and some point in California, and a resolution of the Senate, instructing the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to expedite the expediency of establishing a semi-weekly mail from St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri, to Placerville, in the State of California, reported a bill (S. No. 304) to provide for the transportation of the mails in California, between St. Joseph and Placerville, California, within twenty days; which was read, and passed to a second reading. He gave notice that he should ask the Senate to consider the bill to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 617) conferring on Atlanta, Georgia, the privilege of a port of delivery; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message further announced that the House had ordered this day, at one o'clock and fourteen minutes, the printing of resolves of the State of Mississippi to a uniform decimal system of weights, measures, and currencies.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

A bill (S. No. 29) for the relief of Arthur Edwards and his associates;

A bill (S. No. 79) for the relief of Tenech Tilghman;

A bill (S. No. 136) for the relief of Thomas Filibrown; and

A bill (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of Micajah Hawks.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 617) conferring on Atlanta, Georgia, the privilege of a port of delivery, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SALT SPRINGS IN OREGON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of one o'clock having arrived, the Chair must call up the special order, which is the unfinished business of yesterday—the homestead bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. There was another special order made for one o'clock, some time ago—the St. Clair salt bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill in relation to the St. Clair salt would be the special order, but for the fact that the homestead bill is the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish to antagonize the St. Clair salt with the homestead bill, although I would with any other measure before Congress.

Mr. LANE. I now ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 62) to amend the fourth section of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1850, relating to the time for selecting salt springs and contiguous lands in Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent to take up the bill S. No. 62.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am sorry that I cannot consent to that. I want to get rid of the homestead bill. Mr. LANE. This bill, as I said before, is important to Oregon. It extends the time allowed the Governor of that State for selecting lands granted. The time allowed him is about to run out, unless this bill shall be passed. It was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and by their unanimously reported, with a recommendation that it ought to pass. I am sure there is no Senator who can have any objection to it. It will not take a minute to pass it; and I hope the Senator will allow it to be taken up and passed.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the Chair will state that there is but one motion, and that will be a motion to postpone the previous question.

MR. WADE. If this bill is not to lead to any debate, I shall not be captious about it; but if it leads to any debate, I shall move to postpone it.

MR. LANE. It cannot lead to any debate.

MR. WADE. Very well.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent to suspend informally the special order, with a view to take up Senate bill No. 82. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 82), to amend the fourth section of the "Act for the extension of Oregon into the Union," so as to extend the time for selecting salt springs and contiguous lands in Oregon; to provide to extend the time for selecting the salt springs and contiguous lands, according to the provisions of the fourth section of the "Act for the admission of Oregon into the Union," approved February 14, 1859, to three years from the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLONEL WILLIAM THOMPSON.

MR. CRITTENDEN. I hope gentlemen will indulge me by granting me five minutes; it shall not be longer. A bill was passed last Friday, when private bills were considered, granting to the heirs of Colonel William Thompson certain moneys for his military services done under the resolution of Congress. It was discovered after the passage of the bill that there was an error in the amount granted. I asked for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed, and that it might be deferred until I could have an opportunity for correcting it. I am prepared now to make the correction, and ask that the bill may be taken up. It will occupy but a moment.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the vote passing the bill was reconsidered.

MR. CRITTENDEN. It was reconsidered.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question is on the passage of the bill (S. No. 189) for the relief of the surviving grandchildren of Colonel William Thompson of the revolutionary army of South Carolina.

MR. CRITTENDEN. I must ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading. I desire to offer an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

MR. CRITTENDEN. Now offer this in lieu of the first section of the bill, after the enacting clause:

That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William E. Haskell, Charles Lewis, Charles Rhoads, widow of James R. Rhoads, Mary E. Darby, widow of A. B. Darby, Charlotte Lewis, widow of Isaac John B. Lewis, Charles A. Goodwin, widow of Robert H. Goodwin, the grandchildren and heirs of William Thompson, who was a colonel of the third regiment of South Carolina mounted continental troops during the revolutionary war, the sum of $7,200, being the half pay for life to which their ancestor, the said William Thompson, was entitled under the resolution of Congress that he survive as a colonel aforesaid throughout the war of the Revolution.

MR. FUGHI. I would suggest to my friend from Kentucky, in order to avoid any controversy hereafter, to add the words "said Colonel William Thompson having elected not to take the command of five years' full pay," before the words "to amend the amendment, by adding these words."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was adopted. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 280) to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain.

MR. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President—
MR. JOHNSON. of Tennessee. Before the Senator proceeds I wish simply to present an amendment to the bill to offer to the bill, for the purpose of having it printed.

The motion to print was agreed to.

MR. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, before proceeding directly to the discussion of the merits of the proposition pending before the Senate, I desire to make a few observations by way of reply to some of the remarks which fell from the honorable Senator from South Carolina (Mr. CUMMERS) yesterday. I listened with great pleasure and with great attention to that Senator. His clearness of statement, his dignity of tone and manner, no less than the deep earnestness and sincerity with which his views were presented, were such as to command my respect; and while I dissent from him in some of the conclusions at which he arrived, I do concur in some things advanced by him.

I have not yet seen the report of his speech, nor did I take any notes of it as delivered; but there were some three or four points which I desire to notice before coming to the consideration of the homestead bill.

First, the honorable Senator says upon this side of the Chamber to correct our philosophy and become truer and better students of nature; that we should learn the laws stamped by the Creator upon the human race, and upon the physical world; and that we should endeavor to align our course, as legislators and statesmen, in accordance with those laws. In the principle thus laid down, I most fully concur. I do believe that it is the duty, and the highest duty, of the statesman and legislator, to study the laws of nature and to legislate in accordance therewith. I do not mean to say the doctrine of the great Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Webster) that we should not respect the will of God; that it is useless for us in legislation to consult the laws of nature, and to make our enactments conform to them.

But I mean to say that the honorable Senator from South Carolina that we should study nature and nature's laws; but the result of that study teaches us no such doctrine as the honorable Senator maintains, that one of the races of mankind has superiority in natural and political rights, entitling him to the equality of all men in the eyes of the law, which their equality was declared by our ancestors in 1776. Although this subject has been a hundred times discussed upon this floor and elsewhere, I desire in a single word to state what I believe was the true understanding of that declaration. I do not believe that our ancestors intended to declare, that in the temperate latitudes and upon the same soil, and side by side, the Indian or the negro was mentally, and physically, and morally, in all respects, the equal of the white man; that descendants of the same race; nor do I believe that they intended to declare that the white man in the tropical regions and under the burning sun, side by side with the negro, the child of the tropics and of the sun, was in all respects, both intellectually and physically, the equal of the negro.

Ay, sir, study the laws of nature—those higher laws, which God, the Almighty, has stamped upon this earth, and stamped upon us. Under its highest law, the white man cannot live in the tropics; and under its supreme law, his supremacy and superiority over the children of the tropics. He must mingle with the colored race, or cease to propagate his species. He has tried it, and has always failed. Such has been the result of his efforts to drive and to drive out of nature. The white man has never yet invaded tropical Africa, and under its burning sun and in its tropical regions, established his supremacy over the negro race. And why? Because the laws of nature are stronger than the will of man, and he must yield to their supremacy.

Mr. President, the history of the world demonstrates this. How is it in San Domingo? The white man, under the greatest empire of modern times, endeavored to assert and maintain his supremacy over the colored race, but he could not. The laws of climate, of disease, of health, overcame the white man, and the best soldiers of Napoleon were compelled to yield to the colored man. The most powerful nation of the age when America was discovered, the Spanish nation, conquered and took possession of the tropical regions of this continent, but their race is losing its power in all those regions. Nature asserting her supremacy, and in the tropics, the children of the tropics, superior to the white man there, physically at least, will, by the laws of climate and population, overwhelm him at last.

Now, Mr. President, what did our forefathers mean when they declared that all men are created equal? Not that they are equal in fortune, in talent, in physical strength, or in moral character; not an equality of powers, but an equality of rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. There is not an equality of powers, even among our own race. We see some men highly gifted by nature, some in mental and some in physical superiority to others. One of the strongest necessities for any Government at all grows out of this very inequality of powers, in order to secure the equal rights of the weak from the oppressions and exactions of the strong. The strong can take care of themselves, but to secure the equal rights of the weak, Government is necessary. Come down to the fundamental element in human society—man. His family relations. One man has just as good a right to himself and to his wife and to his children as any other man has to himself or to his wife or to his children. I do not mean to say, in this proposition, that one people is inferior to another, it by no means follows that therefore the stronger has the right to enslave and sell the weaker, or his wife, or children. It is a perfect non sequitur on the ground of natural right.

I know it has been said on this floor that Jefferson, who drafted the Declaration of Independence, did not intend to refer to the men of Africa. How any person can make that statement, after reading the original draft of the Declaration of Independence as written and signed by Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Adams, and Mr. Franklin, I am at a loss to determine; for in the fac simile before me, in the very same instrument in which they declared that "all men are created equal"—in the same instrument, and in the handwriting of Mr. Jefferson, is the most language denouncing the King of Great Britain:

"He has waged cruel war against human nature itself, violating its most sacred right of life and liberty in the persons of a distant people who never offended him, capturing and carrying them away into slavery; he has torn them from their homes and from their friends; he has subjected them to severe and inhuman treatment; and he has endeavored to destroy their lives and to ruin their posterity. This practical warfare, the oppression of a distant people, in the warfare of the world, has been continued, and he has determined to keep open a market where men should be bought and sold."

The word "men," in Jefferson's own hand, is printed in large capital letters, in Jefferson's own hand, to give double emphasis when he said that the children of Africa are "men" within the meaning of this very Declaration of Independence; and how any man can get up here and say that the committee did not mean to include all the races of men, even the African, is not more extraordinary than the contrary is demonstrated, made absolutely certain; there can be no doubt, no two opinions about what Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Adams, and Mr. Franklin meant when they submitted this Declaration to Congress.

Mr. President, I understand this to declare in general terms, and as applicable all over the world, that by the law of nature one man has just as much right to himself, to his wife, and to his children, as any other man has to himself, his wife, or his children. The honorable Senator from South Carolina also enjoined us to read the Scriptures; that we should "search the Scriptures," to use his language. Well, if I read the Scriptures aright, and I believe that I do, they declare that in the beginning God the Creator made man, a single person, male and female, but with no slave; and He gave to man dominion over the earth, the sea, and the air; but He gave him no dominion over his fellow man. The Declaration of Independence simply reiterates that great fundamental law of creation, and puts the question before any Senator: here are two families side by side in society—what right has one man to enslave another; take away his wife or his children? what natural right? What natural right have I, because I am white, or because I am black, or because I am colored, to hold another man because he is black, or because he is ignorant, because he is weak? Where is my natural right to do it? There is no foundation for it in the law of nature. Its only foundation is in the law which man has created; by the law of the State where it exists, and by virtue of that law, and of that law alone. It does not exist by the higher law of nature.

The Senator also declared that we should study the experience of mankind. I agree in that proposition also; but does that Senator suppose that the experience of such men as Franklin, Jefferson, and Washington, is wholly to be disregarded? Slavery had existed one hundred and fifty years in Virginia when Washington and Jefferson declared their experience and desire to get rid of it; when Franklin, the great American philosopher, wrote his treatise on population in 1751, denouncing it in its severest terms. Is their experience nothing? Are we to assume that they knew nothing of this question?

But, Mr. President, I will call that Senator's attention to the declaration of General Marion, of South Carolina, on the subject of slavery, and what his experience upon that subject had shown. He declared that where the system of slavery exists it depresses the non-slaveholding white man, for the simple reason that the "rich have no need of the poor;" and, sir, he expressed the whole of it in that single sentence. Show me a class of society where the rich need the poor, and capital have no need of the poor, and I will show you a state of society where the poor laboring man is the absolute dependent of the capitalist. I know you sometimes say that in slave States there can be no conflict between capital and labor. For what reason? Because the capitalist absolutely owns his labor. There can be no conflict, for labor is the absolute and unconditional slave of capital. There can be no conflict where labor can have no voice whatever.

The other honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMMOND] is reported to have said some years since, in speaking of the condition of nearly thirty thousand of a class of people in the State of South Carolina, the poor non-slaveholding whites, that their employment consisted in hunting and killing and catching birds, and what was still worse, he said, trading with the slaves upon the plantations and seducing them to steal for their benefit. Is there no lesson in this? What was the experience of Virginia also shown? In the State of Washington, the rich and the poor, the Potomac river was well cultivated and productive; a considerable portion of it. At all events, it is stated in the history of General Washington that the district where he resided was so populous that the location of the church of the parish was regarded as an important and vexatious question to the people of that day, but for all time to come; and its location was the subject of some controversy between him and Mr. Mason. It was finally located in the center of the parish, surrounded by many families, and large numbers attended regularly upon the services held in it. But time passed on. Plantation cultivation with slaves has done its work. The laws of nature asserted their supremacy. Everything fell into decay; and within the last ten years—I have it from the lips of one of the rich and the poor, which cost Washington so much labor to locate and to erect, had become a stow for cows and oxen; the country all around it growing up to those pine barrens where the very wolves are returning to howl over the desolations it has wrought, and that too in this beautiful and fertile country, which cannot shut off this capital. When, oh, when, will men learn from the lessons of experience?

Mr. MASON. The Senator will allow me one moment, I am sure; for, with all respect for him, he is positing a question on my Senator. The Senator is doing what many are advocating his position have been obliged to do—substituting a theory for fact. Now it so happens that the county of Fairfax, to which he alludes, was my place of nativity. One of the very eminent men of that day, to whom he had alluded, was my ancestor; and I think I know something of the facts relating to that county. Whether the land in the county of Fairfax was originally fertile or not, I do not know, because it was populated something more than two hundred years ago, nearly three hundred; but since I have known, or at least meditated, it has been the very opposite. The land was very much impoverished by a system of culture in tobacco, known as a part of the history of the southern States when it was their only and their great staple—their only article of export. Land was so abundant that tobacco was cultivated until the land was exhausted; and when part of it was exhausted they turned it out and took up a new place.

As to the population of the county, the Senator will find, if he looks at the census tables, that Fairfax has, at this day, a much larger population, and of necessity much larger than it had in the days to which he has alluded; larger, because the great loss of the large estates of that day, by the gradual process of the melting down of the laws, been melted down and subdivided. The population has increased in proportion. The white population is increasing there faster—not in fact, but in proportion—than the slave population, because the white population was formerly unable to be translated to other parts of the State.

Then, as to the church referred to, for which I have a hereditary filial veneration, the Senator is again mistaken in the facts, at this time at least. I know the church well. It was the church that was visited by my ancestor, by General Washington. It was about equidistant between the residence of the two. There was a controversy about moving the church; but it was one of those county controversies, an amicable and a kindly one, and very often such between the gentlemen in matters of rural interest. The church is called the Pohick church. The estates in the neighborhood were very large—large landed estates—and at that day, of course the population was thin. The estates in that neighborhood are still comparatively large, but the land very poor. Mount Vernon is one of the estates to which I allude. That has been very much cut up and subdivided since the death of General Washington; but this church of Pohick is in the condition of many churches of the same character in the lower part of Virginia, where there was once a very populous neighborhood, but a wealthy one. By the gradual subdivision of the land, and the inroads that have been made by the sectarians upon the established Church of that day, those churches—built of materials brought from England, the bricks certainly, and very large and massive establishments—have found themselves in the midst of a territory where either the sectarians have got the advantage, or else the congregations have been scattered, as we called it, have become thin. That has been the consequence of the Pohick church; but, so far from its being abandoned, I know that, by a voluntary subscription of the descendants of those who built it, that church has been put in good repair and in a state of preservation, and will be preserved. I am sure that the honorable Senator and myself have been gathered to our fathers. That is the condition of that church, and that part of the State.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The statement which I made was, that within the last ten years it was in the unfortunate condition to which I referred; but latterly, I understand within the last few years, it has been again restored.

Mr. MASON. It has been twenty years ago that a subscription was taken, I know; for I was quite a young man when I was taken.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The precise point of time I shall not dispute with the honorable Senator. But his statement does not substantially conflict with the facts which I stated, that the operations of the system of slave labor, the cultivation of the land, large estates, and in tobacco, exhausting the soil.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator allow me to add one additional fact, which happened to come under my personal observation? Some few years ago I was on a visit to New England, and at Plymouth, the historical interest of which we all know, and to my astonishment I found that within a very short distance of Plymouth, some two or three miles, there was a wilderness where they went to shoot deer, and I dare say wolves and bears.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am glad the honorable Senator has made a pilgrimage to Plymouth. I wish he might do it oftener. It has never been my fortune to go there; but I understand that the neighborhood about Plymouth is, and always has been, very pretty much a sandy and bleak which never has in fact been cultivated to any considerable extent. I referred to the once flourishing condition within the neighborhood of the Pohick church, and to the dilapidated condition into which it had lately fallen, as the consequence of the system of cultivation of large plantations by slaves, and the exhausting of the soil, until they are abandoned to desolation and decay. I ask the honorable Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. CARLISLE] whether he does not agree in accordance with the same? Is not the experience of the whole country tending to show that when these large plantations are cultivated by slave labor the soil does become exhausted, and that most rapidly, in the rivers, by a single crop of like sugar, or cotton, or hemp, or any of the other great staples cultivated with slave labor; and does it not necessarily, in the end, give place to another kind of husbandry, which nothing but free labor can develop to make it successful?

Mr. CARLISLE. In reply to the Senator I will say that: in all new countries where land is abundant and fertile, and labor cheap, and there is difficulty in manuring and improving the soil, as a matter of course they go upon the new lands in preference to the reclamation of the old; but in the older States the fact is not so. I know from personal experience that lands now, which were owned a hundred years ago, are better to-day, more fertile, produce more than they did twenty years ago—to my own personal knowledge. We cannot, I believe, have a better system of agriculture, and I doubt if there exists a better system anywhere, in all the old States, than in my own State. But in all new countries, where you have abundant fertile land, it is the easier to abandon the old and cultivate the new; but in the older States it is whether the agriculture is improving more in South Carolina, or as much, as it is in New England, or anywhere else. The system of slavery with us does not tend to exhaust and destroy the plantation interest. That is my expectation, and I am sure to that question.

Now, sir, while I am up, I will notice one or two observations which the Senator made in relation to the Declaration of Independence and the equality of the races. I do not think the Senator has met the points which I presented yesterday. In all I believe I have been correct, and I repeat them; but I will notice one observation in relation to the intentions of those who proclaimed the Declaration of Independence. He cites certain passages of that Declaration, particularly the passage which is made its application to the negro. The Senator has drafted the Declaration of Independence presented that passage; but what did the Congress? This proclamation was not the proclamation of the committee who drafted it; it was the proclamation of the continental Congress; and when they drafted it, they were not very much struck over the very passage which the Senator has quoted. Therefore, it is evident that those who made the Declaration of Independence did not intend its application to the negro. I think that point is concluded against him. I am very glad that the Senator admits the inequality of the races. I do not agree with him in one point. He admits the equality of the races in different respects: first, they are unequal; in temperate latitudes the white man is superior; but when you go to the tropics, the negro, he says, is superior; so that he proves in all respects that the white man is better than the negro happen to be together. I think that is an abandonment of the whole argument of the question of equality.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. In the statement which I made in relation to the Declaration of Independence, I did not go further than to state that this was conclusive evidence of what was the meaning of Jefferson, Adams, and Franklin, when they drafted the Declaration; but as the Senator has referred to the fact that the Congress which adopted it, struck out those words, it is proper that I should remind him of the fact, which I believe Mr. Jefferson states, that they were so struck out by Congress out of complaisance to the representatives of South Carolina and Georgia, who desired still to continue the African slave trade, which was, in the same sense, as strongly denominated.

Now, Mr. President, one single other observation in relation to the positions taken by that Senator yesterday, and I will proceed at once to the discussion of the question before the Senate. The Senator has been going on, and on, and on, in the condition of the West India Islands, endeavoring to show that the state of the West India Islands was such as to demonstrate that nowhere on the face of the earth could the colored population, in a state of freedom, prosper to any considerable Exent. In discussing this question, it is not my purpose to take the ground (for I never have taken that ground) that it would either be desirable, or that we should aim to effect any such result as to reduce the Gulf States of this Confederacy to the condition of the West India Islands. My purpose has ever been avowed and entertained by myself certainly; and I believe by none of the Republican party. But we do maintain that, if the colored population of the United States could be colonized in some place in a tropical climate, such as the West India Islands, the separation of States and individuals, without being in a state of slavery, they can maintain themselves in a state of very considerable advancement upon their condition among us, if not in the highest state of civilization; and we maintain that the colonization of the colored population is a fact. The reports made from time to time by the officers in charge of that colony demonstrate the fact that it has been a success, not a failure; and discouraging remarks are so often made on this floor and elsewhere in relation to the West Indies, that I have been induced to make a selection of a few extracts from the speeches of the able men of England in Parliament as late as 1859. Mr. Buxton, in rising to move for a committee to inquire into the present state of the West India Islands, said: "I am a strenuous promoter of immigration, in the course of his speech using this language, speaking of Jamaica:

[illegible]

These are the statements of Mrs Buxton, and he is followed, and sustained in his statements, by Mr. Labouchere, and others, in the House of Commons. I have read these extracts and referred to these facts in connection with the colony in Liberia and the condition of the West India Islands for the purpose of showing that it is possible somewhere upon this earth that even the colored race can live and attain to a considerable degree of civilization, if not in a perfect state, without being subjected to the institution of slavery.

But, Mr. President, I have taken up much more time in these preliminary remarks than I had intended, and I propose now to direct myself to the question before the Senate. The resolutions of the Wisconsin Legislature, which I have already read, that not only the Republican party of that State favor the passage of a homestead bill, but that its people are almost unanimously in favor of the passage of the bill as it came from the Wisconsin Legislature, is a position well placed in a very different position from that occupied by the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Brown]. The other day he stated that the instructions and the opinions of the people of his State were in favor of the passage of the bill. A Senator representing them upon this floor, to vote against a measure which both his judgment and his heart approved. I find myself placed in no such position. The people of Wisconsin are almost unanimous in favor of the passage of the bill, and I am fully convinced that I am not, therefore, for myself alone, nor for the Republican party of Wisconsin, but for the whole people of that State, that I say that I can sustain this measure as it came from the House of Representatives, and sustain it heartily, and without any convictions of my judgment and understanding.

I shall again in it because it disposes of the public domain in accordance with natural right, founding title to land in individuals upon actual possession, and so that the land, which is now almost everywhere sufficient in size for a single family only, as God originally created society, for a single pair, male and female, with their infant offspring; and none the less because it does not tend to build up large landed estates, to be worked only by a few slaves, but to divide the land among the actual settlement to absenteeism, happy homes filled with brave sons and blooming daughters, with well-tilled fields and orchards and gardens, to the broad uncultivated wastes of grasping speculators; because, in all its provisions, it is made to be more than a law of accidents, and regards him more for what he is, than for what he has; in a single word, sir, it regards man more than money; because, in opening to settlement our domain, it makes no invidious distinctions against our brethren from other lands, and no such distinctions as would be a probable difference where a man happened to be born. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," is the language of the New Testament. "We have land enough, and to spare"—Broad enough, and to spare, is the language of the old Testament, addressed only to the children of our own Stock, but to the children of all Christendom: "Come and enjoy them, without money and without price; all we ask of you, if foreign born, is your sworn allegiance before you enter upon your settlement, and your oath to shield and defend the rights of your title." In the providence of God, we hold, under the Constitution, this vast domain, not for ourselves of the present generation only, but for all generations; for all who may come, as our fathers came, and many of us come, to toil for the good of the child, the future alliance, and destiny with us and our children forever.

I support this bill also, for another reason, because it followed, as I hope it will be, by another enactment, which shall withhold from sale all the public lands until they shall have been opened for settlement under this bill for a long period of time, it will become, in my judgment, a measure of peace with the Indian tribes. The direct tendency of their joint operation would be to make our settlements on the borders more compact; and while those settlements themselves would enjoy almost all the advantages of older communities, they would become so strong for self-defense as to put an end to all Indian depredations, which are the prolific sources or pretexts for Indian wars.

I sustain this measure also, Mr. President, because, with a very simple enactment in connection with it, it can be made more efficient than all others, as a Pacific railway measure. I know not how it may be on the Texas route; but on the central and the northern routes, if you will but pass this bill, opening all the surveyed lands to settlement, and pass an act which shall direct the surveys of the land on each side of those routes for forty miles, reserving from settlement, to the States and Territories through which they pass, the alternate sections for one half that width, subject always to preemption at $2 50 per acre, one half of which shall be sold and expended as the work progresses, and the other half expended in the purchase of land for the settlement of those lines armies of emigration across this continent in almost solid columns. Behold those steadily advancing columns, planting, as they go, homesteads for freemen and their wives and little ones, peaceful in their progress, and yet more peaceful in their power. Behold the great Napoleon, cresting, at the same time, the necessity for, and the means to build and to sustain those lines of railway to the Pacific. Sir, where ever those columns move, they demand, and will receive, with or without Government aid, the great machine of modern civilization—railway communication.

Mr. President, by adopting this wise policy, you will develop across this continent, upon these plains, free and independent States, and thus bind forever in fraternal embrace the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts. By throwing such a column of emigration along the central route into Utah, you will overwhelm Mormonism and polygamy, as with a flood, wiping them out more efficiently than by penal enactments or with the Army. Take men with their wives and children, and plant them in sacred homes, and rear freedom's altars and firesides all over the Territory of Utah, and you will put an end to that blighting and cancerous curse now resting upon that Territory.

I sustain this measure also, because its benign operation will postpone for centuries, if it will not forever, all serious conflict between capital and labor in the older free States, withdrawing their surplus population to create in greater abundance the means of subsistence.

I support this measure, also, because it will enable the poor non-slaveholding white men of the slave States to escape from the crushing burden of a system, whose ablest advocates on this floor boast that in those States there never can be a conflict between capital and labor, for the simple reason that capital is the absolute master, and labor its captive, and, though well fed, its unconditional slave.

Mr. WIGFALL. Will the Senator explain what Senator he alludes to as having stated that proposition?

PROPOSITION 1. THE BATTLE. I allude to the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HENRY.] I am not quoting his precise words, but the substance of his language, in which, if I recollect aright—and I believe I am not mistaken—the honorable Senator from Virginia contended that there could be no compromise between a State which was a slaveholding State; that there that conflict could never come; and he went further, and said that we of the free States were but making an experiment, which had not yet been fully determined; and on account of the conservative influence and power of the Union, we were not to attempt to prevent any such conflict among themselves, but that they, as our sister States in the Union, might help sustain us in carrying out our own great experiment of free labor. Of course, I do not pretend to say that the Senator was right or wrong, but the idea dropped by him in his speech.

Mr. WIGFALL. I merely wanted to draw the attention of the Senator, and asked him the question, in order that things might not go out here published as taken pro confesso against us on this side. His statement, as I understood it—and I was listening to him—was that it had been said by Senators from the South—and he now alludes to Mr. HUNTER—that capital in the South owned, not only the slaves, but the white men.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I did not say that.
Mr. WIGFALL. That was the substance.
Mr. HUNTER. I certainly made no such statement.

Mr. WIGFALL. Allow me one minute. I beg, if there is a dispute about what the Senator said, that the reporter may read what he did say before he goes on.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That would be an extraordinary thing; but I can repeat to the Senator what I did say.

Mr. WIGFALL. Well, repeat it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I can repeat the words.

MR. DOUGLASS. I can repeat the precise words, I think. I said, I sustain this measure also, because it will enable the non-slaveholding laboring white men of the slave States to escape from the crushing burden of a system whose alien advocates upon this floor boast that in those States there never can be any conflict between capital and labor, for the simple reason that capital is the absolute master, and labor its captive, and, though well fed, its unremunerated slave.

Mr. WIGFALL. That is just between them and Mr. HUNTER. If the Senator from Wisconsin refers to me, what I have to say is, that I never said that capital owned the white labor. I was speaking of the relations between the slave and the master, and I said the masters owned the slaves, who constituted the great bulk of the laborers in the slaveholding States; and that there could be no difference between them, because the master owned the slaves and he represented the interests both of capital and of labor, and it was his interest in what was just between them. In speaking of the white laborer, I said he occupied a different position, and even the non-slaveholder had the use of slave labor; that he hired that just as he rented land. I never said the capitalist owned the white labor of the country.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. HUNTER said that the honorable Senator from Virginia did say so. It is not the language which I used. It is unnecessary for me to repeat it, because the reporter has undoubtedly taken down my words precisely as they were uttered.

Mr. WIGFALL. The Senator repeated just what he said at first. There is no doubt about that. It was merely an inference that I drew from his language.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, I support this measure because opening our territories to free white men will, in my opinion, tend to prevent their Africanization through the introduction of negro slaves, and thus secure in the end, what I believe God in His providence intended, that the temperate regions of this continent should become the permanent homes of the pure Caucasian race. The adoption of this policy will, in my judgment, tend to bring on a final settlement of this whole negro question. By the influence of our example in opening our territories to the Caucasian race, who are the children of the temperate regions, and by our treaty arrangements with our neighboring States upon the south, who occupy the tropical regions of this continent, we may induce them in those zones to open equally wide their beautiful territories to the children of the tropics, to the descendants of first-class men best adapted to dwell within them, and to cultivate and to develop them.

I believe, sir, that we may, while we open our own territories to the Caucasian race, induce those tropical States which are already in the possession of the colored races, where color is no degradation either socially or politically, to open wide their territories for the surplus population of the United States of African descent. Let us throw wide open our territories, which are within the temperate latitudes, to the white men, and let the free white men, who are the children of the temperate zones, whom God in His providence has planted in that zone; who have, through all history, controlled the destinies of that zone; and at the same time, by the influence of our example and by treaty, let us induce the tropical States of America to open equally wide their domain, capable of sustaining hundreds of millions of human beings, to colored men—the children of the tropics, the children of the sun—and thus open a way, when, in the providence of God, in the fulness of time, that destiny must be accomplished: THE PEACEFUL AND GRADUAL SEPARATION OF THE RACES, FOR THE HIGHEST GOOD OF BOTH.

Let no man misunderstand me. I would in no respect infringe on the rights of the States, nor of the individual States, nor of the Congress, nor of the Constitution of the United States, and by that higher law of reason upon which that Constitution rests, every State has, and must forever have, the undisputed, unquestioned right over its own destiny, and to provide for maintaining and defending its own domestic institutions. And, sir, while the policy I suggest would open a way for States and for individuals by which they could become free to rid themselves of slaves, if they should choose to do so, it would by no means, nor in the slightest degree, infringe upon the rights of the States, nor constrain their independent action. I would only make them free to act for themselves, in their own time and in their own way. They would remain free, forever free, to hold or to emancipate slaves. That is their business, not ours. We have no more to do in this respect, and are no more responsible for the institution of slavery within the States, than we are for the monarchy of Great Britain, or for the serfdom of Russia. It is their business, not ours, for them to deal with in their own way and in their own time. If slavery be, as they say, a blessing, let them hold on to it, and be blessed; but if it be, as we verily believe, an evil, and they shall ever come to think so, let them get rid of it, as they see fit, as a necessity, rather than to bear something worse; for it would then be in their power to remove it from their jurisdiction. Does any man, however devoted to the defense of slavery, object to a policy which simply makes his State free to maintain it, or free to abolish it? Would he permit his State to maintain it at all hazards? Would he take away its power to rid itself of it, if it would desire to do so? It would then be a slave State, indeed, in more senses than one; not simply because the master holds the slave in servitude, but because he is subject to his control, but because if a chain of slavery would have its hold upon the neck of the sovereign State itself. It would be no longer the master of its own destinies—no longer sovereign, in fact.

And, sir, these questions of opening, directing, and regulating the settlement of this continent are questions of empire, and for all generations. They should be controlled by enlarged views. They should be controlled by a knowledge of the laws of human nature, of the human constitution, and the laws of geography and of climate, and of zones, and of races. They should be met in a spirit of Christian philanthropy and exalted patriotism. 'Not only the question of the foreign-born and the native-born Caucasian is involved in this, but the question of the positive rights of Territories under our control is also involved in its determination. The ultimate destiny of the Indian race is already, with the exception, perhaps, of the Cherokees and the Cherokees, a matter of history, too indubitably written to be overlooked or evaded. There are three positive races here—the Caucasian and the African; and the ultimate destiny of the negro race on this continent, which is a question that lies deeper and goes beyond the slavery question, is one of the gravest problems which has ever been presented to the American people. There is no power but the power of God as we every day at every corner, every turn we make. It is a question which is wrapped up with and involved in the destiny of this great Government.

This law has come, and is pressing harder every day towards its ultimate determination. It demands, in earnest tones, an explicit answer. The time has come when the American States must meet this question, and look it square in the face without flinching. If we open our eyes it is as we offend. There are no neutral positions here. The solutions to this question which have been proposed: one the solution of northern fanaticism; another the solution of southern fanaticism; and the third, and the only wise and practical solution, is that proposed by our ancestors early in the history of this Republic. The first race law—the unconditional emancipation of the four million slaves by force, it may be, to remain upon a footing of equality in all respects, side by side with the white race, and upon the same soil, which would call for the John Brown solution. The second looks to the acquisition—

Mr. HAMMOND. I have just come into the Senate, and am not so sure what the Senator is talking about; but I suppose the solutions are on the subject of slavery. I heard him say there was a solution to that question.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The second, which I understand to be the solution of southern fanaticism, looks to the acquisition of Cuba, Mexico, Central America, all tropical America—the Senator from Vermont mentions the reopening of the African slave trade direct with Africa, as well as with the old slave-producing States of the United States, for the double purpose of planting slavery throughout the whole of the tropics, and of sending across all Central America and tropical America, it shakes hands with the empire of Brazil, and at the same time bringing into this Union millions upon millions of the mixed race, for the purpose of counterbalancing the growing power, politically and otherwise, of the great Caucasian race in the North and West. Call this solution by what name you please—the solution of Walker and his filibusters; the solution of the slave-promoters, or of the Knights of the Golden Circle.

The third solution—and, as I have said, in my judgment, the only wise and practical one—is that which was proposed by Jefferson, concurred in and sustained by Washington, and Madison, and Monroe, and Clay, and Jackson; which looks to the time when the colonization and deportation of the emancipated race shall take place hand in hand, and pari passu, and in making provision not only for those who are now emancipated, but for those who shall hereafter become so; the voluntary action of States and individuals, in some place and climate congenial to their constitutions and adapted to their best happiness and highest development. That is, in my judgment, the wise, practical, Christian, and truly republican solution of this whole question.

I, for one, Mr. President—and I speak the voice of nineteen twentieths of all the people of the free States, not merely of the Republican party, but of the Democratic party—am utterly opposed to the annexation of Texas.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him how the deportation of four million slaves is to be provided for—whether at the expense of the slave owners, or by the Federal Government—in his theory?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. My opinion in relation to that question is this: the whole of these tropical States, if we will take them with a friendly hand instead of taking hold of them with the hand of the filibuster, will be induced to follow our example, and to open their territories to the children of the tropics, as we have done to the children of the temperate zones, as we are willing to do, not only for our own native-born citizens, but for the Caucasian race who are coming to us from every nation in Christendom. They will open their territories, and invite them to come and live among them, to enjoy with them equal political equality with them, where color is no degradation. This was the theory of the Democratic party but a very few years since.

Sir, the homestead bill itself was a daring measure of the Democratic party not long since. How many of those who are now in the majority of the Chamber to-day stand up to defend its passage? In the days when we annexed Texas to the Union—when I acted with the Democratic party in bringing Texas into the Union—it was the avowed policy of every member of the Democratic party North, and many of the Democratic party South, that there never should be an attempt made to bring Mexico into the Union, with its mixed races; but that if it should be opened in the end as a home for the colored race from among us in the course of time, it should be the final solution of the laws of population and of progress.

But, Mr. President, as I was saying, I speak the views of nineteen twentieths, I believe of ninety-nine in every one hundred of the people of the free States of the North, Republicans or Democrats, who will accept of that side of the question, and who are willing to see the United States composed to the amalgamation of races; and every declaration which has ever been made against the Republican party and its designs and its objects has been founded in a total mistake or gross misapprehension of the views of the people. There may be now and then one who is willing to go in for a promiscuous amalgamation of races, to be found at the North, I have no doubt, and I very much fear that there are some to be found even at the South.

Mr. President, as I would give homesteads to the free white laboring men of the Caucasian race in our temperate territories, so would I, both by treaty and by example, induce the tropical States of America to open their domains, and give homesteads and homesteads and civil and social equality to the free colored men who are among us. Sir, what are you going to do with these men? I put the question to Senators—what will you do with them and for them? They are being furnished from the slave States. Many of the free States of the North and South are unwilling to receive them in their jurisdiction.

I understand that, by the operation of a law

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

NEW SERIES.....No. 103.

which has just taken effect in the State of Arkansas, nearly six hundred free colored men have been banished from that State. Two hundred, as I am informed, have gone into Kansas. About four hundred of them have gone into the State of Ohio. What is to be done with them, and for them? You may say they are not citizens. You may say they are an inferior race; say what you please, they are still men; they have wives and children, and they have a right—even the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Cassady] admitted yesterday they have a right—to life, if they had no other right.

Mr. WIGFALL. I will ask the Senator if he considers them citizens?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. That depends upon the law of the State where they are.

Mr. WIGFALL. Do you think they ought to be citizens?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. They ought to be citizens in the tropics, and I would like to send them all there who are willing to go; and I hope you will join in doing it.

Mr. WIGFALL. Then you do not think they ought to be citizens of the United States?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have not said on that question.

Mr. WIGFALL. Do you?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It depends upon the law and policy of the State where they are. There are some States whose policy admits it. North Carolina and Tennessee, I believe, have done so. Mr. Bell was once elected to Congress, I am informed, when the majority that he represented was made up of the votes of colored citizens of Tennessee. I say it is a question of policy in the various States; some do and some do not make them citizens.

This solution of the negro question, to which I have referred, is a solution to which gentlemen must come. It is not to be postponed much longer, either. I submit, that nineteen twentieths of the people of the free States, and in my humble opinion, if you go among the slave States and go home to their hearts and hearths, three fourths of the people of the slave States—I mean the white people of the slave States—would to-day be in favor of providing some place where these people can live on God's earth, and enjoy life, and enjoy their wives and children. I do not believe that the people of the South would deny to them that boon.

• Mr. President, there is no point in this whole political contest upon which such great mistakes or upon which such gross misrepresentations have been made as to the policy and purpose of the Republican party. To send any such further misrepresentations or mistakes, and to put an end forever to any such misunderstanding and misrepresentations, I hope, as the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. Wadsworth] the other day declared he did, that the Republican party everywhere will declare openly and authoritatively in favor of this policy. While they declare themselves opposed to the Africanization of our Territories through the introduction of negro slaves, while they are inflexibly opposed to that, they are just as inflexibly opposed to any amalgamation of races; they are in favor of the policy which Jefferson proposed, and in which Washington, Madison, Monroe, Clay, and Jackson concurred. It is a fact, I believe, in the history of General Jackson's administration, that this matter was discussed in his Cabinet, and all know that at the time of the acquisition of Texas, by opening an immediate and vast outlet to the surplus of the colored population of the United States, it was contended that the colored race would be removed southward towards Mexico.

Mr. WIGFALL. I should really like to know how the annexation of Texas opened a vast field for colonizing free people of color. I want to know if he has stated that.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have not said that.

Mr. WIGFALL. Well, what did you say? What all defendants beg the Senator to repeat?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I may have been not very clear in my statement; but my recollection of it is very distinct. I stated that the acquisition of Texas opened immediately a very large outlet for the surplus colored population of the United States. I did not say the free colored population, for there are very few free ones there. I believe they are almost all slaves that are there, if I understand it.

Mr. WIGFALL. Yes, the colored people are. Then how is it that you anticipated that that would open an outlet for the colored people?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Perhaps the Senator from Texas was not old enough to remember what took place during the great Texas campaign. Probably he was a young man at that time, and may not have given his attention to it so distinctly as some others did; but if he will turn back to the files of the Congressional Globe, and read the speech of Mr. Buchanan, and of Mr. Tibbatts, of Kentucky, and read the letter of Robert J. Walker, who became Secretary of the Treasury under the Administration which was brought into power more, perhaps, upon the avowal of that Texas policy by Mr. Walker than any other question which was discussed in the canvass, he will have no difficulty in understanding what was the understanding at the time.

But, Mr. President, I had concluded all the remarks which I desired to make upon this occasion when I said I hoped, as the Senator from Ohio had declared, that the Republican party would, in the most authoritative manner, proclaim their policy in its relation to this question, to put an end to the great mistake and misrepresentation which has been placed, and that they would declare in favor of humanizing their free people through the treaty-making power—for it is only through the treaty-making power that we control our relations with foreign States—to open a way by which those States can invite and offer homes to the free colored men of the United States, who are oppressed and downtrodden and banished from some of the slave States already, and threatened to be banished from many others; who are regarded as unwelcome in many of the free States, kept out of some of them, and who cannot enjoy the rights of the free States, and who are held in slavery throughout the whole country, any social equality, whatever political equality or citizenship may be conferred.

What can be the objection to this policy? What interest can be opposed to it? In my judgment every principle of humanity, the law of Christianity, which commands us to love our neighbors as we love ourselves; the law of philosophy, which teaches that this race is the child of the tropical zone—should induce us to this course. Nature will assert her supremacy—stronger in her laws than any human enactment. She will overcome; and if you succeed for a time in reestablishing slavery in Central America, as the Spaniards established it there three hundred years ago, it will die out, and for the same reason; because the white race cannot endure the tropical climate, and hold its preponderant power over the colored races which God, the Almighty, has planted in the tropics, and to whom He has given supremacy there.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. President, I owe the Senator from Wisconsin an apology for interrupting him just now. For I understood that in the commencement of his remarks he desired not to be interrupted. I was not present when he commenced; but since I have been so indiscreet as to interpose, I will say just one word. This idea of the solution of the slavery question seems to hang like a millstone, very heavy, very difficult to get me into an argument on this floor upon the solution of the question of slavery, when it is already solved. We have made up our minds. It is to stand as it is now, and to advance with the dominion of the southern States of this Confederacy. That is the solution, the only solution; and it is a matter of nothing more than passing interest—I will not say of indifference—to us what Senators on the other side or what the North think about it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, in reply, I would say that this whole question of slavery is discussed in the Congress of the United States simply on the ground of the territorial question. We have no right to discuss the question of slavery as a question of practical legislation, as it exists in the States, and we refer to it only because we are discussing our policy in the Territories. You propose to send the institution of slavery into the Territories; we think it ought not to go there, and discussing the question whether it should or should not go into the Territories necessarily involves on our part the consideration of the system of slavery in its bearings in the States where it exists. We mean not to discuss the question in any sense offensive to the States of the South, but when we insist that it ought not to go into the Territories, what answer do you give? You tell us that if we do not allow it to go into the Territories the necessary consequence will be that under the laws of population the colored race will become so numerous in the slave States that it will force on emancipation. That is what you say. You say if a limit be once put to the extension of slavery, the laws of population will force it out in the end.

Mr. HAMMOND. The Senator will excuse me. I have said no such thing. He answers me and says, "You say it." I think the South is anxious within the possibilities of maintaining a slave population of two hundred million.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I am most happy to hear the honorable Senator from South Carolina avow that he does not apprehend any such fears as were expressed yesterday by his colleague, and which were expressed the other day in the House of Representatives, in a very able speech, by Mr. Cassady, of Alabama.

Mr. HAMMOND. Allow me one word. I do not wish to be misunderstood. While I believe we can support two hundred million slaves within our present limits, and I believe that that is an argument for expansion, I do not wish to be understood as surrendering any of our rights to territory and expansion at all.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not so understand the honorable Senator from South Carolina that he desires, or is willing, to surrender his right to slavery expansion; but what I was saying was this: I was glad to hear that honorable Senator express no such apprehensions as were expressed by his colleague yesterday, when he denounced our policy of preventing the expansion of slavery as a needless policy, saying, I believe, the same language which was used by Mr. Cassady, of Alabama, in his able speech in the House of Representatives, when he said that if you once put a limit to the extension of slavery, the laws of population will press it to the point where it will grow down under its own weight. I am glad to hear that Senator express the opinion that he feels no such apprehension because it may not be extended.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to discuss that question for a single moment. It has so often been said upon this floor, and upon the floor of the other House, that we propose to deal unjustly with the men of the South, that I wish to discuss that question for a moment. Suppose, as the honorable Senator from South Carolina says, that the slavery question will press it to the point where it will exist as a permanent institution in the South for all generations, what, then, do we propose? We propose that the white race, the Caucasian race, to which we belong, shall enter into and take possession of the other temperate territories of the United States, and that every man of white blood, and which the Senator says will contain a population of two hundred million, is more in proportion than if you give the whole of the North American continent to the white race. You have four million slaves. What is the number of white men to enter into and occupy all this territory?

Just look at it for a single moment. The territories which you now have are more in proportion than if we took all the other territories of the United States, or all that we could acquire on the North American continent. Why, then, do you complain of injustice? You say, or some of you say, that the laws of population will press on the northern States to such a point as to produce actual war between capital and labor, and the population will become so dense as to press on the means of subsistence; but even then your territory is so broad and ample that, with your four million slaves, you have more room for development, more room for population, than we should have if we had all of North America besides. Why, then, complain of us of any injustice because we say that the institution ought not to be extended into the Territories?

Mr. HAMMOND. The Senator says, what is the injustice of giving the northern States all the Territories if we have got enough? No one said we had enough. I did not say that. But if we had enough, is not the territory the common property of all the States? and what right has one section to take it to the exclusion of another section? This is the injustice.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Upon that point I desire to answer directly to the Senator.

Mr. WIGFALL. Allow me just a moment.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will answer one at a time, if the Senator from Texas please; because it will confine me to the same order of discussion to do otherwise. I wish to come directly now to the question propounded by the Senator from South Carolina; and it is a fair question to put to us, and a question which I will answer in the same sincerity with which it is asked. I hold that the Territories of the United States belong to the people of the United States, represented here in Congress—the States represented in this House, and the people represented in the House of Representatives. I hold, further, that the rights of the people of the United States are the same in every Territory of the United States; and I hold, further, that, although we propose to exclude the institution of slavery from the Territories, we do not trample upon the right of any citizen in this country. Look at it for one moment.

You are a citizen of the United States; you are a Territory just as I, a citizen of Wisconsin; you can take precisely into the Territory what I can take; I can take just what you can. You cannot take slaves; I cannot go and buy slaves and take them into a Territory. We are placed on precisely the same footing. The mistake grows out of this: we at the North have railroads, we have factories incorporated, if you please; can we take an incorporated factory into a Territory? What can we do?

Mr. HAMMOND. The Senator will allow me one word.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I would like to go on.

Mr. HAMMOND. Just one word. I do not see why the Senator from Wisconsin could not take slaves there as well as I could, if I chose to take them. The Senator will tell me a right to take your property, whatever it is; and the Senator is at full liberty to take as many negroes as he pleases into a Territory.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The mistake on this whole question arises out of a mistaken conception of what is meant by property. You say that each citizen should be permitted to take his property upon precisely the same footing with every other. I grant your premises; but your conclusion does not follow that slave property can go into a Territory. There are peculiar species of property existing in every State of this Union, may own an interest in a manufacturing company. Suppose I owned an interest in a manufacturing establishment, what can I do? I can go into the Territory, but I cannot take the manufacturing establishment into the Territory.

Mr. MASON. But there is no law prohibiting it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Certainly the law would prohibit it. The manufacturing corporation is the creature of a statute. It is a corporation created by the laws of the State in which you want I can do. I can sell out my interest in the corporation, put the money in my pocket, and remove into the Territory. You can do so with your plantation.

Mr. MASON. The difference is this, and nobody sees it better than the Senator; if he has an interest in a manufacturing company and cannot take that into the Territory, it is because it is not susceptible of being taken there. There is no prohibition.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Suppose we take a banking institution. I own the stock in a bank; I cannot take that bank into a Territory, but I will sell you what I can take. I can sell me stock in the bank and convert it into money, and remove into a Territory. You can do the same with your plantation. A plantation with slaves is a kind of close corporation created and sustained by the law of the State where it exists, and it is so.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the Senator allow me to ask him two questions? I believe the Senator will agree that this Government exists by virtue of a Constitution called the United States Constitution.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I will ask him, if the highest judicial authority of this Government has not decided that, according to that Constitution, slaves are property?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The word further before I take the question of the Senator. Slavery is, as I have stated, in the States where it exists, like a corporation. The natural condition of society is families in single pairs; but, as Mr. Calhoun stated in his speech, and was reiterated by Mr. Huxford the other day, society exists in the South in communities, of which the master is the head and the representative, representing not only the capital employed in it, but representing the laborers who are employed in it. By the laws of the slave States, that peculiar kind of close corporation is created, and it is so that you cannot move that corporation into a Territory, unless there is a law in the Territory providing for its removal, any more than we can remove a bank or a railroad. You can sell out your stock in a bank; you can sell out your stock in a railroad; sell out interest in a plantation and slaves; and put the money in your pocket, and go into the Territories, just as I would sell out my interest in a manufacturing institution, and go into the Territories. And now, Mr. President, in conclusion, I will come to the last question—let me ask the Senator. Suppose I do not choose to sell out?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Then you need not. You may stay where you are.

Mr. HAMMOND. Stay where I am! Ah!

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If I do not choose to sell out my stock in the bank, I can stay where I am, or I can remove into the Territory, and tell my agent to take care of my interest in the bank; and I suppose you can remove into Kansas, and tell your agent to take care of your interest in South Carolina in the peculiar institution sustained by its laws and existing under its laws. You yourself can remove, but you cannot take this peculiar institution, which is the growth of law founded upon it, and exists only by virtue of its provisions in the State where it exists. Now I wish to direct your attention to the question of the honorable Senator, and I have done.

Mr. HAMMOND. Allow me to say that slaves are as easily removed as any other property.

Mr. WADE. Mr. President—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WADE. What is the question?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The honorable Senator, before the Senate, (laughter,) the pending question being on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is somewhat traveling, from the instant the corporation of the homestead bill, to go to the Dred Scott decision; but the honorable Senator from South Carolina put the question to life. That Dred Scott decision is claimed by the friends of it, especially by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BROWN], to establish the right to take this peculiar institution into the Territories; and that Congress has no power to prevent it, and the people or the Legislature have no power to prevent it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Not the court, but the Constitution has established the right.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is said the court have decided that the Constitution has done so.

Mr. HAMMOND. Exactly.

Mr. RICE. Mr. President—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. RICE. I merely wish to ask a question. The Chairman has decided that the homestead bill is before the Senate. I should like to ask my honorable friend from Wisconsin whether he is speaking to the Senate bill or the House bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I shall not be diverted from the answer to the question of the Senator from South Carolina, because that is a serious question and the question of my friend from Minnesota is a mere playful one. The question of the Senator from South Carolina is a serious question, and I desire, in a single word, to give it a serious and explicit answer. The Supreme Court of the United States have decided, or undertaken to decide, that Congress has not the power to prevent, by legislation, the extension of slavery into the Territories; but the Supreme Court have not decided, upon any fair construction of the language used by a majority of the members of the Court, that the Constitution of the United States, of its own force, carries into a Territory the right to hold slaves.

Mr. Buchanan in his message says that the Supreme Court of the United States has so decided; and I understand the honorable Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Davis, has resolved upon a resolution that the Supreme Court has so decided; but such I believe is not the real fact. They have decided, or undertaken to decide, that Congress has not the power to legislate; but that is a very different question from one. The Constitution of the United States, of its own force, carries the law of slavery into a Territory. Suppose you acquire Canada to-morrow, where slavery has been abolished these two hundred years, if it ever existed; your doctrine would be that the Constitution of the United States requires the extension of the law of slavery, and establishes the law of slavery. The Supreme Court has never decided any such thing as that. Judge Catron, in his decision, put his opinion, I believe, on the simple ground of the treaty with France, as the reason why Congress could not extend the law of slavery into the Territories, as a mere dictum at most of a single judge, I believe, which is relied upon by the President in the declaration which he makes in his message. But if the Supreme Court had decided so, and every judge of it, it would not contravene my opinion as a member of the Senate, that the Constitution, legislating for the Territories. We legislate upon our responsibility, upon our oaths to support the Constitution, and not upon the oaths of anybody else. That is my answer to the Senator.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, the discussion of to-day, I think, has shed a flood of light upon this great political movement called the homestead bill. The bill came from the House of Representatives. A majority of the Senate, according to my recollection, having the entire control of the subject, have decided to send the bill to the House, shall pass this body. What form it is to assume, remains yet to be seen. The bill came from the House of Representatives; and I understand the honorable Senator who has just taken his seat, who is a leading, and a deservedly leading, member of the dominant party in the House, to announce here to-day that this bill is a measure intended for empire, command, control, over the destinies of this continent; and he is right. Sir, it is a flood of light upon the subject. The honorable Senator has chosen—what is it a part of the policy of this State of the Empire, as an indissolubly belonging to it, the whole slave question with the homestead policy. The honorable Senator has told us that the great feature of this policy is, by the gratuitous distribution of the public lands, to encourage the white country now open for settlement, and free white population to pre-empt it. The Senator is right; with the objects in view by the bill that has been sent to us by the other House, the question of slavery is connected with it, and cannot be separated from it. The Senator is now saying that it is not avowed, it would manifest itself; the purpose is avowed, by means of the gratuitous distribution of the public lands, to pre-empt the Territories by population from the free States, and thus incidentally, and, of necessity, to exclude slavery.

The Senator has been candid in that avowal. The Senator has proclaimed that it was a measure for emigration, for political control, and for political ascendancy.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The language I used, if the Senator will allow me, was that it was a measure of empire, and for all generations—the question of the settlement of this continent.

Mr. MASON. Certainly, and the question of the settlement of this continent to be controlled and directed by means of this homestead policy. I do not misinterpret the Senator; I certainly do not misrepresent him. He is right. There is no question of the quarter from which this bill comes; there is no doubting the policy that it is intended to ingraft upon the excoity, and there is no doubt that the solid and compact plan which we here see on the right of the Chamber is embarked in that policy. Sir, I appeal to the honorable Senator from Tennessee, who comes from a different constituency, to see this thing now in its true light.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The Senator will allow me, I will call his attention to a law that will, perhaps, throw some little light upon this question. I find in the statutes of the United States, the following:

"That to every white male citizen of the United States, or every white male above the age of twenty-one years, who has declared his intention to become a citizen, and who is residing in said Territory prior to the 1st day of January, 1853, and who may be still residing there, there shall be reserved a homestead section, more bounded and sixty acres of land."

I want to call the attention of the Senator to the word "donated."

Mr. MASON. I would say to the Senator that it is not English. There is no such word as "donated."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I do not care whether it is English or not; it is law:

"And to every white male citizen of the United States, or every white male above the age of twenty-one years, who has declared his intention to become a citizen, and who shall have removed or shall remove to and settle in said Territory between the 1st day of January, 1853, and the 1st day of January, 1858, there shall in like manner be donated—"

Bad English again—

"one quarter section, or one hundred and sixty acres, on each and every vacant settlement and cultivation for not less than four years."

I should like to know of the Senator if he voted for that law.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator tell me what law?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. It was passed in 1854: "An act to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes."

Mr. MASON. I don't know. I dare say I did. I think it very probable I did.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The Senator was calling my attention to the provisions of the homestead bill. It does seem strange that such extraordinary discoveries should be made recently in connection with the bearing and the growth of the policy of a homestead law. Here is a homestead bill in a broader and a larger scope than the one now under consideration.

Mr. GREEN. Let me call the Senator's attention to one single fact, and that is: this word "homestead" implies always something sacred to be preserved as home to the husband, wife, and children. Does that law make any such provision?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The Senator from Missouri, a few days since, gave us a very learned disquisition on the term.

Mr. MASON. I hope the Senator will not insist on occupying the floor. His object was to call attention to that law. I knew it very well, and I dare say voted for it, though I do not now remember the fact.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. What I wanted to call the Senator's attention to was, that this was in 1854, when there was so much talk about emigrant aid societies. This extended to every man who had declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, except to all who were there in 1853, and held out inducements to all who would go, up to 1858. Is it not remarkably strange if the present proposition, which requires a citizen to pay a certain amount and live upon it a certain length of time, and enter upon lands reserved—is it not remarkable—

Mr. MASON. The Senator may have all that opportunity in good time in his speech.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. By permission of the Senator from Virginia, I think we are here directing—

Mr. MASON. Not for argument.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. And addressing himself to me, perhaps there could be no better place to introduce and exhibit a homestead law that he saw passed here in 1854. That was a homestead proposition in its broadest sense.

Mr. MASON. The Senator need not call my attention to the policy of that law. I know very well that in the organization of the Territories of Oregon and Washington, according to my recollection, there was a policy to invite emigration there by giving men lands on the terms mentioned in the resolution that I introduced. I voted for it; I dare say I did. The policy there was to invite a population into a country without people.

Whether it was an ill or a wise policy I will not now undertake to say; but I demand the attention of the Senator from Tennessee—representing a different constituency, and a different constituency of gentlemen on the opposite side of the Chamber, and having a policy totally different in the political power, or the mode in which it is to be controlled in this Government—I demand his attention to the fact, no matter what the policy shall be, that I look at the purpose of the bill, and purpose avowed, openly avowed on this floor—and I know of no better means by which that policy could be attained than this very scheme of a gratuitous distribution of the public lands, which they may be located—and the purpose of playing a position there from the free States, and excluding the slave population.

If the bill passes, how will it be followed up? We have had some experience of the agencies that are introduced by the opposite party in the United States. I will pass that. I will pass that section of land to those who will go and take possession of it, you will have emigrant aid societies chartered for the purpose of sending people there to take possession, and you will have the honorable Senator from Tennessee and his constituency endorsing that policy, and who, in consequence of that, Sir, I give the honorable Senator full credit, if it be a credit—he is the best judge of that—for having been the early friend of what I think he miscalls "the homestead policy." He introduced it at an early day in this Chamber, soon after the passage of the act. According to the course which he represented his constituents in the other branch of the Legislature, he introduced the same policy there; and, if he thinks it a good policy, let him think so. I call his attention to the uses to which it is to be put now.

Why, sir, since I have been a Senator on this floor, no honorable gentleman who came, I think, from the State of Wisconsin—represented by the Senator who has so ably and so frankly discussed this question this morning—a gentleman who has introduced a bill, and who has been so candidly a Senator from Wisconsin, (Mr. Walker,) who is usually what he called his homestead bill. There was a congress at one time in the city of New York, and they memorialized the two Houses to give land to the landless, in the terms used in the resolution that I introduced, and who can afford to do it; it received here; the bill was introduced from year to year; it has been introduced by the honorable Senator from Tennessee since he came upon this floor. What countenance did it get? Generally a very meager vote. Where does it stand now? It is brought up and political energy from the other wing of the Capitol, introduced and sustained here by the compact vote of the Opposition. What is the Opposition? A party calling themselves the Republican party. What is their purpose? To get the control of this Government, that they may set directly on the condition of African bondage in the southern States.

Honorable gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber have, more than once, many of them, disclaimed any connection with the Abolition party. They have said that there is a party somewhere among them of Abolitionists, pure and simple fanatics; men who have no political purpose except that of destroying the condition of slavery. I have heard honorable Senators on that side of the Chamber say they had no political affiliation with such a party. Sir, I put it to the country and to the world, what cohesion, what principle of cohesion, is there in this so-called Republican party but its opposition to the condition of slavery? Take that from them, and their life-blood is gone, and they would not exist a day.

Sir, are we to go back to our ABC's in politics, or in the affairs of nations? Have we not seen within the last few years the distinguished Senators here putting his standard far in advance even of that very Abolition party, for the purpose of compelling them to unite with this so-called Republican party? I allude to the speech made by a Senator from New York, (Mr. Seward,) somewhere in his own State—Trenton, or Syracuse, or some one of those places. In that celebrated speech he spoke of an irrepressible conflict, in which he declared, as the destiny of this country, that it must all be affected to the dominion of the white race, without any intermixture of African blood, or that African slavery must extend over the whole continent. That was his theory; and he illustrated it by saying that one of two things must happen—either that the slaveholders of the South would be cultivating with the cotton plant, or the white people of the North, or that the white people of the North would be cultivating exclusively the rice and cotton fields of the South. "We must be homogeneous," was his doctrine; and the illustration was, that there was a conflict irrepressible to bring it about. Now, Sir, I ask you, what is the party? That is the policy which is to be attained by this great engine of the distribution of the public lands. That is the intent and design of the bill which has been brought in from the other House, and even the compact vote of the Opposition on the other side of the Chamber; and that is the bill which the honorable Senator from Tennessee, representing a very different constituency, as I understand it, is prepared to give his countenance and his vote to.

Now, Mr. PUGH, I am indebted to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin for lifting the veil from this measure. It has no longer the narrow and contracted purpose of giving land to the landless, and providing homes for men who will never occupy them; it has no longer that diminished character, and the compact vote of the Opposition on the part of this Government, instituted for a very different purpose; it is a political engine, and a potent one. It has already received the sanction of the other branch of the Legislature, where there is a majority—I do not know whether a numerical—but a decided majority. It is a bill, and it is before us now, to be passed in the Senate, for the purpose of effecting that great object. It is the Emigrant Aid Society's policy upon a wider scale. It is not to be sustained by voluntary contributions, but it is to be purchased at the price of the public domain gratuitously given. That is the policy of the present homestead bill. I desire that my people should know it, if it is to pass into a law; I desire that my people should have another evidence of the practical working of this Federal Government, in the measure of the bill, and that not only, but who have sympathy with, but who have a determination to destroy that condition of society which is mixed up with the very existence of the South. I desire my people to see it, and to note it as another evidence of the practical working of this Government when it falls into those hands.

Sir, I have spoken of this measure altogether as a measure of policy, as a mode of attaining empire and of using it when it is attained. It is an agrarian policy. It is an unjust departure from the spirit, intent, and meaning of the Constitution which holds these States together. But, besides, it is bad policy as a measure of philanthropy; it is an encouragement to pauperism. The honorable Senator from Texas has been kind enough to show me. I am indebted to him for it—that is the bill quoted by the honorable Senator from Tennessee, the year and says were not called for, so as to vindicate my personal vote, if it is worth vindicating; but, as I said before, I am perfectly indifferent. I may have voted for such a bill as that, very possibly, I did, but not this policy, with a disposition to invite population into a territory without population. Whether it was wise or bad policy, I am not prepared now.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator misunderstood. The law which the Senator from Tennessee read was the New Mexico act, not the Oregon act.

Mr. MASON. It is immaterial. I do not desire to pursue such an inquiry.

Mr. WIGFALL. With the permission of the Senator from Virginia, I will read the proceedings in the Senate on the law which is referred to:

"Mr. DOANE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 315) establishing the official land office at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment."

"The Senate proceeded to consider the said bill as in Committee of the Whole."

"No amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate."

"Ordered, That it pass to a third reading."

"The said bill was read a third time."

"Revised, That it pass."

No yeas and nays were called.

Mr. GREEN. That never became a law according to my recollection. Did it?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREEN. For Kansas?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREEN. I think you are mistaken.

Mr. MASON. I hope Senators will indulge me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MASON. If the honorable Senator from Tennessee can find any vindication of a vote for this bill, in any policy that may have been adopted to bring population into territories where there is no people, he is welcome to it. Let him settle that with his constituents. I do not intend to hold him to an account; I have no right to do so; but I intended most respectfully and civilly to call his attention to the political uses which are to be made of the measure for which he is responsible on this floor. I confess that when I first saw that this measure had been taken up as a party measure in the other House by those who are in opposition to the party now in possession of the Government, upon the eve of a presidential election, the impression I mistook for a candid expression of opinion, was that it was only a magnificent bid for the Presidency, to conciliate or to buy up the popular vote. It seems I was mistaken. It has a larger, a wider, a grander end in view; one much more worthy of the great political struggle that must ensue between those in this country who profess to attain political power—I will not say fairly and honestly—but to attain political power by parceling out the public property gratuitously amongst those who would come and take it, and the end of the political power was to operate against the condition of slavery.

Mr. GREEN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MASON. I would rather you would allow me to finish.

Mr. GREEN. Just one single word. I have examined the law to which the Senator from Tennessee referred, and I find it applies exclusively to New Mexico, and not to Kansas. The object of it was to infuse an American population into the Territory of New Mexico; and they were made donations.

Mr. MASON. I remember well enough about that. I did not recollect the particular law to which it applied. I thought the Senator from Tennessee was mistaken in saying it was a bill to provide a surveyor general for Kansas; but I did remember very well that it was a policy—which may have been a wise policy—to infuse a white population by these donations of the public lands to relieve the Government from the still greater burden of defending them by a soldiery. It is a vastly different thing between sending a population into a territory not populated, for political ends to be attained there, and a measure of this kind, by which the public lands are to be gratuitously given in every State and Territory where we have public lands, for the purpose of infusing a population, to attain a great political end of a political party. I say again, if the honorable Senator from Tennessee can vindicate his support of this measure by any policy of that sort, let him do it. The things are very different; widely different. We are to have, we have said, and have said again and said again, by the private contributions of individual members of a political party, but an emigrant aid society aided by the legislation of the Federal Government to bring about political ends hostile to the South, and intended to destroy the social con-dution of the South. That is the purpose. It is in that light I present it to the honorable Senator and to the country.

I will not review now—I may do so at a future day—the provisions of the bill as a measure merely of policy in the disposition of the public domain. I charge upon it here, and upon the authority of the Senate, and of the whole fabric of the speech of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, that the policy, as here disclosed to us—done frankly, honorably, and fairly on his part—is an engine devised to attain political power, and use it for purposes hostile to the slave States. It cannot have any other consequences than those.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I wish to put a single question to the honorable Senator from Virginia. I may, in the course of this discussion, have rambled, perhaps, from the consideration of the direct question before the Senate—the homestead bill—and got into the discussion of the question which is very common on the floor of the Senate—the negro question. I ask the honorable Senator from Virginia to state whether he does not concur with me in my view of the propriety of inducing the tropic States of this continent to open their doors to the free colored race, and to give them homes and homesteads among them.

Mr. MASON. I will do so, Mr. President, very cheerfully and very frankly. I do not concur in it. I do not concur, because I cannot imagine a greater curse that could be inflicted on the black race—the negroes than to set them free to work out in freedom their own salvation, and thus the honorable Senator from Virginia must know, or will know if he looks at the condition of negroes in freedom—in their relapsing into utter and brutal barbarism. Why, sir, what is the experience of our country? If honorable Senators will open their eyes to the existing facts, which this country has before her, and to the comment, it has been elevated in the condition of slavery. Where they have been humanized, civilized, or christianized, it has been while they were in the condition of slaves; and when they have been emancipated, and gone to live by themselves, they have fallen from the degradation of their race, of necessity, from causes over which we have no control, and can exercise none—fallen into absolute, brutal barbarism.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will inquire of the honorable Senator from Virginia if he does not know the fact that our commerce with the island of Hayti, which is now under the control of the colored race, is more than it is with all Mexico, although they are in the condition of freemen; and that the commerce of Great Britain with her West Indies, although they exist in freedom, amounts to some forty million pounds annually.

Mr. MASON. When we come to look at the facts, they depend entirely on the statistics. I have looked at the statistics from time to time—

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The honorable Senator will not say that he is a single word. I will presume to speak on my own responsibility, but on the responsibility of able men in the British Parliament, speaking in the summer of 1859. Mr. Buxton shows that, by the statistics furnished by the Board of Trade—

"The imports and exports together of the West Indies and Guiana had amounted, in the four years ending with 1857, to £32,568,000; and in the four years ending with 1859, to £37,000,000—an increase of £4,432,000. The exports of sugar, coffee, rum, and cocoa, had greatly increased of late years."

He says, further:

"Probably it would be said that all this was mainly due to the immigrants. In the last five years, twenty-five thousand immigrants had come to all our West Indies, including the children of the children of the immigrants who had gathered about to imagine that this great prosperity was owing to the labors of those few thousand men; and in fact, the islands offered had not received immigrants, were quite as flourishing as those that had. Clearly, then, our West Indies were possessions of immense and increasing value."

Now, the honorable Senator will not understand me as contending that I believe the negro race will be improved and left perfectly independent, and would rise to the same degree of civilization as the Caucasian race of the temperate zone; nor do I believe even the Caucasian race, if they lived in the tropics, where men lived with so little labor, would be in as high a degree of civilization as in the more temperate latitudes; but I say they can live there in a very tolerable degree of civilization. The statistics of Great Britain, and the statements of members of the House of Commons, show the fact that, although the Governors of the West India Islands for some years after emancipation took place gave a most mournful account of the condition of the negro race, and the statements to the absenteeism which wanted the islands before slavery was abolished, and the fact that the estates were all under mortgage, and that they were owned in England, and mainly carried on by persons residing in the West Indies; and when the first shock of emancipation came, the estates especially did go on under its operation; but within the last three or four years the Governors of those islands give altogether different and more encouraging accounts. Those are islands where this very condition of which the honorable Senator speaks, exists among the colored population. Those are the statements of British statesmen.

Mr. MASON. That is a question of fact, which the honorable Senator is not more able to determine than I am. He takes these statistics from those who have collected them. We all know that it is part of the business of the States, and is prone to make facts conform to our theories; and we all know that there is no part of the habitable civilized world where this idea of abolitionism has taken more hold than upon some of the British statesmen, and especially upon Great Britain; and I have seen, from time to time, as that Senator has, in their views and in their speeches in Parliament, directly opposite statements as to the condition of things in the British West Indies. I have understood, on the best information I can get since the emancipation of the negro race in the British West Indies, the value of property there, dependent altogether upon labor to make it productive, has diminished not less than seventy-five per cent.; and the reason of it is, that they have no labor. I know, because it has passed within my personal knowledge, that Great Britain was at one time ready and anxious to get an importation of free negroes, if they would go voluntarily from this country to her possessions in the West Indies, to see if she could use that labor, when there was abundance of the same sort of machines capable of labor that Great Britain. The honorable Senator from Wisconsin comes from one of the new States, where, I presume, there are very few negroes; but there are other Senators, who come from old States, where there are many negroes, and I put it to the Senator whether, in any of the old States, or in any State where there are a large number of free negroes, they ever find them, left to themselves, be it in a city or in a village or in the country, where they are not in a state a very few degrees removed from actual barbarism?

Mr. SIMMONS. I would state that in Rhode Island, which abolished slavery soon after the Revolution, the descendants of those slaves have made as much progress in that State as any class of population.

Mr. MASON. How many negroes have you there?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know—three or four thousand. Many of them are wealthy, respectable, well-behaved people.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I disagree with the Senator from Virginia altogether, in the statement he has made to-day in regard to the condition of the free colored population of the older States of the Union. In my State we have between eight and nine thousand colored people, and I say here to-day that they are intelligent; that they universally attend our schools; they can read and write; they are industrious, and I may say, that in intelligence and good habits, and knowledge of many things, superior to the average population of my State, or, in my judgment, of the country. I speak especially of the colored population of my own State, and I think my remarks apply to the colored population of all New England, of New York, of Pennsylvania, and of New Jersey. I have no objection to go into an examination of facts to show that the charges so often made on the floor of the Senate, without authority, that the free colored population of this country are tending to barbarism, are in no sense of the word correct.

That population is under the ban of this proud and arrogant white race of ours everywhere—in my section of the country, and in others, and although they are allowed their legal rights, still there is a prejudice, a feeling against them that weighs with crushing power upon that race; but, in spite of all this, the free colored population of this country, of the North and of the South, during the twenty years of the past, has made progress in all the attributes that belong to men. It is so in the South; it is so in Virginia; it is so in Georgia; it is so in every southern State of this Union to-day. The free colored population have made progress during the last quarter of a century, and the reports of the various commissions, the examinations of facts, all tend in one direction. Take the city of Washington. We have twelve or thirteen thousand free colored population here. Where is there a more peaceful or law-abiding population than in this city? You may go into an examination of the statistics, and you will find that they are increasing in education, in intelligence, and in property; and in some parts of the country they are making marked progress. It is hard enough for that race in the North and in the South to lead a quiet life upon them, without this perpetual and continual misrepresentation of their condition and their position. So far as my own State is concerned, I say here most positively, that the statements which are so constantly made are in no sense worthy of correction.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I made the inquiry, and it was said that it should be answered, whether, in the experience of Senators who came from those States where there remained a comparatively large colored population in freedom, they had not regretted, and whether, wherever they were found in masses, wherever they were congregated and left to communities by themselves, they did not show a strong proclivity to the barbarism for which they emerged when they were subjected to this condition. There has been my presence so far as I have had a personal knowledge, or so far as I have derived it from the observations of others. I may be that in the New England States, for aught I know to the contrary, and more especially in the State of Massachusetts, it would be true to say, as Mr. Mason says, that for a white man, to be idle and to be dependent. Everything works there. If a man or a woman gets poor, they pick him or her up and put him or her in the work-house and make them work; and I dare say if the statistics of the State were looked to, it would be found that a large portion of the negro population of that State were now subjected to coercive labor somewhere and in some form.

I remember very well when I really had the good fortune to be in the State which the honorable Senator represents—Massachusetts—that, riding through the beautiful country adjacent to Boston, appropriated to villas, magnificent country seats of hospitable, kind, and generous gentlemen, as far as my intercourse went with them, I saw an accumulated waste of the most beautiful taste; I was struck with the fact that, in three out of four of their most beautiful and highly adorned grounds opening upon the public highways, there was not a gate; and all the preserves of flowers and of shrubbery, and all that which required attention, and to be saved from depredation, were open to the highways, and wherever there was a gate—and there were very few—I never saw the gate shut. I was struck with the fact, and remarked to a gentleman who was near me, "How is this? no man whatever takes any deep of the depredation that would be committed by the cattle who are allowed to roam at large upon the highways." "Why," said he, "that is not allowed;" and, in all my ride, I never saw even a gate or a pig upon the highway anywhere. That is answered. "Well," said he, "in my country, and all through the South, the poor people pasture their milch cows on the highways, if they have no fields to pasture them in—and very good pasture they get—and their other stock run upon the public roads, and are not molested. How the poor people take care of their stock!" It was answered at once, and very philosophically, "We have no poor; there are none who would be dependent upon this sort of precarious subsistence for their stock." They did not mean to say that they had no poor in fact, because that would have contradicted the Scripture, which says the poor are always with you. They certainly did not mean that they had no poor in fact; but it was disclosed when they went in their almshouse. There were the poor, carefully provided for, scrubbed clean, meat and drink given to them; but they were confined, and made to work. They had no poor—at least none that could be seen on the roads.

There is a very well known fact in the organization of such a society as that, that a negro who would live in Virginia under the sun, enjoying that which his race most enjoys, the basking rays of the hottest sun, in perfect repose and quite unmolested, would be picked up in Massachusetts and thrown into a work-house and scrubbed clean—and what! Made to work. I have no doubt about that, and therefore it may be that, with the negro population distributed through these States, from their organization—and a fortunate one for them it is, considering their general character—they are none of those idle, thriftless, vagabond negroes that you find elsewhere, because they are picked up and put in the work-house and made to work—coercive labor—shut out from the eye of man. We see none of it when we go there, unless we have entrance into their houses of correction.

But, sir, look at Canada, the great place of refuge now for the absconding slaves from the southern States—those who are helped off by the constituents of honorable gentlemen on the other side of the water, and get into a work-house in what is their condition at Chatham, and their neighborhood? I have never been there; but I see through the public press that the white people are rising there, because of the condition of the population that has been thrust upon them. They have got a population that they are determined to get rid of in some way. Why? Because the population who come there are those born to consume the products of the labors of others, unless they are made to labor themselves. I have seen, in the newspapers, that the people of that island have all around them a great deal of trouble. I have seen that the people have held public meetings to memorialize their provincial Legislature to take some measure to expel that race, as nuisances, in the country where they are found.

The honorable Senator from Wisconsin asks me whether there is not now a larger commerce between the United States and Hayti than between the United States and Mexico. I do not know anything about the fact; but I know that, from the unsettled condition of the States of the continent, such a political disturbance, the Mexicans have very little trade or commerce anywhere, and I presume that they have as little with any other country comparatively as they have with us. They have a larger commerce with England, I know, than they ever had with us, because England is more enterprising, because she offers more facilities and inducements. I know, however, if those are to be trusted who have been to Hayti, and who have seen the condition of the population there, that in the French colony, and in the English colony of Hayti proper, they are in a state of war constantly with the negroes; that the negroes have very little intercourse there; and in Dominica—if they are to be trusted, who have been there, and I have conversed with persons who have been there, who have resided there, and who know something of the character of that population—it is a common fact that the great mass of the negroes are obliged to live in the country because there is no place for them in the city, that those who live in the city are mere jobbers about the streets, picking up a few cents here and there, and doing nothing, which a negro is most prone to, a desultory jobbing kind of life, to pick up enough to answer the immediate necessities of the day, and then to go. Thrift, providence, accumulation, are unknown to them.

There is this of all individuals. There are individual exceptions to that; but the great mass of the negroes in the country are living in the primal forests, cultivating no more of the earth than their wives and little children scratch over, and, in time, to raise a common vegetable food—the plantain, pumpkin, sweet potato, and matters of that kind, that are most easily raised. The men do nothing. Nine or ten months in the year they are absolutely and utterly idle. They live in hovels. They have dirt floors; they have no furniture of any kind or description, unless the gourds in which they tangle the water to drink. They have beds, or tables, or stools. They have no desire for, no idea of, any of the slightest advances in civilization. It is not in their nature. They are found there as they are found in the wilds of Africa; and the men come out periodically for a few weeks in the spring and in the fall, and they are paid by the hoganey for wages, and those wages are expended in rum. That is the condition, I am told, of the great mass of the population. Whether it be true or not, will depend on the facts which the observation of intelligent minds imparts to us.

But, to consider this very desultory conversation—for it is more of that character—I will say to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin that I should be opposed to his policy, from regard to the white race and from regard to the black race, of attempting to send them into Central America or anywhere in that region of country. What is to be done with blacks who are now emancipated, I am not prepared to say. It is a great problem that is to be worked out. We had thought at one time, when they were emancipated in the slave States, that they would find a refuge in the free States. The free States are expelling them. Why? If they formed a desirable population they would not do so. If they were not fruges consumere nati they would not be expelled; they would tolerate them. I agree that something is to be done with them. What is to be done with them I am not now prepared to say; but from regard for that, and regard which we ought to feel for everything that pertains to animal life, to ascend no higher, I would be the last to advise that they should be sent into that tropic to shift for themselves. Something better may be done for them at home. As to the slave population, I agree with the Senator from South Carolina: if a problem, it has worked itself out; the thing is settled here, so far as the South is concerned or the opinions and purposes of the South, or their ability to make their opinions and their purposes good. It will become, as it has already begun to be, the established policy of the South to have no more emancipation. Let them continue in bondage as they now exist, as the best condition for both races.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, obtained the floor.

Several SEYMOURS. Let us adjourn.
Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The suggestion on the right and the left is for an adjournment. So far as I am concerned, I will be governed by the wishes of the Senate. I am prepared to go on and answer the Senator from Virginia, and prefer doing so, if the Senate will permit; but as it is suggested that an adjournment would be preferred, I have no disposition to resist the adjournment in order to make the remarks I intend to make. I feel prepared now, without wasting a night to sleep on it, to answer every position the Senator has assumed here to-day in reference to the homestead policy.

Mr. HALE. I do not doubt what the Senator says. I know that it is a cause in which anybody can make a mistake, but I do not wish to do so to-morrow; and I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Before that is done, I wish to move a reconsideration of a bill that has perhaps passed by mistake.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

FORT ATKINSON RESERVATION.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HALLAM] called up a bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs, which I am to see by the report to-day—I was not in my seat at the time—and procured its passage. It is a bill relating to the lands of the Fort Atkinson reservation. I received a notification from the Interior Department some considerable time since, and if my memory does not carry me wrong, the notification was put with the papers in the case, requesting that the bill should not be acted on by the Senate until we could hear further from the Indian office connected with that Department; because they were investigating the facts in regard to some Indian title, which would render it necessary that we should have the information that might be developed in that investigation before we acted on the bill at all. It was my intention to resist it, if an effort was to pass the bill; and I supposed the Senator from Iowa was advised of that fact.

I cannot now get at the papers, as they have gone to the other House. My motion will not affect the bill at all, if it ought to pass; and if so, it can be passed afterwards very readily. I ask that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, so that the measure be transmitted to the House requesting that the bill and papers may be returned to this body. I do not know that it is necessary, until we can have an investigation, to take the vote on the reconsideration; but we at least want the papers and bill here in this body.

Mr. HARLAN. I know not that I shall interpose any objection to the motion made by the Senator from Arkansas; but I think he is totally mistaken in relation to the facts that it is alluding to. A bill passed the Senate, at the last session, including all that is contained in this bill, and also providing for the sale of lands at two other points. The subject was thoroughly investigated by my colleague at that time, who is not now a member of the Senate, and I think the bill passed the Senate without objection.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Very well; and I will say that I know I have received the communication from the Interior Department requesting a delay. It may be that it is not applicable, and it will have no effect; but I ask to enter the motion to reconsider. I will not ask a vote on it now.

Mr. HARLAN. I will not interpose any objection. If there is anything that can be brought to light, I am willing it should be done.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I also ask that a message be transmitted to the House, asking the return of the bill and the papers, in order that we may examine it before discussing the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The papers now being in the possession of the Senate, the motion to reconsider would not, perhaps, be strictly in order. The motion to send a message to the House requesting the return of the papers would first be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I make that motion, then.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands is this an Indian claim to which he refers?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am not able to give the Senator that particular. After the Secretary of the Interior had reported to us from the Land Office, and also from the War Department, that there was no difficulty in regard to our action on the subject, I subsequently received a letter, as chairman of the committee, informing me of the facts; it was after the bill had been reported to the Senate for passage—that information was about being developed, on an examination then in progress and being made in the Indian Office, that might affect materially our action concerning the bill. Certainly, the Senator does not want a bill passed that is not right.

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Certainly, I would not want to object to the passage of a bill that is right. I think it is well that we should have the papers here, and that there are no other rights affected, and none other that may receive injustice at our hands. That is all I want. I never heard of such a thing being raised before. I hope it will not be repeated.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not resisting it. I only addressed an inquiry to the Senator from Arkansas for the purpose of eliciting from him some information in regard to this subject.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am not able to furnish that.

Mr. GRIMES. I will now say to the Senator from Arkansas, I am not interfering with this subject. I know the Indian title was extinguished some ten years to this tract of country. I know it has been in the occupancy of white settlers, to whom the title will be granted by this bill, for the last eight years. They are exceedingly anxious that the bill shall pass, and I have no doubt the Senator, when he shall be satisfied that there is nothing wrong about it, will consent that the bill shall be taken up and passed through without delay.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I concur in the proposition, and reported the bill to the Senate. I will not make any pledge about it. My action I think is good enough thus far in favor of the bill. I do not want to call it up in order to defeat a bill I reported myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is, that a message be sent to the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill indicated by the Senator from Arkansas, with the papers connected with it, to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, APRIL 10, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. THOMAS H. STROCKT. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

IMPROVEMENT IN AGRICULTURE.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit a resolution, to which I think there will be no objection.

Several MEMBERS. Let the resolution be read. The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas Russell Comstock, of Dutchess county, New York, proposes by the recommendation of a majority of many persons, including eleven ex-United States Senators, and the professors of ten colleges and universities, namely: Seneca University, New Haven University, Albany (New York) University, College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York city, Union College, New York; New York State Agricultural College, Geneva; College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York city, Normal School, Washington (Pennsylvania) College, Ohio Farmers' College, and Ohio Female College, the most incredible fact that he has perfected a system of cultivating the vegetable kingdom so as to increase all agricultural products more than fifteen per cent., without additional expense or labor over that recommended by agricultural writers, which, when known and adopted by the people of the United States, will amount to a large amount annually. The proposition is such, of his country, the action of Congress seems to be demanded that this improved, or what is termed perfect, system of agriculture should be generally known and published in the Patent Office report on agriculture: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee of nine be appointed by the Speaker to inquire into the expediency of improving agriculture by publishing Russell Comstock's admitted discoveries in a report to Congress.

Mr. WHITELEY. I object to the introduction of that resolution. There probably was never such a humbug heard of before.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I hope that the gentleman from Delaware will withdraw his objection, and let the resolution pass.

Mr. WHITELEY. I do not insist upon my objection. We have, sir, nothing more to do with the subject-matter of the preamble and resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois than we have with the solar system. This is the most unmitigated humbug ever introduced to the derision of Congress.

Mr. McKNIGHT. I endorse what has been said by the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I think that the gentleman from Delaware is entirely mistaken in his assumption of the nature of improvement in agriculture, stated in the preamble and resolution.

Mr. WHITELEY. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. The resolution cannot be received.

SAMUEL J. HENSLEY.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to make a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, then reported back Senate bill No. 349, for the relief of Samuel J. Hensley, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I object to that report.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not visit upon me retaliation for an action taken by the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The report has been received, and the bill has been referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

MASON RATTY.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the Committee of Claims. I move that the Committee of Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of MASON RATTY, of Jackson county, North Carolina, asking compensation for a horse killed in the service of the United States, in the Florida war; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

It was so ordered.

STAMBOAT BILL.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Mr. Speaker, it is known to the House that the steamboat bill is the special order for this day. The gentleman from Illinois, (Mr. WASHBURN,) chairman of the Committee on Commerce, who has charge of the bill, is absent, because of illness, and I therefore move, with the consent of the House, that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until next Tuesday.

The motion was agreed to.

PRISONERS SENT HOME BY CONSULS.

Mr. HICKMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the application for appropriation for the payment of expense incurred in the transportation of prisoners sent home by our consuls in foreign territories. The Committee on the Judiciary are in favor of the allowance of the appropriation, and in order that such an appropriation may be made, I move that the papers in the case be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. That committee ought to have them at the earliest moment.

It was so ordered.

PRESIDENT'S PROTEST.

Mr. HOUSTON. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the reading of a minority report from the Committee on the Judiciary upon the protest of the President of the United States.

Mr. TAYLOR read his report from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HICKMAN. In view of the further consideration of the report from the Committee on the Judiciary be postponed until next Tuesday, the 17th instant. I also move the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That twenty thousand extra copies of the President's protest, and the majority and minority reports thereon, be printed, and the same distributed.

Mr. BOCKO. That resolution, under the rules, must be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. It goes there, of course.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I move to amend the motion to postpone, by substituting the 7th of May for the 17th instant.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. That is too far off.

Mr. HICKMAN. I take it that my motion is not open to amendment.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I have the right to propose another day.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I suggest to gentlemen that they had better not fix a day of the week when the Democratic convention will be in session in Charleston. Congress may wish to adjourn over that week.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I want to say a word assigning the reason why I propose a change of the day to which the further consideration of these reports shall be postponed. There are a great number of gentlemen upon this side of the House who will be absent next week, and who desire both to debate and vote upon the resolution reported by the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary. It is an important subject, more important than perhaps any other which will be presented to the Congress; and I trust that gentlemen upon the other side of the House will not compel us to take this question up in the absence of many who desire to participate in the discussion, and who want to be upon the record.

Mr. HICKMAN. Does the Chair decide that the motion is amendable?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is competent to move another day, and that the motion is amendable to that extent.

Mr. HOUSTON. If there is to be lengthy debate upon the resolution of the Committee on the Judiciary, I suggest to gentlemen that the adoption of the 17th instant would necessarily run the debate into the time fixed for the meeting of the Charleston convention. I suggest that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until after the Charleston convention, to be called up by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HICKMAN.]

Mr. HICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible to decide any day fixed which would suit all parties in this House. In order to meet the convenience of those who wish to go to Charleston, of course it would have to be thrown over into the early part of May. Then other gentlemen will object, who will necessarily be absent at that time for a week or two. There will be those wanting to attend the Baltimore and the Chicago conventions. I have found it impossible, sir, to fix a day which will meet the views of different gentlemen in the House, and I must therefore insist on my motion as I have made it.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. The Baltimore convention does not assemble until the 9th day of May.

Mr. HOUSTON. If it be objected that the 7th of May is too near the day fixed for the meeting of the Baltimore convention, why not fix the 2d day of May for the postponement of the further consideration of this question?

Mr. GROW. That is an act for territorial business.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am sure that the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not want to press debate and a vote upon the resolution when a large number of this side of the House will be absent from the city.

Mr. HICKMAN. If next Tuesday be fixed, it will be easy at that time to have the subject still further postponed. At present I do not see how it is possible to have a day fixed which will suit a majority of the House. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I demand the yeas and nays upon my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. Would it be in order to move to lay the amendment upon the table? I mean, I use that motion.

The SPEAKER. It could not be made without carrying the whole subject with it.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. If the object of the gentleman from Illinois is to prevent gentlemen attending the convention at Charleston, I will waive my amendment.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I say very frankly to the gentleman from Ohio, that the nomination of a President of the United States is no business of this House. That matter has been intrusted to delegates, and we ought to remain here to attend to our business.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio withdraw his amendment?

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I do not.

Mr. STANTON. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio if he would not give the House time to have it set down for the 16th, instead of the 17th, which would give one day more for its consideration before gentlemen would have to leave for the convention?

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I object to this arrangement if it is in order.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. If the day mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio is agreeable to this side of the House, I would withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HICKMAN. I am perfectly willing to accept that day.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I object to any arrangement.

Mr. KILLINGER. I object to the withdrawal of the amendment.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays, with the understanding that the 16th instant is to be substituted. If objection be made to that, I shall insist upon my amendment and the yeas and nays.

Mr. HICKMAN. I modify my resolution by substituting the 16th for the 17th.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. There is no question of order about it.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. There is a question of order; and I will be heard upon it. The yeas and nays have been ordered; and after they have been ordered, I raise the question whether it be competent for the mover of the resolution to change it by an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I object; and the question must be determined by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear any objection.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. Does the Chair entertain the objection?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman says he means to withdraw, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I did object.

The SPEAKER. Then the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HICKMAN. I trust it is still in the power of the House to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. It is still in the power of the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his amendment; and then it is in my power to substitute a different day in my resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he must have the unanimous consent of the House to do so.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER. The decision of the Chair was founded upon the fact that he did not understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Kellogg] meant to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. Cannot a gentleman withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays without unanimous consent?

Mr. COX. Cannot I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. It is too late. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I do not understand that there is any objection to the withdrawing the call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and there is objection to that order being withdrawn.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. The objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. BARSDALE. I wish the Chair would state the question. There is so much noise that we have not been able to hear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HICKMAN] proposes to postpone the consideration of this subject until the 16th instant. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Vallandigham] moves to amend by substituting the 7th day of May; and upon that the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HICKMAN. I would inquire if it is not entirely competent at this time for the House to allow the withdrawal of the call for the yeas and nays, as no response has been made?

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. The objection has been withdrawn.

Mr. STANTON. The gentleman from Ohio can withdraw his amendment without the consent of the House; and the yeas and nays fall, as a matter of course. Then the gentleman from Pennsylvania may modify his motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania may move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. It can be done by unanimous consent; and I ask the Chair to put the question to the House, whether there is any objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered?

Mr. HICKMAN. I am willing to make that motion, and I do make it.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and then the yeas and nays were again ordered.

Mr. VALLANDIGHAM. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HICKMAN. I now modify my original motion, by inserting the 16th instant for the 17th.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I again raise a point of order. After action has been taken by the House, I hold that it is not competent for a gentleman to withdraw his amendment, or to modify his motion. Action has been taken by the House. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the yeas and nays have been withdrawn; hence action has been taken by the House, and it is incompetent for the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his amendment.

The SPEAKER. The House has reconsidered its whole action, if the Chair understands it correctly. Therefore, it seems to the Chair that the gentleman from Ohio had a right to withdraw his amendment, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania had the right to modify his motion.

The motion as modified was then agreed to.

DECIMAL SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, by unanimous consent, presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Maine, in reference to a uniform decimal system of weights and measures; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GROW. I now call for the regular order of business.

ATLANTA A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Will the gentleman waive his call for a moment, until I can call the attention of the House to a question of public exigency? I refer to the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce conferring upon Atlanta, Georgia, the privileges of a port of delivery. It is necessary, in view of the pressure of public business at that port, that the bill should be passed, and that the House should have conferred upon it the privileges of a port of delivery. The bill contains only a few lines, and I am sure the House will pass it immediately.

No objection being made, the bill was read a first and second time.

It authorizes all goods that are entered at Savannah, within the collection district of Savannah, and the duties thereon accrued, to be transported in bond to Atlanta, within said collection district, where such duties shall be paid on the withdrawal of said goods from consumption, under the provisions of the law regulating the withdrawal of merchandise; and a surveyor is to be appointed for Atlanta, with a salary not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. CLOPTON. I move to amend the bill by adding a clause making Montgomery, Alabama, a port of entry.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I cannot consent to that amendment.

Mr. CLOPTON. I move that as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not suppose that the proposed amendment is germane to the bill; and therefore it is not in order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under its operation, the bill was passed.

Mr. GATHELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. MRAE. I ask leave to offer a resolution.

Mr. GROW. I must insist on the regular order of business.

Mr. MRAE. It is only a resolution asking for additional information. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. GROW. If it give rise to no debate, I will not object.

There being no objection,

Mr. MRAE offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That in addition to the information asked in the resolution adopted in reference to the African slave trade, the President be requested also to communicate to this House the number of officers and men in the service of the United States belonging to the African squadron who have died in that service since the date of the Ashburton treaty, up to the present time.

REGULAR ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I ask leave to report back from the Committee on Commerce a bill, which I ask to have put upon its passage.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

and, if so, two years' immigration would at least give sufficient population for a free State; and we ask not whether the population be twenty-five thousand or two hundred thousand. It is, in my judgment, under the circumstances, a matter of no earthly consequence. But I have cited the votes of the people of Kansas in order to show that the constitution men were right, and that it does not come here blackened with fraud and with an attempt to force upon the people a constitution which they abhor, and institutions they loathe.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the minority report I had one word to say, and I desire to say it now, in order to give the majority an opportunity to comment on what I say, if they desire to. So far as the rights of Indians in Kansas are concerned, the present bill is, word for word, on that point, like the bill which passed the Senate, and was voted for by nearly every Democrat in this House, for the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution; and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] who presented the minority report voted for it. He was not then as jealous of the rights of the Indians as he is now. No greater safeguards or protections were there for the rights of the Indian tribes in Kansas in the Lecompton bill than are to be found in this bill, because upon that point the two bills are word for word the same; while the bill which is known as the English bill gives no protection to the Indians, and the gentleman who represents the minority of the committee voted for it without question. The rights of the Indians, it seems, were not at stake then; and their interests were surely overlooked.

But, sir, so far as the Indian tribes in Kansas are concerned, they are secured in this bill in the same phraseology in which they were secured in what is known as the Kansas-Nebraska bill. No more regard was paid then to these sacred and inviolable rights of the Indians under treaties with the Government, than is made in this bill, because the phraseology is almost identical in both. Then, sir, are the rights of white men to be disregarded now, because of the supposed rights of the Indian tribes, when they are secured and guaranteed in the bill? Shall the people of Kansas be forced to stand at the doors of the Union four years longer, with the liability of the reputation of the same outrages and wrongs upon them that were perpetrated for the last four years, when the bill, so far as the rights of Indians are concerned, is as strong as the English bill, or the Kansas-Nebraska bill and the Lecompton bill, and when, in the bill reported from the conference committee, known as the English bill, no attention was paid to the rights of Indians, and not one word was said in reference to their treaty rights and stipulations?

But, Mr. Speaker, I have been drawn further into this discussion than I intended. I desired simply to state the facts in the proceedings to form the constitution now presented, and I will enumerate them now in a more rapid manner.

The Legislature of Kansas passed a law submitting to the people of Kansas the question whether they would hold a convention to frame a constitution and State government. The provisions of that law were complied with in every particular. The vote of the people was taken, and in holding a convention; and delegates to that convention were elected under it. The convention was held, which adopted a constitution; which constitution was submitted to the people of Kansas, and ratified by a vote of two to one. Such are the proceedings in brief of the people of Kansas preliminary to this application.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. When I left the House a few minutes since, the Clerk had commenced to read the reports of the majority and minority of the Committee on Territories. I do not know whether the entire reports were read or not.

Mr. GROW. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the Clerk only read a paragraph or two of the report. I found that the members of the House had not read the report, and I have no hands, and I did not think it worth while to take up the time of the House with the reading.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. If the gentleman from Missouri will allow me a moment, I wish to propound one or two questions to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will yield, if it does not interfere with my right to the floor.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for my own information. I find in the bill, on page 2, a description of the boundaries under which it is proposed to admit Kansas as a State into the Union. I will ask the gentleman whether these boundaries are identical with the boundary of the Territory of Kansas as they now exist; and if not, in what respect they differ?

Mr. GROW. No, sir. The boundaries provided in this bill are just the boundaries specified in the Constitution. The State, as proposed, extends west to the one hundred and second meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, or the twenty-fifth degree west of Washington. The Territory itself extends beyond that meridian, and embraces what is known in common parlance as the Pike's Peak country.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Are they identical with the boundaries contained in the Lecompton constitution?

Mr. GROW. I think not. I think the boundaries specified in the Lecompton constitution embrace the whole country embraced in the Territory of Kansas.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I have one question further, which I propound to the gentleman. Is the population embraced within the Pike's Peak country, as the bill estimates, less than the population given of the population of Kansas?

Mr. GROW. No, sir.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. If I am informed correctly, the Pike's Peak country contains a population of some fifteen or twenty thousand.

Mr. GROW. About that number. I will state to the gentleman and to the House that it is about four hundred miles from the western boundary of Missouri to the proposed western boundary of the State of Kansas—the one hundred and second meridian of longitude. If I am not mistaken, it is about two hundred and fifty or three hundred miles from that line to the western boundary of the Territory of Kansas. It will be seen, therefore, that the limits of the proposed State leave out the intervening country known as the Pike's Peak country.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. There is one further question which I desire to propound to the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and then I will cease.

Mr. PARROTT. If the gentleman from New York will allow me, I wish to make a reservation in reference to the boundary. The boundaries fixed in this bill are the same as those fixed in what is known as the Toombs bill, which was reported to the Senate in 1856. They are likewise the same as those fixed in the bill proposed in the House the same year by Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, and which was very generally voted for by the Democratic members of the House.

Mr. GROW. If the gentleman will allow me, I will make a remark right now. At the last Congress a bill was reported to this House from the Committee on Territories, by Mr. Stephens, their chairman, proposing to establish the Territory of Jefferson, fixing the eastern boundary of that Territory one degree further east than the western boundary of Kansas, as now proposed. The western boundary of the State as now proposed is, as I stated, the one hundred and second degree of longitude. That fixed by the Committee on Territories last Congress, for the eastern boundary of the Territory of Jefferson, was one hundred and one degree.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. One more question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is this: whether any portion of the population—the voting population—of Kansas estimated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania included in sixteen or seventeen thousand which it is admitted, I believe, are in the Pike's Peak region?

Mr. GROW. Not at all; for the people of Pike's Peak would have nothing at all to do with the territorial organization of Kansas. They being on far as the Rocky Mountains, have set up a kind of provisional government for themselves; they have elected a Delegate to Congress for themselves; have taken no part in these Kansas elections; and, therefore, they are not embraced in the statement of the number of votes within the limits of the proposed State of Kansas. There is a strip of country, known as the Buffalo Plain, two hundred and fifty or three hundred miles in breadth, between the western boundary of the proposed State and the Pike's Peak country, which is not inhabited. They are, therefore, a distinct community, and form no part of the number of population or voters which I have given for the proposed State of Kansas.

Mr. McCLURE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what is the distance between the western boundary of the proposed State and the western boundary of the present Territory of Kansas?

Mr. GROW. I have no exact information of the distance; but my information is, that it is about two hundred and fifty or three hundred miles. I desire to say, further, if the gentleman from Missouri will permit me, that Kansas, with the boundaries as now proposed, contains about eighty-five or ninety thousand square miles. I state this in answer to a question which has been asked.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask that the first two paragraphs of the minority report may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"On the 4th of May, 1858, Congress enacted a law in relation to Kansas, which, among other things, provided that 'the people of said Territory are hereby authorized and empowered to elect a convention to frame a constitution for said Territory, by the name of the State of Kansas, according to the Federal Constitution, and may elect delegates for that purpose.' The law further provided, 'that the population of said Territory equals or exceeds the ratio of representation equal to or exceeds the ratio of representation of the States of the United States; and whenever thereafter such delegates shall assemble in convention, they shall first determine by a vote whether it is the wish of the people of the proposed State to be admitted into the Union at that time; and if, and shall proceed to form a constitution, and take all necessary steps for the establishment of a State government, in conformity with the Federal Constitution, subject to such regulations and restrictions as to the manner of the election of delegates as may be prescribed by the people of the proposed State as they may deem proper; and the said Territory shall be admitted into the Union as a State under such constitution thus fairly and legally made, with or without slavery, as said constitution may prescribe.'"

"A perusal of the law shows that Kansas was authorized to form a constitution, and apply for admission into the Union as a State. The law further provided, 'that the population of said Territory equals or exceeds the ratio of representation equal to or exceeds the ratio of representation of the States of the United States.' This step is taken to form a State government by the authorities of Kansas, and to ascertain whether the people are in accordance with the laws of the land, was, therefore, to ascertain whether Kansas contained the requisite population. Did the people of Kansas take that step? Did the law require it to be taken? No one so asserts. On the contrary, they proceeded as though there were no laws on the subject; or, at least, if there were laws, they claimed no authority adequate to their enforcement upon the people disposed to disregard them. Having a contempt for the law, and relying upon a powerful party for support in so doing, they disregarded the law."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the objections which I make to the passage of the bill reported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. GROW], for the admission of Kansas as a State, are fully stated in the report I have submitted, and which is before the House. If the House will bear with me, however, I will briefly state the reasons of my opposition to the pending bill. Whatever may have heretofore been the policy of the Government in relation to the admission of new States; notwithstanding the seeming disregard whether they had, or had not, the requisite population, under the ratio of representation, to entitle them to a member in this House, the whole question was determined by the last Congress in the case of Kansas. The people of the English Kansas bill, provided that Kansas should not be admitted as a State into the Union until it was ascertained, by a census legally taken, that it had the requisite population. This House and the Senate were constituted under a policy by which they gave upon that bill; they were both committed to it by the enactment of that bill. I understand that the policy of the General Government, in the admission of new States into the Union about the time that Florida became a State, was so far as the ratio of representation was concerned, to be controlled by the fact whether the new State had or had not a population sufficient under the ratio of representation to entitle it to a member upon this floor. However that may be, I doubt whether any fair-minded man will question the propriety of the General Government adopting some rule on the subject. Will any member upon this floor deny that it is not a good rule that, before a new State is admitted into the Union, it shall be first ascertained, by a census duly taken, whether it has or has not a sufficient population to entitle it to a member in this House and the existing ratio of representation? Is there any reason, drawn from the science of government, any propriety deducible from common sense, why the people of a Territory should be erected into a State government, with all the sovereignty, and immunities, and privileges of a sister State in the Confederacy, while by the census it does not come up to the standard fixed by law for a representation in the House of Representatives? It is upon that ground I make my first objection to the pending bill, and I am fortified by the enactment by the last Congress of the English bill. The first section of that bill embraced in my report, and as it was read from the Clerk's desk, the House must perceive the force of the position I assume.

Now, sir, whether the passage of that bill was the result of party action, or not, is a question for this House to determine. I am free to confess that party considerations had something to do with it. Whatever may be the fact in that regard, nevertheless the principle of that English bill must be recognized as a true one. It is a principle which, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, ought never to be departed from by any Congress, whatever party may have the ascendancy. Who doubts the propriety of the principle? Nobody that I know of. If it then be a good principle, can it be adopted too early? I think not. The Republican party stand here committed by the votes of its members during the last Congress and at this, to the declaration that Congress has the power to control the Territories of the United States. They stand here committed to that doctrine in some form or other. They declare that Congress has the constitutional right to direct the action of the Territories in reference to all the preparations preparatory to their admission as States into the Union.

The English bill provides how the fact of requisite population shall be brought to appear. How? By a census legally taken. Now, sir, when the people of Kansas undertook to make preparations for their admission into the Union as a State, what was their duty? It was, that they should have fulfilled the obligations imposed upon them by the people of the land. Did Governor Geary, who they pretend that they did, nobody pretends that the people ever intended to do so. That people defy the action of Congress, and the chairman of the Committee on Territories (Mr. Geary) sustains them in that defiance; and he says that they are justified, because Congress, at previous sessions, acted as if the taking of a census were wholly unnecessary. I hope that that argument will not obtain in this House. It ought not to obtain anywhere. The people of Kansas ought to have taken a census in some form or other. They were solicited and asked for admission as a State into this Union. If they have failed to take a census, and are unable to supply us with evidence that their population equals that of the ratio of representation for this House, then, sir, lay, under the English bill, can we admit the constituents of a State? What right, under all the circumstances, have we to admit Kansas into the Union in violation of express law? This is the reason of my objection to the passage of this bill.

The act of taking a census is easily performed. In the case of Kansas it ought to have been taken. If the people there were loyal to the Constitution and loyal to the Government; if they were disposed to obey the law of the land, they would have taken a census. They came here as a people, and as a people, but as a lawless, tumultuous community, acting themselves up in violation of law and in opposition to the directions given by the national Legislature. They condemn and defy the law of the land. They defy the action of the Union, of which they are members. They are the constituents of a State. They form a constitution and State government in defiance of the law, and then they present themselves at the bar of Congress, applying for admission under that constitution. When we ask in reference to a census, whether there is a requisite population, we are answered that perhaps there is such a population. We are referred to votes which were taken in the Territory of Kansas before the Wyandotte constitution was framed. Those votes were taken in a Territory of different boundaries from the State now proposed to be admitted. That is my answer to that part of the case of the other side, and I think that it is sufficient.

Mr. Speaker, my next objection I present with full confidence, if there be justice still left in the American national Legislature, that it will not and cannot be overlooked. It is that the Wyandotte constitution of Kansas is a violation of treaty stipulations and obligations made over and over again upon the plighted faith of this Government, in the treaties with Indian tribes, concerning the lands of those Indians. I ask the Clerk to read the boundaries of the proposed State under the Wyandotte constitution.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"We, the people of Kansas, grateful to Almighty God for our civil and religious privileges, in order to insure the full enjoyment of our rights as American citizens, do ordain and establish this constitution of the State of Kansas, with the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning at a point on the western boundary of the State of Missouri, where the thirty-seventh parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence running west on said parallel to the twenty-fifth meridian of longitude west from Washington; thence south and west in a direct line to the fourth parallel of north latitude; thence east on said parallel to the western boundary of said State; thence south and west in a direct line to the western boundary of said State to the place of beginning."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The boundaries of the Wyandotte constitution are the boundaries prescribed in the pending bill. I do not suppose that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Geary) will pretend that the conditions and stipulations of the United States are to be disregarded.

He will not pretend, nor will any lawyer in this House pretend, that the provision in the act for the admission of Kansas into the Union, in respect to impairing the rights of person or property now pertaining to the Indians in that Territory, is not intended to be applied to treaty stipulations, amounts to anything at all. The boundaries of the State of Kansas, as prescribed by the constitution of Kansas, is the paramount law, and Kansas, when admitted, will go to her constitution to determine what her boundaries are. Hence, the provision of the bill is calculated to deceive and procure the admission of a State whose organic act will impair and injure the rights of the red man, and is calculated to bring about a conflict of State and Federal jurisdiction—such as once occurred in the case of the boundaries of the State of Georgia, who afterwards removed to the Territory of Kansas. Now, for the very purpose of preventing the recurrence of such a state of things, the right which this bill violates by its terms were guaranteed to those Indians by solemn treaty stipulations.

I now ask the Clerk to turn to my report, and read what I there say in reference to a violation of these treaties with the Indians, so far as regards the rights of the Indians of the land.

The Clerk read, as follows:

"But not only was the constitution of Kansas formed and sent here in disregard of the law, but some of its provisions are in direct conflict with treaty stipulations entered into with the Indians."

"All treaties made, or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." So reads the Constitution of the United States. Now, let us examine the treaty of the United States with the Indians owning a portion of the Kansas Territory. In this treaty the United States, and see if Congress has violated the rights of the Indians of the Union with the boundaries which she claims in the constitution which was formed in contempt of the law of the United States.

"In May, 1826, the United States made a treaty with a portion of the chiefs and head men of the Cherokee nation of the western part of the Mississippi river, who ceded a portion of the proposed State of Kansas to the Cherokees for a permanent home, and which shall, under the most solemn guarantees, be forever theirs, and shall be held by them as a home that shall never in all future time be embarrassed by having extended over it the laws, or placed over it the jurisdiction of any Territory or State, or shall be subject to the extension in any way of any of the limits of any existing Territory or State."

"In 1828, another treaty was made by the United States with the same party of the Cherokees, which extended their lands in Kansas. On the 12th of December, 1828, the United States made a treaty with the Cherokees, by which they agreed for $50,000,000 to remove from Georgia to their new country west of Arkansas. In this treaty the United States agreed to hold the Cherokees eight hundred thousand additional acres of land lying 'east of the Cherokees,' and 'bordering on Missouri fifty miles,' for $20,000,000. (See second article of the treaty.) To understand the greatness of the country given by the Cherokees in Kansas, the following extract from the second article of the treaty is made. The line described to the north and west of the Cherokees, and the line described to the south and east of the Cherokees, shall be the line assigned to the Senecas; thence on the south line of the Senecas to Great River; thence up said Great River as far as the mouth of the Cherokees; thence down the river, if necessary; thence up and between said south Cherokees line, extended west, if necessary, and the line of the Senecas, as far as a line running north and south from said Cherokees line in said line of the Senecas, and thence south as far as the western boundary of the United States within the whole described boundary."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I now send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in answer to a letter addressed by me to him, asking him what portion of the Cherokee lands, in the United States, he agreed should never be put within the limits of any State or Territory, and around which no line of any State or Territory should extend without their consent, were included in the proposed boundaries of the State of Kansas. I allege it as a fact, and the report, and it should not be included in the State of Kansas, prescribed in this constitution, include a portion of country fifty miles long by twenty-five miles wide, secured to the Indians by solemn treaty.

Mr. GROW. I ask the gentleman if the boundary of this bill, with reference to the lands of the Cherokees and other Indians, are not just the same as those contained in the Leconte bill of last Congress?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The gentleman misunderstands my remarks. I allege that a breadth of land fifty miles long by twenty-five miles wide is taken by Kansas in violation of the express terms of the three treaties made by the United States, in which the United States Government, in the most solemn form, said that these lands, or any part thereof, should not be included within the boundaries of any State or Territory; nor should the jurisdiction of any State or Territory be extended over them, in all time to come, without the previous consent of the Indians.

Fearing that I might be deceived, after investigation, I presented to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the subject, and I received an answer; which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, April 9, 1858.
SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication in your letter of the 1st instant, as to whether the boundaries of the proposed State of Kansas, as defined in the Wyandotte constitution, include any lands belonging to the Cherokee nation of Indians, that said boundaries as described by you, embrace that portion of the Cherokee lands known as the "Neutral Territory," consisting eight hundred thousand acres, which was conveyed to them by the treaty of 1825, and secured by the subsequent treaty of 1826. (See Statutes at Large, vol. 7, p. 401; and vol. 9, p. 271.) Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

A. B. GREENWOOD, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, House of Representatives.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. That letter is a verification of what is apparent, by examining the treaties and laws, that that amount of land is under the jurisdiction of Kansas, by the constitution before the House. The question first recurs, suppose Kansas is admitted, can the United States Government cannot the State of Kansas assert jurisdiction over those Indians? Cannot the State of Kansas, by her organic act, cover by the operation of her laws all the Indian country, and subjecting those residing in that country to the operation of her State laws? or shall we say that the United States deny it—shall we not, by the admission of Kansas, be violating the plighted faith of the United States with the Indians? Are we not violating the express terms of the treaties made in the most solemn form?

Mr. MCCLERNAND. Do I understand my friend from Missouri to take the position that the treaty with the Indians comes in conflict with the act organizing the Territory?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The treaty stipulations come in conflict with the Wyandotte constitution, and the new State would exercise unqualified sovereignty. The same question arose in Georgia, and that was the very difficulty that I have been trying to avoid.

Mr. MCCLERNAND. I ask whether, if a provision of the act of admission comes in conflict with the provisions of a treaty, it is not void pro tanto?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Certainly. By the Constitution, a treaty is made the paramount law. I base my objection on that. Whoever the constitution of a new State prescribes her boundaries, and she is admitted into the Union with them, she is paramount therein hermits; and thus there grow up a sort of jurisdiction which might disrupt the Union. But, setting all that aside, I ask all honest men here whether they are willing to violate the plighted faith of the nation? Are they willing to make a treaty with a weak power like the Indians, and then at here and violate it? The Indians were recognized as the homes, and the graves of their fathers in Georgia, to a certain prescribed country, where they were told, in the most solemn manner, that they were to remain uninterupted in all future time; that they should not be put within any State or Territory, nor have the lines of any State or Territory put among them, without their consent. Are gentlemen prepared to give a vote which says: "We will disregard our treaty with you; we will press upon you; we will put you into a State or Territory; and we will assert our jurisdiction over you without asking your permission?" That is the question for Congress now.

But waiving all these technical objections, I know that in some days, and in some countries, in the history of the world, such things have been done; but I hope that in this country, where we are not prepared now—although it may be very important in a political point of view—to violate the faith of the nation by admitting a State which cannot be admitted without committing a direct violation on the lands and property of a weaker people, guarantee to them by this Government! I apprehend that gentlemen will muse before they take that step.

The chairman of the committee [Mr. Grew] seems restless, and has, on more than one occasion since I have had the floor, called attention to the important fact that the Lecompton constitution contained the same boundaries as are defined in this bill; and he desires to know whether I voted for the Lecompton bill. Now, I have an answer to give to that question; and it is a very simple one. I hope that all the gentlemen here, at least to some extent, a character for candor. I did vote for that bill; and it did contain precisely the same boundaries. But I did it without investigation. I declare, before high Heaven and my country, this day, that I did not then know those provisions of those treaties were to be found there. I did not know the obligations under which this Government lay to the Indians. If I had known then, I would have voted here till I had drawn my last breath before I had committed such a violation of national faith. I hope the gentleman is now satisfied with my explanation. Now, I want to ask the gentleman this question, and I hope he will answer it. It is, whether the fact that the Lecompton constitution defined the same boundaries, makes it right to violate treaties?

Mr. GROW. I will answer the gentleman if he will yield me the floor. I do not regard either this bill or the Lecompton bill as violating any rights of the Indians, for those rights are expressly reserved in both bills, and they were also reserved in the Kansas-Nebraska bill. Neither of the three bills violated any rights of the Indians. But the gentleman from Missouri made the point that they were violated in this bill, and then I retorted by saying that if this bill violated the treaties, then others must do so. I said, I would not vote to violate any rights of the Indians. They are reserved in this bill. They were reserved in the Lecompton bill, and they were reserved in the Kansas-Nebraska bill.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. That is not answering the question. I asked the gentleman whether, supposing that these other bills did violate the rights of the Indians, that fact would justify him in voting to violate them further by this bill?

Mr. GROW. Oh, no; I hope the gentleman will not expect me to state that everything in the Lecompton bill was right. But he will answer the gentleman very frankly, as I see he misapprehends my point. It was not because this thing was in the bill which the gentleman voted for, that therefore it was right or wrong. That was not my point. But it was simply to show that this bill and the Lecompton bill, and the Kansas-Nebraska bill all contained the same phraseology, so far as the rights of the Indians are concerned; and, if the gentleman's objection lies against my bill, it lies against the whole legislation of the country in regard to Kansas since 1854.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman another question. The treaty with the Indians gave them the lands all the way to the limits of any State. Now, when you do include them within the limits of the proposed State, do you not violate the treaty?

Mr. GROW. That is the very point. We do not; because there is an express provision in the bill on that point. Can you not admit a State into the Union, providing that certain territory within its limits shall not be within its jurisdiction? You may reserve the lands for any purpose, and exclude the State jurisdiction. So you reserve the Indian lands, and exclude the State jurisdiction. I call attention to the proviso on the second page of the bill, expressly excluding territory which treaties with Indian tribes declared should not be included within the jurisdiction of any State or Territory.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Why did not the gentleman add to that provision of the bill, by declaring that the lands guaranteed to the Indians should form no part of the State?

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment. Let us understand the provisions of the bill. It expressly declares that "all these Territories shall be excepted out of the boundaries, and shall constitute no part of the State of Kansas, till said tribes shall signify their assent to the President of the United States to be included within any State or Territory."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Now, Mr. Speaker, the treaty has three separate provisions, all of which are, in my judgment, violated by this bill. The first is, that they shall not be brought into any State or Territory. I have assumed, and attempted to prove, that the second, and the third, proposed by the State, and that the proviso would be inoperative. The second is, that the treaty provides that no line of any State or Territory shall be thrown around the Indians. Now, it is pretended that the line of the proposed State does not include the Indian lands? Is that not a violation? Then it is a violation of the express terms of the covenant of the United States in its treaty.

The third provision of the treaty is, that the Indian lands shall not be pressed upon by the line of any State or Territory now existing, or hereafter to be made. I say that all these provisions are violated, and have been violated all the time. They were violated under the Lecompton constitution, and they are violated under the Wyandotte constitution, and in the proposed State. Now this matter has been investigated, and my purpose is to present it to Congress, and to the country, in order that the country may see whether, when it is fairly presented, the treaty, the law, and the obligations of the Government, which no gentleman will controvert, are to be broken down, and the people of the country, the protection and exclusion of the weaker party to the treaty.

Well, now, if the Territory of Kansas had proceeded according to law, if there was sufficient population there to entitle them to a Representative upon this floor, under the present apportionment, they would be suffering from want of representation; there might be some reason for pressing her admission. But, sir, here is a people, lawless, disobedient, tumultuous, regardless of the obligations or laws of the country, seeking to be admitted into the Union; and when we ask them if they have the requisite population and representative power, we have to speculate as to that. My judgment is, that there is not sufficient population in Kansas to entitle her to one Representative. Why do you say? If there is, why did you not take a census of the land. Why do you not take a census, if there has been time enough to do so? The Wyandotte constitution was made for them to have manifested their strength by the taking of a census, as the English bill required them to do. But they have seen proper to disregard and to violate the law, and to refuse to take a census, but taken a census, by provision of their Legislature, or of the convention, since this constitution was framed?

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will say, sir, Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I would inquire of the gentleman whether he voted for the admission of Oregon into the Union?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I shall not answer the gentleman's question, as he knows that I did it.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I supposed so. Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I regard the question as impertinent. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman, then, what evidence he had that Oregon had population sufficient to entitle her to a Representative in Congress when he gave that vote?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will refer the gentleman from Illinois to a very good speech which I delivered at that time in favor of the admission of Oregon. [Laughter.] If he will read that, in place of interrupting me, he will be much more in the line of duty. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I merely wish to say that the gentleman's suppositions in that speech are not conclusive evidence.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Well, I did not suppose that you would be with me, but they are with most intelligent men. You are an exception to the rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I supposed, when I made the interrogatory, that the gentleman would answer it frankly. The gentleman sees the position which Kansas occupies, and is trying, in a playful way, to evade it.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I cannot allow the gentleman to take up my time. I was proceeding to show that Kansas presents no reason why the Congress of the United States should admit her into the Union, in violation of the compact subscribed by the act of Congress. She lacks the necessary population.

I call for the evidence that she has sufficient population. No census has been taken by the authority of the United States Legislature, or of the convention which framed the constitution. We know, and every lawyer knows, that when a party is required to produce evidence, and fails to produce the best evidence, the presumption is that he lacks the strongest evidence—that he possesses none. Now, the gentleman from Kansas proposes to prove the population here by fixing a proportion between the voters and the number of souls in the Territory. Does not every gentleman know that that is a fallacious test? In a Territory, the same proportion does not exist between the voters and the population that exists in the older States. In the Territories a great proportion of the population consists of adults, of enterprising young men and newly-married men. Their families have to be created in that new country, and to grow up with its growth and strength with its strength. In the old States one voter is equal to five or six souls; while in the Territories one voter is only equal to about two souls. Everybody knows that. But what evidence have we on the subject of population? They have taken a census; it is an imperfect census. I have no objection to its informing me, and regarding him as a candid gentleman, I give him the benefit of the protest that it is an imperfect census. That census was not taken, in accordance with the law of Congress, before they made their constitution, to show that they had the requisite population to protect themselves for another purpose, in reference to their own internal affairs; it has no connection with the United States; but it shows that they had only a population of sixty-five or seventy thousand last year.

But I am told that it is an imperfect census; that there were some counties from which no returns were made, and those, perhaps, the most largely populated counties in the Territory. We know that it is a common thing for defeated candidates to report based upon this objection, and that we intend to enforce the laws of the United States at all, we should enforce them all. All laws enacted by Congress should be obeyed, and all good citizens in the States and Territories will obey them until they are repealed. If they are repealed, they are repealed; but if they remain upon the statute-book unrevoked, they are obligatory upon the people for whom they are enacted, and they must be obeyed. Good government requires it; personal safety requires it; the dignity and character of the law-making power demand it. This law—two years old—enacted for the government of the Territory of Kansas has been violated; and its violation is claimed as a merit, because it is said that it was contrary to equity and to the rights of Kansas.

Sir, the time has passed when such an argument could be used. It might have been a good argument against the enactment of the law; but it was enacted, and it ought to be and must be obeyed. It has been violated.

Mr. McCLERNAND. Allow me to say a word on that point, and not propose to me to make a speech upon this bill. The gentleman accuses the people of Kansas of default, and seeks to hold them responsible for the consequences of the default. The prior question arises whether the people of Kansas are in default in respect to this matter of taking the census.

Now, sir, I put this question to my friend, who has examined this question very thoroughly: whether it was not incumbent upon the Federal authorities to have taken a census of Kansas; or whether, if the Federal authorities failed to take such a census, they were not in default; and the people of Kansas relieved from any responsibility upon the subject?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will answer that question, because the gentleman who propounds it to a gentleman stands to great respect, and because it is a question that ought to be answered. I say that the Federal authorities are not in default, and for the following reasons: the Congress of the United States prescribed that the people of Kansas should take a census. Kansas was then an organized Territory, and had its machinery of government. I am answered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grew], that the Federal authorities did not do their duty. Well, sir, I have nothing to say about that. I did not have the appointing power of the Territory.

Mr. GROW. If the gentleman will allow me, I do not think the act requires the people of Kansas to take a census. The act provides that it shall be shown by census.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. It says by census legally taken.

Mr. GROW. Legally taken, but not by the people of Kansas.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Yes, sir, by the people of Kansas. They constitute the authority which could legally and properly take the census of that Territory, and it was their duty to have it taken if they wished to apply for admission into the Union as a State. The Legislature of the Territory had full power to make the necessary provisions for taking the census. The policy of the Government has been to allow the people of the Territories to manage their own affairs in their own way, so far as appertains to rightful subjects of legislation; and when Congress prescribes that a certain thing shall be done before a Territory may come into the Union as a State, it is the will and the duty of the Territory to obey the law, to take such action as is required by Congress before making application for admission into the Union as a State.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I think the gentleman from Missouri is in error in saying that it was the duty of the territorial government of Kansas to have a census taken; I think it was the duty of the Federal Government.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. If the gentleman will examine the records, he will find that the history of this country does not furnish an instance where the taking of a census by the Territory to the admission of a State into the Union was not done by the territorial government itself.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If the gentleman from Missouri will allow me, I desire to say one word in regard to the proposition that the Federal Government was bound to take the census of the people of Kansas. Admitting the power of the Federal Government to take that census, I ask the gentleman from Illinois how it could know that the people of Kansas wanted a constitution, or whether or not they wanted it, or whether the Federal Government was not bound to take any action in the matter.

Mr. McCLERNAND. I ask the gentleman whether he holds that the authority of Congress to take a census in the Territory of Kansas depended upon obtaining the prior assent of the people of that Territory?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I cannot allow the kind of discussion to go on.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will answer the gentleman from Illinois with great pleasure, if the gentleman from Missouri will give me an opportunity.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. [Mr. STAYTON in the chair.] The Chair suggests it is hardly regular for one gentleman to call up another, and ask him a question during the speech of still another gentleman.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I am obliged to the gentleman who put me on my rights.

Now, sir, I was proceeding to argue that the people in the Territory of Kansas have violated the law in the first instance in not ascertaining that there was sufficient population, and if such be the fact, in not presenting it in a legal form to Congress for its information; and, in the second place, that this bill violates, upon the part of the United States, the obligations of a treaty which, by the Constitution of the United States, is made the supreme law of the land. Kansas cannot be admitted with longer delay, because the census required is a violation of the plighted faith of this nation.

I will now answer the question asked a few minutes ago by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. MOSES], whether I did not vote for the admission of Oregon. I did. The gentleman asks, further, whether the Congress passed the act which required a census of the Territory of Oregon, a sufficient population. I will proceed to give the gentleman my reasons, as I gave them at the time, in my speech upon the subject—which I ask the gentleman to read, because it contained facts which I can now only repeat from memory. Sir, Oregon and Kansas were admitted to the Union by the passage of a bill which passed through this House, in the nature of an enabling act, to form constitutions and State governments preparatory to admission into the Union. Oregon formed her constitution by the people, and the authority was given to form the Leecompton constitution under the same authority. Kansas was admitted with that constitution, upon certain conditions, which were referred later to the people for their acceptance. The people of Kansas refused to accept the conditions, and therefore refused to accept the territorial condition. Oregon claimed admission here with a constitution made under the same circumstances; and she had the right to claim it, because she was invited by the act which passed this House to form her constitution. Kansas refused to do so, and she was invited to do so, for reasons which I need not detain the House to give. Some gentlemen say that it was because the provisions of the English bill did violence to the will of the people of Kansas. But, sir, I will not argue that question now.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, [Mr. Grew], in the Thirty-fourth Congress, when the bill was before the House to enable the people of Oregon to form a constitution and State government, stated upon the floor of the House that he investigated the subject thoroughly, and was satisfied that Oregon had then more than one hundred thousand people. Well, sir, I read the speech of the gentleman; he was then the leader of the House upon the subject of the Territories, and was well informed upon that subject; and of known veracity, whose testimony no one would question when given upon the floor of Congress; and that was the evidence he gave upon this subject. To that I can add also the evidence of the Delegate from that Territory, [Mr. Senator LAW], who was present upon the floor of the House in the presence, and in the presence of the House, that he, upon his authority as a gentleman, asserted that there were at least ninety-four thousand people there. In addition to that, I had the evidence of the gentleman from Oregon, [Mr. Smith], who was a Representative in this House, and who stated that the population of Oregon was not less than one hundred thousand. I had all this evidence from gentlemen who were right from that Territory. But, sir, my vote upon that bill was not controlled by any such considerations. I would have voted for Oregon, I intended, had the right to come in under the ordinance of 1787. The organic act of the Territory extended to it all the rights and privileges granted to the Territory of the Northwest; and one of those privileges was, that when she had sixty-four thousand inhabitants—then the ratio of apportionment—she should be entitled to come into the Union. Oregon had, therefore, only to show that she had a population of sixty-four thousand—I speak in round numbers—to be entitled to admission into the Union by the terms of her organic act. All these questions I then discussed, upon a fresh examination, with much more care than I have done now.

These, then, I say to the gentleman from Illinois, were the reasons why I voted for the admission of Oregon. But, sir, the same reasons do not apply to Kansas. The people of Oregon were a loyal people; they obeyed the instructions of the Federal Government. Oregon sought not to contend with and asperse the Government of which she sought to become a part. Oregon stood out in defiance of the provisions of the laws of Congress; her people were law-and-order people. Oregon came before this House in accordance to law. In the Territory of Oregon, there was no violation of the laws of the country. Oregon brought strong evidence that she contained the requisite population. Kansas presents no evidence whatever to this House, in an official form, of her population.

Here the hammer fell.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Speaker, I intend to vote for this bill, and that vote, in my judgment, will be entirely consistent with the vote which I gave two years ago in favor of the Kansas organic act. I do not propose to say that the people of Kansas should determine, by a popular vote, whether they would come into the Union with the Leecompton constitution as the organic act of the new State. It provided further, that in case the people should decline to be admitted, the Federal Congress should be given the formation of a new State, and another application for admission, whenever the population of the Territory should reach the number necessary for a Representative upon this floor. It also provided that, in order to ascertain whether such population was in the Territory, a census should be duly and legally taken. Now, sir, the main fact, the controlling fact, whose existence was to be a condition precedent to the ascent of Congress, was the number of people.

The question which it was to be ascertained, the method by which we were to know whether or not the population reached a certain number, was secondary. The bill provided a method, and perhaps the best method, but certainly not the only method, by which that fact could be ascertained. Congress was not to be deceived or misled by competent evidence—evidence satisfactory to the mind of a legislator—the essential requirement of the bill was complied with; and I think any lawyer will say so, upon the ordinary rules for construing statutes, as they are applied in every case of the country every day of the year.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Will the gentleman allow me to read a clause of the English bill?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BARKSDALE. In the act of May, 1858, entitled

"That the people said Territory are hereby authorized and empowered to form for themselves a constitution and State government, by the name of the State of Kansas, according to the provisions of the English bill, and to make laws for that purpose; and, not before, it is authorized by a census duly and legally taken that the population of said Territory equals or exceeds the ratio of representation required for a member of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States."

Now, sir, what is the plain and obvious meaning of that language? That a census should be taken according to the provisions of the English bill. I understand that a census has been taken in Kansas under a law passed by the Territorial Legislature of that Territory. I admit, then, that so far as the provision of the English bill is concerned, which requires that a census shall be taken according to the provisions of the English bill, I understand, from the returns of that census, there are but little more than sixty thousand inhabitants in the Territory. But if Kansas be admitted into the Union as a State under the Wisconsin constitution, it will be the direct violation of the provisions of the English bill, which declares, in unequivocal terms, that she shall not be admitted until she has a population of ninety-three thousand.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. Speaker, an answer to the objections of the gentleman from Mississippi, would comprise pretty much all I have to say on the subject. I intend, before I get through, to give what I deem a satisfactory answer to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Mississippi, and which necessarily occurred to my mind in considering this question.

Mr. ADRIN. Let me put a question to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. PARROTT.] I want him to tell this House what is the present population of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that it is hardly in order for a gentleman to rise up, interrupt the member who has the floor, and call up another member in reply to an inquiry.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I hope there will be no objection to the interruption. I desire that all the facts shall be presented to the House. The gentleman from Ohio does not object, I am sure.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. PENDLETON. I do not object to the interruption.

Mr. PARROTT. I propose to address the House upon this question. When I get the floor, I will answer the gentleman from New Jersey fully.

Mr. ADRIN. Will not the gentleman be good enough to give an answer to the question?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Has not a census been ordered by the Legislature of Kansas?

Mr. PARROTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to know what is the population of Kansas under the returns of that census.

Mr. PARROTT. I decline to answer now. When I get the floor, I will give the House all the information I have upon the subject.

Mr. BARKSDALE. My information is, that under that census there are about sixty thousand people in Kansas.

Mr. PENDLETON. I make no objection to these interruptions. I stated, when I was interrupted by them, that the main fact to be determined was the number of the population of Kansas; and that the method of determining the number was secondary only. I think that that is a fair interpretation of the law which the gentleman from Mississippi has read. I think all lawyers will agree that that is the fair interpretation of the law. If the fact is satisfactorily and conclusively established, it is immaterial whether it is established by the taking of a census, or by any other means.

But, Mr. Speaker, if this were not so—and I call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] to what I am about to say—I find, upon examination of the records of Congress, that in December, 1858, the President, in his annual message, recommended that an appropriation be made for the purpose of taking this very census. I find that the Secretary of the Interior, in the circular which he issued, appropriated an estimate of $30,000 for that purpose. Yet, sir, the Committee of Ways and Means of this House chose to ignore those recommendations, and to report the appropriation bills without that item. No member of this House, not even the gentleman from Mississippi, who I have thought it worth his while, or that the taking of the census was of sufficient importance to justify him in moving an amendment, or introducing an original bill, making the appropriation.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The recommendation of the President was with reference to the next appropriation, and had no reference to the framing of a constitution for the admission of Kansas.

Mr. PENDLETON. On the contrary, I think, from a casual reading of the President's message during this session, that that recommendation was made for the purpose of determining the question whether or not the population of Kansas was sufficient to justify her admission under the conference bill. The appropriation bills which were reported to the floor without this appropriation, in disregard of the recommendation of the President and of the Secretary of the Interior, went to the Senate, and there, sir, the Committee on Finance recommended that an appropriation of $30,000 be made for the purpose of taking this very census. It was voted into a bill by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, without a single dissent. Upon the next day, however, when the amendment came up before the Senate for its concurrence it was voted out with almost equal unanimity, the yeas and nays not having been called; and that, too, in the face of a declaration, made by a Democratic Senator from my State, that the rejection of the amendment under the circumstances would be considered, and ought to be considered, a waiver upon the part of Congress of that clause of the conference bill which required a census to be taken.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Admitting the facts stated by the gentleman from Ohio, what is the result?

Mr. PENDLETON. Not just now.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I only want to refer to a mere question of fact.

Mr. PENDLETON. I do not desire to be discourteous. Go on.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Admitting the facts stated by the gentleman from Ohio, I state again, that for the purpose of holding a convention to frame a state constitution, my information is—and I believe it to be correct—that a census has been taken.

Mr. PENDLETON. I admit the fact, and I will come to it in a moment.

Mr. BARKSDALE. And that the population of Kansas amounts to little more than sixty thousand, according to the returns of that census. If, then, Kansas should be received into the Union under the Missouri compromise, it would be in direct and palpable violation of the act of 1850, which provides that a constitution shall not be framed by the people of Kansas until that Territory shall have a population of ninety-three thousand, and that fact duly and legally ascertained.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will answer the suggestion of the gentleman in a moment; and if he will be kind enough to allow me to proceed, I will be obliged to him.

Mr. BARKSDALE. My friend from Ohio is aware that I would not, under any circumstances, be sworn in to him.

Mr. PENDLETON. Of course not. I was about to say that the statement of the Senator from Ohio upon the rejection of that amendment was right. I think it was a waiver of the census, and I think it is entitled to be treated as such. In other words, for I cannot believe that the Congress of the United States would insist upon a census as a condition precedent to the admission of a State, when they refused to appropriate the necessary amount of money for taking it. I consider that, by the mere act of existing in the House and voting on the other House, the census has been waived by Congress itself.

This brings me to the consideration of the question of the population of Kansas. In the month of June, 1859, a census was taken under territorial authority—a census imperfect, incomplete, and unreliable, as I shall show to the House. I find that from the six counties of Clay, Dickinson, McGee, Oage, Wilson, and Dorr, there were no returns at all; and yet it appears, from investigation made by the hands of the Territorial Legislature, that in the western part of the Territory, where those counties there are a hundred and fifty voters and nearly six hundred people. From the county of Riley there were no returns, and yet the same investigation shows that the county of Riley has about six hundred and fifty voters and three thousand people. In many of the most populous counties of that Territory returns were only made from portions of the townships, the rest being omitted entirely. A notable instance occurs in the county of Doniphan, where the returns are from four townships only, and show that there are eleven hundred and odd voters and thirty-five hundred people, while it is notorious, established beyond reasonable question, that the voting population of that county reaches nearly two thousand, and that actual population nearly eight thousand. In other counties, where returns are made to be in full, where the returns profess to be from every portion of the county, the returns are notoriously too small. The county of Leavenworth is returned as having a population of twelve thousand, and twenty-two, when it is perfectly certain, and admitting of no more doubt than that the city of Washington contains a population of twenty thousand, that the city of Leavenworth alone contains a population of twelve thousand, and that the county outside of the city contains six thousand more.

Now, sir, this census, unreliable, incomplete, and partial, as I have shown it to be, reports more than seventy-one thousand seven hundred people in the Territory. If you add to that number the population of counties not returned at all, of townships not returned at all, and the population of cities, townships, and counties but partially and imperfectly returned, you will find that the population will not fall far short of the population estimated by the chairman of the Committee on Territories—one hundred and ten thousand.

But I find it stated in the report of the Committee on Territories that the vote upon the adoption of the Wyandotte constitution reached seventeen thousand. I have seen the vote stated at least; but that is immaterial, inasmuch as the Delegate from Kansas himself, whose accuracy is vouched for by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. CLARK,] and in which I would place implicit reliance, has stated to me that at his election, which was held last November, the vote cast was more than seventeen thousand. Sir, that is an enormous vote. It shows that the population is greater than is necessary for a Representative upon this floor. There are but few gentlemen here who represent seventeen thousand voters. There are but few districts in the country which have a population sufficient to cast that vote.

Mr. GROW. Will this gentleman allow me to state a fact in this respect, for I have gone through the examination of the returns? There are one hundred and fifty-three congressional districts which polled less than that number of votes.

Mr. PENDLETON. I also went through the returns, and I found that in the States of Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Virginia, Florida, Maryland, North Carolina, Kentucky, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and Oregon, there is not a single district that casts seventeen thousand votes. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WESTES] says I am wrong as to his State. I think I am not. I did not see the returns. The State of New York has twelve districts; the State of Pennsylvania has two; the State of Ohio, seven; the State of Missouri, three; and the State of Tennessee, one. In all the States south of the Potomac there are not half a dozen districts which have a voting population of seventeen thousand, even if you include two thousand as the proper reduction on account of the application of the three-fifths rule.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion? Taking the facts stated by the gentleman from Ohio, another fact is well known—that the relative voting population of a Territory is always proportionally greater than the voting population of a State. And this applies with peculiar force to Kansas; for upon the organization of that Territory, and down until within a very recent period, it has been the scene of lawlessness, violence, and bloodshed.

Mr. PENDLETON. I admit that the voters and the population in a Territory do not bear the same relative proportion as in a State; but I say that if you find in Kansas a voting population more than six hundred thousand you will find an actual population there of at least ninety-three thousand two hundred.

Mr. BARKSDALE. But in the Territory of Kansas it is well known that there are few families and that the population consists mainly of voters.

Mr. ASHMORE. I wish to state one fact in reference to my North Carolina. If you apply the three-fifths rule, my district has more than seventeen thousand voters.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed without interruption.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Virginia for his suggestion. But, with his permission, when gentlemen interrupt me, I will not be obliged to determine whether I will submit to be interrupted or not.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I believe I have a right to interpose my objection.

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly. Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, I would and although I threw out the suggestion in courtesy, I wish the gentleman to understand that I know how to appreciate his comment and reply.

Mr. PENDLETON. The gentleman can exercise his right by a peremptory objection; but when he makes a suggestion by which he is to interpose himself as a protection between me and those who desire to interrupt me, I shall endeavor to do that which I think proper courtesy towards them and a due consideration for myself require.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I repeat, that the gentleman from Ohio is aware I intended him no discourtesy.

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly, sir.
Mr. ASHMORE. And that I do not.
Mr. PENDLETON. By no means. And it was because gentlemen were proposing their interrogatories in a proper spirit, and in a friendly manner, that I heard them. If the gentleman from Virginia chooses, he can, by a peremptory objection, cut them out.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the evidences furnished by this census that was taken, and by the number of votes cast in Kansas, as to which I have heard no satisfactory answer, I have this secondary evidence to offer: I have inquired of persons who reside in the Territory of Kansas—friends who went to that Territory from the city in which I live—truthful, observing gentlemen, some of whom have had a most excellent opportunity of knowing the population of Kansas, whose facilities for observation have been greatly sharpened by the fact that they were opposed to the adoption of the Wyandotte constitution, and have in favor for this bill; and, sir, I have not found one of these who dissents from the opinion, as the result of their observations, and of the accounts they have heard from other persons coming from all parts of the Territory, that the population of that Territory is to-day, as it was last June, less than it was last year. Now this is evidence satisfactory to me. It is not technically the best evidence, perhaps; but it completely convinces my mind, and misifies me that, even under the restrictive clause of the conference bill, Kansas is entitled to admission.

Now, sir, as to the other objection made by the gentleman from Missouri—the objection that the rights of the Indians are violated. It is sufficient to reply to the gentleman that he seeks now to put a construction upon the language of that treaty that has not been put upon it before; a construction that was not put upon it the time the Kansas-Nebraska bill was passed; a construction that was not put upon it at the time the Leecompton bill was passed; a construction which is now sought to be put upon it for the first time; as that the language of that treaty, which guarantees the rights of the Indians and all the guarantees of the United States in the treaties shall be preserved, and that nothing shall be done or recognized under this bill, or under the provisions of the State constitution, that can in any degree invade the rights of the Indians guaranteed them by the treaties of the United States—the same language which guarded their rights in 1854, when the Territory was organized, and which was intended to guard their rights in the Leecompton bill, if it had become law.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to name a single treaty with any tribe outside of Kansas making the same guarantees and limitations as are applied to the treaties set forth in my report.

Mr. PENDLETON. In reply, I will ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he knows of any Indian treaties that they are not in?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. All the Indian treaties made with the tribes that settled west of the Mississippi river, prior to the treaty made with the Cherokee, Chickasaw, and Chickasaw, have the limitation in different phraseology, and not to the same extent.

Mr. PENDLETON. I cannot name the treaties. I am not familiar with the names of these different Indian tribes, nor with the dates of treaties made with them. But I repeat, that the gentleman and I say that it is clearly all of the treaties made since the removal of the Cherokees from Georgia, is to be found language similar to that in the treaties to which the gentleman refers.

Before the gentleman asked me the question, I had said all that I meant to say on this question.

Mr. PARROT obtained the floor, and addressed the House for one hour in support of the bill. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. MAYNARD obtained the floor.

Mr. GROW. I desire to ask if the House will fix some hour now at which the debate upon this question shall be closed?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. You can do that tomorrow. I desire, as a member of the Committee on Territories, to make some remarks whenever I can get an opportunity to do so.

Mr. GROW. I propose that we take the vote at five o'clock, to-morrow. [Cries of "No" and "No!"]

Mr. MAYNARD. I am requested by several gentlemen on both sides of the House to give way for a motion to adjourn. I have a personal engagement which would make it very agreeable for me if the House would adjourn; but I will be governed in the matter by the wish of the House. [Cries of "Go on" and "Let us adjourn!"]

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. With the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GROW. Well, I desire to give notice to the House that if I can get the floor, I will move the previous question at three o'clock to-morrow.

The question was taken on Mr. SMITH's motion; and it was agreed to; and thereupon (at a quarter after five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 11, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GRUBLEY.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

On motion of Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 347) to devise the meaning of the act entitled "An act making further provisions for the satisfaction of Virginia land warrants," passed August 21, 1852, be recommended to the Committee on Public Lands.

PATENT LAWS.

Mr. BIGLER. I move to postpone all prior orders, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 10) amending the general patent laws.

Mr. HALE. I hope not. I hope the morning hour will be devoted to petitions, reports, and resolutions.

Mr. BIGLER. I think we can get through with the bill during the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to take up the bill (S. No. 10) in addition to "An act to promote the progress of the useful arts."

Mr. HALE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BIGLER. This is a very important public measure, and I think we can dispense of it during the morning hour. I am satisfied that it will lead to no protracted debate. It is one of those measures which we ought to consider, and to consider promptly. I shall be under the necessity of being absent, probably, for two weeks after Monday next, and I am exceedingly anxious to send this bill to the House of Representatives before I leave. I think the Senator from New Hampshire mistakes the character of the bill, or he would not object to its consideration. It is one of great public importance. It is one which has been well prepared by the Department, and considered by the committee, and I have no doubt it will receive the vote of the Senator from New Hampshire. Unless there be some pressing morning business, I hope the Senate will consider the bill.

Mr. HALE. I shall not object, if the morning hour is not closed; but this is a business that ought to be attended to this morning, and I shall object to taking up the bill until it is disposed of.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 19, as follows:

YEAS—Newell, Bigler, Briggs, Chatham, Clingan, Colburn, Davis, Fitzgibbon, Gwin, Humphall, Johnson, Latham, Mason, Nicholson, Cowell, Rice, Shastley, Stoddard, and Thompson—19.

NAYS—Mason, Fitzgibbon, Chandler, Clark, Dixon, Donnell, Douglas, Fenimore, Foot, Green, Hale, Hamilton, Rice, Sewell, Simmons, Squam, Tice, Eyck, Transbalt, Wade, and Wilson—19.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate being equally divided, the Chair determines the question in the negative; and petitions and reports are in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WADE presented the petition of G. W. St. John and others, citizens of Ashland county, Ohio, praying the passage of a judicious bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LATHROP presented the memorial of John

Butterfield and others, contractors for carrying the mail overland from St. Louis and Memphis to San Francisco, remonstrating against the enactment of any law which would change or annul their contract, which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented papers in relation to claims of citizens of Texas to indemnity for depredations by the Indians; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of Jeremiah Greenleaf and others, officers and soldiers of the war of 1812, praying that pensions be granted to those who served in that war, similar in amount to the pensions granted to those who served in the revolution, and which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRAGG presented the petition of John A. Winslow, a commander in the United States Navy, praying the passage of an explanatory act regulating the pay of officers of the Navy promoted in consequence of the action of the retired board; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. CRITTENDEN presented the petition of E. D. Tippet, praying an examination of a new plan of ship-building; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WIGFALL presented a petition of citizens of Texas, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Marshall to Coffeeville, and a post office at Smyrna, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Milam county, Texas, praying the establishment of a mail route from Owensville to Cameron, in that county and State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Johnson county, Texas, praying the establishment of a mail route from either Hillsboro or Waxahatchie, to Buchanan, in said county and State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Clay county, Texas, praying the establishment of a mail route from Gainville to Henrietta, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

ROLL INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 397) for the relief of witnesses in criminal cases in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. POWELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Lockey Simpson, praying an increase of pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 396) for the relief of Lockey Simpson. The bill was read, and passed in a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Lemuel Worcester, praying a pension on account of a disability incurred while employed as a waiter to a militia officer in the United States service during the last war with Great Britain, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 395) for the relief of Lemuel Worcester. The bill was read, and passed in a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. POWELL, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 394) for the relief of Lemuel Worcester. The bill was read, and passed in a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FITCH, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, a statement showing the amount of revenue collected annually in each collection district from June 30, 1854, to June 30, 1859, together with the amount expended and the number of persons employed in each district, referring in favor of printing the usual number; which was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of J. B. Williams, praying a grant to the heirs of Joseph Biggs, deceased, of the amount paid by boarding, nursing, and medical attendance, incurred on account of being wounded in an Indian war in 1788, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. FORT, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of E. Steele, making suggestions for the better management of the Indians in California, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that the memorial lie on the table; which was agreed to.

Mr. THOMSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Alpheus T. Palmer, of Maine, a lieutenant in the war with Mexico, praying an increase of the pension heretofore allowed to him, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred testimonials in favor of Captain George C. Stouffer, of the ship Antarctic, for his gallant conduct in rescuing the officers and soldiers of the Army, and other passengers, from the sinking steamer San Francisco, in 1854, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas G. Corbin, a lieutenant in the Navy, praying to be allowed the difference between the pay he received and that of a master during the time he acted in the latter capacity, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 399) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel R. Franklin, a lieutenant in the Navy, praying to be allowed the difference between his pay and that he received during the time he performed the duties of purser on board the United States ship Falmouth, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 394) for the relief of Samuel R. Franklin. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 381) to provide for holding the circuit court and district court of the United States at Birmingham, in the State of New York, reported adversely thereon, and asked that the committee be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the memorial of Hon. Daniel S. Dix, and others, citizens of the State of New York, and a petition of Horatio Ballard and others, citizens of Cortland county, praying the passage of an act directing a term of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the northern district of New York, to be held at Fingert, as reported adversely thereon, and asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a communication from T. T. Gantt, of St. Louis, Missouri, praying to be allowed an act of 1789, and in favor of changing the time allowed for taking appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to, the committee having already reported full on the subject, which has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. POLK, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of E. George Squire, praying to be allowed an outfit as charged in arrears to each of the Governments of Guatemala, San Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and Honduras, and also a balance of malarly which he claims to be due, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 400) for the relief of E. George Squire, late United States charged in arrears to the Republics of Central America. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of James G. Clarke, praying compensation for his services as chargé d'affaires of the United States to Belgium, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 401) for the relief of James G. Clarke. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Henry Brochholt Livingston, a lieutenant colonel of the continental army, praying to be allowed half pay and arrears of pay, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

ADMISSIONS TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Chaplains of the Senate and the House of Representatives, for the same being, be entitled to admission upon the floor of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF SAILORS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire whether, since the abolition of flogging by the United States, and merchant service of the United States, any corporal punishment has been practiced or allowed in the naval service; and if any, to what extent, and whether the same has been with the knowledge or assent of the Secretary of the Navy; and what steps, if any, have been taken by the Navy Department relating to the recent killing of a seaman on board a vessel of war of the United States; and also what legislation, if any, is necessary for the protection of sailors in the naval or merchant service of the United States.

PROPOSED RESCUE.

Mr. MASON submitted the following resolution; which the Senators thought he would call it up for action to-morrow:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives do adjourn their respective Houses from the 10th to the 15th day of April instant.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. RECHMAN, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 136) for the relief of Thomas Fillibrown.

An act (S. No. 71) for the relief of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

An act (S. No. 233) for the relief of Alice Hunt, widow of Thomas Hunt; and

An act (S. No. 250) for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Brevet Captain Oliver H. P. Taylor.

FORT ATKINSON RESERVATION.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HALE, Chief Clerk, was received, returning, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of yesterday, the bill (S. No. 371) for the relief of certain settlers in the State of Iowa.

Mr. PUGH. I believe the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] desired to move a reconsideration of that bill. I enter the motion on his behalf, as he is not now here. It is required to be made to-day. I think this is the second day from the passage of the bill.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed, on the 6th instant, the following act and resolution:

An act (H. R. No. 942) for the relief of the legal representatives of Robert H. Morris, late postmaster of the city of New York.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 26) constituting Macon, Georgia, a port of entry for the time being, for the purposes therein specified, and for other purposes.

Also, that the President had this day signed and approved the following acts:

An act (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of Micajah Hawkes;

An act (H. R. No. 943) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased;

An act (C. C. No. 96) for the relief of William Geiger;

An act (C. C. No. 92) for the relief of Mariano G. Vallejo;

An act (C. C. No. 93) for the relief of Lydia Frazee, widow and administratrix of John Frazee, late of New York;

An act (C. C. No. 82) for the relief of Chas. T. Scaife, administrator of Gilbert Stalker; and

An act (C. C. No. 12) for the relief of Moses Noble.

OVERLAND MAIL ROUTE.

Mr. GWIN. I move to take up Senate bill No. 394.

Mr. GREEN. Is that the overland mail route bill?

Mr. GWIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREEN. I hope it will not be taken up. I am compelled to leave here this evening at three o'clock, or to-morrow morning at six o'clock. I am sick. I am compelled to oppose the proposition of the Senator. It should lie over for six or eight days, I think, as a matter of courtesy to me. I think the proposition wrong, but I do not think it ought to pass in the morning hour, or in the day either. I hope the Senate will not take it up, but will excuse me the right to consider this subject and discuss it at the proper time.

Mr. GWIN. For the very reason that the Senator gives, I hope it will be taken up. If it is to be postponed for several days until he can be absent from the city and return, in my judgment an important measure will be jeopardized and an important policy postponed. The object of this bill is to convey the mails to the Pacific coast overland, and by the passage of this bill I have no doubt that object can be accomplished; but if it is to be accomplished at all, provision ought to be made at once. I have been endeavoring for weeks to get up this very bill, because the contract for ocean service expires on the 30th of June; and if we do not very soon make provision for carrying the mail overland, it will be impossible to prevent making a contract for ocean service at that period. With all proper regard to the Senator from Missouri, as this is a question well understood by him and by me, we differing in the details but agreeing in the necessity of this overland mail, I hope he will consent to its being taken up now. When it is taken up, we will express our views and leave it to the Senate whether this bill shall be passed now, or not. It is of the utmost consequence that it should be passed on at once. This subject has been acted on in the House of Representatives, been referred to the Post Office Committee, and proposition after proposition brought from that committee before the Senate; and this is a single branch of it which I think is so necessary to be acted on at once, that I feel compelled to call on the Senate to consider it to-day.

Mr. GREEN. Yesterday the Senator from California stated that he desired to have the subject considered and acted upon, because the pony express was to leave at four o'clock. If that is the case, the pony express has gone. To-day there is another mule assigned. Now, I have no objection to considering a subject of this kind on the mail route; but I have not time to-day to consider it. It is known to the Senator that I have moved a proposition of my own in lieu of his, which I think better for the public service. I do not think that Congress ought to undertake to make a contract. Congress is unfit to make a contract. Congress may authorize a contract; but Congress ought never to fix the terms of a contract. They may fix a limit to it; but they ought never to undertake to make a contract. I will not, however, discuss the merits of the question. I am only begging for the poor privilege that has been accorded to almost every Senator, when it can do no harm to the public service, to have that subject postponed until I can be back and meet the Senator from California, and discuss it fairly with him. In the main, I do not go to Congress with any doubt about that; but I really do not desire to bring it up to-day, when I have not time to consider it.

Mr. GWIN. In regard to what the Senator says about the pony express, that subject has not yet been before the Senate. I express no great desire to have this subject enter the arena at once, in a private conversation with the Senator yesterday, and I am

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, APRIL 12, 1860.

NEW SERIES....No. 104.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. President.
Mr. RICE. I wish the Senator would yield to me for one moment. The Senator from California says there was no disposition to slaughter the northern route. I am very glad to hear him say that. Consequently, I must attribute the whole thing to accident; that is, a very fatal one to us indeed. The Senator from California says that he has no disposition to embarrass the northern route; that he has voted for it and sustained it. I know he has, but the action of the committee shows me clearly that that kind of friendship is false. I say, that as that one measure has met with no opposition from any member of the committee, and as this was a special meeting, called at a few hours' notice, courtesy to the friends of the northern route should at least have caused the few members of the committee who were present to suspend their action until the friends of the measure were there. The Senator from New Hampshire says they struck out the southern route because they could not agree upon the details, and struck out the northern route because they could agree upon the details. That is a rule that would not work very well, I think, here or elsewhere.

The Senator from California says the bill he reported yesterday is a new bill. It embraces, almost word for word, the language in the old bill, as they reported, so far as this route is concerned; and I am aware, and so is every member of the Senate, that if this bill passes we get no northern or southern route this year.

Gentlemen speak about the great interest the Senator from California and his people feel in this route. I would ask the Senator if he is a native of Wisconsin and Minnesota, and of the great lakes, and the citizens of the State of Oregon, and of the Territory of Washington, do not feel a deep interest in the northern route? It is true, they have not, perhaps, said much about it, but they have labored for it, and they will be glad to see it. I am sure they will. We have north of the center of the United States no mail route to the Pacific. They have half a dozen roads, getting over a million dollars for carrying their mails, and now they want a route, and fearing they cannot get it if the bill is passed, they will have an appropriation for another section, that has met with no opposition, they strike that out. I am much obliged to the Senator from Louisiana for yielding me the floor.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. President, I think there are few subjects which will come before Congress at the present session that will require more deliberation, or the exercise of more prudence and discretion, than this subject of overland mails to the Pacific. I am very much opposed to taking up this subject in the morning hour. It is utterly impossible to give it due consideration in the morning hour. I have looked at a plan which, it was said to me, had been devised by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire who addressed the Senate this morning, and which I am inclined very much to approve of. I think it meets the exigencies of the public service in all sections of the country; yet I have not been able to study sufficiently to be able to give a vote understandingly on the entire subject. It must be obvious to us all, that the taking up of a bill of this kind in the morning hour cannot lead but to confusion. We have another important subject before us, which is the order of the day from day to day, and which must be postponed before this great subject can be properly discussed. Which of us will consent here, interested as we all are in this great subject in the distant sections of the Confederacy—which of us, representing northern or southern constituencies, will consent that this bill shall pass, without offering amendments providing for our own portions of the country? Which of us will consent that this great measure be taken up and carried to a vote piecemeal? Which of us will consent that it shall be disposed of without regard to the entire subject at the same time?

Where does the difficulty now arise? Simply from the fact that the Butterfield contract was made without reference to other sections of the country, and it is now in the way of such modification of the postal service across the plains as will suit the entire country. In my judgment we ought to pay, if it is lawful for us so to do under the terms of our contract, a reasonable indemnity to those who have the Butterfield contract, and break it up, if necessary, in order to provide for a cheap and efficient postal service across the continent. I believe that fifty, or one hundred, or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars would be well spent by paying it to these gentlemen as a consideration for abandoning the contract; which, as the Senator from New Hampshire well says, goes across the country in the shape of an ox-bow, starting from Memphis, running south through Arkansas, getting to Arizona, passing along the thirty-second parallel, and reaching the Pacific in the neighborhood of San Diego, and then running up on the Pacific coast till it reaches San Francisco. That is your Butterfield contract as it now exists. It is neither a northern, southern, or middle route. It wanders over the whole of the western portion of this continent; it is no very short cut, and for the money it costs to run for that service and some of the other interoceanic postal services, we can organize a system by which the whole northern line of the country shall be satisfied with such a mail as they desire for the service of Washington and of Oregon with the settlements upon our northern frontier, and of our north western States; and at the same time the line, advocated by the Senator from California can also be served; and finally, down in that part of the country from which I come, we can have our south-western service, New Orleans, serving the valleys of the Texan rivers, passing through the valley of the Gila into the Territory of Arizona, reaching San Diego, and going up to San Francisco by that route. The whole can be organized and done for a very moderate sum compared with the maintenance of the service. Hence, this question is not one line at a time, and provide for that, it will be utterly impossible for us to make a connected, statesmanlike, prepared system for the benefit of the whole country. I hope, therefore, that this bill is not going to be taken up in the morning hour, and that the responsibility for this question, matter, and when it is impossible for the Senate properly to understand it. I will go with the Senator from California to bring it up as early as we can do it, and urge it on the attention of the Senate.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will aid us in fixing an early day for it, I shall not object; but if it is to be postponed day in and day out, I will not agree to it.

Mr. GREEN. Name Saturday week.

Mr. GWIN. Next Monday week.

Mr. GWIN. I cannot agree to postpone a subject of such importance so long, when it is necessary to have the service in operation before the 1st of July; and I give notice now, as the morning hour is running out, that I shall urge this question every day, until we can get it considered, except on private bill day.

Mr. GREEN. I merely wish to make one remark. I agree in every word that has been uttered by the Senator from Louisiana; but I must add this other word in connection: while I support the passage of this bill in its immature condition, it is not from any hostility to the starting points—Placerville, in California, and St. Joseph, in Missouri; but I think a better system can be devised by which the express, the north, and the north can be accommodated. As I am compelled to be absent by urgent necessity, if the Senator is determined to press the bill, let him press it. I shall rely on friends enough here to keep it off until I return. I do not suppose the Senator will take a moment to mention me because I am compelled to be absent.

Mr. YULEE. I suggest that we agree on a day when this subject may be taken up. It will be recollected that a bill was passed by the House of Representatives, and came to the Senate, some month or more ago, to which the Senate committee disagreed and reported a substitute. The bills which have been subsequently reported are but modifications of the original amendment proposed to the House bill. If the Senate will ultimately determine upon the adoption of the House bill, it is of the highest consequence that the earliest possible action should be taken; because that bill contemplates action of the Department, and a report to Congress, to be acted on at this session, and before we adjourn. I hope, therefore, it will be agreeable to gentlemen to adopt a day, and an early day, for the consideration of this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must ask the Senator from Florida to pause. The hour has arrived for the consideration of the special order.

Mr. YULEE. I was going to propose next Thursday, if the Senate will permit me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent to lay aside the special order informally, to continue this subject.

Mr. WADE. He will not forward it by making it a special order. I move that we proceed to the order of the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No motion is required for that purpose.

CHICAGO HARBOR.

Mr. CLAY. I should be glad if the Senate would consent to indulge me about fifteen minutes, to dispose of a House resolution that was passed in my absence on Friday last, relative to the harbor of Chicago.

Mr. WADE. I inquire whether that will take any time.

Mr. CLAY. I do not propose to occupy more than five or ten minutes in explaining the nature of it, and I do not reckon it will lead to any debate.

Mr. WADE. Will the Senator consent to put it aside if it leads to debate?

Mr. CLAY. I only wish to state what I have to say about it, if it is taken up.

Mr. WADE. I think we had better proceed to the consideration of the special order.

Mr. CLAY. I will give the special order I will call it up to-morrow in the morning hour, and I trust the Senate will let me dispose of it. I have made two ineffectual attempts to do so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope the Senate will consent to take it up in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. CLAY. I will make the attempt.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 280) to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BROWN to the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I have been authorized by the Committee on Public Lands to withdraw the amendment heretofore reported, in lieu of the House bill referred to that committee, and to offer the amendment that I hold in my hand, instead of it. There is an amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BROWN] to take the place of the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands. I understand the Senator has no objection to withdrawing that until this can be introduced, and then it comes regularly in its place.

Mr. BROWN. None at all. I withdraw my amendment for the time being, to allow the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to be presented.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Then I withdraw the amendment heretofore reported by the Committee on Public Lands, for the original House bill, and offer in its place the following amendment, which I hope may be read.

The Secretary read the amendment; which is, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert:

That any person who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to enter one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated public lands, or a quantity equal there-

Virginia, offered an amendment, and in his amendment there was one section which I will read:

"Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the person applying for the benefit of the eighth section of this act shall, upon application to the register of the land office in which he is about to make such application, deposit a certificate of the land register that he or she is the head of a family, or is twenty-one years of age, and that such application to the register for his or her certificate shall be made by a person specially mentioned herein, and not either directly or indirectly for the use or benefit of any other person or persons whatsoever; and upon making the affidavit as herein required, and filing it with the register, he or she shall thereupon be permitted to enter the quantity of land specified: Provided, however, That no certificate shall be given or patent issued therefor, until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry, and until the person so permitted to enter the land shall have paid to the Government for the same twenty-five cents per acre, or if the lands have been in unsettle more than twenty years, twelve and a half cents per acre."

This was an amendment offered by Mr. HENRY to the homestead bill of 1854, which passed the House of Representatives by nearly a majority of two thirds; and the Journal gives the vote upon it, which I will read:

"On the question to agree to the said amendment as amended,

"It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 34, nays 13.

"On motion of Mr. Adams.

"The yeas and nays being desired by one fifth of the Senators present.

"Those who voted in the affirmative are:
Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Browne, Chase, Claiborne, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Howe, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Hays, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, McIntire, Mason, Pettit, Russell, Schuchert, Seward, Sumner, Tilden, Thompson of Kentucky, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Tooley, Walker, and Welles."

Before we had not the Senator's vote, but we had his tacit consent; for here stands the vote of the gentleman who is negotiating Tennessee, to reduce the price of the public land, and let a man have it at twelve and a half cents an acre, according to a proposition introduced by his own colleague. Where does he stand now? I think Tennessee will compare at this with the favored State, the Old Dominion at that particular. But again:

"On motion of Mr. FITZPATRICK, to amend the amendment proposed by Mr. HENRY, by inserting after the word 'acre,' in the first section, eleven and one-half, and all lands which shall have been offered for sale shall remain unsold thirty years thereafter, shall be reduced to a price of twelve and a half cents an acre."

Yeas and nays were again called; and the Senator from Virginia a second time recorded his vote to reduce the price of the land to twelve and a half cents an acre. Then came the question on the final passage of the bill:

"The bill (H. R. No. 37) in grant of homesteads of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers, was read the third time, as amended; and having been further amended, by unanimous consent, on the motion of Mr. Pettit, the title was amended;

"On the question, Shall the bill pass?

"It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 36, nays 11.

"On motion of Mr. Welles.

"The yeas and nays being desired by one fifth of the Senators present.

"Those who voted in the affirmative are:
Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bright, Brodhead, Browne, Chase, Claiborne, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Howe, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Hays, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, McIntire, Mason, Pettit, Russell, Schuchert, Seward, Sumner, Tilden, Thompson of Kentucky, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Tooley, Walker, and Welles."

The Senator was enlightened a little yesterday: I want to enlighten him more to-day. I doubt very much if he remembers the bill he did vote on all these questions sometimes, and the refreshing of the memory is of no disadvantage to any of us. I think that his speech yesterday came with no very good grace from a Senator with this sort of record. How do you stand when you talk about the influence on the slavery question? Does not reducing land to twelve and a half cents induce settlement? What is the proposition under consideration? It is to reduce the price to twelve and a half cents an acre in one bill, and in the other to ten dollars for the whole one hundred and sixty acres and pay the price. Where is the difference in principle? Where is the enormity of the one that does not exist in the other? Where is the danger to the institution of slavery growing out of the adoption of the one measure that does not grow out of the other? Is it not Virginia, under a system of bounty land warrants to her revolutionary soldiers and others, has received nearly two million five hundred thousand acres of land; and when we stand with Virginia, and commencing with Washington, with every Administration to the present time, are we to be arraigned and taunted with our association? When and where did the preemption policy start? Did it not start with General Jackson? When and where did the graduation policy start? Did it not start with General Jackson? Is not Tennessee standing now where she stood then? What is the homestead policy? It is a part and parcel of the same great system of creating a new class into the possession of every man that will take them and make a proper use of them. We stand where Washington stood. We stand where Jefferson stood. We stand where all the Democratic Administrations have stood, and even where the Senator himself has heretofore stood.

Where does the gentleman get his association, and what is it for? Instead of relying on the argument of the question, he tries to associate with it a prejudice with which he thinks it can be struck with much more ease and force than by meeting the question upon argument. Virginia is to rebuke Tennessee on this subject, talking about making free States! Is Virginia to rebuke any other State in this Confederacy in reference to free States? Go back to the ordinance of 1787, first introduced by Mr. Jefferson in 1793, and go back to the surrender of public lands in the Northwest, which I never conceded were Virginia's more than any other State's—but let that be as it may, I will not argue it now; she assumed that they were hers; but the surrender of her territory to the creation of free States, and the admission into this Confederacy with their Senators on this floor. Is Virginia to rebuke Tennessee, alarmed at the creation of free States? Those States have fallen from your hands. Are you dissatisfied with them? Or do you want to turn them out of the Union? Tennessee prefers to follow principle, understanding that, in the pursuit of correct principle, we can never reach a wrong conclusion; and although some become alarmed and are carried off by the ad captivum slange of the day, and some are carried on by the ad hominem attacks to pursue it unflinchingly and unwaveringly, as her own noble rivers that come rushing from her mountains' sides, and make their way down her valleys and through her plains in their majestic career to the great father of waters. Here Tennessee stands to stand, and to stand as firm and unyielding as her own native mountains, with their craggy and projecting brows, rock-ribbed, and as ancient as the sun. She does not stand here to be rebuked by any State, or the Senators from any State. Now, as heretofore, in all the past, she stands on her own feet, and takes care of herself. Gentlemen taunt us with an association with the Republican party, because the Republican party is showing a little agility, being pretty hard pressed for capital, and setting out as preachers, picking up whatever they can find that is profitable. They find that a measure and a great principle that has been advocated by the Democratic party for years is popular; that the public judgment is recorded for it.

In 1846, when this measure was inaugurated in its present substantial shape, and on the question of that party? It was before the party had its existence. It was pressed amid the taunts and the jeers of individuals, until the public judgment laid hold of it; and, in 1852, in compliance with that public judgment, the House of Representatives passed the bill by a majority of two thirds, a fraction less than a two-thirds vote. It is a Democratic measure, not a Republican. Do we know so little of ourselves, do we stand so little upon principle, that because Republicans come forward and assume a measure we are for, we are to be scared off and then take it? Do not understand ourselves better than that? In 1854, it was brought up by a Democratic member, and passed the House of Representatives by a two-thirds vote, and came to the Senate. In the last night, it passed the House again, and came to the Senate. The public judgment is recorded again and again, and will the Senate not yield to the high behests of an enlightened public judgment? We are told here that the Senate is to be obeyed, and not the people; that the Senate is to be obeyed, and not the States. When does the Government begin to be obeyed for what use was it created? Was the Government created for the people, or the people for the Government? I hold that the Government was created for the people; that this Federal Government is the creature of the States; and when they have spoken and declared their solemn judgment, it is the duty of the Senate to obey. Look at the votes in the House of Representatives in 1852 and 1854. There was no party test then on this measure. Whigs and Democrats, Americans and every other class, voted for it, and some of all classes voted against it; but, all at once, it has got a nigger in it—slavery—and the question—and now no one takes a new phase.

Sometimes the measure is met upon constitutional grounds. I do not pretend at all to be a constitutional lawyer; but there are some propositions that are so plain that anybody can understand them. I say the distinction is broad between the power of the Federal Government over its revenues and over its public lands. Congress has power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare. When duties and debts have been laid, when taxes have been collected and paid into the Treasury, Congress then has specific and definite powers in reference to their appropriation. But in reference to the public lands, the power is in a separate class. Congress has the power to dispose of the public lands for the purpose of obtaining revenue; and being disposed of for revenue, that revenue when obtained must be appropriated under the restraints and restrictions of the Constitution. It is not worth while to be very minute in the argument, very nice in the distinction, but in this matter the distinction is broad. Congress has the power "to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." "Dispose of it for what purpose? What does the Government acquire territory for? Is it to be vacant and dormant? Is it to remain unproductive? What is the great object of acquiring territory? When you acquire territory that is unpopulated, you have not only the power, but the duty, to settle it. Territory for which was acquired, it is your duty to pass laws that will encourage and induce the settlement of that territory. Has not that been the practice? The fathers of the Republic looked at it in that way, and gave it that construction. I say it is the duty of the Government to settle and populate that territory, to populate an unsettled territory.

I will say here, that I do not believe this Government can dispose of the territory for other than governmental purposes; but it can dispose of it for some governmental purposes for which it cannot dispose of the public lands. I know that this sort of argument is sometimes made: "You get money, you buy land, and you give the land away." That does not affect the broad provisions of the Constitution at all. If the land is acquired by treaty, whether you pay money or not, it then passes under the general provision "to dispose of the territory." If we acquire territory must we have back precisely what we pay for that territory? If the argument be sound in one case it is equally sound in the other. Where are the great patriotic men who have gone to the battlefield and perished at the cannon's mouth? Can we get them back? Where are the great men that now sleep in foreign land, who fell in deadly conflict with a foreign foe, beneath the crimsoned spear, and went to their long, narrow home, with wounds that shrank even their wives, who were saturated with their blood? Can you get them back? If you must have back what you offered up for this territory, you must get them men; get back the fathers of those orphans that are left in the land; get back the husbands of these widows who have been made poor and desolate, before you talk about getting back the dollars and cents. Where would you get the material out of which to coin this blood?

Who, then, is entitled to this public domain? Are not the descendants of those who shed their blood for this territory, and who have given up their country, entitled to a little piece of ground upon which they can make their support? Whose land is it? Is it the Government's? If the land is the Government's, whom does the Government belong to? Is it belong to the people. The Government is the agent; and it is the right to withhold from the great mass of the people that which is theirs.

Mr. WIGFALL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what he means by the people? I ask him seriously, because I want a reply trust in God that the time will come when the Senate, instead of being chosen by the Legislatures of the respective States, will be chosen by the people of the several States, and then they will feel and know their relative position to the people that constitute the State. I hope that time will come; I trust it may. It is districts like those I have been describing, represented on the principles I have just referred to, that constitute States. These are the men and the description of men who are necessary and proper to make a virtuous, intelligent, and patriotic State; a State capable of governing itself—men like these "who know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain."

The bill before the Senate meets another objection that has been urged; and that is, that the public lands should be made to pay for themselves. I have no scruples upon that question myself; but there has been a disposition to place the bill beyond the reach of constitutional scruples, beyond the reach of questions as to expediency, and beyond the reach of the exercise of the veto power. I do not speak ex cathedra on this point; I do not speak advisedly at all; but I have heard it thrown out in the way of tam, perhaps with a view of frightening some, that it would receive the Executive veto. I do not believe it, and I will give you one reason, and that is, that I believe it. Look at this bill. It provides for the settler defraying the expenses, paying the office fees; and it holds out a reasonable inducement to settlers, and imposes the condition of the settlement and cultivation for five years. It is not at all a bill for paupers, for miserable leeches, for persons from leech-houses, for vagabonds, nor for what are denominated sometimes poor people in one sense; but it is for men who have arms, who have muscles, who have sinews, and who have willing hearts to work. "Wint business grows of vagabonds," says the hundred and sixty acres. A vagrant is a man running about, unsettled, with no particular abiding place. To fix a man down and set him to work in the precise opposite of vagabondism. Because a man is poor, because he has not a convenient or sufficient amount of work to do, does not make him a loafer; and the fact that a man is poor is an crime. If being poor was a crime, and I was before you as my judge upon trial, and the charge was read to me, and I was asked to put in my plea, I should have to plead guilty; but I was a great criminal, that I had been a criminal; and that I had lived a criminal each portion of my life. Yes, I have wrestled with poverty, the gaunt and haggard monster; I have met it in the day and night; I have felt his withering approach and his blighting influence; but did I feel myself a criminal? No; I felt that I was chastened, and that I was no honest man, and that I would rescue myself from the grasp of the monster. But there is sin; and there is more sin committed sometimes in becoming poor than almost anything else. We are told upon high authority that the drunkard and the glutton shall see poverty; but because it is affixed as a penalty, that does not make it a crime. It may be the penalty of committing crime.

Then, on the other hand, we are some start from poverty and come to a state of extreme wealth and riches. Poverty is no crime. If every man is criminal in this country who is poor, the country is full of criminals, and we have not got enough places of confinement to contain them. I demur; I put in a plea of not guilty, on behalf of the poor men of the country, and say they are not criminal. A man can be poor and honest. Sometimes poverty drives a man to commit a sin, and that sin may be criminal; but poverty itself is no crime. It is a great inconvenience and a great misfortune; but if poverty is a crime, the millions of little boys that are dead, yes, the millions of little boys that are thrown on the world? Where is this rising population? Three out of every four are poor; and are they all criminals? Suppose they are poor; they have got muscles and bones and will, and this measure may be a great benefit to them. Notwithstanding you have not got $200,000 and take your one hundred and sixty acres of land; take care of your wife and children; educate your boys; build up your school-houses; have your stock about you, and become a free and independent man. It will be an advantage to the Treasury. When a man is poor, he buys little. You increase his means of buying, and he buys more; and the Government, in bestowing one hundred and sixty acres of land, increases the occupant's means to buy; and, in a few years, by the operation of your law, the settler used to the consumption of his family, the Government will be remunerated twenty times, even in dollars and cents. Is that all? No. He is a better citizen; he is a more elevated man, better calculated to perform all the duties of a sovereign.

That is what is giving away the public lands greatly below what they cost. When I turn to a report made by a distinguished man of Virginia, for I have been dealing in Virginia authorities all day, I find that up to 1850, Mr. Stuart, who was then Secretary of the Interior, made this estimate:

"That this matter may be correctly estimated, and the value of these lands as a source of revenue be properly appreciated, I beg leave to state that, by a careful examination, it is ascertained that the entire area of the public lands, exclusive of the lands in Oregon, California, New Mexico, Utah, the Indian and Nebraska Territories, was 3,300,000,000 acres, and twenty-four millions of one hundred and three thousand seven hundred and fifty acres. About one fourth of this land has been sold, and the purchase price for its amount was $3,300,000. The cost of the whole of these lands, including the amount paid to France for Louisiana, to Spain for Florida, and to Mexico for Texas, and the extinguishing the Indian title, was $1,321,717. A portion only of these lands has been sold, and the cost of the whole of these lands, including the amount paid to France for Louisiana, to Spain for Florida, and to Mexico for Texas, and the extinguishing the Indian title, was $1,321,717. Less than half the land surveyed has been sold, and the whole cost of selling and extinguishing the same, including every expense not previously charged, is..... 7,405,284

Aggregate outlay or very kind..... 7,405,284

Net profit to the Government..... $60,361,313"

Since 1850 there has been received from the public lands about thirty-seven millions. Where is the balance? Where is the deficit? The measure before you provides for the settlement of all alienated lands, and the remaining sections to be created, either at $1.25 or $2.50. Add the twelve and a half cents proposed to be charged to the $1.25 and you get more than Mr. Stuart himself says was the cost of the public lands. He says twenty cents an acre. Therefore, cost, $20,000,000 of profit in 1850, and now $37,000,000 more, making $77,000,000 profit from the public lands. What right, then, have you to withhold from the man who sheds his blood, and from his children, a part of that which is his? Have you any right to do this? I demand it in the name of the American people; I demand it in the name of the Constitution; I demand it in the name of justice, as being in conformity to the spirit and genius of our Government.

When we give up this measure, there are various other measures brought forward. One is to give all the lands to the States. The enlightened statesman, Mr. Calhoun, some years ago, brought forward a proposition to surrender all the lands to the States. I remember it well. Mr. Calhoun did not want to electorize at all! He was not that sort of a man, who was inclined to concede the power to make internal improvements, he could change the name of a river to prevent inland sea, and then it became constitutional. An extraordinary statesman! I do not question that he was an extraordinary statesman. Mr. Calhoun had some peculiar notions about government; and if he were now living, he and all the men in the United States could not put a Government into successful and practical operation under the system he laid down. He was a logician; he could reason from a premise to a conclusion with perfect certainty, but he was as often wrong in taking his premises as anybody else. Admit his premises, and you were swept off by the conclusion; but look at his premises, and he was just as often wrong as any other statesman; and I think Mr. Calhoun was a man of a political nature. Mr. Calhoun never possessed that class of mind that enabled him to found a great party. He founded a sect; and if he had been a religionist, he would have been a mere sectarian. He would never have gone beyond founding a sect per se. His mind was metaphysical and logical, and he was a great man in his peculiar channel; but he might be more properly said to have founded a sect than a great national party.

I have been for the preemption and graduation policy; I have been for the homestead policy; I have been in favor of confining the future sales of public lands to actual settlers, and to them in limited quantities. I have looked forward to a day when, after these measures were fixed on the country, the homestead consuming the policy that has been heretofore inaugurated, the result in a few years would be a surrender of the public lands to the actual settlers, and the Government as merely preliminary; and it is an onward I have long desired, for I want the powers of this Federal Government circumscribed; I want it kept in its proper orbit, and I want to withdraw the operations of the Federal Government, as far as possible, from the private States. I am for preemption, graduation, and homestead policy; it is nothing but the preliminary, the prelude to an ultimate surrender of the land to all the States in which it lies. I want to make myself understood as to what my policy is.

But, not to be vain or egotistic, or to claim anything from the Democratic party, I want to repeat, in conclusion, that this is emphatically a Democratic measure—inaugurated by the Democracy; and the Republican party have only shown their sagacity, as I remarked before, in one sense, in limiting the measure to the Democratic party, in which they know meets the approbation of the popular heart. They show their good sense in it; but because they will now go for my measure, or for a Democratic measure, I shall not turn against it.

Look on this as a great measure, involving great principles and great results in the future. I say let us stand up for it; let us forget party; let us go for it as a measure to advance and elevate the condition of the great mass of the people. Why cannot we rely around it as a common altar, and proclaim to the nation that it is a national party, and that it is intended to perpetuate the Union and the Government as they have been? But I want to come down to the last Democratic authority on this subject. I hold in my hand a document that was issued in 1857. The paragraph at the end of the document is as follows:

"No nation in the life of time has ever been blessed with so rich and noble an inheritance as we enjoy in the public lands. In administering this important trust, while it may be wise to reserve some of the lands for the use of the Government, yet we should never forget that it is our cardinal policy to reserve these lands, as much as may be, for actual settlers. It is our duty, as a nation, to do this; not only to promote the prosperity of the new States and Territories, by furnishing them a hardy and independent race of honest and industrious citizens, but shall ever homes for our children and our children's children, as well as for those exiles from foreign shores who may seek in this country to improve their condition, and to enjoy the blessings of civil and religious liberty. Such emigrants have done much to improve the growth and prosperity of this country. They have proved faithful blood to be pressed upon a war. After becoming citizens, they are entitled, under the Constitution and laws, to be placed on a perfect equality with native-born citizens; and in this character they should ever be kindly received."

Would it not seem that the bill now under consideration was drafted with an eye to the propositions here laid down, a portion of the lands to be reserved for the Government, and the remainder, and the balance being, as far as possible, reserved to actual settlers, and as homes for our children and our children's children; and at the same time opening the door to the exiles of other countries to come here and cultivate these lands? I may be wrong, but I am sure it is a fair inference. Let them all come, and comply with the law. Who was it that made use of the language I have just read? A Republican? No. Who was it? James Buchanan, in his inaugural address on the 4th of March, 1857. He said, "I have covered precisely the ground laid down in that inaugural address. Hence I infer that the President of the United States will not veto this measure. I hope he will not, in the event of its passage. I feel satisfied that we can and will pass the bill upon its merits, and it will be passed. I will be, I cannot tell; but, in conclusion, let me say to the friends of the homestead proposition, who have been engaged in this warfare a long time—for the present proposition commenced in 1846—it is now near its completion; let us stand by it, let us put it upon its merits, and let it pass. Once upon the statute-book, there will never be power to recall it. The people will come up to those who are struggling in their behalf, properly be ascribed to me that, from a desire to shrink responsibilities that devolved on me, or from a desire to promote any sinister ends, I had voted in departure from the faith of a previous vote that I had given; but I should never be apprehensive of its being charged on me as an inconsistency that I had changed my mind, and changed my policy with it.

But, sir, here again is the interpretation that the Senator puts on his principle. What was the graduation bill? It was a bill on the part of those who represented the older States, where there were no public lands, to save from the wreck of the public domain, as far as they could, something from the general and apparent purpose of the legislation of the country to appropriate those public lands to the States which they were found without paying for them at all. It was said constantly by honorable Senators here from the new States, where there are public lands—and they said it with truth, and I felt the force of the appeal—that it was a master of great moment to those States to have their lands settled; and they were held at such high prices, or upon such rigorous terms, as represented by them, as prevented their settlement; and that measure of graduating the price of the public lands was one introduced with their assent and with their approval for the purpose of doing—what? Of carrying out any policy in the Government to give homesteads or lands to those who were either unable or too worthless to buy them? No; the furthest thing from it; but it was in response to that demand of the landholding States that the price of the lands should be graduated in proportion to their actual value and to their fertility; and that when the Government had offered the lands for sale for a certain period, and they had not been entered at the minimum price of $1 25, then that they should be open to entry at lower rates; and the lands were graduated according to the times they had been in the market—that being adopted as the best standard, and a very proximate one it was (at least it was the best standard) of the comparative fertility of the lands. The highest price, I think, in that bill, was one dollar, and the lowest was one-half cent. There was no homestead in that—I mean to say no policy of the homestead bill. It was a graduation measure which I understood would be acceptable to the landholding States and which was decided by a concurrence of opinion between them and carried into effect. Its practical operation has been, according to my recollection, that although it seemed to be well devised in theory, it has had little effect in practice.

Mr. President, I did not design anything further yesterday than to bring to the notice of the Senate the necessary operation of this bill brought from the other House, and which is now the subject of our deliberations. The necessary effect will be to transplant, by the allotment of land gratuities at the public expense, people from the non-slaveholding States to the slave States, and to the Territory, to the exclusion of those from the slaveholding States; and I said, and still believe, that if the policy should be adopted, it would be followed up on the part of the people of the free States by bringing to the aid of the law, the argument and the force of a half cent a person. I cannot vote for it in any form or shape, not only because it seems to have that policy, but because I should be opposed to the whole system of making gratuities of the public lands in reference to the honorable Senator from Tennessee, I certainly did not mean to provoke any quarrel on this side of the Chamber; I meant to call his attention only to the necessary effect of his policy in the hands in which it now was; and my suggestion to him, certainly not an admonition was, that he should neither touch nor handle the unclean thing.

Mr. WIGFALL. I propose, Mr. President, as briefly as I can—and I will promise those Senators who will give me their attention, to be brief—to answer somewhat the remarks which were made by the Senator from Tennessee, and to discuss the measure before the Senate. Before addressing the Senate, I beg that an amendment which I introduced the day before yesterday may be read, as I propose to speak to that amendment.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment of Mr. WIGFALL, which is in substance as will appear the exacting clause of the bill, and insert:

That all the public lands in any of the United States, with the exception of such portions as are now set aside, or as may, before the terms of this act are accepted by the States, be sold as public lands, and the proceeds of the sale of the United States, shall be added to any of the United States, within the limits of which said public lands may be situated, or as may be any of said States, have complied with the provisions and conditions of this act hereinafter set forth:

First, That said States shall severally pass acts, to be irrevocable, that they will annually pay to the United States—per centum of the gross amount of the sales of such lands as are sold under said act, and the proceeds of such sales, estimating the price of said grants or donations at the price of the same class of lands at the time of said grant or donation.

Second, The present graduation laws of the United States shall apply to all such lands ceded, but may, at any time, be changed by said States, with the consent of the United States.

Third, That this consent, together with the portion of the proceeds furnished by the States, respectively, under the provisions of this act, shall be in full of the five per centum due, or any part thereof, already coming due to any State; and that said States shall be exclusively liable for all charges that may hereafter arise from the survey, sales, and management of the public lands, and the extinguishment of Indian title, within the limits of said States, respectively.

Fourth, That any grant of said States shall have accepted this cession, the same shall become null and void upon any said States failing to comply with the terms of said cession; and in case of any such failure, the President is authorized to announce by proclamation said failure of said State, and that all title derived from said State by sale, grant, or donation, shall be null and void, and the lands shall revert to the United States.

Fifth, That any person settling upon any portion of said lands so ceded to any State, according to the terms and provisions of said laws of said State, shall retain and remain in undisturbed possession of the same for the space of five years, within which time he shall be required to pay the price of said lands, and that if he fails to do so, as aforesaid, then the said land shall be subject to reclamation and entry.

Sixth, That said lands so ceded shall remain subject to the satisfaction of all charges upon the public lands of the United States now existing by law, and shall be liable to sale and location under the existing laws and existing stipulations of the United States; and all lands ceded by this act which may be taken, after the approval thereof, in satisfaction of any indebtedness of the United States, shall be included in the issue of said lands, and the proceeds of the sale of said lands, shall be estimated at the price per acre as the same may have been graduated under the act of August 4, 1854; and for the amount thus estimated of the proceeds within any State, a credit shall be allowed to such State in the settlement of the public debt, and the balance of the proceeds shall be paid to the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That whenever the President of the United States shall have received from any of the States aforesaid has accepted the terms of this act, he shall, as soon thereafter as convenient, cause to be laid before said State to be read and approved.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That from and after the terms of this act shall have been accepted by any State, he shall be bound to execute and carry into effect all the ordinances, imposing restrictions on the right of said State to tax the lands, by her authority, subsequent to the said acceptance of this act; and any laws, regulations, acts, laws, documents, and papers, in the General Land Office at Washington, the offices of the surveyors general, and local land offices, relative to said lands, shall be the order and disposition of the executive of said State, or certified copies, where the same are not susceptible of division.

Mr. WIGFALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] complains that this has been made a party question. Upon this point I expressed my views some two or three weeks since, and I will now further express my views introducing a party question here, and then complain that it is treated as a party question? Can you put a kettle on the fire and complain if it boils?

Did not the programme and platform of the Republicans some month or so ago here—I allude to the platform of New York, New England, and of course—announce that a protective tariff, internal improvements, and the homestead bill, were the platform of the Republican party? The Senator from Tennessee introduces a portion of the platform; and the Republicans avow their determination to vote for and support it. And he complains that we treat it as a party question. Yesterday, one of them gave as a reason that it is to free-soil the territory; to spread the empire of freedom; to establish, according to the language of the people near home I live, "God and liberty" over all the territory that now belongs to the United States, and of which not the people individually, but the States, are owners. I trample upon the idea that it belongs to the people as individuals; and I wanted the Senator from Tennessee to answer me on this twaddle, this talk about people as owners of the territory, without using the term with any definite meaning. Whom does the Senator mean by the people? If he means, by people, the States as contradistinguished from the State governments, he is right; but he is wrong, if he means the individuals living in the thirty-three States, he is wrong. The territory belongs neither to them individually nor as a political community. There is no such community or State as the United States. There is no such people. This, as a Democrat, be cannot deny. It is in the platform. It is the cardinal doctrine of our creed.

Now, sir, I say that this question is one that we have to decide. It is brought in here by the Senator from Tennessee, and pressed upon our consideration. The Republicans have made it a part of their platform, and I should have been telling you that it is a measure which is eminently calculated to cut our throats, and we believe that they are at least telling the truth in that, the Senator from Tennessee complains that we are not willing to sit down and have our throats cut quickly because Tennessee, forsooth, in eighteen hundred and forty sometime or other, introduced the measure through her member (himself) of the other House. He says that it is a Democratic measure. Why does he call it a Democratic measure, and upon what authority? When have the Democratic party in convention assembled endorsed it? Who made him the Democratic party or its exponent? "Upon what mead doth this our Czar feed that he hath grown so great?" I want to know when it became a Democratic measure, when it became a part of the platform of the Democratic party.

Why, sir, in the very breath in which he informed us that this was a Democratic measure, Democratic thunder that was stolen by the Black Republicans, in the very same breath, he said that in 1852 and 1854, yet he had been in the House of Representatives, all parties voting for it, Whigs and Democrats, Know Nothings and Republicans. In 1852 and 1854 all parties voted for it, he says, and by some legislator or other, that it is possibly understood in the mountain region of Tennessee, that he has spoken in such eloquent terms, it becomes ipso facto a Democratic measure. How, why, and wherefore, I ask?

Sir, what is Democracy? I attempted very briefly, the other day, to explain what Democracy was. The Senator may be a Democrat; he may be a Whig; I do not pretend to say. We have a catch phrase in Texas, "may be so and may be so not." The Democratic party in 1852 and in 1856 adopted a platform, and in that they declared explicitly and unqualifiedly that they adopted the Virginia resolutions of 1796, in one of which it is resolved:

That this Assembly doth explicitly and solemnly disavow the doctrine of the Federal Government, as resulting from the compact which the States are parties to.

The Democratic party having planted itself upon the platform that the States are the parties, and that the Constitution of the United States is a compact, it is manifest that any man who denies the fact is not a Democrat. His philosophy and sympathies with the poor have nothing to do with the question. He is not a Democrat because he is not a Democrat. The Senator is committed to that theory of our Government, and who would deny it must leave the party. The Senator says this is a Democratic measure. I have already asked when and where the Democratic party endorsed it, or adopted it. He says, I do not pretend to say. We have a catch phrase in Texas, "may be so and may be so not." The Democratic party in 1852 and in 1856 adopted it. Does it become Democratic by his introduction, or by their adoption? Its legitimacy I doubt; and I must be shown some authoritative action of some power authorized to legitimate such things before I can be induced not to plead bastardy against the landing. The Senator says it is Democratic, and yet the Whigs, the Democrats, the Know Nothings, the Republicans, all voted for it a few years ago; and now it is a part of the Republican platform!

Mr. PUGI. Will the Senator allow me? I have heard him say this five or six times, and I should like him to show it me in the Republican platform.

Mr. WIGFALL. Yes; I see the Republican platform now, [Mr. SEWARD] the platform and so.

Mr. PUGI. I was about to tell the Senator that it is not in the Republican platform.

Mr. WIGFALL. I mean that the Senator from New York a few weeks ago, on this floor, announced as a part of the platform the homestead bill, and a tariff for protection, and internal improvement.

Mr. PUGI. If the Senator will permit me, I appears of the Austrians, turning them into his own bosom, and falling upon them, he opened a way through which his countrymen marched to liberty and independence. Now, if there is anything in the political history of this or any other country which equaled that, it was the action and the life of John C. Calhoun—the man who spurned the Presidency, power, place, everything save the Government. We are the old men, and Senator rises now here to-day and attempts to deride him.

I intend, sir, to answer the twaddle about the fathers. I am sick and tired of the fathers. There has been enough of that thing talked of. We are wiser than they were. We are the old men, and they were the young men. I care not what their age or experience was. They organized this Government, and the wisest man in that day could not tell how the thing would operate; it was utterly impossible. We have the experience of seventy years. There are men now—I do not speak of myself—who have had as much education, as much brains as they had. We have seen the experiment operating for seventy years. It is twaddle to talk about the wisdom of our ancestors, and every man knows it. We are the old men, fifty years of age, would like to be bound by his judgment at twenty or twenty-five years? What nation is there, that is one hundred years old, that would consent to be governed by the wisdom of the past century? What would be said of our exigence and the pretensions of our wisdom to pass a law here now that was not to be repealed for one hundred years? If our ancestors had, one hundred years ago, passed an act of that sort, it would have been an act precisely of the same sort as if we were to do it for our successors. Those who come one hundred years hence will know more than we do by one hundred years; and so we know more than our ancestors. They were the boys; we are the men. They attempted nothing of the sort. They legislated for themselves. We have to legislate for our successors. We are indifferent; whether it was fish, flesh, or good red herring. They had nothing new to do with it than they had to do with the slave trade or slavery in Constantinople; hence it is that one party has been absorbed by others, and that the other party is left intact, as it did in the better days of the Republic.

This being the difference between the parties, it is not a matter of any consequence to us what men in particular days thought upon particular measures. The question is simply on the measure. If we have introduced an amendment to this bill, is it constitutional? If it is constitutional, I would invert the order, first, is it constitutional; and then is it expedient? I am not going to repeat what I said against the unconstitutionality of this act the other day. But is it wise? There is the question. I have introduced an amendment to this bill which I think will settle this difficulty. If there is any rock upon which this Union is going to be wrecked, it is not the slavery question; that is not the disease that we are suffering under. It is a mere indication of the disease. Now, sir, if we are suffering, and we are suffering, a latitudinarian construction of the Constitution, and excessive patronage on the part of the Government. Whenever we bring the inhabitants of the different States back to a just consideration of the form of Government under which we are living, they will break up the patronage and the power of the Federal Government and stop its corruptions, and that will save the Union.

Now, sir, how is this to be done? One of the Tennessee Senators [Mr. Nicolson] said the other day that the motive he had in advocating this bill was, that by parceling out the lands and giving them to individuals who moved into the Territories, those settlers would have an affectionate regard for this Government. That happens frequently. I do not deny it. But what he wants, I do not want persons to be carried into our Territories, and a State to be built up by the patronage of this Government, who are to feel that they are the beneficiaries of the Federal Government, and that when the State is admitted into the Union, they are to be rescued from the Federal Government and forget that they are a people and look upon themselves as pensioners. It would be a most unfortunate state of things if a people who were to administer our government should have a greater affection for another government than they had for their own; yet this is the policy advised. There is an anomaly, and I may as well touch it, the one thing that the Government under which we are living is composed of State governments and this Federal Government; both deriving their powers from the same source—the people of the States. When the Union was formed there was a large territory to be administered. It has been admitted by the States of Tennessee [Mr. Nicolson] that, so far as that territory was concerned, which belonged to the States at the time they established this Government, we could not deal with it otherwise than to dispose of it for the benefit of the Union; we could not give it away, but, like the Louisiana purchase—and that he alluded to particularly—it was acquired for the purpose of making new States. Now, I beg that the Secretary will read a portion of the message of Mr. Jefferson, who, though he is one of the fathers, I think probably knew something about it.

The Secretary read, as follows:

"Congress witnessed, at their last session, the extraordinary agitation of public mind by the acquisition of territory to deposit in the hands of the United States."

"The assignment of another place having been made according to treaty, the Government has been admitted by the States of Tennessee [Mr. Nicolson] that, so far as that territory was concerned, which belonged to the States at the time they established this Government, we could not deal with it otherwise than to dispose of it for the benefit of the Union; we could not give it away, but, like the Louisiana purchase—and that he alluded to particularly—it was acquired for the purpose of making new States. expression, for the people, and must administer the trust for their benefit. I regret the vagueness of his definition of the term people. Upon the definition of that term depends the soundness of his Democracy. It is upon its meaning that the two great parties have so long differed. And he said he meant the people the men who fought the battles of the country, did the voting, and did the work. Why, sir, he certainly understood what I meant. That term "people" has a specific technical meaning in this country. Of the two parties of the country, one to which I belong, and to which he professes to belong, puts upon the term "people," whenever it is used, a specific technical meaning. They mean a political community, a State or a nation, the boundaries of which are the boundaries of the States severally, the thirty-three different States. Another party uses the term "people" vaguely, considering the entire inhabitants of these thirty-three States as one single political community. That is the difference between us, and I hoped I should get an answer from him, but I did not.

Now, this Government, being the representative of the States, should administer its public property for the benefit of the States. As I previously observed, at one time it may be necessary to create new States, or to encourage their creation, and at another time it may be necessary to discourage the creation of the public domain to discourage it. When there was but between three and four million inhabitants in the thirteen States, and they had an immense waste domain, it was certainly their policy to hold out inducements for settlement, and to create rapidly new States in order to give them strength against foreign aggression; but when we have thirty-three States, extending from the Gulf to the Lakes, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, is it important that we should rapidly create new States—that we should encourage the settlement of the public domain? Why? For what purpose? Do we need strength against foreign aggression? Surely not. We are able to protect ourselves, and almost as strong as they are disposed to be a little aggressive. Then why is it that the old States—Virginia, South Carolina, Maryland, and Massachusetts—want new States created now? What matter of public policy would require this rapid settlement of the Territories? I would not close the Territories to settlement, but I ask if this Federal Government is now bound, for the purpose of public policy, to encourage and stimulate the settlement of the Territories? I think not.

But there is, right here, another question. Somehow or other the fathers seemed to forget somewhat the wisdom which they are given credit for. In creating new States they committed a mistake. They established an imperialism in imperis. They admitted the inhabitants of a Territory to become a people; to establish a form of government; to become a nation, and to be confederated with them; and yet they kept the eminent domain in that Federal Government; they administered the sales of the public lands; they reserved in themselves the right to say how much land should be sold; when it should be sold; how it should be sold; and for what price it should be sold; and yet they talked to themselves about this being a Government formed by the people, and about it being a compact to which the States are party; of sovereignty vesting in the people of the States respectively.

It was a solecism. It was a license they were taking which is admissible in poetry, but not in politics. It was a solecism in political hyallage—it was putting the cart before the horse. It was worse than Virgil's dare clasibus aurores. It was not a poetic, but a political license, and that is a thing that is not permitted to statesmen. The idea of establishing the inhabitation of a Territory as a condition, or a pretext, for the right to establish their own form of government, and yet take away from them the right of regulating their own form of government! Take Mississippi, for instance. In former times this Government reserved most of the land in Mississippi. If this Government had undertaken to say, no man should settle in Mississippi that did not buy at least a league of land, would anybody but slaveholders ever have gone in there? Could any others have gone? If this Government had cut it up in quarters, or into sections of sections of land, forty, or eighty, or one hundred and sixty acres to the section, and declared that no one should purchase but actual settlers, and that no one should own more than forty acres, does not every man see that it would have excluded slavery from Mississippi? And yet that power was reserved to the Federal Government after Mississippi became a State.

It was, therefore, that it is a solecism; it is a political hyallage. It is a thing that is ignoring all just ideas of the sort of government that we are living under. It is a wrong, a mistake greater than a wrong—a mistake that was committed; and the sooner we rectify it the better. How? By disposing of the public lands to the States in which they lie, and leaving the States the right to dispose of them as they see fit. But shall the Federal Government attempt to give some of these States property belonging to the United States? No, sir; but let them receive these lands upon conditions and upon price stipulated. Cede them to the States and let the States regulate the mode in which they shall be disposed of; and then for the trouble of administering the public lands, for extinguishing Indian titles, for opening and keeping up the land office for surveys, for issuing patents, for all those expenses and all this trouble, let the State reserve a certain amount of the gross proceeds of the lands and pay over to the Federal Government the balance.

Now, the Government to which the land is called the homestead bill, which is predicated upon that idea. I have asked that it be read. It has been printed. I ask Senators to consider this matter, and also consider whether it is not a matter worth considering. Are we to go on administering these lands and keeping up the land office patronage here in the Federal Government? Why is it that the Federal Government at Washington is more capable of administering this land fund than the States themselves? The State Legislatures and State governments know more of the disposition of the people in their own States on this land than we possibly can. They are nearer the scene of action. Make it their interest to administer them prudently, and cede them the lands.

Why are the States by necessity obliged to have an agent to administer this fund for them. Shall they select the Federal Government, or shall they select one of the States? I would rather select one of these States to administer this fund. If you, Mr. President, and I, and a dozen others, formed a company, and we appeared as a company to administer our joint partnership fund; if, during the transaction of the business, and the continuance of that partnership, it turned out that there was some particular branch that some one of the partners could administer better than the general agent, would there be any objection to establishing him as an agent pro tanto? If these States have confederated together, and have agreed to establish a common Government, through which they are to exercise some of their sovereign powers, and to surmount some of their difficulties, why may we not administer some of their business as the agent of the others, better than the Federal Government, for any reason why that State should not be made an agent?

Then I would convey these lands to the States in which they lie, and give them the right to decide all questions as to their settlement. If they want your lands conveyed in small quantities, or in large ones, let them decide. If they want to hasten emigration, or if they wish to impede it, let them decide. Leave to each State the right to decide for itself the mode of settling upon its own lands; because the settlement of a State that has a large extent of waste lands in a matter that affects actually its political interests, the character of the Government itself. This Federal Government may actually change the political institutions of the States of this Union, and yet there are public lands; and whilst this Government continues to administer the public lands and control the sales of them, I say that the States of this Union have lost their autonomy; they have lost their right to self-government. I would like to see that that I would urge this proposition.

Now, sir, there are other reasons which may be given for adopting this amendment; and at some other time I may state them. I have given a brief outline of the views which governed me in this subject. I have done this all the more with a view of drawing attention to it than with a view to discuss it. I trust that the next time the homestead bill comes up for discussion that matter may be discussed; and if there be any objections to it, we shall hear them.

Mr. WADE. I have a proposition to offer to the Senate; and if they agree with me I shall be very glad of it, and I think it the best disposition we can make of this matter. I offer the proposition that we postpone this bill till Tuesday next; and I mention Tuesday because to-morrow is devoted to District business, Friday to private bills, and Monday to the Florida claims, on which the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BAXTER) has the floor. Tuesday is the first day that is exempt from being devoted to any other business. I propose that time with the understanding that the Senate will then take up the bill, and I will propose that there shall be an understanding that on Wednesday we shall take a final vote upon it, if such shall meet the approbation of the Senate.

Mr. MASON. I do not agree.

Mr. SLIDELL. I hope that there will be no understanding on this subject.

Mr. WADE. Then I have nothing more to say, only that I shall present it to-morrow, and right on as long as the friends of the bill will stand by it, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. GWIN. That is a way, until we can get through with it.

Mr. OHIO. Of Arkansas. The Senator from Ohio spoke about some proposition that I did not hear. Has there been a motion to refer? ["No."] There has been no motion made to refer this bill again to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FARRAR in the chair.) None that the Chair is aware of.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move now that we refer the House and Senate bill, together with all the amendments that are now before the Senate, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WADE. I have no objection to that. Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The object is to report back by the time named—Tuesday morning. I suppose the Senate will not sit on Saturday, and the committee will give that entire day for the consideration of this proposition, and will attempt to report this bill full. There has been a great deal of light unquestionably thrown on the whole question in the course of this whole week's debate. It is impossible upon that, with the position these bills occupy, we can come to anything like a complete understanding of the subject. There are now before us the House bill and the Senate bill, and the amendments offered by the Senator from Texas, the Senator from Mississippi, and myself. Each one of them is a separate and distinct proposition; each one is designed to cover the whole ground. At present we are proceeding in this way: we take up no single bill to perfect, but motions are made that reach to either one that the taste of the gentleman who presents his amendment may direct and determine. It will be absolutely necessary, it strikes me, in order to get any thing like a practical end, that the whole of these bills and amendments should go to that committee; and there is no loss of time in doing so at all, for they will be reported back by the time that they can be taken up by the Senate. I hope very much that it may be agreed to, and be reported back by Tuesday next.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the proposition to postpone the further consideration of this question until Tuesday next will be agreed to, and that the bill and amendments will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The Senator from Ohio has said, very properly, that to-morrow is devoted to the business of the District of Columbia; Friday is devoted to private bills; and Saturday we shall unquestionably adjourn over; Monday is given to the consideration of the bill. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands indicates that they may be prepared to report. Then I shall be prepared, so far as my individual vote goes, to go with the friends of this bill to take it up, and to consider it from that day until it is reported of. I am not a vote for this bill, but I have not; but it has assumed an importance in the country which requires consideration. There can be no attempt to ignore it. Whatever it may be, it has become of too much consequence for that; and I say to the Senate, that if it is not reported back to it to be recommitment, with the understanding that it is to be reported back on Tuesday, then I will vote with him steadily to take it up, and consider it from day to day until we dispose of it in some form; not in any manner pledging myself to vote for it, because I do not know in what form it may come back to us. I say that, because upon Tuesday the friends of the bill cannot, I think, get it considered further any way; and on our side we are desirous that the bill should be taken up. I shall pass their eye over this question again calmly and dispassionately in the committee-room, with all the light which the debates and amendments proposed here have thrown on it. I hope it may be allowed to take that course.

Mr. GWINN. Mr. President, I do not object to the motion that has been made by the Senator from Arkansas, that this bill and all the amendments shall be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, in order to bring the question before the Senate on Tuesday next. I am prepared to vote for the homestead bill, if it has an early consideration; but I give notice now that if this bill is to occupy a large portion of the time of the Senate, to the exclusion of other measures of more importance to my State—the overland mail bill and the Pacific railroad bill—I will postpone it to the next session, and I give the friends of the bill that notice. I have for weeks not interposed, not thrown any difficulties in the way, not intending to throw any in the way, and not intending to speak on this question, because I am about to vote for it. I have been asked a number of more importance to my constituents, in which they have a deeper interest, and of importance to the whole nation, that must be considered as an early day, if I have the power to bring them before the Senate. While I am prepared to sustain the homestead bill without throwing any obstacles in its way, if it intervenes to prevent action on these other questions for a considerable time longer, I shall vote to postpone it to the next session as a duty I owe to my constituents.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator from Arkansas has given the very notice which I have been expecting for the last three or four days. As long as the discussion upon this bill was addressed to its principle or its details I made no sort of objection to its continuance; but we had the Senator from Wisconsin propose that the committee be called for a discussion on the question of slavery, and on the preposterous idea of turning Central America into a branch of Africa; and now, taking a wider train, we hear the Senator from Virginia to-day trying to turn it into a sectional question, and bring upon the Senate the question of slavery. Thus, I foresee that in the train that it is now taking instead of being debated upon its merits, it is to be kept here before the Senate that every gentleman may hang a speech on any subject connected with it, until we are generally tired of it; and between the Pacific railroad and the avenue railroad, it never will come to an end.

Now, sir, I am tired of this way of transacting business. My colleague wants Friday for private bills. One fifth of all the time of the Senate is to be given to private bills, and the friends of the business and these claimants are to thrust aside the public business in every direction. We are brought here day after day on Saturday, and now, again, to-morrow, to debate a horse railroad. All that can be done, and yet I am opposed to this bill being postponed any of the time, is to give notice that, unless some determination can be come to for the time of voting, I shall move to-morrow to postpone the avenue railroad in order to go on with this bill, and on Friday to postpone the Private Calendar, for the same purpose.

Now, if we get two or three votes that indicate the voice of the majority of the Senate upon these propositions, I shall be very glad to support the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands in his motion; but we have more than a dozen pending amendments, and when the bill comes back from the other side we shall have a dozen more. We are all at sea. The Senator from North Carolina has a proposition. We cannot get a vote on that. The Senator from Mississippi has a proposition. We cannot get a vote on that. The Senator from Missouri has one; the Senator from California had one; the Senator from Arkansas had one; the Senator from Alabama has one; the Senator from Texas has one. All these have to be voted upon before the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands can even come to a vote. Now, Senators, give us some chance; give us some decisive vote upon the bill. If a majority of the Senate is against the homestead in every shape, let the bill go to the table; let us take up the Pacific railroad, or any other bill, and go forward with it; but I give notice to the friends of the bill, that they expose it to the hazard of destruction by permitting it to be taken up and in so doing they will have a test vote, I shall make a motion now, for which I will not vote, in order that I can get the voice of the Senate, and that will be to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. If it is struck out, we shall know that there is to be no homestead. If that motion is lost, we can get our two votes on other propositions; and after the Senate has indicated its general disposition, I shall then support the chairman in recommending the bill, in order to perfect its provisions. If it stands in this position it is lost.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will modify the motion which I submitted to the Senate just now. I propose to modify it by putting in a further provision in the shape of an instruction from the Senate to the committee, that they report the bill on Tuesday next, when they have the earliest day any one expects to be able to get to this matter. So far as the Senator who has just spoken has expressed his wishes or his views, I agree in the necessity that exists that this measure shall be acted on in some way. I know and feel about the subject as he does, and he has, generally, the whole public land system will be down around our ears. A system which has lived and existed so long as it has, and so successfully, must fall shortly to pieces, unless Congress does, in a rational and prudent spirit, take charge of the matter, and so arrange it as to make no contribution to the heavy demands that are now made upon it.

Recognizing this, I am willing at once, as a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and I believe it is the sense of the committee, to act promptly. The truth is, that though I am not an advocate of the measure, for one, yet the committee is a homestead committee. It was made so, I believe, purposely. It certainly was made so, and would forever have been made so, against my vote; but the measure certainly can be intrusted to that committee, and I consider it my duty to report it back on Tuesday next; and within that time all parties, the friends as well as those opposed to the measure itself, can get ready for a decision. It is admitted that no time can or will be lost by this course. The bill is to be referred back to the committee, and that is the only reason, that when we touch the entire system that is ramified throughout this country, and by laws that cover many pages of our volumes, we must touch it with some degree of prudence, for we strike a deep, a great, and extended interest in every direction; and unless we touch it with prudence we shall do a vast deal of damage, and shall lead ultimately to radical legislation that will be of the most destructive character, in all probability.

I ask that my motion may be put. I hope that the Senator from Ohio will not, under these circumstances, insist upon getting another vote here on a motion to strike out the enacting clause, for it must be apparent to him that there is a majority here that do undoubtedly desire that some measure be taken to settle the subject. Those who are in favor of some measure of relief are wedded each one to his particular hobby—I may call it so—or to his particular scheme, so that we cannot come to one on which we may unite; but there may be a decided majority for some measure. I cannot but believe that we can fix on something that will be generally accepted and will be prudent in its character, and that will constitute beneficial and wise legislation. So regarding it, not wishing to obstruct action, and desirous that it should come in here at the earliest moment, and that the committee should take the matter up on its way; and with no disposition to throw any more formal or capacious obstructions, I beg that both the bills, with all the amendments—the whole subject-matter—may be referred to the committee, for report to be made here on Tuesday.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I shall not engage in any discussion on the merits of the homestead bill. My opinions have been well known for many years on this question. I have made as many speeches on the subject as I deem it desirable to make. I believe that the subject-matter has been thoroughly discussed, and is well understood; and if we prolong the debate, the only effect will be to drag into the question subjects that are not pertinent to it. I have no objection to the reference indicated by the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, if it is supposed that the bill can be matured and reported back by Tuesday, and if the time does not break down before that point, as it is stated, that it will be occupied up to Tuesday; but I do think that ought to be accompanied with an understanding that at some time, on some particular day, and that not a very late one, the final vote shall be taken. If we take up the subject and discuss it, in the manner in which the discussion has gone on heretofore, for many days longer, there will never be an end to it. If the slavery discussion is to be ingrained upon it, we shall never get a vote; it will merely stand here in the way of all other measures, occupying time, without ever getting a vote upon it. I could not, if I desired to do so, add anything to the force and power of the argument presented by the Senator from Tennessee to-day upon the subject. I do not wish, therefore, to occupy any time; but merely to express the understanding that we may get action and a final vote on the bill on an early day as possible, in order that we may proceed with other measures.

No man is more anxious than I am to have this overland mail service to California put upon a solid basis, and I am sure that we will all require prompt action upon that. This discussion stands in the way of other great measures of public policy. Let us confine ourselves to it until we get it disposed of, and then take up the overland mail, next day, and then take up the Pacific railroad bill, and dispose of that. Let us take each measure in succession, and when we take it up, never lay it down until we get a final vote. I shall insist now upon this measure, it having priority, keeping the priority. Then you may take up the overland mail, and then the Pacific railroad; but whichever you take up first, let us stick to that until we get a final vote upon it, and then take up the next, and the next; thus getting a vote upon every great measure. I do not wish to interfere with my friend from Mississippi with the District business, but I will insist that we go as to give him to-morrow. I am willing to stand by that arrangement.

Mr. BROWN. The Senate has done that already.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I know that; but many days are to be spent for the consideration of this business, and when the day comes, it is overlaid by another measure; and you are dependent now upon the majority whether you shall get to-morrow for the consideration of District business or not. I do not want to interfere with the Senator, if we can get an understanding that a day shall be fixed when we shall take a vote on the homestead bill; but let us agree now upon some day. I will not indicate it. I leave the gentleman on the other side having charge of this measure, the District business, (Mr. Brown,) to indicate it. I will agree to any fair arrangement.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the friends of this measure will agree to the proposition to postpone it until Tuesday. It has already been indicated very clearly, on both sides, that without violating positive promises, or any private understanding, or any amount to agreements, the time is to be otherwise occupied up to that day. The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands thinks that his committee will be prepared by Thursday to report it, and then the bill will take its position as though nothing had happened, with the advantage of having undergone the consideration of the committee in the mean time, with all the amendments appended to it. That is a very great advantage; because I warn the friends of this measure that the opposition of it will struggle for a committee, and will become one of the points of contention, very, unless it is allowed. I propose that you allow it to be recommitted now, as the bill is not postponed one minute by the recommitment. The time is to be occupied to-morrow by District business; the day after, by private bills; Saturday, it is understood, you are to adjourn over; Sunday is non dies; and Monday has been appropriated to something else. Tuesday comes, and your bill is brought back. It stands precisely where it stands this evening at the hour of adjournment, the first business in order. Then, I say to gen-temen—I have no power to commit anybody but myself—that I will vote to give it priority until it is disposed of. Without pledging myself to vote for it in any form in which it can be presented, still it is an important question; it has upon several test occasions shown a majority of the Senate in its favor, and I shall not vote to postpone it to consider anything, except for a few moments, to let something stand in the way of its importance, but certainly not to postpone it to time for any other leading measure. I do not mean to struggle against the judgment of the Senate, or the public judgment, to postpone a vote upon this question. I am as well prepared to vote upon it to-day as I shall be, and I have no objection to all other Senators are. I want no party advantages out of it. If gentlemen will allow it to go over until Tuesday, and let it be referred, take the judgment of the committee, and come back at a time when it must be considered.

Mr. PUGH. Does not the Senator see that we cannot get a vote on the committee's proposition? No matter what the judgment of the committee may be, we cannot get a vote on the judgment of the committee until a vote has been taken on the proposition of every other Senator. Senators will surely have a right to offer propositions, and proposition as amendments to the bill, and we cannot get a vote on the judgment of the committee until those other propositions are voted upon. Then why should we recommit it?

Mr. BROWN. These remarks remind the Senator, underlying that in the fact that the opponents of this bill will insist upon its recommitment from day to day until it is done, and in all this conflict of opinion, and all the multiplicity of amendments, as you have to yield in the end, sooner or later, I say to the friends of the bill, do it now when you do not postpone the bill one minute by doing it. If you reject the proposition, let it be so.

Mr. WADE. I only made my proposition in hopes that we might agree some time when, by the consent of all, we might take the final vote upon the bill at regular intervals, without sitting it out adversely, as we sometimes do. Now, there is no doubt, I think, from the votes that have been taken, that upon a homestead bill there is a majority here that will stand by it, under all circumstances, until it is finally acted upon. I have very little doubt that it might be carried over any assignment of business, either for to-morrow or the next day; and it would be the duty, perhaps, of the friends of the bill to do so, if we saw any disposition on the other side to prevent a vote at any reasonable time. I do not see any such indication, however; and when Senators say that, if the bill is recommitted, with instructions to report it again on Tuesday next, it shall then be taken up, and shall have priority over other business until it is finally acted upon, it seems to me the proposition is not unreasonable; and so far as I am concerned, I will agree to it. My colleague thinks that this is giving an unreasonable latitude to it. I have no fears but that, in due season, it will be acted upon, provided we concur in that conclusion.

On the other hand, if it is thought best not to do this, for each Senator to arrive and see what we can do here upon the subject, then I shall feel it my duty to call up the bill to-morrow, and have the vote of the Senate upon it, and place it in opposition to any other business, and if I have a majority with me, to continue it right along without being committed. But it seems to me when gentlemen require that it shall be recommitted, in order that the great variety of propositions that have been offered may all be reviewed by the committee and brought before us with an intelligible understanding that then we shall proceed to the final vote, I would rather do that. I am for peace, if we can have it; but if we cannot have it, then we must continue, and those that have the majority must press the subject to a final decision. I prefer the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas, provided the Senate will agree, that when the bill shall be reported back, it shall be kept before us until we get a final vote upon it.

Mr. GWIN. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question? I understand the Senator to say that if we took it up on Tuesday next we should have a vote on it on Wednesday. I understood that was the proposition?

Mr. WADE. That was the proposition I made.

Mr. GWIN. I am in favor of that; but if this bill is to occupy the residue of this session, I am against it. Let us have a time fixed when we are going to take a vote.

Mr. WADE. I prefer to have the time fixed. When I proposed that, at first, objections were made to it. I am not particular about the day. I would rather have it limited to two days. I think that, although I should like to make some remarks upon the bill, I am rather for voting than for speeches, and will forego that privilege if I can get a final vote upon it. That is what I want, and I am not for speaking about it. I believe it is understood. I do not suppose I could throw any light on the subject, and I am ready for a vote, and at the earliest day. I proposed Wednesday. If that should meet the approbation of the Senate, I would be glad of it. I will say Thursday, if that will be more acceptable.

Mr. BROWN. If my friend from Ohio will allow me, he certainly does not expect universal acquiescence in a measure of this sort. He cannot expect upon any given proposition that everybody will agree to it. There will be dissentients. He knows that the proposition has a majority in its favor in the Senate, and I hope he will allow me to say that if four or five Senators on this side tell him they will give it the precedence in the order of business, until it is disposed of, that ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. WADE. That is satisfactory; perfectly so.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will state, if the Senator allow me, that the remarks I made just now were precisely to that effect, if I understood myself; that the subject should be recommitted, and that we would report under instructions on Tuesday, and that we should then progress with it regularly until we came to a fair vote; not force it right at once when many Senators might want to be heard in regard to it, nor force it before they could present what they would lose time and ask no delay in doing so) any measure of amendment they might desire; but simply progress with it regularly until disposed of. I can agree to that, and I have no question but that the decision of the Senate will conform to it. I am perfectly willing, and I am ready to come back, to take it up and continue it until it is disposed of.

Mr. WADE. If Senators will say it shall have priority, I will be satisfied, for one. However, the quicker the vote shall be taken the better; but I do not wish to curtail argument upon the subject from any one.

Mr. MASON. I only wish to say, to avoid any possible misunderstanding, that I do not consider myself a party to any understanding as to when it shall be taken up or acted upon.

Mr. PUGH. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WADE. I hope not.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish to make one single word of explanation. When the Senator from Ohio proposed to take a vote on Wednesday next, and expressed a hope that that course would be assented to by acclamation, I thought proper to interpose my protest. I am not willing to fix any particular day; but, so far as I am concerned, I am not disposed to make any factions opposition to this bill at all. I am willing that it shall be taken up and discussed, treated fairly, acted upon coolly and deliberately, and that it shall have preference to all other bills, until disposed of.

Mr. GWIN. That is satisfactory.

Mr. GWIN. I am perfectly willing, if a day is fixed when a vote shall be had upon this subject; but it is my duty, and therefore I intend to express it, that if a vote is not taken within a week upon this bill, I shall vote to postpone it, though I should like to believe there are measures more important to my State which ought to be acted upon. Now, if the Senator from Ohio wishes to accomplish his purpose, if he has got a majority in favor of the bill—and I will stand by him for one—he had better keep it before the Senate, give notice that he will let it out on Wednesday next, and let the discussion go on from this time until Wednesday next; for after that day, I give notice that I shall move to postpone this bill, and bring up other measures of more importance to my State, although I will vote for this proposition at any time between now and then.

Mr. RICE. I merely wish to state to the Senate that I concur in what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Wade] has said in regard to this proposition, and that I will stand by him to recommit the bill with instructions to report it back on Tuesday next, and then stand by it until it is disposed of in preference to everything else.

Mr. PUGH. I dislike to make an objection when Senators seem to concur in a course of action; but if the bill is reported back on Tuesday next with no more guarantees than we receive, and we have a proposition to adjourn the Senate over from Wednesday evening, we come right upon three conventions of three political parties, when there will not be a quorum of the Senate here for a month; and my opinion is that the bill will be lost just as sure as that suggestion is adopted. It is the death of the bill.

Mr. RICE. Then I say to the Senator, let the friends of the bill stay here, and carry out this great measure, instead of attending to political matters.

Mr. PUGH. If all the rest are away, and there is no quorum of the Senate, there is nothing gained by its adjourn. As we can have, as has been done upon similar occasions, a general agreement in the Senate to take a vote on a particular day, then the friends of the bill have nothing to do but stand by it now. That is the reason I wanted the Senate to adjourn; so that to-morrow we could move to lay aside every other bill, and take this up. If we can have an agreement of that sort, I want all these bills to go to the Committee on Public Lands; but what is the use of recommending them, when they come back on Tuesday, and all the various amendments are moved again, and we simply have laid it over four days for nothing. I know that is not the object of the Senator from Arkansas; but I am constrained, as one of the friends of the bill, to say that it will end in defeat. Let us come to some conclusion. If we cannot get a general understanding, let us take the vote on Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday, at furthest, then I am for putting everything else aside until we can get a vote.

Mr. GWIN. What is the question? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to recommit the Senate and House bills, and all the amendments, to the Committee on Public Lands, with instructions to report on Tuesday next.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question rears on the motion to recommit.

Mr. PUGH. I move to postpone the bill until half past twelve o'clock to-morrow, and make it the special order for that hour, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The question of reference has precedence, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule that the first question is on recommitting the bills.

Mr. BROWN. Let us have the question on that first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is in doubt as to which motion is entitled to precedence. The Chair will state to the Senator from Ohio that the Chair was mistaken as to the rules. The question first in order is the motion to postpone to a day certain.

Mr. PUGH. Then I make the motion to postpone this bill until half past twelve o'clock to-morrow, if it is agreed to, and the special order for that hour; and upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN. A motion to postpone to later day, I believe, would be in order. I move to postpone until Tuesday next, at one o'clock, and make it the special order. My object is to get to-morrow for the business of the District of Columbia. I understand that the first question will be on postponing.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I vote that down.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Well, sir, I will not make the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Pugh.]

with the condition pointed out in that bill. If it is intended, it is inadvisable to take away from the other right of the people of Kansas to what I have referred. I understand no man to deny the soundness of the proposition I lay down: that no Congress ever had the power to take away that right. I might appeal to precedent; I might refer to the provisions of the Constitution which authorizes this course. I might refer to the action of the Government in similar cases, to show that the people of Kansas had not only the authority of the Constitution but precedent for the course which they have pursued.

But they do not come here in violation of law; but they have done that which they had the right to do. I was not a little surprised, in reading the minority report from the Committee on Territories with reference to this matter, to find that the people of Kansas were charged over and over again with being a lawless people; with being a contumacious people, and with being violators of law; but, sir, I was still more surprised when I heard my colleague on that committee, [Mr. CLARK, of Missouri], yesterday, if I did not misunderstand him, to say that the people of Kansas were in violation of law. [Mr. PARROT,] say, that he applied that language to the people of Kansas in consequence of their disobedience or refusal to obey the territorial laws. I think I did not misunderstand him in his answer to the Delegate from Kansas. I now tell him, and every man of the House, that if reference is had to that minority report, it will be found that the context shows that the gentleman from Missouri referred in every instance to what he considered the disobedience of the people of Kansas to the provisions of the English bill. I thought, when I read these accusations against one hundred thousand people, that they had been made without due consideration; and when I heard the reply of the gentleman from Missouri to the Delegate from Kansas, I knew that they had been made without due consideration.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The gentleman from Massachusetts does me injustice. I do not think he is warranted in using the language he does from anything I have said. I stated yesterday that the people of Kansas had been for years—some of them before the passage of the English bill—disobedient, and acting in a spirit of lawlessness, so far as the territorial laws are concerned. An examination of my report will show that such is my statement there. I also stated yesterday—and the gentleman from Massachusetts says so—that the people of Kansas were in violation of law because they had disobeyed and contemned the English bill. I stated that in my remarks; I stated it in my report; and my reply to the Delegate from Kansas does not at all warrant what the gentleman from Massachusetts says to-day.

Permit me to make another remark. While I spoke of the lawlessness of the people of Kansas, I wish to be understood that I do not include all of the people of Kansas. I mean that there has been a party in Kansas; and whether it be the free-soil party, or the pro-slavery party, I do not know, nowhere yet said. But there has been a disposition in Kansas, since its first settlement, to disregard my law passed, either in the English bill or by the Territorial Legislature, for their government. They contemned that law, and they did so for themselves. Whether the free-soil party of the pro-slavery party are to blame for that, I have not said, and I shall not go into that question unless I am driven into it in self-defense; and if I am so driven into it, I shall avail myself of such a course of remarks as this present.

Mr. GOOCH. I thought I was not mistaken in regard to the reply which my colleague upon the committee made to the Delegate from Kansas. I know I am not mistaken. And when I refer to his report, I find that he charges the people of Kansas, on one point, with being in contempt, with being a "lawless class," "tumultuous and violent people," "disorderly population," "contemners of the Government," "contumacious in their disregard of the plainest provisions of the very law which prescribes the time and the mode of qualification to become an independent State," "stubborn and persistent violators of the laws," and "nudeous community." &c.

I say, when I refer to these accusations which the gentleman has made against the people of Kansas, I know I am not mistaken in saying that he uses that language in relation to their conduct in reference to the English bill, and not in reference to anything which might have transpired in that Territory before. Now, sir, before I had alluded to this matter, I had considered whether or not the people of Kansas could be regarded as having violated any principle of law, or done any act which they had not the right to do, which they were not authorized and warranted to do, and which they had not precedent for doing.

I now come to another branch of the proposition. Does the English bill impose any restraint or limitation upon our power to admit Kansas into the Union under this constitution? I apprehend that the gentleman who has introduced this legislation is entitled to any peculiar regard and respect over and above what it is entitled to by virtue of its own force and vitality as law. Now, sir, has one Congress the power to impose any limitation or restriction upon another Congress in regard to the admission of a State into the Union? Is there any man in this House who will assert the affirmative of that proposition? Clearly not. The admission of new States into the Union is a matter of discretion for each Congress, and each Congress is at liberty to do as it may think proper, of facts which comes before it, and not according to a state of facts which was before another Congress; according to its own opinion of what is just and right in the matter, and not in accordance with the opinion of any of its predecessors.

Thus we reach the conclusion that it is, and inevitably, that nothing which the last Congress did could impose any restriction or limitation upon the rights or powers of this Congress to admit Kansas. And I go further, and say that the rights of this Congress in regard to this matter can impose no restraint or obligation upon any man who was a member of that Congress, and is now a member of this. It is just as much his duty to take up this question and consider it upon its merits as it is now presented to him, as it was to the gentleman who had not been in the House all. He must decide the question according to the merits of the case when it comes before him. And I posit further, and say, even if I had voted for the English bill—though I should consider it the most unfortunate act of my life—I should not regret that I had so voted, because I should not consider the admission of Kansas under the Wyandotte constitution, and for the reasons I have suggested.

Now I come to another objection; it is, that Kansas has not a sufficient population to admit her to the Union. In this objection, I apprehend that both sides of the House are precluded so far as it is possible for men to be precluded by their acts, from pretending that Kansas ought not to be admitted into the Union for want of population. One side of the House voted four years ago that she had population enough; and the other side voted two years ago that she had population enough. I consider these votes of but little moment; and I do not propose to rely upon them; but I do assert that it appears from the best evidence in the case, that Kansas to-day has more population than is required for a Representative upon this floor.

It appears that she has more than seventeen thousand legal voters; and in my judgment, seventeen thousand men who have actually voted in an election in this State, and who are entitled to vote more than ninety-three thousand population for while there may be a greater proportion of men entitled to vote in a population situated like the people of Kansas, still I apprehend it is hardly true that a greater proportion of the people do vote in this State in older States. Then we have the statements of the Delegate from Kansas, which went far to satisfy my mind that there could be no question as to the sufficiency of population.

But still further, I say no party has ever had down and adhered to the rule that there should be a population of so many thousands, or that a hundred and twenty before a State could be admitted into the Union. We decide each case upon its merits when it is presented. And while we say that that number should be required, as a general rule, every man departs from it when he finds the population so great. It is by no means a rule not to be departed from, and it is often disregarded. A Territory asks for admission into the Union. She has perhaps ninety thousand, or eighty-five thousand, or eighty thousand inhabitants. The territorial limits of the State are sufficient; the State is rapidly increasing in population; is in a position to become, unquestionably, one of the leading States of the Union; has every element necessary to enable them to organize an efficient State government. Now why, sir, when such facts are presented to us, should we say to them: "Go home this time, and wait until the next year, or until you have ninety-three thousand inhabitants."

But this does not seem to be the objection principally relied upon. Another and a new objection is now, for the first time, sprung upon us. It is presented in the report of the minority of the committee, and has been taken up by the gentleman who has just taken his seat. And every man of the House is entitled to ask, what is this objection? It is, that we violate certain treaties which we have heretofore made with the Indians. I wonder how my colleague upon the Committee on Territories, who was also upon the Committee on Territories in the last Congress, discharged his duty with reference to this matter during the last Congress, voting week after week and month after month, for the admission of Kansas, without learning that he was voting to infringe upon the rights of these Indians, and to violate the treaty?

I do not understand how he got along in the discharge of his duties throughout the long and arduous struggle that we had with reference to that question without having had his attention called to this objection, which he now urges with so much force. He does not understand it, when the bill which provided for the admission of Kansas into the Union with the Leecompton constitution contained the same provisions in regard to these Indians that are contained in the bill now before us. That bill also notified the gentleman from Tennessee—who has just taken his seat, [Mr. MAYNARD,] and who had lived in the vicinity of this very tribe of Indians, and was peculiarly interested in their success and welfare; and yet he fought, as he says, with all his might, during almost the whole of the first session of this Congress, in favor of the bill providing for the admission of Kansas, all the while notified by the provision in the bill that these Indians might be affected by it, without giving any heed to the matter.

Well, now, I do not rely on these things. I do not urge them, but I have a reason why I should violate any right that the Indians may have. But I do urge them as showing that there is nothing in the objection now presented, and that is the reason it never occurred to anybody before. I urge them, not as a reason why this Congress should violate any right that the Indians may have. But I do urge them as showing that there is nothing in the objection now presented, and that is the reason it never occurred to anybody before.

I urge them, not as a reason why this Congress should violate any right that the Indians may have. But I do urge them as showing that there is nothing in the objection now presented, and that is the reason it never occurred to anybody before.

Let us look back a little. My colleague on the committee [Mr. CLARK, of Missouri] finds that under the Kansas-Nebraska bill the rights of the Indians were protected; and he refers to that with especial satisfaction, as securing all the rights to which the Indians were entitled. He says: "Take the following signal instance of respect for the rights guaranteed by treaty. The act of Congress organizing the Territory of Kansas, and the act of Congress providing for the admission of Kansas into the Union, both contain the following provision: 'Nothing in this act shall be construed to impair the rights of any person claiming title under any Indian title to land within the Territory, so long as such rights shall remain unquestioned by treaty between the United States and such Indians.' The act of Congress, in the treaty with any Indian tribe, is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory, but such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries, and continue no part of the Territory of Kansas."

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The argument made in my report was, that the constitution of the proposed State of Kansas ought to have contained the same reservations as the Kansas-Nebraska bill did, in fixing the boundaries of the State.

Mr. GOOCH. Now, if I can satisfy my colleague on the committee, and if I can show that the position of these Indians is precisely the same as it would have been if the exception had been made in the Wyandotte constitution, I shall expect him to vote for the admission of Kansas under this constitution.

Mr. NOELL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GOOCH. Unless the question pertains to something that I must refer to, in answering my colleague on the committee, I prefer to answer him first.

Mr. NOELL. It is on that point.

Mr. GOOCH. Very well.

Mr. NOELL. I wish to know if the gentleman from Massachusetts assumes the ground that the Congress of the United States has the power to modify or change a State constitution by an express provision of law, without submitting that question to the people?

Mr. GOOCH. I tell the gentleman at once, that I do not claim that Congress has the power to change the constitution of a State.

Mr. NOELL. Then what authority does the gentleman find for the proviso in the bill?

Mr. GOOCH. If the gentleman will listen to me, I will agree to answer him. Now, sir, what I was about saying to my colleague on the committee, was this: he quoted the provision in the Kansas-Nebraska act as satisfactory. I think I can demonstrate to him and to the House, that the position of the Indians, after the adoption of the Wyandotte constitution, and after the admission of Kansas into the Union as a State under it, will be the same as it was under the provisions of the Kansas-Nebraska bill. The boundaries, except the western, are the same under the Kansas-Nebraska bill and under the Wyandotte constitution. The only thing that the gentleman from Missouri relies on for the protection of the Indians is the exception contained in the Kansas-Nebraska bill.

Now, what I say in regard to this matter is, in the first place, that the provision in the Kansas-Nebraska act was a matter of precaution. It was wholly unnecessary. What I say with regard to the provision in the original Leecompton bill is, that it was a matter of precaution; it was well enough to insert it as showing that this Government intends, under all circumstances and on all proper occasions, to recognize the binding validity and force of these treaties with the Indians. But it was not necessary; the treaty would have been just as valid without this proviso, and just as binding upon the State of Kansas. The Indians would have been bound by the treaty, and the jurisdiction of the people of the United States, or of the people of Kansas. I say this because I find authority for it in the Constitution of the United States, which declares that "the Constitution and the laws of the United States" which shall be made in pursuance thereof shall extend to all territory made or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." That treaty is the supreme law of the land.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether he thinks that the bill now before us, proposing limits for the State of Kansas which include the lands of the Indians, is or is not a constitutional measure?

Mr. GOOCH. If the gentleman will call my attention to that point before I get through, I will answer him.

I was saying that I find the authority for my position in the Constitution of the United States. A law of Congress is the supreme law of the land, if made in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States; a treaty is the supreme law of the land without limit or qualification. And, sir, it has been decided by some of our ablest jurists, that if a principle of the Constitution comes in conflict with the provisions of a treaty, the Constitution must yield; and the reason given for it is, that it may be necessary that the Government should have the power to sacrifice individual rights or the rights of whole sections of our country even, for the protection of the remainder. But I do not care to discuss that question, or to express any opinion upon it. I only refer to it as showing the estimation in which treaties are held by the courts.

Mr. MILLSON. What judge has so decided?

Mr. GOOCH. I think it was so decided by Judge Shepley, of Maine, one of the ablest jurists in New England, and I think the decision grew out of the Ashcroft treaty. I had to go to the law library this morning to find the authority, but the volume was not at that moment in the library.

But, as I said before, I do not express any opinion upon the soundness of the decision; but I would suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that the Constitution itself is a treaty.

"All treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land."

Mr. MILLSON. Certainly—under the authority of the United States.

Mr. GOOCH. Understand the "authority of the United States" here referred to be that treaty-making power, which is defined in the Constitution. I apprehend that a treaty is made under the authority of the United States when it is made by those powers authorized by the Constitution of the United States to make a treaty.

Now, sir, what I say with reference to the position of these Indians is, that it is not in the power of Congress, and that it is not in the power of the State of Kansas to interfere with their rights under this treaty. Congress itself cannot repeal a treaty. It may violate a treaty, but to abrogate it requires the assent of both parties. The Indians protect by virtue of their treaty, and we can rely upon it, and upon it alone, as their protection; and although these provisions which are introduced into this bill may serve as a recognition of their rights by this Government, still they are not essential to the maintenance of their rights.

Now, sir, it seems to me that my colleague on the committee, [Mr. CLARK, of Missouri,] answered himself when he quoted this clause from the Constitution of the United States:

"All treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

Now, sir, it does not matter what is in the constitution of Kansas; it does not matter what is the law of Congress; the judges of Kansas are bound by this treaty as being the supreme law of the land, over and above either the provisions of their constitution or any of their enactments. It will, well, sir, if I am so, I cannot understand why it is that gentlemen contend that the rights of these Indians under the treaty are to be stricken down or sacrificed, because they are not recognized by the Wyandotte constitution. Their rights are secured to them by a law above the constitution of any State, and the law above the Wyandotte constitution knew the rights of these Indians under the treaties, and knew that the State of Kansas will have no jurisdiction over their territory. The bill now before this House, providing for the admission of Kansas, excepts this territory from the limits and jurisdiction of the State of Kansas, and protects all the rights of the Indians; and so long as this treaty is not abrogated, the Indian territory is no more a part of Kansas than it is a part of Massachusetts. Should the rights of the Indians to this territory be yielded up at any future time, then, and not till then, will this territory be within the State of Kansas.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman, I think, misapprehends the position that I assumed. I would like, by his permission, to state it. It is this: the Cherokee Indians, by the treaty of 1819, were secured in their territory within the limits of the States of Georgia and Tennessee, so far as treaty stipulations could secure the rights of Indian tribes within the States; but, as a matter of fact, it was ascertained that no treaty stipulations could protect the rights of the Indians from encroachments of the whites when they were within the limits of a State, and hence a provision was incorporated in the treaty of 1835 that these lands never should be embraced within the lines of any State or Territory. That is the point I make. It is not the alleged question, but the question of the matter of fact; that when you bring the Indian within the limits of a State, the white men, by their superiority, will crush him out, and drive him away.

Mr. GOOCH. If the gentleman understands that this Government ever adopted the principle that the Indians shall have positions where nobody shall touch them, where white men shall have no territory that comes in contact with them, I do not so understand the action of the Government.

I do not so understand the action of the Government. I have shown what my position is under the territorial organization. I have shown that they will be in precisely the same position after the admission of Kansas as a State; that their rights will not be infringed or affected in the slightest degree; but that they will be just as secure in their rights with Kansas admitted into the Union as a State as they are with Kansas as a Territory. I take it that the true meaning of the treaty is, that these people shall be left free from the jurisdiction of any State. That is what they ask and desire, and that is precisely what we propose to give them.

Now, sir, one other objection is made. I refer to the objection urged by the gentleman from Tennessee who last spoke, [Mr. MAYNARD.] It was, that this constitution allowed or permitted men to exercise the electoral franchise who are not citizens of the United States; or, in other words, who had not been duly naturalized, but had only made a declaration of intention to become citizens, and had resided six months in the State. How far Congress has the power to determine who shall exercise the elective franchise in the States is a question which, perhaps, may some day be discussed in this House; but I do not now express any opinion in relation to it. My answer to the objection, as urged against the Wyandotte constitution, is, that Congress has not seen fit thus far to exercise power in relation to that subject; and it would be unjust to Kansas to apply a rule to her which has not been applied to any other State of this Confederacy in the history of the Government.

In conclusion, I will say that I trust that this Congress will, without stirring up any of that bitter and strife which have existed in former Congresses, and heretofore amongst the people of the country, in regard to the condition of Kansas, admit her into the Union. I think that we shall then have done one act for which the people of the country will be grateful.

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. JAMES BECHANAK, his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he did, on this day, approve and sign bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of Micajah Hawkes;

An act (H. R. No. 243) for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Portierfeld, deceased;

An act (C. C. No. 12) for the relief of Moses Noble;

An act (C. C. No. 82) for the relief of Charner T. Seale, administrator of Gilbert Stalker;

An act (C. C. No. 93) for the relief of Lydia Frazee, widow and administratrix of John Frazee, late of the city of New York;

An act (C. C. No. 96) for the relief of William Geiger; and

An act (C. C. No. 92) for the relief of Mariano G. Valdez.

Also a message in writing.

ADMISSION OF KANSAS—AGAIN.

Mr. QUARLES addressed the House in opposition to the bill. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. NIELACK. Mr. Speaker, before I am called upon to vote on the pending proposition to admit Kansas into the Union as a State, upon the Wyandotte constitution, I desire to say a few words. Were it not, sir, that my relations to this subject are of a personal nature, I should not now ask the attention of the House. When an application was made, two years since, for the admission of this Territory on the Leecompton constitution, it will be remembered that I was one of a very small minority of members, from my section of the country, who opposed its friendly to admission upon that constitution. There were but five of us, I believe, from the northwestern States who thus voted. Of that number I am the only one returned to the present Congress. One of the others was not a candidate for reelection. The rest were borne down in the contest which followed at the succeeding elections. But, by the generous confidence of a loyal and ever-faithful district, I am here again. I am here, too, without any specific pledges as to what my course should be when Kansas should be applied for admission as a State. Hence the peculiarity of my position. As a practical question, sir, when it was before us, I regarded admission upon the Leecompton constitution as the shortest and most direct method of settling the controversy; and I am glad to see it adopted. Had I then attended that proposition, it would not, in its ultimate results, have been at least as satisfactory to the country as any other act for her admission ever will be. But a majority of the House, as it was then constituted, thought otherwise, and some other plan was adopted.

When, therefore, sir, what is known as the

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, APRIL 13, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 105.

English bill was brought forward as a substitute for the original proposition, and also for the Montgomery-Crittenden amendment, I very cheerfully voted in its favor. It is not, however, as it is claimed to be, binding on me personally, and, by construction, upon those I represent for all time to come. But, as an act of ordinary legislation, I approved, and still approve, the principle foreshadowed in that bill, that to entitle a Territory to admission as a State it ought to contain at least a sufficient population to allow it one Representative in Congress upon the then existing ratio. This is but simple justice to the older States. My opinion now is, that in the future organization of Territories a provision of this sort ought to be inserted in their organic acts, that the people of those Territories may be notified in advance that Congress intends to enforce this rule. Such a course will tend to discourage, if not to entirely cut off, premature applications for admission as States by the Territories thus organized. In past times these premature applications from the Territories have been a fruitful source of embarrassment to Congress and of excitement and trouble to the country. With the light of experience before us, I now regard it as unfortunate that this principle was not retained in the act organizing the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska. In my judgment much of the annoyance at least which Kansas has given us would thereby have been prevented. Nothing had then occurred, however, to attract the attention of Congress to the future importance of such a provision, and hence it is not strange that the omission was made.

I also preferred, sir, the form of submission provided for in the English bill to the one proposed by the Montgomery-Crittenden amendment, because it seemed to me to involve less directly the conflicting views of members on that point, and because, in my judgment, it accorded more fully with the true principles of non-interference by Congress in the local affairs of the Territories. While I thus voted for the English bill, and the approval of its less formal form, I have never considered myself pledged, either expressly or implicitly, against the modification of any of its provisions when again called to legislate upon the same subject, if some policy should require its amendment. In this matter, I have ever regarded it as the soundest policy with any other act of independent legislation. If it be claimed that it was a compromise, in a sectional sense, between the North and the South, I answer that it was certainly not so claimed at the time of its passage. In that sense, at least, I was not one of the "high contracting parties." My position then was, as it now is, one of independent neutrality in all mere sectional controversies. In this respect, I have never had, and have not now, any sympathy with the extreme views and purposes of either section. I cannot surely, then, be expected that the leaders of policy merely I would voluntarily consent to trammel my independent action as the Representative of a national and Union-loving constituency in all time to come to gratify any mere sectional prejudice. To ask of me this, it would be asking more than I am authorized to yield.

I do not abide, sir, to this Kansas controversy of the last Congress for the purpose of reviving a discussion of its merits—the country had enough of that at the time—I do so only to explain my position concerning it, that there should be no misunderstanding by which I am now governed may be more readily understood and appreciated.

We want the Kansas controversy out of Federal politics. It is practically a dead issue, and the last vestige of it ought to be removed. Other questions of more magnitude are now pressing down upon us. With the Democratic party it has long enough been a source of trouble, division, and embarrassment. Since the raid of John Brown and the disclosures which have followed it, I presume the Republicans will not often care about recurring to the old theme of "freeing Kansas." No party or action, in my judgment, can profit by longer keeping this question before the country. It is a time, sir, above all others, in my judgment, when true and national men everywhere should rid themselves of all side issues and differences upon minor questions, and range themselves on the side of the Constitution and the country, in opposition to every species of fanaticism. The signs of the times surely indicate this to any disprejudiced mind. If the public peace shall be preserved the prevailing tendencies to sectionalism must be crushed out. To accomplish this result, a thorough revision of the Democratic party is a necessity which cannot longer be postponed. In aid of it the cooperation of conservative men of all parties is earnestly invoked.

With the announcement of the doctrine of the "irrepressible conflict," a year and a half ago, a new era in the politics of this Government was inaugurated, and a new and momentous issue was tendered to the country. An issue rising infinitely above all former mere party contests. An issue reaching down to the very foundations of our Government, and involving the fundamental principles of society itself. An issue which, when interpreted as John Brown and his followers seem to have understood and interpreted it, would deluge this land in blood.

It seems to me now, as it did when the question of the admission of the last Congress, that the prompt admission of Kansas as a State is in every point of view desirable. To bring about this result, I feel called upon to waive all mere formal and technical objections against her present application. I myself frankly concede that such an enumeration of the inhabitants of the Territory as is contemplated by the English bill has not been taken. For this omission, however, I regard Congress itself as being at least in part responsible. No appropriation was made for this purpose at the last session of Congress, and no provision of appropriation to meet it, such an enumeration surely ought not to be rigorously insisted upon, when to dispense with it can do no substantial injury.

From other sources of information, in the absence of an enumeration, I am satisfied that Kansas has a sufficient population to entitle her to admission under that bill. Her constitution seems to have been formed in accordance with a law of the Territory, and to have been ratified and accepted by her people. For our sirs, I waive all the rest. So be it, I feel that I am not violating any fundamental principle, and that I am but reflecting the wishes of an overwhelming majority of the people of the district from which I come. Much depends, doubtless, as to the stand-point from which we view this question; each member's antecedent relations to the whole Kansas controversy will and perhaps ought to have much to do in determining his present course upon it. Other gentlemen, with whom it usually affords me much pleasure to agree, have indicated their intention to pursue a different course from the one I feel called upon to follow. So be it. My line of duty is none the less obvious to me. I favored the admission of this Territory on a former occasion, when its population was less than it is at present, and I cannot and will not vote to exclude it now for the alleged want of a sufficient population in the form in which the objection now meets us.

My policy in relation to the admission of new States has uniformly been a liberal one. Since I have been a member of this House I have voted to admit all that have applied for admission. I have uniformly opposed the application of rigid tests which would tend to their exclusion. As a general rule, according to my theory, but three points ought to be considered as imperative for the consideration of Congress on the application of a new State: 1st. Has its constitution been formed in accordance with some law of the Territorial Legislature, or with an act of Congress authorizing a State organization? 2d. Is its constitution republican in form? 3d. Has the new State a sufficient population to assume the responsibilities of self-government? If these questions must determine by some fixed rule of law, or by the exercise of its discretion, from time to time, as the emergencies arise? Other questions of real importance do sometimes arise, but they are exceptions to the general rules I have here given. Tested by a fair application of this theory, I believe that Kansas has all the essential requisites for admission. Two years ago, when a serious and furious objection was urged to the contrary, I said let her come. Since then I have voted for the admission of Minnesota and Oregon, ever earnest and bitter opposer. Perceive and re-remember as Kansas has been in the past, Republican and laterer in politics as she now is, I cannot vote to send her away now, unless for stronger reasons than I have yet heard urged.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. HICKEY, its Chief Clerk, informing the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (No. 82) to amend the fourth section of the act for the relief of certain settlers in the Union, so as to extend the time for locating salt springs and contiguous lands in Oregon; and

An act (No. 188) for the relief of the surviving grandchildren of Colonel William Thompson, of the revolutionary army of South Carolina.

Also, that the Senate had passed a resolution directing its Secretary to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 371) for the relief of certain settlers in the State of Iowa.

Also, that the Senate had ordered to be printed the resolves of the Legislature of Maine, in relation to a uniform decimal system of weights, measures, and currencies.

ADMISSION OF KANSAS—AGAIN.

Mr. COX, Mr. Speaker, this question has lost a great deal of the interest which it used to excite in this Hall. I do not intend now to take up an hour, or perhaps more than fifteen minutes, in discussing it.

I am for the present bill. As a friend to the people of Kansas, I repeat with an extraordinary speech of the Kansas Delegate, delivered yesterday. It may not have been intended, but it had the tendency to jeopardize the admission of Kansas. Whichever of complaint that speech is entitled to for its brilliant rhetoric and graceful eloquence, it is obnoxious to the charge of unfairness. It was full of partisan rancor, unfeeling the occasion. It had a splenetic and scolding tone, showing more temper than wisdom. I do not know precisely the province of a Delegate from a Territory. It may be in the line of his duty, if it does not comport with good taste, for him to lecture the members of the House within whose circle he sits more by courtesy than by right.

Mr. PARROTTE. I claim to hold my seat upon this floor by just as high a title as the gentleman from Ohio holds his, and to have just as much right to have my opinion upon any question pending in this House. I ask him to specify the exceptional language in my speech.

Mr. COX. I will come to that directly. I think that, in his sweeping statements, he did not do justice to the men who undertook here, time after time, to remove the Lecompton constitution from the Halls of Congress back to the people of the Territory, for an expression of their opinion upon that instrument.

I complain of that speech, because it does injustice to those who supported every act of legislation here offered, whereby the people of Kansas could obtain an expression upon Lecompton. The Delegate says that the English bill was intended to keep the people of Kansas out of the Union. He makes no exception to this sweeping libel. There were some who supported that bill, who, at the time of its passage, expressed themselves as to their belief of its effect. The object of that bill was expressed in it. No man was silent, without, for his meaning. If you do go outside, then go to the expressed intent of all who voted for it. Besides, this intention is to be found in its that there are one hundred and fifty-two districts in the United States which have a less voting population than the voting population of Kansas. Here is what he says:

"Of the two hundred and thirty-seven congressional districts in the Union, there were, by the official returns of the last Congressional election, one hundred and fifty-two districts that polled less than seventeen thousand votes. So the legal vote of Kansas on the first Tuesday of April, D. 1856, exceeded that of any one of almost two thirds of the congressional districts in the Union."

There is, as I understand, (and if I am wrong the Delegate from Kansas will correct me,) a registry of the voters of Kansas, which required six months' residence. Upon this basis there are twenty-seven thousand names! I believe that I am right in this. The number as stated by the Delegate is over twenty thousand. Therefore, I have no difficulty in voting upon this bill, so far as the subject of population is concerned.

Mr. PARROTT. There is no record, so far as I know, of the aggregate number of voters registered in Kansas. I think, sir, however, that it is over twenty thousand.

Mr. COX. I understood the gentleman from Kansas to say that there are over twenty thousand voters there. His friend, ex-Governor Stanton, told me, when I was conversing with him yesterday, that the number was near twenty-seven thousand. That is greatly more than the voting population of the districts in the United States. This number includes clearly at least one hundred thousand people.

Mr. Speaker, I will not undertake to vindicate my vote for the conference bill. At the time it was passed, there was a good deal of talk about the "bribe and threat," but I think, sir, is now obsolete. Throughout the country it was charged upon the Democrats from the North who voted for it, that they had dishonored themselves and insulted Kansas by this conference arrangement. There was no foundation for the charge. The people of Kansas did not utter condemnation. They gave a free, unbiased vote to reject the Leecompton constitution. That vote was my answer to the charge.

It is no reason for me, sir, to vote against this bill, that Kansas is a Republican State. I will not follow the lead of the Republican members of the House in the case of Minnesota and Oregon. I will not vote against free States because their policies may be disagreeable. But, sir, I believe that Kansas would be recorded to-day as a Democratic State if outside influences had not been at work last summer for the defeat of the Democracy. Governor Medary was beaten for Governor by only nineteen hundred and ninety-one votes. I charge that, by the operation of the registry law, there were at least two thousand voters, mostly Democrats, who were prevented from voting. These were men who had been in Kansas three years and more.

Mr. PARROTT. Whom does the gentleman give as his authority?

Mr. COX. I obtained the information from the Governor of the Territory.

Mr. PARROTT. What Governor?

Mr. COX. Governor Medary, sir.

Mr. PARROTT. I deny it.

Mr. COX. The gentleman's denial can go upon any record. These men who had been there three years, and who before had voted the Republican ticket. They wanted to change their votes, and to vote the Democratic ticket. They were kept out by the Republican registers throughout the Territory. At places, some men were registered twice, over the county lines. Again, whole townships were thrown out where the votes were cast for Governor Medary. I charge, too, that money was sent by this immitate Republican party to Kansas, to overthrow the Democratic party. The Republican Governor of New York, Governor Seymour, has been raising this Kansas fund. Money was raised East for the purpose of controlling the election in that Territory. I submit it to the honest gentlemen who are inquiring after money used in elections, that they had better look into this matter, and see what was the result of the Democracy in Kansas was not obtained by the venality and corruption of men outside, whose money was sent in for the purpose of breaking down what would have been the popular voice in Kansas. I do not speak this simply upon the authority of Governor Medary. This matter came out in Kansas; and this is the way it came out: the parties concerned quarreled over the fund.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I want to understand a remark made by the gentleman from Ohio. He has stated, as I understand him, that many names were kept off the registry, and that many voters were who had no right to be put there.

Mr. COX. I mean that some were registered twice over county lines, changing their names very little, and some not changing their names at all.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. If there were names upon the registry, how then can the gentleman make that registry a guide to decide the population of Kansas?

Mr. COX. I do not regard it as a perfect guide. It enables us to approximate towards the population. I do not suppose that the whole registry is corrupt. We know that there is in a Territory like Kansas, where the people are so scattered and sparse, the whole voting population can never be all brought out. This registry, however, is fair data for which to infer, with probable certainty, the fact of population. To this the gentleman has his answer, does he not?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I can tell you how this matter about the Kansas money fund came out. I want the immitate gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Covode) to look after it in his investigation. It was charged that Covode and Lane got $1,000 out of the fund to make delegates for themselves and against Robinson. The fund was only designed for the elections, not for the nominations. It was used to heat a better Republican by worse Republicans; and what remained was used against the honest friends of the Constitutional Democrats who fought the good fight last summer.

When reproached with these frauds, the Republicans replied: "We were cheated at first, and are only paying you up!" But they did not see the force and the passion of the charge of fraud, the cunning of the speculator, the zealotry of the fanatic, and the corrupt venality of New York and New England politicians.

I believe that if Kansas had fair play, she would, as all the free States have done, stand up and throw off the unconstitutional rule of this repugnant Republican politics, and take the policy which has made the northwestern States so great and so powerful in so short a time!

Mr. DUNN. But they are all Republican States now.

Several Republican MEMBERS. We have them all.

Mr. COX. Not all quite. I trust that those which you now have will soon return to that Democratic policy which has made them what they are. Unless they do so return, their greatness and prosperity in the future will not keep pace with their past progress.

But whatever may be the politics of Kansas—however objectionable may be her boundaries—she had a fair election on the 4th April, 1856, for Governor and constitution. On the 4th of June for the delegates; on the 4th of October, out of fifteen thousand nine hundred and fifty-one reported votes, ten thousand four hundred and twenty-one were for the constitution as made; and there was not a voice about the exact number of men under all the disadvantages to which I have referred; while sixteen counties sent no returns on the constitution. But there were people enough who voted to show a substantial compliance with the rule for the ratio of a member of Congress. I do not see any vice about the exact number of ninety-three thousand four hundred and twenty. As Mr. SEWARD argued in the Oregon case, a substantial compliance with the rule as to population, will answer the requirement.

I do not vote for this admission to get rid of this question—this high question. It is right. Right, because all parties hitherto have encouraged by votes the admission. No one has questioned the population for admission as to this State. Right, because the State is ripe for statehood. Its interests are neglected cruelly by the Federal Congress. Since has been her history, that she will ever remain under a cloud while in her territorial condition. I vote for her admission, because I pledged myself so to do, by my vote under the English-Montgomery bill; because I voted to allow her another chance, if Leecompton was rejected under the English bill. She has taken that opportunity. I have a happy and jubilant satisfaction in giving this vote. History has thoroughly justified my action. I challenge any one to show, a word in my remarks on the English bill, which is not to-day fulfilled. By it, Leecompton was de-throned. The people acted the almost escaped scepter of which they had no right to be put there, in a constitution at Wyandotte. Under it I have the opportunity, as a member of a new Congress, after being justified by my people, to vote for that undoubted and unambiguous expression of the popular will of Kansas.

"Our vote for the English bill—even after I was justified by the popular vote of Kansas in the summer of 1855—was compelled to meet from Republicans at home a campaign unexampled for its unprovoked ferocity, its base and baseless charges of personal corruption, its conceit, its ignorance, its impudence, its poltroonery, its lying, its brutality, its moneyed corruption, its financial folly, its unforgiving slang, its drunken astuteness, and its unblinking blab and pious hypocrisy! At the capital of Ohio, in its most noble and intelligent precincts, the people, ashamed of an indignation at the assault upon their rights, were clamored from the Republican presses of the State—from the United States Senator, who, judging by his treatment of me at the capital of his State, disgraces the other end of the Capitol—and from the little many-a-lime and peleggers, who clothed the libels of Republican members from this floor—into spite of all this the people justified my majority of 1856! I had the satisfaction—prouder than a temporary victory—of seeing the policy I had voted for with earnest and honest conviction sustained, and with the sustaining advice of such a statesman as Robert J. Walker, vindicated by time, and sustained by its practical operation. As the crowning act of this triumph, I shall vote for the admission of Kansas, under this constitution! In doing this, I court all criticism, defy all menace, and truly re-assure every man, woman, and child in my district."

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Will my friend from Virginia allow me to ask a question? I want to know whether it is the purpose to press this matter to a vote to-day. [Cries of "Certainly it is."]

Mr. GROW. I hope so. There is a special order to-morrow.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. PRYOR. I rise to a question of privilege. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to yield to me.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. PRYOR. I would like the attention of an honorable member of this House from Wisconsin, [Mr. POTTER.] In the Globe of this morning I find the following report of a scene which occurred upon this floor some few days since:

"Mr. POTTER. We listened to gentlemen upon the other side for eight weeks. They have insulted the members upon this side with violent and offensive language. We listened to them quietly, and bore them through."

"Mr. PRYOR. I would like to know what the speakers be they what they say."

"The CHAIRMAN. The point I make is this—"

"and hear an gentleman, still members receive their seats, and order is restored."

"Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order. I insist that the gentleman from Illinois shall speak from his seat."

"Mr. FAY. I will have to be assisted for the gentleman speak from his seat, and say all under the rules he is entitled to say; but, sir, he shall not come upon this side, shaking his fist in to vex at the people he has talked. He shall not come here gesticulating in a menacing and refractory manner."

"Mr. POTTER. You are doing the same thing."

"The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will resume their seats."

"Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Illinois goes on as he has, a gentleman will have to be assisted for the gentleman speak from his seat, and say all under the rules he is entitled to say; but, sir, he shall not come upon this side, shaking his fist in to vex at the people he has talked. He shall not come here gesticulating in a menacing and refractory manner."

"Mr. FAY. No one wants to intimidate the gentleman."

"Mr. LEVIST. Nobody can intimidate me."

"Mr. ABRAHAM. I know that. I suggest to the gentleman that he continue his speech from his seat."

"[Thirty or forty of the members from both sides of the House gathered in to see what Mr. LEVIST and Mr. FAY, it was there increased confusion.]"

"Mr. JOHN C. SPENCER. I move that the Committee rise, as it is the only way we can get rid of this disturbance."

"Mr. POTTER. I do not believe that side of the House was where a member shall speak; and they shall not say it."

"Mr. SHREVE. The gentleman from Illinois shall not make that speech from this side of the House."

Hall were ready to admit as a State into the Union the Territory of Kansas, when clearly it had nothing like an approach to the requisite population. It is well known as a historical fact, in this House and in the country, that there was no power in the friends of the Lecompton constitution of that day to put it through this House. It was superseded by other propositions, and the requisite population, of which we all know by that compromise, effected by a committee of the two Houses, which reported the English bill.

I mention these facts because I desire them to come distinctly forward within the memory of the country and of members, and in order that they may have their due and proper weight.

Well, sir, the Lecompton constitution, so familiar to the country and the subject of so much vituperation, was denounced with much bitterness yesterday by the Delegate from Kansas. The debate has been characterized with a burning courtesy, with this single exception of that Delegate—who, of all others upon this floor, ought not to have forgotten what was due to his position. He, a Delegate from a Territory, characterized in a most offensive manner a measure which a majority of the House, the Representatives of the day, voted for. I think he might as well have spared that animadversion. Members occupying a different relation to the country and the business of the House have not thought it necessary to utter such gratuitous and unbecoming remarks denunciations; and I think it would have been well for him to follow such examples. But he denounced the Lecompton constitution—and I believe he is the only person who did—in the fiercest and bitterest terms. I say here, then, that the denunciation was unjust, and I say here that there is not, in the whole history of the Lecompton constitution, one single fraud.

Sir, I ask—and I call the attention of gentlemen to it—if the act of submitting the question of a constitution to the people was not fairly passed by the Legislature of the Territory?—if the bill itself was not fair and proper? And I ask if the majority of the legal voters who voted upon that question were not in favor of the convention which was subsequently held? I ask if the convention itself was not composed of a measure elected by a majority of the legal voters of Kansas who chose to go to the polls and exercise the right of suffrage? I ask, if the convention, when it met, did not deliberate with open doors, and in the face of the country, frame a constitution? I ask if there was one single attempt to silence or mislead the people in reference to it? And when the labors of that convention were closed, I ask gentlemen if that constitution was not submitted in the terms designated by the convention itself, to the people of Kansas? and whether a majority of the voters who chose to vote at the polls did not give an expression in favor of it? I challenge gentlemen upon the other side, one and all, and especially the territorial representative here, to say if there was one single act of fraud in all those proceedings.

Mr. GOOCH. The gentleman says he challenges any member of the Territorial Committee to point out any act of fraud upon the part of that convention. The convention undertook to submit to the people of Kansas, not the constitution, but the question whether they would have a constitution with slavery, or a "constitution with no slavery." This is the provision, which I will read, and leave it almost without comment:

"But if upon such examination of said poll books it shall appear that a majority of the legal voters at said election be in favor of a 'constitution with no slavery,' then the article providing for slavery shall be stricken out from this constitution by the president of this convention, and slavery shall no longer exist in this Territory, and the right of property in slaves now in this Territory shall in no manner be interfered with."

I ask the gentlemen if he calls that a fair and open submission of the question of slavery to the people of Kansas?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Most assuredly.

Mr. GOOCH. That is all, then.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Certainly it was submitted to a vote of the people of Kansas in conformity to well-ascertained facts, it being abundantly sustained and demonstrated that the convention was not bound to submit anything. They could have adopted the constitution without calling for a vote of the people; and the gentleman from Massachusetts knows that as well as any gentleman upon this floor. They would have been warranted in so doing by numerous precedents which exist in connection with the formation of constitutions in this country.

If, then, the convention could have proclaimed that constitution without submitting any portion of it to the people, I ask if they could not have done so, and what portion of it as they see fit? Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts is ordinarily, as I have always believed, a fair man; and I put the question to him, if it was not perfectly within the power of that convention to proclaim that constitution without calling for a vote of the people? and if they could have done so, it with reference to the entire constitution, could not they have done it in reference to a part?

Mr. GOOCH. If a convention is called with the expectation and understanding upon the part of the people that the instrument which they frame as their constitution is to be submitted to the people for their ratification, then I say the convention has no right to proclaim that constitution without a submission to the people.

Sir, further, I say it is the right and duty of Congress, under all circumstances, when an instrument is presented here, purporting to be the constitution of the people, to ascertain whether or not it be the will of the people. I care not how it is framed, what sanctions, guards, and checks may have been placed around it, if the Congress of the United States is satisfied that the people of the Territory have done it by their duty to reject the application for admission, and not force upon the people a constitution which they do not desire and have not indorsed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman has just stated upon an important point. The question is: were the proceedings which led to the formation of the Lecompton constitution tainted from the beginning to the close with fraud, as has been charged by the Delegate from Kansas? The fact that the gentleman went off upon another subject, the question of solution of the Kansas controversy; for it is conceded by the course of his remarks that there has been no fraud in this whole proceeding, unless it may be in the mode of submitting the question to the people, which I have answered. I say, then, that the proceedings in reference to the formation of the Lecompton constitution were in strict conformity to law, and in the full exercise of what Mr. Webster proclaimed in a celebrated law case, a peculiarity of his country—in strict conformity to American liberty: a liberty regulated by the Constitution, and protected by the laws.

Mr. Speaker, I now proceed. The Lecompton constitution was not adopted. The English bill was. We had gone through a great deal of trouble on this question. We had had a vast amount of excitement and discussion. The whole country had been agitated, and all good citizens wished to have the thing settled. The result was the English compromise bill. I beg leave to call attention to that, because it was designed to adjust this Kansas controversy. It was not perceptible to the people of Kansas, and it was not just this Kansas difficulty, and to prescribe a set of rules by which the question of a future convention was to be regulated. I ask my honorable colleague on the Committee on Territories if he will deny that it is of the highest degree of importance that this House shall, in all important matters, be governed by law? We have a law regulating the mode of contesting elections. We have a law regulating all the machinery of the Government. And was it not right under the circumstances, under the strife that had been engendered and continued—was it not of the highest importance to the peace and harmony and right settlement of the question, that a system of rules as to the future taking of a census and the holding of a convention should be adopted by this Congress of the United States? In the bill to which I have referred, did that Congress lay down rules by which the people of Kansas were to be governed. Now gentlemen say that an act of Congress is not obligatory; that it does not furnish an imperative rule of conduct, but is only a suggestion, that action may be taken inconsistent with it.

But I do not mean to raise any question on this subject. I know very well that we have the power if we choose to disregard all law and to create a law to ourselves. I am aware of all that; but yet, as a law-abiding people; as a people disposed to respect the acts of our representatives, as a people inclined to give stability to the operations of this great country, I ask if we will lightly and without necessity disregard a plain rule, fixed and established, for the very purpose of ending this unhappy controversy?

Why do we pass laws? To disregard them?

Why do we lay down rules in cases of election? To contemn them? No, sir, no; but to inform the country what means they should adopt for the purpose of attaining the ends in view. So, likewise here, in regard to the formation of a future constitution, the rule was laid down, this English bill intended to govern our future action, because our past action had been conflicting in character. Was there anything unreasonable in that? Let me read it to the House:

"And in that event, the people of said Territory—"

"That is, in the event the people should vote not to accept the Lecompton constitution—"

"are hereby authorized and empowered to form for themselves a constitution and State government, with the name of the State of Kansas, according to the Federal Constitution, and shall elect delegates for that purpose whenever, and before, as follows:—"

Mark, sir, "whenever, and not before"!

It is ascertained, by a census duly and legally taken, that the population of said Territory equals or exceeds the ratio of representation required for a member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Now, here is a rule. They shall be entitled to admission whenever they shall duly and legally take a census, and shall establish that they have a population equal to the ratio of representation for a member of this House. Now, I put it to gentlemen if there is anything unreasonable in that requirement? And I ask these gentlemen especially who voted for that bill, if, after that evidence, they can vote for this bill? They, at least, who voted for the English bill are bound, as moral agents, to enforce it. We wanted to get rid of vague demands. We wanted to free ourselves from the speculations of interested members, from whom we had had on similar occasions many curious statements. We therefore prescribed in that solemn and deliberate act, that they should not be admitted until the ratio until, by a census duly and legally taken, should be shown to equal or exceed the ratio of representation required for a member of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States.

Here is a rule distinct, explicit, and beneficial in its operation, and intended to regulate the respect of the Government of the United States, and especially the respect of those who voted for it.

Well, now I ask the question again, why was this rule not observed? There were two reasons for it, one of which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARLAND] advertently wanted to get rid of.

That is, that when they adopted many of the provisions of that bill they shrank that in regard to the census, for the obvious reason, in his judgment, that they knew they had not the population to satisfy the requirements of the law.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to raise the question, there was another reason for it. Every step that has been taken in this unhappy controversy has been in open outrage on established law. When the territorial government fell into the hands of the pro-slavery party, as you call it, the only way to get rid of the evil was to rise in rebellion against it, to repudiate it, to spit upon it; and that was done, avowedly and deliberately. And, sir, when the first Delegate from that Territory (Mr. Whitfield) came here, his election was resisted, in part and to some extent, on the ground that he was elected not under any law, as the territorial law was absolutely null and void.

Go on, step after step, and when you come to the Lecompton constitution itself, what are the facts there? I ask gentlemen why? What are the reasons why the people of Kansas have a territorial government if they had the power? We have precious revelations in the Herald of yesterday, showing the reasons, pro and con, why this thing was not done. To take possession of the government under the territorial laws would have been the recognition of those laws as valid, and hence peace and repose, according to the testimony furnished by Redpath, to a distracted land. They did not want peace. They wanted to stand out against the recognized authorities. I tell gentlemen that if they will look at these revelations, they will find the veil lifted off the most extraordinary transactions that ever disgraced civilized society.

You have seen Redpath's revelations, have seen the part which Governor Robinson played, and will be able to appreciate the state of things in which I refuse. If free-State men are in a minority in Kansas, (and probably they had,) why did they not take possession of the government, vote down the other party, and come into the Union according to law? It was because they wanted trouble and revolution.

Here we see in these very proceedings a continuation of the same disorganizing policy. The people of Kansas did not mean to come in under the English bill. They stood out, as they had stood out on all former occasions, against authority. They even spurn and repudiate an act of Congress, while they believe that Congress has supreme and absolute control over the Territories.

That is the secret, sir. And now I ask gentlemen on the other side, believing, as I do, that Congress has the power to regulate these questions and to pass laws of record, how they can give their support to a movement founded in rebellion against law and announcing a determination to defy the highest authority of the country?

But, sir, it was done. A convention was held. A constitution was formed. That constitution was presented to this House, and was referred to the Committee on Territories. When the bill now under consideration was brought before the committee and a report was read, I asked in committee (I choose to make the revelation) for the postponement of action until the next meeting of the committee. That was refused. I asked for an opportunity to examine the report, and for permission to take it to my room; and that was refused. I was told by the honorable chairman of the committee, "I shall very soon be in the way of an opposition character, we might as well act at once." In other words, the question had been determined by a sub-committee, consisting of a majority of that body. Well, the question comes up here now, what are the objections to it? They are several, and I shall very briefly state them. One of them is, that the law has not been complied with; and gentlemen are absolutely driven to the necessity of figuring up a sufficient population by calculations of a most fallacious character. According to the statement, there are seventeen thousand voters in the Territory. That statement, These voters are men in a new Territory. The population, we know, is largely floating. We know it is composed, to a very great extent, of young men. I ask the committee if they believe that every one of these voters was a married man, with five children? Now you must multiply seventeen thousand by nearly six for a wife and five children to each voter—before you can reach the ninety-three thousand four hundred and twenty, which an old State must have to get a Representative on this floor. I ask gentlemen, with confidence, if they believe that each of these seventeen thousand voters had a wife and five children? Or that those who had wives and children were in such excess as to supply the deficiency of those who had none?

Why, sir, even in the old States it is very rare, if at all, that we find a wife and five children to each married man, much more to each voter; and I take the position that the statement of gentlemen—that proof upon which they rely to show a sufficient population—proves conclusively that their calculations are unsound.

Mr. Speaker, I deem it very important that this rule of population should be adhered to. I deem it very important that a new Territory should not come into this Union until she has a population equal to that required by a Representative in one of the old States. Why should it not? That is the question. I would like to hear some reason why she should not. We know very well that the population of the new Territories are not homogeneous. We know very well that they are composed of people from every quarter of the world; that they have very few sympathies, and tastes, and interests in fact, in common with the people of the old States. Why should they have equal political power with a less population than the Constitution and laws require in the old States? I would like to have that sufficiently explained. I confess my utter inability to find out a reason why it should be so. The English adjustment bill requires it, and it is a doctrine which, if we could put it into practice and adhere to it, would relieve us hereafter from a great deal of trouble and difficulty.

But, sir, it is not all that; there is another reason for it. We know perfectly well that there are ambitious and aspiring men in these new States. We had a striking illustration of it in the case of California, prematurely forced into our political Union. We know that there are men agitating all the time for the sake of the honors and office, and who strive to force these Territories, with small populations and against the wish of the people, into the position of sovereign States, in order that they may be Senators and Governors; and a rule to require the ratio of representation, fixed and immutable, would prevent this political juggling. Were the people of Kansas anxious for a State constitution and to be admitted into the Union? I proposed the question without fear or hesitation, and I say unhesitatingly that they were not. We are told that advocates of the English bill were cast by a vote of one Delegate. What was the vote on the question of State or no State? Why, five thousand three hundred and sixty-six votes for, to fourteen hundred and twenty-five against—being only a little upwards of six thousand votes, while it is claimed that there are eighteen or twenty thousand voters in the Territory. That shows very great indifference on the part of the people to assume sovereign power; it shows that they were not anxious on the subject, and that the agitation and excitement have grown out of political ambition, rather than their own desire of the people to be admitted into the Union.

But I must pass on. I desire now to call attention to this attempt to embrace a sovereign and exclusive power within this State. I beg to call attention to it, because the language of this provision is peculiar. What is the proviso? I will read it.

Provided, That nothing contained in the said constitution respecting the boundary of said State shall be construed to impair the rights of person or property now pertaining to the said Territory, or to any individual therein, or to remain unimpaired by treaty between the United States and such Indian, or to include any Territory which, by treaty or law, shall be included within the territorial limits of said State, to be included within the territorial limits of said State or Territory; but all such Territory and the people thereof shall be considered as no part of the State of Kansas, until said State shall signify its assent to the President of the United States to be included within said State, or to effect the same, the Government of the United States to make any reputation respecting such Indian title, lands, property, or other rights, by treaty, law, or otherwise, which it would have been competent to make if this act had never passed.

Here you see that the only thing exempted from the power of the State of Kansas is the rights of person and property. The sovereignty of this Indian territory is transferred to Kansas; there is simply an exemption of person and property. They have the right to introduce their officials there, and the Indians are protected in nothing except in reference to person and property. The sovereign power over this Indian territory is as absolutely in the State of Kansas, should it ever become a law, as in any other portion of her territory. There is a limitation upon the exercise of sovereign power, it is true; but it is a limitation restricted to two subjects, and two subjects only.

I ask gentlemen upon the other side why should this be done? Is there any necessity for it? None whatever. It would be perfectly easy to amend the bill so as to exclude the Indian Territory from the boundaries of the State. Why not do that? Why must we run the boundaries of Kansas round the Cherokee reservation?

The gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. GOOCH], who has argued this question, concedes that this provision of the bill does not give any right to the proposed State of Kansas over this Indian territory. He is compelled to acknowledge that. But I invite his attention to the terms of this bill. He says that it conveys no right, and that it can convey no right, in conflict with the Indian right; and, sir, he read a clause of the Constitution, to which I would again ask his attention. That clause is as follows:

"This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land."

I interpreted the remark, during the discussion this morning, that although the treaty was the supreme law, so was a law of Congress. The laws of the United States and the treaties are all included in the same clause, but one following the other, and the treaties following the laws. Now, I ask gentlemen on the other side, how can they be so sure that they will not be able to obtain for this treaty a superiority over laws of the United States made in conformity to the Constitution?

But the Constitution goes on to say:

"And the judges in every State shall be bound thereby; according to the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

Sir, I know that any law or constitution in any State contravening an act of Congress is null and void. But, sir, that clause cannot have any application to this question. It is not a State that is acting. We are acting here to give a law upon this subject that shall be a binding rule of action.

We propose to give jurisdiction to Kansas over this section of Indian territory. I ask, then, if a treaty is a supreme law of the land, is not an act of Congress equally supreme? And we pass a law of equal authority to the treaty. I ask you, then, of the hesitation or doubt of the fact, that, if one be of more validity than the other, the law is superior, and will remain in force? Here we pass this bill. It is an act not only of this House, but of the Senate and President. And it is the act of the Senate and President. The first is the major, the latter the minor; and the former, according to every system of logic, the major includes the minor. I say, therefore, that the rights of these Indians, under the bill now before us, is clearly invaded. Should we let it go?

I call the attention of gentlemen on the other side of the House again to this clause of the bill, and I say that, under its operation, no matter what the treaty may be, the Indians will have no chance. I say, then, that we are doing a great outrage by passing this bill. I say that the provisions which we have in this bill, if we do not amend it, will be a simple amendment, may be avoided; and I say to gentlemen upon the other side, wherefore, when the question is made and the difficulty presented, will they not avoid the difficulty, when they can, by a simple amendment, leave the Indians in possession of their rights?

Sir, is it in Kansas never to have the land? Is the red man to be compelled to come here and ask for protection against the aggressions of Kansas hereafter? Are we to have future agitation upon this subject, when, by a simple amendment, a difficulty which is presented, which we have judgment, I put it to the good feeling of the members upon the other side of the House, whether they will not allow the boundaries of this proposed State to commence at the northeastern corner of the Indian territory in the Missouri river, and run west along the line of that territory, until they reach the northwestern angle thereof; thence south to the thirty-seventh degree of north latitude; and thence with that line to the line of longitude mentioned in the bill, thus excluding this Indian country from the Territory? I ask gentlemen, is it to that course? Fair play. Fair play will say there can be no objection. None; none. I appeal, then, to gentlemen on the other side whether they are determined that no amendment shall be made to the bill in a solitary word? I trust the amendment which I have indicated may be adopted. I am willing to accept the proposition made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD], if that shall prove more acceptable. I had prepared an amendment changing the boundaries fixed in the bill, so as to exclude this country from the limits of the State.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House. I have called their attention to these objections which exist to the bill as it now stands before us, and I am willing to leave the matter to the will of the majority, and to let them exercise their will, whether it be for or for me.

Mr. GARNETT obtained the floor.

Mr. GROW. If the gentleman will permit me, I will ask him how long he proposes to occupy the floor? I make the inquiry, because gentlemen around me are anxious to know whether we shall come to a vote to-day or not.

Mr. GARNETT. I shall not occupy more than ten or twelve minutes, and it is immaterial whether I go on now or in the morning.

Mr. BRANCH. I have no disposition to procrastinate this matter at all; but I will suggest that it will be necessary to have a call of the House, and that it will make it very late if a vote is taken to-night.

Mr. GROW. I asked the question because gentlemen are anxious to know. If much more time is to be occupied in discussion, and we are to have a call of the House, it will be as well to have the previous question sustained to-night, and let the vote go over until morning.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think we might as well take the vote to-night.

Mr. GROW. Very well; I am agreed to that. Mr. GARNETT addressed the House in opposition to the bill. [His remarks will be published in the Appendix.]

In the course of his speech the following interruptions took place:

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he intends to ask for a vote on this bill to-night?

Republican MEMBERS. Certainly, certainly.

Mr. GROW. I believe the understanding on both sides of the House was, that the gentleman from Virginia should be heard; that I should close up in some ten minutes, and then we should have the vote.

Mr. BURNETT. There was no such understanding. One gentleman on this side responded to that proposition; but that was all.

Mr. GROW. Let me state facts. I asked the House to agree that we should have the vote this evening. One gentleman said if it was to be understood that the gentleman from Virginia was to be heard to-night, he should make no objection. No one else objected, and I took it for granted that that was the understanding on all sides.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I asked the question, because one of my colleagues is absent, and he desired that he should be sent for if a vote was to be taken this evening.

Several Voices. Let us vote for him.

Mr. GROW. I propose, after the gentleman from Virginia shall have concluded, to call the previous question. When that is sustained, I shall occupy not exceeding ten minutes of the time of the House, and then the question can be voted on.

Several Voices. Let us vote to-morrow.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I propose, then, Mr. Speaker, that the previous question be called this evening, and the vote taken to-morrow at one o'clock. That will give all the parties. Some gentlemen are absent. I am informed that the gentleman from Ohio that one of his colleagues is absent who desires very much to vote on this bill.

Mr. GROW. The colleagues who are absent can be sent for within the fifteen or twenty minutes that will be occupied before the vote is commenced.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Certainly; that can be done, unless the vote be postponed until to-morrow. I would prefer, however, that the vote should be taken to-morrow.

Mr. GROW. Gentlemen have come to me to know whether the vote would be taken this evening, and I have told them that it was my intention to ask for a vote to-night. I presume that all gentlemen are present except the two mentioned, and they can be sent for. We may as well have the question decided to-day. There are two special orders for to-morrow.

Mr. GARNETT resumed.

Mr. LARRABEE. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia—

Mr. EDGERTON. object to interruptions.

Mr. BRANCH. As the gentleman from Minnesota was allowed to interrupt the gentleman from Virginia, I hope there will be no objection to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. LARRABEE. I was informed that the gentleman from Virginia has made a remark as to the people of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Mr. EDGERTON. I object to interruptions.

Mr. LARRABEE. It shows that the gentleman from Virginia is as ignorant as respects the people of the North as many northern members are as respects the people of the South.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is out of order. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARNETT resumed, and concluded his remarks.

Mr. GROW. I call for the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I want to make a suggestion, and it is this: I have made a motion to recommit this bill, with instructions. To meet the views of gentlemen who desire to have this matter disposed of, I propose to withdraw the motion to recommit, if the gentleman will give an opportunity to offer an amendment, which will cover the object proposed by that motion.

Mr. GROW. No, sir; I cannot yield for any purpose of amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I am sure that the chairman of the committee will not object to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, as it is only a substitute for a proposition already pending.

Mr. GROW. I must decline to yield.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER stated the first question to be on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, to recommit the bill, with instructions.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to respond long upon the attention of the House at this time. I propose merely to make a brief statement in reference to the points which have been discussed, and shall not trespass upon the patience of the House for more than ten minutes.

Mr. LARRABEE. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to make a few remarks. I will not occupy more than five minutes: [Cries of "No!" "No," and "Object!" from the Republican benches.]

Mr. GROW. I should have no objection myself to the brevity of the House, because I am trespassing upon its patience at this late hour of the day. If nobody else objects, I certainly will not. [Cries of "Object!" from the Republican benches.]

Mr. LARRABEE. I trust no one on the other side of the House will object.

Mr. EDGERTON and others objected.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, three questions have been raised in this discussion, and they are the same that would naturally arise in any application of Territory for admission into the Union. First, as to its boundaries, its territorial area, and its population.

Mr. LARRABEE. I wish to give notice that, whenever I get the floor, I will reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GARNETT.]

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, as to the boundaries of this proposed State, they are the same as those proposed in what is known as the Toombs bill—which passed the Senate in 1856, receiving the vote of every Democrat—with the exception of the western boundary, which was the one hundred and third meridian of longitude instead of the one hundred and second, as proposed in this bill. I wish the House to bear in mind that there has never been, in all the bills and projects which have been submitted to Congress, any variation proposed in the boundary of Kansas, except in reference to its western limits; I shall, therefore, confine my remarks on the boundaries to that alone.

The bill which passed the Senate, and to which I have referred, made the one hundred and third meridian the western boundary. The State constitution presented to-day makes the one hundred and second meridian the western boundary. In the last Congress, Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, reported a bill for the organization of a Territory out of the western part of the Territory of Kansas, to be called Jefferson; making the western boundary of Kansas the one hundred and first meridian of longitude. So far, therefore, as boundaries are concerned, we have the action of both Houses of Congress approving this boundary substantially as it is in this bill.

As to territorial area, Kansas contains, within the prescribed limits, over eighty-five thousand square miles; an area greater than that of any State in the Union, except that of Texas, Oregon, or Minnesota.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Does not that include this very Indian territory?

Mr. GROW. If the gentleman will wait a little I will answer his question. I have kept my seat while he and others, who think with him, have been arguing their points, intending in answer them when I should have the floor.

As to boundaries and territorial area, then, there can be no objection to the admission of the State, I come now to population. On this point there is the action of both Houses of Congress, on two separate and distinct occasions, declaring, by a majority vote, that there was sufficient population in Kansas for a State at the time the western part of the last one of which was two years ago. As to a voting population, Kansas, by the official record under the proclamation of her Governor, shows over seventeen thousand voters, and a registry requiring six months' residence.

There are one hundred and fifty-two congressional districts in the Union which, at the last congressional election, did not poll seventeen thousand votes. This fact, I take it, disposes of the whole question as to whether it is proper to admit a State into the Union with less population than is requisite for congressional representation. The number of voters disposes of the question of political power. The precise number of population in this case, it seems to me, can be of no material consequence.

There was a law passed the Territorial Legislature of Kansas, in 1859, requiring the assessors of their respective counties to take an assessment of the property in the Territory, and at the same time to make a registry of voters. Under that law, the assessors took a registry of voters; and, in doing it, in some cases, registered the population of the Territory, and in others they did not; though the census to which gentlemen have referred, is incomplete, because there was no law requiring the population to be taken; but the voters only were to be registered. The assessors had power to swear witnesses as to the number of all sorts of property in the Territory. That was done, and that registered list shows, as gentlemen have stated, over twenty thousand voters. The returns were made to the officers of each county, and not to any territorial officer. Therefore, there was no way to get an official record of all sorts of property, and a great deal of trouble, because there was no officer of the Territory to whom they were all to be sent.

So much in regard to that point. And now in relation to the point of Indian treaties and rights, which seems to be the only one relied on to defeat the admission of Kansas at this time. After four years of conflict in Congress over Kansas; after two heated political struggles for her admission into the Union as a State, it is just discovered that her admission would be in violation of the solemn treaty with the Indians, and that would be trampling in the dust a feeble and inoffensive people, fast passing from the face of the earth. There was no such expression of sympathy by gentlemen on the other side of the House two years or four years ago, in their fierce struggles to obtain a victory over the people of Kansas. Yet now, when the people of Kansas, in a legal and peaceable manner, have formed a government for themselves, and ask us to permit them to exercise the right of self-government, you propose to deny it to them on the plea that it would be a violation of a treaty with the Indians. I have now, as a pathetic appeal is made in behalf of the Indian by men who turned a deaf ear to the woes of the pioneers of the Territory, and Congress is implored not to grant to its people their right of self-government.

The rights of the Indian tribes should be most jealously guarded, not only to preserve the faith of the Government, but as an act of justice to a race of men win as fast passing away. It will be but a few years at best before the last of the race will have no home on the hunting grounds of the Great Spirit. The time is not far distant when the civilization of western Europe and the regenerated civilization of eastern Asia, making the circuit of the globe, shall come upon the crest of the Rocky Mountains and blot out forever the last remnants of the Indian race, and the generations of living men. Destiny has stamped such a fate upon the annals of his race, and time is fast fulfilling the decree. The march of empire, of science, and of civilization, cannot be stayed by the rude barriers of savage life. Yet, sir, I would not needlessly awaken the feelings of the white man shall behold in himself the inevitable doom of his race.

But, sir, how are the Indians' rights invaded—how infringed by this bill? It is true the Government made a treaty with them, by which they were never to be placed within the territorial limits,

The message further announced that the House had this day ordered the printing of the following documents:

Message of the President of the United States, in response to a resolution of the House of Representatives, calling for information touching the reported expulsion of American citizens from Mexico—ordered at twelve o'clock and fifteen minutes.

Message of the President of the United States, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives, communicating information in regard to the duties imposed on tobacco in foreign countries—ordered at twelve o'clock and fifteen minutes.

Letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, furnishing information in response to a resolution of the House calling for the amount of money that has been paid to the Treasury for books ordered to be published by either or both Houses of the Thirty-Third Congress, as well as the amount paid for books of said Congress, under the usual resolutions, &c.—ordered at twelve o'clock and sixteen minutes.

Resolution of the Legislature of California, asking for a mail route from Sonora, California, to Monovalle, in Utah Territory—ordered at twelve o'clock and fourteen minutes.

Letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, communicating estimates of the amount necessary for negotiating treaties with certain Indian tribes of the plains, and in Minnesota—ordered at twelve o'clock and sixteen minutes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. THOMPSON presented the petition of Abby S. Smith, widow of Colonel J. S. Smith, of the Army, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BIGLER presented three petitions of citizens of Crawford county, Pennsylvania, praying the establishment of a mail route from Meadville to Fort Leno, in that county and State; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented papers relating to claims of citizens of Texas to indemnity for damages by the Indians; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. NICHOLSON presented the memorial of Michael H. Martin, of Tennessee, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WIGFALL presented a petition of citizens of Brownsville, Texas, praying the removal of the custom-house from Point Isabel to Brownsville; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GREEN presented the memorial of Kerr, Briefly & Co., praying compensation for losses sustained in consequence of the attack of General Harey upon, and the battle with, the Sioux Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That the petition, on the files of the Senate, of the Executive Relief of Richard Talbot, deceased, praying for the commutation of five years' pay due the deceased for revolutionary services, be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion of Mr. THOMPSON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers relating to the claim of Abby S. Smith, widow of Colonel J. S. Smith, of the Army, on a pension, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask leave to withdraw the petition of the settlers on the Fort Atkinson military reservation and old Indian agency in Iowa, praying the right of emigration.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask if any action has been had.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir. I will state that the bill which passed the Senate a few days ago was based upon this petition, and a motion was made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Peon] to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed. Since its passage, it has been discovered that the original bill—which was drawn by the Commissioner of the General Land Office—was defective in leaving out one section. I desire to withdraw the bill, that it may be laid before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, so that the bill may be corrected and made in accordance with the original petition.

Leave was granted.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BIGLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 402) to extend the limits of the port of entry and delivery for the district of Philadelphia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Ann W. Angus, widow of the late Captain Samuel W. Angus, of the United States Navy, asking a certain allowance, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it lie on the table; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 367) for the relief of Mrs. A. W. Angus, widow of the late Captain Samuel Angus, United States Navy, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 349) for the relief of Peter Rogerson & Son, of St. John's, Newfoundland, owners of the British brig Jessie, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Kentucky, in reference to the enlargement of the Louisville and Portland canal, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to, the subject having already been acted upon by the Senate.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the Senate instructing the committee to consider the expediency of further legislation in order to prevent violence and crime on board the merchant marine of the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 233) for the relief of the legal representatives of five deceased clerks in the Philadelphia custom-house, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BIGLER, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the memorial of Thatcher Perkins and William McMahon, praying an extension of their patent for an improvement in the wheels of locomotive engines, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 403) for the relief of Thatcher Perkins and William McMahon. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Jane B. Evans, widow and executrix of Cadwalader Evans, deceased, praying for the renewal of a patent granted her late husband, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 404) for the relief of Jane B. Evans. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FOXEY, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 306) to settle titles to lands along the boundary line between the States of Georgia and Florida.

CHARLES KNAF.

Mr. BIGLER. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 31) for the relief of Charles Knaf, have instructed me to report it back, with a recommendation that it pass. The bill will not require any further consideration, and it passed this body some years ago without opposition, and will give rise to no debate. I am authorized to move that the Senate consider it at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, again Committee on the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 31) for the relief of Charles Knaf, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to make such modifications in the contract now in force with him, for furnishing material for the custom-house building at New Orleans, as in his opinion the principles of justice may seem to demand.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS HATTMAN.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is a Senate bill on the table in favor of Francis Hattman, which has been agreed to by the House, with an amendment. I ask that it may be now taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 78) for the relief of Francis Hattman. The amendment of the House was to add, at the end of the bill:

Provided, The amount so paid, shall not exceed $900.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire that the Senate will concur in the amendment, though it is not quite right. The bill is to refund certain duties which were illegally taken from him. Beyond all doubt, they were illegal. But the House have limited the amount to $900. The real amount, I understand, is about $915; but the claimant says he would rather have that amendment concurred in than dispute about that little sum. I therefore hope the Senate will concur in the amendment of the House.

The amendment was concurred in.

ANSON DART.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 220) for the relief of Anson Dart. It has twice passed the Senate, has passed the House at the present session, and been reported three times in the House favorably.

Mr. LANE. I hope the Senate will agree with me that it would be better to take up this bill this morning. It cannot be passed in the morning hour, and I think he had better let it lie over until we can have a full Senate, and a full opportunity of discussing it. If he insists on it, I am ready now; but I should like to have a full Senate; I should like to have a little more time.

Mr. MASON. I take it for granted that it will not be called up, with that admonition.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I supposed, from the conversation between the honorable Senator from Oregon and me, that they would call it up this morning, being Thursday morning, and dispose of it, probably, in the morning hour.

Mr. LANE. I am ready to go into the consideration of this bill now, but I am satisfied we cannot get through with it in the morning hour.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not desire to press the bill in the morning hour, if it is to involve a long discussion; but I give notice to the honorable Senator that I should like to call it up to-morrow morning in the morning hour. It is not precisely a matter of course, but I give notice.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his motion?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I withdraw the motion, with the expectation to renew it at the earliest opportunity.

CONFIRMATION OF LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back a bill (H. R. No. 44) confirming certain land entries under the third section of the act of 3d March, 1855, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1856." It relates to the preemptions that are secured by that act to the mail contractors west of the Mississippi; and this title of the Pacific States. The committee have instructed me to report back the bill, with an amendment, and ask that it may be passed. It has been very carefully considered, and the amendment was deemed absolutely necessary. It only provides an additional fund against any injustice being done by the act. I ask that it be considered.

Mr. MASON. If it will take any time, I shall ask the Senator to let it go by.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It will call for no debate. There can be no difference about it. There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 44) confirming certain land entries under the third section of the act of 3d March, 1855, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1856." The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment in section one, line twenty-two, after the word "locations," to insert: "made prior or subsequent to the date of the selection thereof;" so that the clause will read:

"Be, and the same are hereby, confirmed, subject to any bona fide claim under any law, and United States, in or upon any portions of the lands embraced in said entries or locations made prior or subsequent to the date of the selection thereof, by the persons aforesaid, &c."

Mr. GRIMES. That bill has never been read in the Senate, I believe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now read the bill through, before the Chair puts the question on the amendment.

The Secretary read the bill. It provides that all entries which have heretofore been allowed by registers and receivers, under that portion of the third proviso to the first section of an act, approved March 3, 1855, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1856," in the following words: "That each contractor engaged, or to be engaged, in carrying the mails through any of the Territories west of the Mississippi, shall have the privilege of occupying stations at the rate of not more than one for every twenty miles of the route on which he carries a mail, and shall have a preemption right therein, when the same shall be brought into market, to the extent of six hundred and forty acres, to be taken contiguous, and to include his improvements; but no such preemption right shall extend to any pass in a mountain or other difficult, to be confirmed, subject to any bona fide claim under any law of the United States to the whole or any portion of the lands embraced in those entries or locations; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office is directed to issue a patent for the lands embraced in the entries; but each contractor is to satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that he has complied with the terms of his contract, and that the entries have been used and occupied as stations on the line of the route during the existence of his contract. No such preemption right in this act are to be restricted to one and the first bona fide set of preemptions on one and the same line of route.

It also provides that no rights, from and after the passage of this act, shall be claimed, and the provisions of the act of March 3, 1855, the provisions of which are repealed, saving all rights heretofore acquired; and for the purpose of facilitating the transportation of the public mails of the United States west of the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean, and intermediate points, and for the purpose of the Postmaster General, in a square form, with power to order the adjustment hereof of such boundaries, to conform to the lines of the public surveys, if such adjustment be deemed advisable; and such lands that are reserved as stations are to be held as permanent mail service reservations, not subject to the operation of any existing preemption or other general land laws. Whenever, from any cause, any of the reservations made under this act shall be no longer needed for the purposes originally intended, or the convenience of the service shall require a change of location, the reservation thus abandoned by the Postmaster General is to be laid off into suitable lots or parcels, and sold at public sale to the highest bidder after at least three months' public notice, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and no patent therefor are to issue as in the case of the sale of other public lands. All laws heretofore passed granting the preemption privilege to mail contractors are to be repealed; but the repeal is not to affect any rights which may have actually vested under those laws before the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. MASON. I submitted to the Senate that a resolution which I offered yesterday, providing for a recess of one week, ought to be passed at once. I have no personal interest in this matter; but I think it will be convenient to the Senate to do it; and I move that the resolution be taken up.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. Let the resolution be read. I propose to modify it.

Mr. SECRETARY read it, as follows:

Resolved, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives do adjourn their respective Houses from the 19th to the 26th day of April inclusive.

Mr. MASON. I propose to substitute for it, merely changing the terms, not affecting materially the adjournment:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the two Houses take a recess from the 19th to the 26th inclusive, and that the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives adjourn their respective Houses accordingly.

I offered the resolution thinking that it might be found desirable to the Senate to have a recess for the present week—four days, from the 19th to the 26th of April; which, Sundays included—though they are dies nebulæ—would make it twelve days. It is known that there will be an occasion interesting to a certain portion of the country, and the consequence of which, from our former experience, will be reasonable to legislate here. So many persons will be absent from both Houses, that I am sure, from the former experience of the country, that we shall find it impossible to legislate; and unless this resolution is adopted, we shall have to take it to an adjournment from three days to three days. I introduce it to meet the occasion to which I have adverted. In conference with Senators on the other side of the House, I have stated to them that I should be willing—and I have no doubt we shall all be willing on this condition—to adjourn for one week, or to adjourn for a like period for their accommodation.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I feel compelled to oppose this resolution, and I sincerely hope the Senate will not pass it. The reasons which I have to offer are so serious, and so important, that I am, so sufficiently palpable at once to determine the course of every man on the subject. This, in the first place, is a precedent now to be established for the first time. It is as modest a thing in its first presentation as you will meet with in the history of our country. For the first time, I believe, of about five or six days. We have hitherto had these conventions every four years, and have been able during their sittings to go on with the public business here, and particularly with that class of business which did not elicit contest and serious debate. Hitherto, when there has been a convention of one party calling some of their members away, there has always been that courtesy here which refused to take up matters of high public interest, the action or legislation of which would seriously affect the other side, to conflict with the wishes of the other side. That has been the case hitherto. That will be the case no doubt again. I have no apprehension that either side of this House, when it finds a majority of the opposite side called away under circumstances of this character, circumstances of this sort, the propriety of which is recognized in some degree, would take advantage of the absence of the other to dispose of and get clear of matters of high and serious public consideration. Then, if that be so, what is the use of adjourning? We can go on with that class of business, which is properly perhaps termed business, of course, and get clear of a large mass of it.

But what I look at, in addition to that, is the result of establishing this precedent. An adjournment is proposed now only for four or five days, but it will be extended on every successive occasion. It will not only extend hereafter to eight or ten days, but it will be found, when two or three conventions, national in their character, of two or three different parties, occur in the same year, while that the adjournment will take place for a whole month. It is notorious that every abuse of this character gradually grows, and continues to gain ground, and finally it must become a serious interruption of the public business; but it will be sanctioned by the fact that a precedent is now established, and that the public have not complained. The public will not complain of a delay of four or five days; but they will complain, and we ourselves must feel it hereafter, when it comes to an adjournment for two or three weeks, at a period when there are many who are so far from their homes that they cannot return to them, but must stay here on their ears, absolutely doing nothing.

The condition under which this resolution can receive support from a large number of Senators is that, if we adjourn over for a week, they can jump on the railroad cars and go home. There is a large body, I must give a number, here who are denied that privilege entirely. They must stay here, with nothing to do but await the return of the others; and each successive time that such a resolution as this shall be acted upon, in accordance with the precedent which is now set, the period will be extended, and it will go on from days to weeks, and from weeks to a month or more.

I believe it is a bad precedent. It bears hardly upon the distant members. It is exceedingly accommodating, at least—that is not the word—but it is, generally, exceedingly pleasant and acceptable to gentlemen here, who are not engaged in business, but in twenty-four or a forty-eight hours' run. It answers excellently for them. They can go home and attend to their business; but for those who live a thousand or two thousand miles away, and a greater distance, it is a matter which they cannot remain here. The reason and action of every member, and his experience here, must tell him at once that if we commence this business, it will not stop where we begin with it. I cannot, and never will, vote for a resolution of this sort, whilst I know that there is a contrary and a hostile force to be found in the United States Senate in action on public business; and I trust and hope we shall not be subjected to this resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am opposed to adjourning at all; but I desire to move an amendment to the effect that we adjourn for ten days, and afterwards vote against the resolution, as amended. I move that it be amended so as to read, "from Thursday, the 19th day of April, to Tuesday, the 26th day of May," so that we may adjourn for, at all events, for a month. And I would like to propose to the adjournment, as I told you, if I could, to build up a wall around this town that would prevent any politician here from going to either convention; but they will go, and while the politicians are attending these conventions, we shall be here in nothing but a useless gathering unless we adjourn ten days for the Charleston convention, and then ten days for the Chicago convention, it will leave but an interim of ten days between them, and it is well known nothing will be accomplished in those ten days. It is just as well, if we cannot adjourn at all, to adjourn for the whole term. I therefore offer the amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. I shall oppose this resolution in the original form, or if it should be amended as proposed. I oppose it from different reasons to those which have been given. I oppose it because I think we ought to stay here and legislate on all questions coming before the Senate, important as well as unimportant. The very courtesy that he speaks of, that would prevent one party from speaking up, during the recess, the important questions which would divide the Senate, can be extended by pairing of those members of the Senate on this side who are necessarily called away during the period for which this recess is asked. I want the Senate to remain here to answer an important question now pending before the body, in which the whole country is interested. I am utterly opposed to postponing the legislation of the country for any object whatever. I think we ought to stay here, and go through with questions of vital consequence to the country, and to the people.

I yesterday morning endeavored to get up a question vital in its consequence to the State that I in part proposed; and I regard action upon it as so important that I will vote against any proposition of courtesy to anybody rather than that precedent of the adjournment which would be established by the Senate. We all know the great questions that are now pending here. To-morrow is private bill day; to-day is appropriated to District business; for Monday there is a special order; Tuesday and Wednesday are to be appropriated to the honested bill; but on Thursday next, at the farthest, I shall insist on the Senate acting upon a question so vital to me and to the country I come from as the overland mail service. Immediately following that is the question of the Pacific railroad. It cannot be put by. It must be acted upon. I have been waiting here for a long time, hoping that the House of Representatives would agree upon a Pacific railroad bill, and send it to us; but I am on an unjustified delay. I have no objection to a recess, nor to postpone bringing the subject before the Senate any longer. I hope we shall not only vote down this resolution, but do it with the understanding that we are to proceed with legislation on these important questions; and the courtesy of the other side in doing so, to extend to it can be observed by pairing off on important national questions, so that we can proceed with the legislation of the country.

Mr. GREEN. I had intended to move the same amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Michigan. I think it nothing but fair. It does not cost the Government a single dollar to adjourn for one month, and it gives equal opportunities to the Senators on both sides. When you talk about walling the District and hemming in persons, it is all in my eye; it cannot be done. We must look at subjects in their practical light, not in an abstract, theoretical light. We know what has been done, and what will be done; and it is of no use for us to talk, to have an influence on the country, when that talk is contrary to actual experience. I need not need to be too decisive. A large number will be certain to leave the Senate. Whether I shall go or not, I do not know; but if the idea strikes me, I will not think I can serve my country by going, I intend to go. This Government exists not only in the Constitution, but in the compact of the people on one side of the Constitution; and some of the strongest of those institutions are party organizations. They must be sustained, and will be sustained from necessity, from public policy, and from public duty. Now, as it does not cost the Government anything as it is an important matter of personal convenience to Senators, I do not see why we should object to it. I would not ask the other side of the House to agree to an adjournment to accommodate this, unless I would extend the same courtesy to them. I cannot be done. I have intended to propose the same amendment that has been proposed by the Senator from Michigan. It being proposed, I shall vote for it. Why talk about pairing off, and talk about dispatching public business, when everybody knows public business will not be dispatched, when there will be no public interest subserved; when there will be no public good accomplished? I think it is best to meet the subject plainly, flatly, bluntly, publicly, and say we will take a recess for one month; and for that reason I shall support the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, and also the resolution introduced by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. RICE. Mr. President—
Mr. MASON. Allow me one moment. I am afraid the resolution in the form I have offered is not the subject of misapprehension. The suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas leads me to suppose that he thinks it may be advantageous to one portion of the Senate and not to another, and I therefore withdraw the resolution, if I have the assent of the Senate to do it. [Applauded.]

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution and amendments are withdrawn. The Senator from Minnesota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RICE. It appears to me, Mr. President, that if the action of the Congress of the United States on its duties, and the action of the Government by any political convention to be held, the rule should apply to the President, to the members of his Cabinet; and to the Supreme Court of the United States. It appears to me that our duties are far above the political tricks, or opinions, or resolutions of any convention, whether at Charleston, at Chicago, or at Baltimore. Talk about its costing the Government nothing more for us to adjourn for a month than to stop here during that time! It is true so far as my pay is concerned; but let me call the attention of the Senate to the great interests of the country. They are not taken into consideration—

Mr. COLLAMER. Will the Senator indulge me one moment?

Mr. RICE. Certainly.

Mr. COLLAMER. I inquire of the Chair what is the question before the Senate?

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution and amendments had been withdrawn. The Senator from Minnesota probably did not hear that fact stated.

Mr. RICE. I understood the Senator from Michigan did not withdraw his amendment.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The did or did not. Mr. RICE. I made a mistake, then. I stand corrected.

CONTRACTS OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the resolution, which was laid over on the request of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. Brown,] in regard to contracts made by the War Department.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution submitted by Mr. Wilson:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs and Finance be and they are authorized to inquire, and have been entered into by the War Department, or by any officer or agent thereof, in the last three years, for iron for the public use, whether or not the same were made after public advertisement, or otherwise; the amount of iron contracted for, and the amount furnished; the prices paid, or offered, and whether or not the same were in accordance with the contracts, or otherwise; and if not, by what authority they were paid, or ordered to be paid; and under what conditions and on what terms the same were contracted into, either by the War Department or any officer or agent thereof. Also, that said committee inquire what contracts have been made by the War Department, or by any officer or agent thereof, for iron carriages; or what orders have been given by that Department, or by any officer thereof, whether civil or military, to purchase and iron gun-carriages; how such orders or contracts were obtained; under what authority the orders were issued; or the contracts made; whether by public advertisement in open market, or by close purchase; the reasons for issuing such orders or making such contracts; the necessity for making the expenditure; and if any regard has had therein to the public service. And that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to require any and every person to produce the same.

Mr. YULEE. I can conceive no reason for calling upon the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into these particular matters more than into any other transactions of the Government. If the Senator desires information in regard to the transactions of the War Department, he may send for them. Iron, a much more ready means to obtain that information would be to call upon the Secretary of War for intelligence of his transactions. If, upon receiving from the Department the report which they will make from their records of what has been done, the Senator proposes to stand upon that any further action, then it may be proper to consider whether a reference to a committee may answer any public purpose.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must ask the Senator from Florida to pass it. It is his duty to lay the special order at this hour.

Mr. WILSON. I move to suspend the special order for the purpose of disposing of this matter.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The special order at this hour is the business of the District of Columbia.

The Senator from Massachusetts moves to consider the prior orders with a view to continue the discussion of this resolution.

Mr. BROWN. The Senate will adjourn at four or half past four o'clock this evening, and we shall only have about three hours for District business. I should like for the Senators to try to get the majority on this question. It will consume the whole day. I insist on the special order, and hope the proposition to postpone will be voted down. I know this debate will go on.

Mr. WILSON. I cannot resist the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BROWN. Now, the District business being before the Senate, I think it proper to ask the Senate, before proceeding to what will unquestionably be disputed propositions, to take up three or four bills which, I think, can be by no possibility give rise to any debate, and consider them first.

Mr. YULEE. Will the Senator allow me a moment, in order that I may lay upon the table the amendment which I designed to offer to the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts, or rather a substitute for it. [Printed in the Globe.] He asked me that it be printed. The original resolution is not printed.

UNITED STATES AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

Mr. BROWN. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 213) to incorporate the United States Agricultural Society.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not understand the question to be put. We were talking here at the time it was announced as decided. I have objection to the passage of the bill, and intend to state it, if necessary, after the adjournment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Foor in the chair.) If a division be called for, the Chair will feel bound to put the question. The question is on the passage of the bill, and on this a division is asked.

Mr. DAVIS. Before the question is put, I merely wish to state, that I do not see whence this Government derives a general power to create corporations. The Federal Government has no power to create artificial individuals. It is limited to the naturalization of persons. It had power to establish a national Government, and in the train of that power to establish a seat of Government might follow such a corporation as was necessary to the maintenance of a seat of Government. Beyond that, clearly I know of no grant from which the power to charter a corporation could be derived. I have stated this generally asked, and refused in the convention which formed the Constitution. To create a corporation for the purpose of instruction in agriculture and chemistry cannot be necessary to the maintenance of a seat of Government. For that reason I intend to object to the passage of the bill, believing, if it is necessary for the purpose indicated, it is not within the constitutional power of the Government, and I ask that the question be taken by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWN. I only desire to say, in reference to this matter, that it is of no consequence to me how the Senate settles the question. I would as soon the Senate would settle it that the Government had not the power to establish corporations, as not to settle it; but since I have been connected with the Committee on the District of Columbia, I think we have reported some twenty-five or thirty charters for various objects; and they have generally passed without objection. This one is in the usual form. I had supposed that this was a new departure, but since I have taken the action of Congress. If it is to be reopened on the suggestion of my colleague, and we are to go into a general debate on the subject, I must ask that this bill be postponed. If we can take a vote at once upon the question, and be done with it, I am willing to object without objection to a bill of any great importance to any one, I suppose. I only brought it up now because I supposed it would pass without debate, and we could get it out of the way. If it is going to give rise to debate, however, I want to get clear of it for the present by a postponement.

Mr. DAVIS. The principles of government are always important; and the theory on which our Government rests can never be neglected without bringing in its train injuries that we cannot, at this time, precisely state. It is to be remembered, I believe, that it is a violation of the fundamental principles on which, I think, the Government lives, that I make the objection to the bill. It is from no opposition to an agricultural college. I should be very glad for an agricultural college to flourish; but it will flourish without a corporation.

Mr. KING. I voted against this bill when it passed, because I did not know precisely what the character of the corporation was. I think that Congress has the power to pass such laws for the District, because it has the exclusive legislative power for the District. I should be very glad to vote for a corporation for the United States, to be made by an act of Congress. On that ground, and without knowledge of the particular details of the bill, I voted against it. I shall vote against it for that reason, though, of course, I have no objection to the promotion of the object of this bill.

Mr. BROWN. I will make a motion to postpone the further consideration of the subject, if it is to lead to debate.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I certainly do not intend to trespass on the Senate with any argument on the subject. The question is a very important one—one which has often been considered and debated. Following the example of the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Davis]—though I did get him very distinctly—I shall merely state my opinion as to the constitutional question of Congress on the subject. I do not see why the agency of a corporation may not be as well used by this Government as any other means for carrying into effect any power with which it is invested. It is a means. The Constitution does not prescribe the means by which its powers are to be carried into effect. It provides that Congress may raise armies, may levy taxes, but it does not describe the way in which this shall be done. The means are left to the discretion of Congress.

The question here, then, would resolve itself into this: whether Congress has any power to favor by any means and promote the agriculture of the country? It has been often considered whether we ought not to create, as a part of this Government, an agricultural bureau, as it has been called. You have partially done the same thing by authorizing the purchase of seeds of various sorts, issuing the Patent Office reports, distributing these seeds and these works, and thus communicating information on the subject of agriculture. You have already done all that. You can employ these means, why not as well use a corporation, if that can be rendered auxiliary to the same legitimate and beneficent end? My opinion is that you can. My opinion is, that wherever Congress has the power of doing a thing, or of promoting it, the means are at its disposal; and the means furnished by a corporation, where that is supposed by Congress to be fit and suitable for the purpose, is as much within their purpose as any other means of executing any other enumerated and granted power.

This is my view of the subject. I shall have no difficulty whatever, then, in voting for this bill, which seems, in the most harmless possible way, to exercise this power on the part of Congress. I do not know how far this may be auxiliary—it is supposed to be so by those gentlemen who have secured it for our consideration, and who have requested it of us. I suppose, myself, from what I see in the country, in my own State and elsewhere, that it may be made conducive to the advance and progress of agriculture, an object that deserves favor as much as any other, as far as we have any power to favor it. The exercise of this harmless exercise of power, and for such an object, is not the subject of any proper objection.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi moves to postpone the further consideration of the bill.

MR. BROWN. If we are to have no more debate, I shall not insist on it.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on the passage of the bill.

MR. GRIMES. I desire to say, in reply to a suggestion made by the Senator from New York, who said that this was a corporation to extend all over the United States, that there is nothing appearing on the face of the bill to show that it is anything more than a local incorporation for this District; but it bears the name of the United States Agricultural Society. If we can create a local corporation, so seems to be the opinion of the Senator from New York, I do not see what earthly objection there can be to the passage of this bill. It is a mere local corporation; so far as appears on the face of the bill, it only relates to the District of Columbia, although it bears the name of an incorporation for the whole United States.

MR. KING. It was without having examined the bill that I stated that. I think Congress may pass an act of incorporation for the District, but I will not vote for a bill for an incorporation over the Union. Certainly the object of this bill is one we would all desire to promote in any legitimate way.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 11, as follows:
YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Chandler, Conner, Crittenden, Wilson, Duff, Fessenden, Post, Foster, Grimes, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hiram, Kennedy, Latham, Simons, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Dusen, and Yates.
NAYS—Messrs. Briggs, Chassey, Claiborne, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, King, Mason, Nicholson, Polk, and Tyler.

So the bill was passed.

DISTRICT CRIMINAL COURT.

MR. BROWN. I next move to take up the bill (S. No. 344) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a criminal court in the District of Columbia.'"

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend the first and seventh sections of the act of February 20, 1839, "to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a criminal court in the District of Columbia.'"

It provides further, that whenever the judge of the criminal court, from sickness or any other legal cause, shall be unable to hold the court, he shall give notice to the judges of the circuit court of the District; or if he be unable, from any legal cause, to give such notice, it shall be given by the marshal of the District of Columbia; and thereupon one of the judges of the circuit court shall by arrangement among themselves, hold the criminal court during the temporary inability of the judge; but no judge of the circuit court, after once thus holding the criminal court, is to be required, unless with his own consent, on any subsequent like occasion to hold the criminal court again until it shall have been held by each of the other two judges of the circuit court.

MR. COLLAMER. I wish to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia one amendment. I desire an amendment providing that the services rendered by the bill shall furnish the ground for any additional pay.

MR. BROWN. I have no objection to that. There is no intention of that sort.

MR. COLLAMER. Every time any additional duty is required of a man in this District, we have a bill to give him extra pay.

MR. BROWN. I have no objection to such an amendment.

MR. COLLAMER. Put it in this form: Provided, That no service rendered by either of the circuit judges of this act shall be a foundation for any additional compensation therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendment was concurred in.

MR. HALE. I should like to propose an amendment to the bill, if there is no objection on the part of the committee of the District of Columbia—substantially the same provision as I introduced yesterday in a separate bill. It is an amendment which I think is required for the protection of witnesses in criminal cases.

MR. BROWN. That has nothing to do with this bill. This bill only proposes that when the criminal judge is sick, the circuit judges shall alternate in the holding of the criminal court. Herefore the whole duty has devolved on the chief justice of that court, which has required of him an undue amount of labor. The proposition is, that the associate judges shall alternate with him and divide the labor among themselves. I hope such a proposition will not be embarrassed by anything else.

MR. HALE. I will let it go now; but half an hour ago I would not.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POTOMAC FISHERIES.

MR. BROWN. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 369) for the protection of the fisheries upon the Potomac river in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The bill, as introduced by Mr. Brown, proposed to extend the laws recently enacted by the States of Virginia and Maryland in relation to gill-nets upon the Potomac and other waters of the Chesapeake, so as to include the waters of the Potomac within the District of Columbia; and also to prohibit gas-lar and other refuse matter, destructive to fish, from being emptied into the Potomac river or its tributaries, within the District, under like penalties as are imposed in the acts for the suppression of gill-nets.

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert:

That it shall be lawful for any person to sell with gill-nets or seines of any kind in the Potomac river or its tributaries, or in the District of Columbia, from the month of March, April, May, and June, other than such nets or seines as may be laid out from and landed upon the shores of said river or tributaries, nor shall be lawful to discharge coal-lar, or other refuse matter from gas factories, believed to be destructive of fish, in the said river or its tributaries, as aforesaid, during the aforesaid months. And all persons offending against any of the provisions of this act, shall, on conviction thereof, pay a fine of not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars for each and every offence, to be recovered in the name of the United States before any magistrate of the county of Washington and District of Columbia, one-half of which sum shall go in payment of the cost, and the other half to be applied to the repairs and improvements of roads in said county.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in, and the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

MR. BAYARD. I move that the Senate take up the bill (S. No. 25) reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which I hope there will be no objection, supplying a defect in the law relative to taking testimony by certain judicial officers.

MR. BROWN. I hope the business of the District of Columbia may first be disposed of, and then any other business, coming from the other committees, may be taken up afterwards. I hope the Senator will not interfere with me then, as this day was assigned for District business.

MR. BAYARD. Pardon, I was not aware of that, or of course I should have interposed.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

MR. BROWN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 76) for the benefit of the public schools in the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill, the question being on its passage.

MR. CRITTENDEN. I wish to make a request of the gentleman to call up his city railroad bill, for the purpose of giving me an opportunity to make a postscript.

MR. BROWN. I cannot. Let us dispose of this bill before the Senate, and the railroad bill will come up next. I hope we shall go on with this bill. I cannot consent to postpone the railroad bill.

MR. HALE. I should like to amend the bill in one respect; let the city of Washington receive the fines and forfeitures which are proposed to be appropriated to school purposes, after paying the criminal costs on prosecutions, which are now paid out of the Treasury. I think the costs should not all be paid by the Government; and the forfeitures given to the public schools; but that the forfeitures should be subjected to the payment of the costs before they are handed over to any other party.

MR. BROWN. The committee, before they reported this bill, looked at this whole matter of fines and forfeitures, and the result of their researches was about this: that in two years the Government had levied fines and forfeitures amounting to some fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, and less than fifteen hundred dollars had been collected. They believed that if every citizen was interested in the collection of these fines and forfeitures, they would be collected; and thus, the double object of punishing offenders and getting money for the benefit of the schools, would be accomplished; but if the money were to be appropriated to paying the expenses of criminal prosecutions, there would perhaps be less effort to collect than there is now. I hope the Senator, in view of the object we have in contemplation, aiding the cause of education here, will not embarrass the bill by any such proposition.

MR. HALE. I withdraw it.
MR. WILSON. I offer the following amendment, in the form of additional sections:

And be it further enacted, That, in making provision for the support of the schools in the District of Columbia, one million acres of any land of the United States, subject to private entry, is hereby given to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, to be divided in equal shares between said cities according to the population thereof, as ascertained by the census of 1850.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Interior shall, immediately after the passage of this act, cause to be surveyed and set apart, for the use of said cities, in to receive under its provisions, and he shall then cause the land to be surveyed, and patents to be issued therefor, in such manner as he may deem proper, and he shall for the quantity which may thus be ascertained be due to each.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That so soon as the titles to said lands shall be vested in said cities, they shall thereupon exercise all the control and ownership of said land, and the proceeds of the sale of said lands, and any money arising from such sales shall be held by said corporations as a sacred trust fund, never to be reduced, the in-some of which shall be forever devoted to the instruction of free children between the ages of five and sixteen years.

Sec.—And be it further enacted, That the said land, and every lot in any town accruing therefrom, shall be managed and controlled by the majority of the voters of said cities, respectively, for the time being.

Sec.—And be it further enacted, That so long as the public land granted by this act remains the property of either of said cities of Washington and Georgetown, the same shall be subject to taxation.

Mr. BROWN. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not insist on a proposition of that magnitude in this little bill. It looks to me very much like tying a seventy-four to a yawl. Here is a little proposition to surrender some fines and forfeitures, and do some very small things for the aid of public schools, and the Senator comes in with a great seventy-four. This proposition is well enough to be considered by itself, and at the proper time and in the proper place I shall be glad to consider it; but I hope this bill will not be embarrassed by that proposition. It will take two weeks to discuss a question of that magnitude. It involves the whole question of the distribution of the public land and the powers of the Government. I can see lying in the wake of that proposition enough material to occupy us here for a week.

Mr. WILSON. I do not like, Mr. President, to press this amendment against the wishes of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which committee I am a member; but I would like to test the sense of the Senate upon the proposition, and if it does not lead to a long debate, I should desire a vote on it. I wish simply to say that we have a vast public domain of more than one thousand million acres; we have already granted for the use of the States sixty-seven million acres of the public domain for educational purposes. We have here in the District of Columbia eleven thousand children between the ages of five and sixteen, that ought to attend school. Only twenty-five per cent. of those children are in the common schools. In this city, the whole value of the school-houses owned by the city amounts to only about ten thousand dollars. More than half the children of this district are attending no schools whatever. By our legislation we bring these children here, and I think it is the duty of the Government, I think we owe it to ourselves and to the country, to grant a portion of the Revenue to be forever used as a fund for the benefit of the schools of this District. I should like to take a vote on the proposition. If it leads to a long debate, I will not press the measure now; but I should like to take the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. GRIMES. While the Senator from Massachusetts is paying attention to the children of the District of Columbia, it would be very well for him to look somewhat as to the effect his bill will have upon the States where he proposes to select this land. He proposes to take thirty-eight townships of land in the western or southwestern corner, and give them to the two cities of Washington and Georgetown for school purposes; and he has a provision in his bill declaring that that land shall never be subject to taxation for State, county, or any other purposes, so long as the title remains in the two cities of Washington. What will be the effect upon the States or the Territories where the land may be selected? Is that the kind of proposition which the Senator brings forward seriously and asks us to vote for? Does he wish that thirty-eight townships of land should be taken out of the heart of my State, and that State be forever deprived of the privilege of taxing it for State purposes, or for county purposes? Does he wish to deprive us of the privilege of establishing our population and building up our own State by the passage of such a bill as this? Yet he asks us for the inevitable effect of such an enactment as he proposes.

The Senator says that there have been sixty-seven million acres of land granted to the western and southwestern States for purposes of education. That may be true; but the lands were given to the sixteenth sections, and they were devoted to the purposes of education for the reason that they were to encourage immigration to that country, and thereby enhance the value of the surrounding lands, so that the Government would be able to sell at an increased price. Now, here you propose to go out into Oregon, or into Minnesota, or into Iowa, or Wisconsin, and take thirty-eight townships of land—one million acres—and give them to the corporations of Georgetown and Washington, and allow them to retain the entire possession and control of that body of land for an unlimited series of years, without giving to the States where it may be selected the privilege of disposing of it as they see fit. The effect of it is precisely what the effect was under the law that was passed by Congress granting a township of land, I think, to the State of Kentucky, for the establishment of a blind asylum, or a deaf and dumb asylum, which was selected, if I remember right, some forty years ago. Florida has been trying for the last thirty years to get Congress to pass some law to require that township of land to be sold. It is retarding population; it is retarding the prosperity of the State; yet nothing has been done, or has been done but I have had information on the subject, by which the State of Florida would be benefited by this township being offered to public sale. That will be the inevitable effect of the Senator's amendment if it is adopted.

Mr. BROWN. I think my friend from Massachusetts must see that this amendment of his will give rise to a long debate, and inevitably defeat the whole proposition; defeat it at least for this day; and I therefore appeal to him again to withdraw his amendment. Let us consider it as an undebated proposition.

Mr. WILSON. I will comply with the request; but I want to say a single word to the Senator from Iowa before I do so. The Senator from Iowa complains that these lands are not to be taxed. I ask him if the lands reserved now in the States are taxed.

Mr. GRIMES. What land reserved in the States?

Mr. WILSON. The school lands.

Mr. GRIMES. They belong to the States. That is a part of our common property. We have a right to tax them or not. If we did tax them, it would be like taking money out of one pocket and putting it into the other.

Mr. WILSON. I understand this Federal Government owns the public lands. Believing education to be the country's best interest, I have reserved certain sections of the public lands for school purposes, and sixty-seven million acres have already been reserved to the people of the new States. Now, sir, here is the District of Columbia, excluded from the Federal authority.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator certainly misapprehends the condition of the western country. He speaks of sixty-seven million acres of land being reserved for this purpose, and he seems to draw the conclusion that they are still reserved. Why, sir, the States sold their lands within a year or two after they were acquired. The lands have been sold in my State. The lands have been sold in the State of Illinois, in Indiana, in Ohio, and in all the States long ago, half a century ago, in some of them.

Mr. WILSON. I ask the Senator whether he does not suppose the people of Washington and Georgetown will sell these lands as speedily as possible?

Mr. GRIMES. I should not think they would, for they are subject to taxation.

Mr. WILSON. Certainly they would. They will want the money.

Mr. GRIMES. They will be like all other speculators.

Mr. WILSON. Then the Senator could have similar lands in any Territory. However, I do not wish to press this matter against the wishes of the chairman of the committee. I will only say that by our legislation we have brought a vast population of poor people into this District. There are more than five thousand children in this District that attend no schools at all, and it is a disgrace to the national Government, with all our means, that nothing has been done for education here. Gentlemen may say that the people here ought to tax themselves to do it. Half the property of this District is held by the Federal Government, and pays no taxes. The other population that comes here is brought here for our own purposes. They are poor, and they have not the means to provide school-houses and schools for the education of the whole children of the District. I do not press this question further; I withdraw the amendment at the request of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BROWN. Then I hope we shall have a vote on the bill.

Mr. DURKEE. I should likewise ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia if the children of all persons who are taxed under the provisions of this bill are allowed to attend school?

Mr. BROWN. I did not exactly hear the Senator's question, nor do I understand its bearing on the bill; but the language of the bill is:

That the corporate authorities in any city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, may levy a special tax, not exceeding five cents on each $100 worth of taxable property in the corporate limits of the city, for the benefit of public schools to said city.

The bill does not propose to take charge of the schools at all, or have anything to do with saying who shall go to school and who shall not; but leaves that entirely to the corporate authorities of the city to manage in their own way, supposing they could make better of it than we.

Mr. DURKEE. I ask if the Senator would be willing to agree to an amendment that the children of all who were taxed should have the privilege of attending the schools.

Mr. BROWN. I am unwilling to have Congress take charge of the public schools of this District.

Mr. DURKEE. Make that provision.

Mr. BROWN. I will agree to no such provision. The corporate authorities should have the management of their own public schools. They can do it better than we can. I cannot accept such an amendment.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FORD.) The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. POLK. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. A word before that vote is taken. I do not perceive on the face of the bill any objection to it. I should like to understand the meaning of the inquiry made by the Senator from Wisconsin. The bill seems to give a right to tax the people for the support of the schools.

Mr. DURKEE. I understand that all the property in the city is subject to taxation for school purposes. My question was, whether all classes of persons who paid this tax were benefited by the schools. I refer to the tax on the free colored population of the District. They own considerable property here, and their property is subject to taxation. It seems to me that we should make provision that they should share the benefits of the schools.

Mr. BROWN. I begin to comprehend what the Senator is driving at now. He thinks negroes ought not to be taxed to educate white people.

Mr. DURKEE. I think they ought not, or I think they ought to have an equal share.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator wants an amendment of that sort, he may put it in, if that is the point he is driving at, to prevent negroes being taxed for the education of white people.

Mr. DURKEE. I move an amendment providing that all who are subject to taxation, under the provisions of this bill, shall be allowed equal privileges in the schools to which the public funds are to be appropriated.

Mr. CLARK. Let it in order to put the bill back on its second reading for amendment?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that, at this stage of the bill, after it has been ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, it is not open to amendment except by unanimous consent. It can be reached by a reconsideration of the vote ordering the bill to be engrossed.

Mr. CLARK. I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Shall this bill be engrossed and read a third time? and it is open to amendment. The Senator from Wisconsin will prepare his amendment.

Mr. POLK. While the Senator from Wisconsin is preparing his amendment, I desire to move an amendment to the second section, by striking out all after the word "city," in the sixth line. The words to be stricken out are:

"And that whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall be officially notified by the Mayor that the said tax has been levied and collected, it shall be his duty as payee from the Treasury of the United States, to the persons legally authorized to receive the school lands for the city of Washington, a sum equal to the amount thus raised by special tax. Provided, That not more than $25,000 per annum shall be paid by the United States, and the payments shall continue for five years, unless Congress shall otherwise order."

I offer the amendment for the reason that this clause is to use an objectionable part of the bill. I intended to vote against the entire bill on account of that, but I believe it that is stricken out. I shall be willing to vote for the bill. I am unwilling to appropriate out of the Federal Treasury $25,000 annually for the support of public schools in this city. I am unwilling that the States of the Confederacy, who have to sustain their own schools, shall, in addition to educating their own children, be compelled to educate all the children of the District of Columbia. Let the people here educate their children by taxing themselves. To that I have no objection; but I am unwilling, for one, to vote money out of the Treasury for that purpose.

Mr. BROWN. That provision of the bill was not incorporated without full consideration, and without being based upon a sound principle. The Government of the United States owns more than one half of the real estate in this District. The Government, therefore, has no more right to be exempted from the school tax than any other property owner. The Government has already been bound to contribute to the public schools as any wealthy citizen of this town who is childless. Of what profit is a public school, I ask, to Mr. W. W. Corcoran, who owns perhaps half a million dollars' worth of real estate, possibly more? He has no children to be educated in these schools, and yet you tax his property for the benefit of public schools; and why should not the Government, for this specific object—being a proprietor of one half the real estate of the District—contribute its just and due proportion to the support of the schools? The Government is called upon to contribute for this specific object, because of its ownership of property; and those who will take the trouble to investigate the bill, will find that while the Government owns one half the property, it only asked to contribute one third of the amount paid for supporting the common schools. If this principle be not sound—that the Government is as much bound to contribute to this object as any citizen—then let the bill fail; but I protest that the principle is sound. Nor can gentlemen escape it, on the ground that the Government has expended large sums of money here in the construction of very large and costly buildings. True, the Government has put up a Capitol, at a cost of eight or nine million, a Patent Office, at a cost of two and a half or three million.

Mr. POLK. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Did I understand him to say that, by the provisions of the bill, the Government pays only one third as much as is raised by taxation?

Mr. BROWN. Exactly. If the Senator will turn his attention to it, he will find that while that—

Mr. POLK. Where does the bill show it? Mr. BROWN. I will tell him in what part of the bill it is found. Of course, I cannot set forth in a bill all the facts upon which it is based. The bill provides:

"That the corporate authorities in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, levy a special tax not exceeding ten cents on each $100 worth of taxable property in the corporate limits of the city, for the benefit of public schools in said city; and that whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall be officially notified by the Mayor that the said tax has been levied and collected, it shall be his duty as payee from the Treasury of the United States, to the persons legally authorized to receive the school funds for the city of Washington, a sum equal to the amount thus raised by special tax. Provided, That not more than $25,000 per annum shall be paid by the United States, and the payments shall continue for five years, unless Congress shall otherwise order."

There is where it is found. It is a "special tax"—that is, in addition to what the city now pays. The report shows a dollar how much it pays. The people here now pay about thirty thousand dollars a year for school purposes. They propose to levy a tax of ten cents on the hundred dollars of the taxable property, which is ascertained to be about thirty thousand dollars more; so that the city would pay, by taxation, about sixty thousand dollars under the operation of the bill, and the Government but $25,000. You pay by the bill, therefore, less than one third of the whole amount, while you are the owner of more than one half of the real estate in the city. That I have to say for the present.

Mr. POLK. I do not think the analogy suggested by the Senator from Mississippi is a good one. He says that Mr. Corcoran pays taxes and does not receive the benefit of the public schools. This section of the bill proposes to allow the city to levy a tax for the support of the public schools. This gentleman (Mr. Corcoran) or any other gentleman residing here, has something to say as to whether the city shall levy a tax or not, and what the rate of taxation shall be; but under this bill, the Government has nothing to say in that matter at all. The Government cannot control the amount of taxation. The Government cannot say what the amount of taxation shall be. That is the difference. If Mr. Corcoran is a citizen, he is a part of the law-making power of the city, and has his weight, as a citizen, in determining whether a tax shall be levied, and if levied, what the amount of it shall be.

Then, again, I think there is something due to the fact that if the Government owns a great deal of property here, the Government has expended, and is expending, in large amounts of money in public improvements. In fact, the Government has made the city. I think, therefore, that there is something of considerable importance due to that in addition to what I suggested when I first offered the amendment. Besides, I think it is not fair to bring in a resolution in this case for taxing the Government property the estimates that the Senator from Mississippi has, because Government does not tax its own property; no government taxes itself; I do not wish to argue this case from Missouri, but in regard to the fact that the Senator does wish to take up the time of the Senate, nor I cannot vote for the action as it stands, nor can I vote for the bill with the section in it.

Mr. CLARK. I want simply to make one suggestion in answer to what was said by the Senator from Missouri in regard to the fact that the Government has expended considerable sums of money for the improvement of the city. I agree with him that they have done so, and that the Government ought to do so; but I want to put to him this question: how can you better improve the city by improving the people, as well as the earth and the streets?

Mr. POLK. I am opposed in principle to the Government taking charge of its citizens or the education of their children. I say, let the citizens take care of themselves, and let the fathers educate their own children. That is the principle I own. I do not wish to constitute the Government a guardian of all the children in the District of Columbia, or in any other part of the United States. I will merely add that, notwithstanding the arguments made by the Senator from Mississippi, in answer to a question of mine where the portion of the bill is which makes the Government ratio of taxation equal to only one third of what is raised by the city, it strikes me it still remains that for purposes of education the Government pays just as much as the inhabitants of the city.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I supposed, when the committee used the words "special tax," they necessarily implied a tax in addition to that which is now levied. That is the ordinary construction of such language in all cases. When you levy a special tax, you do not reduce the amount already levied, but you levy something in addition to that. As I have stated to the Senate before, we could not insert in this bill that the city of Washington shall pay $30,000, nor that the city shall not pay more than $25,000 for the support of the schools now; but we ascertained that fact, and embodied it in the report. We ascertained, further, the fact that the Government paid nothing—not one solitary sixpence.

Now, the Senator says that the Government has the city, and the Government does not do anything. The Government did a very important part of it; but every humble occupant of a cottage did something towards the building of the city. The man who put up a little cottage worth three, or four, or five hundred dollars, contributed to that much towards the building of the great city. He who put up a house worth five or ten thousand dollars did more. He who put up a building worth $500,000 did still more, and the Government did more than any one person. It did as much as all others combined. Are these small proprietors exempted from taxation for school purposes? Does not Patrick O'Flanagan, who puts up his little cottage for $500, have to submit to taxation to support the schools? Does not W. W. Corcoran, who owns his $500,000 worth of real estate, submit to taxation for the support of schools? I take the extremes. Do not all the intermediate people submit to taxation to support the schools? Then why should the Government not submit to taxes? That is not the proposition; but it is, that the Government shall make its voluntary contribution to this worthy object as one of the greatest landholding proprietors in the Federal metropolis. That is our proposition, and that is the whole of it.

Mr. POLK. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment, and withdraw my call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.) The amendment of the Senator from Missouri is to strike out certain words in the second section of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to correct the clause before the Senate is taken up. I have just said, "I move to strike out the words 'Secretary of the Treasury,' and insert 'Secretary of the Interior.'" It is a mistake in the printed bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so amended without question, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARLAN. As I shall vote against this amendment, I desire to state distinctly the principle by which I am controlled. I readily accord that to be true which the Senator from Missouri has just said, that I have no right individually to call on any other gentleman to aid in educating my children; nevertheless, as members of society, it may be the best for both of us that he should do so. It may be required to promote the interests of himself and his own family. I suppose the principle which I have just stated of the Senator, on this subject, are applicable to Congress in legislating for the District of Columbia.

As an abstract question of right between individuals, no one will pretend that it would be just to compel one man to educate or aid in educating the children of another. But when we consider supporting free schools, at the public expense, has usually been defended on this principle. Ignorance, idleness, profligacy, and vice and crime are usually found in company. Crime and pauperism are believed to be the fruits of ignorance. It is believed to be much cheaper to prevent crime by educating the children of the community, than it is for the same community to support their children in the poor-houses, and to punish them as criminals in jails, houses of correction, and the penitentiary.

If this principle is correct in a State, it is equally so in the District of Columbia. We are compelled to live here a portion of the time. We are compelled to be here with our families, with our wives and children. This is true of thousands of individuals who are here, waiting for the result of the election. It would be cheaper, in my opinion, for the Government to contribute something for the education of the children of the District, than to support those children in the poor-houses, hospitals, jails, and penitentiaries, now under your control.

Mr. WILSON. I should vote against the proposition made by the Senator from Missouri, and I wish to state very briefly why I shall do so, and I think Senators, and especially on this side of the Chamber, ought to do so. In the first place, we have no right here to levy a tax of magnitude of distance, with broad acres, considerable tracts of land, to keep them in repair. We have laid this city out as a national capital. It is not a manufacturing city; it is not a commercial city; but it is the capital of the United States. One half the property of the city is owned by the Federal Government. This city is a city of poverty. I think it is the poorest city on the continent, or at any rate in the United States, and there is good reason why it is so. It is not a commercial city; not a manufacturing city; not an industrial city; it is a city where a large number of people are gathered together holding office under the Federal Government, living here temporarily, having temporary interests, having no property, supported here upon their salaries, and the officers are often changed. Thus, necessarily, there is a floating population. Besides that, upon the Capitol extension and upon the other public works, we have brought here a large number of laborers with their families. They have no property. We have in the city eleven hundred and thirty children between the ages of five and sixteen. Only two thousand four hundred of them are in the public schools. Forty-nine per cent. of the children of this city are in private and public schools; fifty-one per cent. in no school at all. Persons are expected to support schools here, and yet they have no school-houses to admit children when they make application. Hundreds of children, for whom applications are made to enter the schools, are not admitted, for the reason that they have no accommodations for such scholars. The accommodations are limited. With the exception of two or three build-ings, the buildings hired by the city for school purposes were not built for school-houses, and are unfit for school-houses.

It seems to me that, under these circumstances, the Government of the United States, with all its wealth and all its power, ought to see to it that we have here, in the national capital, a system of public schools unsurpassed by any portion of the country, by which the whole people, of all kinds and all classes and all races, may have the benefits of education. Sir, I now willing to give my vote to that end. I think it our duty to lift people out of barbarism into the light of civilization. I think it our duty to aid the cause of education; and I think there is something greater than saving a few thousand dollars to the Treasury of the United States, especially when we squander it by millions on mere jobs. I hope, sir, that this proposition, which is that the city of Washington shall raise $25,000 in addition to the sum they now raise by taxation, and that, if they do so, we will give them $25,000 more, so that the bill will be passed. This will be adding $50,000 annually to the common school fund of this District, to prepare school-houses, and to carry on the cause of general education. I think it just, wise, and beneficial; and I also vote for it more heartily than for any measure I have voted upon during the present session.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. POLK, by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Briggs, Chesnut, Clay, Clinman, Davis, Fitch, Fitzpatrick, Gurnee, Gwin, Hammond, Iversen, King, Lane, Latham, McKim, Nicholson, Pott, Phelps, and Wigfall—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Allam, Brown, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Donistone, Durkee, Fessenden, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Rice, Seward, Sumner, Ten Eyck, Thompson, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—22.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK. I move the following amendment; to add, at the end of section two:

And provided further, that the child or children of no person whose property shall be assessed and taxed under the provisions of all laws shall be denied the privilege of attending one of the public schools in said city.

The question was put, and the amendment was declared to be agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I think there was a misapprehension. I understood the Chair to decide that the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK.) That was the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CLAY. I beg the Chair will state the question again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again.

Mr. BROWN. I see the point at which gentlemen are aiming; and it will be much easier met by providing in the bill that the property of free persons of color shall not be subject to taxation under the provisions of the bill. I suppose that is what gentlemen mean. That, I am willing to accept.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that that is not my full purpose. I desire that, under this bill, if there is a taxation of property, the property of all classes shall be taxed alike. I will make a donation from the Government that donation shall go to the benefit of all those persons who are taxed; that you shall not get rid of educating the child of the colored person by simply exempting him from taxation, but he shall have the benefit of the $25,000 pro rata as much as anybody else. I have heard long enough to the Senate and elsewhere that the colored people cannot be elevated. They cannot be elevated because you will not try to elevate them. Now, here is an opportunity, and let us do it. Let us hold out the hand of the Government and let them have the benefit of this provision. I have drawn it in the bill, and I will vote for it, for that very purpose, to meet the question.

Mr. BROWN. This thing ends where I was fearful it would end at the start. It curls in the head of a "nigger." We cannot even have a proposition to educate the poor children, but do thousands of northern gentlemen go down and flow in favor of the negro. Sir, let it be told everywhere, proclaim it on the house-tops and on the streets, that a bill intended to snatch the little white boys and girls that appear every day on your streets, from the very jaws of ruin, cannot be passed, because gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber sympathize so deeply with the negro. The Senator knows perfectly well, when he introduces that proposition, that he introduces a torpedo into this bill which must destroy it. He knows perfectly well that the thirty southern Senators on this floor will not consent to take charge of the education of the negroes. I tell the Senator that his proposition is a proposition to destroy this bill, and he professes to be its friend. Insert that proposition, and I, who have advocated the bill for six years, may have three times carried it through the Senate, would be instantly opposed to it.

I am willing to except the property of the colored people from taxation; but I will not, in this bill, to educate the colored people, and I will not, in this bill, to educate the thirty southern Senators on this floor will not consent to take charge of the education of the negroes. I tell the Senator that his proposition is a proposition to destroy this bill, and he professes to be its friend. Insert that proposition, and I, who have advocated the bill for six years, may have three times carried it through the Senate, would be instantly opposed to it.

Mr. HARLAN. I will propose an amendment to the amendment, to add:

And that separate schools shall be provided for the education of the children of the colored people.

Mr. CLARK. I drew my amendment somewhat carefully, I think, and I drew it to accomplish what is designed by the Senator from Iowa. I drew it to meet what is now objected to by the Senator from Mississippi. If he looks at the amendment carefully, he will find that I do not propose to put the colored children into the same school with the whites. I have not proposed to insult, if I may use his own language, (to quote from him simply,) the white child, or the parents of the white child, if they deem it an insult, by putting the black child in the same school; but the amendment simply reads that the child of no person, whose property is taxed under this bill, shall be declared from attending "some" of the public schools—not all. I drew it for the very purpose that they might fix a public school for the colored children, and let the white child go to the school inquired of by gentlemen on this side of the Chamber why I had done so. I say, Mr. President, for that very reason.

Now, I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that the bill is not a relief to the colored people. It is a relief to the white child, and I propose to give it equally also to the black child, I will not vote for either. This is, or ought to be, a Government of equality. We have got these children here. You say that the black race, the colored people, are a curse. You say that they are from some of your States. You will not permit him to live there. He is here. Do you propose to drive him out from this District? Is that the proposition? If not, educate him. While you are extending the hand of charity and assistance to the white child, extend it to the black child also; and, if the gentleman chooses, let it be proclaimed upon the house-tops, let it be blown through the columns of the newspapers, that the northern gentleman does so overflow—I am glad that it does—that it can educate the colored child; and if you choose to reject the bill because we desire it to be shored by all, the fault is not ours.

Mr. HARLAN. I do not believe that the amendment, as amended, can be resisted successfully on principle. Why should not the colored children of this District be educated? You had about ten thousand free colored people in this District in 1850, as shown by the census; and you have a much larger number of them now. A majority of these people are probably very ignorant and poor. If ignorance is the parent of idleness, vice, and crime, you will probably find among them the largest proportion of the criminals of the District. To prevent pauperism and crime among the white population, it is the duty of the Government of this District to provide for the education of the children at the public expense. Then, on what principle do you deprive the colored children of the District of the means of an education? If it is cheaper to educate the white child at the public expense than to support him as a pauper, to punish him, or to treat him as a criminal, is it not equally true to colored children? If you deprive him of the means of culture, do you not indirectly encourage crime? Independent of the acts of philanthropy or benevolence, as a question of political economy alone, you ought to provide for the education of the youth of all the people in the District, however low and vile and degraded their parents.

As I stated a few minutes since, you have no right, as between individuals, to compel a wealthy gentleman to support the education of the child of his substance for the education of the children of another—his fellow-citizen. As a question of private right between two men, you have no right to do this. No State asserts such an authority in taxing a tax on the property of the white people to support public schools, if it is the duty of the State to make life and property as secure as possible. It is the duty of the State, therefore, to prevent, as far as possible, as well as to punish crime. The rich man's wealth, and life, and character, and family, are being constantly injured by the education of the child of his poorer neighbor. The school tax is levied and collected, not on the principle of private justice between individuals, but on the principle of civil necessity. It is necessary to secure the just end of all civil society—the protection of life, liberty, property, and character.

It may be said, as those been said on this floor to-day, that every father ought to educate his own child. This is true; but in point of fact this will not be done for more reasons than one; first, because some fathers of children, who are poor, in the usual course of their business, means to provide for the education of their own children; and in the second place, others will not have the inclination to do so. Hence, their children grow up uneducated. They contract bad habits; they become idle and vicious; they become paupers and beggars; they become unworthy citizens of the State or of the District; unworthy citizens of the Republic, and in ten thousands of instances must be supported in the poor-houses, or are to be prosecuted and punished for crimes, and then supported in the jails and penitentiaries at the public expense.

The experience of the last century has induced all, I believe, whose attention has been called to this subject, to conclude that the cheapest mode of protecting society from the burdens it has to bear is by the education of the children of the country. If this is true in the States of this Republic, it must be equally true here in the District of Columbia. Then on what principle do you propose to discriminate against the children of the free colored population? You are ignoring and despising the colored people; you are ignoring and despising the poor and the ignorant; against those who are poor, and yet who, under your laws, must continue to reside in this District, who are members of this community? If instructed, and taught to discriminate between the fruits of idleness and pauperism, and vice, on the one hand, and industry, frugality, and honesty on the other, they will be much more likely to provide for their own wants, and take care of themselves and their offspring; and a thousand times less likely to become a public charge, as inmates of your poor-houses, hospitals, and prisons. Hence, on the true principle on which public schools are sustained in the States, we sustain the proposition to provide for the education of the colored, as well as the white, children of this District.

I know there is an objection to the association of colored children with white children in the same schools. This prejudice exists in my own State. It would be impossible to carry a proposition in Iowa to educate the free colored children that now live in that State in the same schools with the white children. It would be impossible, I think, in any one of the States of the Northwest. Whether this prejudice is well or ill founded, is not a question for us here to determine. If you compel the white people of this District to send their children to the same schools, to commingle indiscriminately with colored children, or deprive them of an education, thousands of them, through the influence of this prejudice, will choose the latter alternative. Those who are able, will provide private instruction for their children; those who are unable to do this, will leave them without an education. We cannot provide for the education of this degraded class of the community, for the education of the children of the free colored population of the District, and also for the education of the children of the white people, by adopting the amendment I have suggested to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CLARK. I am entirely willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, if the object is not sufficiently attained by the amendment I proposed. That was my design.

Mr. BROWN. If gentlemen are sincere—and I have no doubt they are—I think the whole matter can be accommodated by making the entire amendment read thus:

That the property of free colored persons shall not be subject to taxation under the act in relation to the child, or children, of no person whose property shall be assessed and taxed under the provisions of this act, shall be exempted from the privilege of attending schools of the public schools to said city.

Thus I exempt the property of free colored persons from the provisions of the act, and then let all who are assessed under the act be liable of attending the schools; which, of course, can only apply to white persons. Colored persons, not being taxed, will not be entitled to the benefits of these particular schools. What I meant to say when I was up before was, that if it be desirable to establish schools for colored people in this District, and they are willing to let their own property be taxed for that purpose, in a separate bill, not mingled up with this bill in any form, I shall have no objection to seeing it done. Let them sustain their own action and means. I see a property in not taxing them, whether their means be great or little, for the education of white people; and my amendment exempts their property clearly and distinctly from taxation, and allows the children of all who are assessed under the provisions of this bill to attend the schools.

Mr. CLARK. I think the amendment proposed by the Senator does not accomplish entirely what I design. By my amendment, the colored children will have their pro rata proportion of the $25,000 to be paid by the Treasury under the bill. If the Senator desires to assess only the property of the white persons, leaving out the property of the blacks, and will take from the $25,000 a sum in proportion to the $25,000 which the property of the blacks bears to the property of the whites, and try it in that way, for the white man is concerned I will agree; but I do not desire that we should make this donation of $25,000 a year to the city of Washington, and that the whole of it should be expended on the white children, to the exclusion of the free colored children. I do not desire that.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I had supposed that it would be conceded in all quarters of this Union that there was a property and a justice in conforming the legislation of this District, upon all questions affecting the negro population, bond or free, to the policy pursued by the slave States. I have been disappointed. We know that of later years attempts have been made, from time to time, to depart, in the legislation of this District, from the policy of like legislation in the adjoining States. African bondage exists now in the District of Columbia. So far, it has resisted every effort to emancipate the blacks. How long it will resist I am not sure, but I say, up to this point, it has resisted it. The legislation of the country has gone so far, however, as to depart from the policy of the contiguous States, which are both slaveholding States, as to prohibit, within the District of Columbia—I think very injuriously and unbecomingly to the adjoining States—the sale of slaves intended for deportation. That far it has been departed from. Now, it is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, to make this still greater departure. The statute-books of the adjoining States, and of all the slave States, show that it is not considered expedient or wise in a State where there is negro slavery, to educate the negro race at all, bond or free. Whether that is right or wrong in morals, Senators may decide for themselves. The States where slavery exists have decided—and they have a right to decide—that it is right in policy. Now it is proposed here in this District, where the legislation is in the hands of all of the States, to depart from the established policy of the slave States—being a part of the policy of the States contiguous to the District of Columbia. I cannot at all concur with the honorable Senator who is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia that we should consent, on our part, certainly that I should consent on my part, to any legislation of any kind for the education of the negro race in the District of Columbia, whether by an amendment to this bill, or by a separate bill confining it to them, in any mode whatever; because it is inconsistent with the established policy of the States where slavery exists, and unbecomingly to the States contiguous to this. It may be in the power of the Senate to do it. If it is, let it be done; and let the fact be shown, along with the others upon the statute-book, of the practical working of the Federal Government, made up of slave States and free States together; but as we are a vote or my vote goes as the representative of one of those States, I protest against it. Let it be done, if Senators think it wise to do it.

Mr. BROWN. I want to correct my friend from Virginia, who seems to have fallen into rather a mistake. He said going about the negroes legislating for the education of negroes. I spoke only of legislating for the education of white people; but I said also, if it be desirable, if the colored population of this city desire to have a tax levied on their own property, in order to educate their own people, then I will enable them, by an act of Congress, to do that thing; not that we take cognizance of the subject, but simply to enable them to levy taxes on their own property for a particular object. I think that can be done. That is not taking charge of their education by the Federal Government in any form, but simply allowing them to assess a uniform tax upon their property to accomplish an object desirable to them. If the Senator means to say that he is opposed to allowing the free colored population of this country to educate themselves, and that he is opposed to allowing them to educate themselves as a separate class, and furnish to themselves the means of education, I am for allowing them to do it; and in this District, where I have the power of legislation, I will give them the means of doing it. I will give them the bill [Mr. DORRIS.] would call an enabling act—an act to enable them to levy taxes upon their property uniformly for an object which I think is desirable to that extent with the black man as with the white man. I do not desire to see the black man dependent upon the Federal Government, or any where it is safe for him to be enlightened. I think the free colored population here may be educated. I see no harm that can result to the white people from it. I will go further, since we are upon that precise point, and say to our philanthropic friends that I will let you have the money if you will. I should be in favor of educating them.

Mr. HALE. I will agree on my part. We will all agree to that.

Mr. BROWN. Ah! what would the agreement amount to? It would not amount as long as we are engaged in making it. I tell Senators from the North but for your interference there would have been a day school upon every well-regulated plantation in the South. We call ministers of the gospel to preach to our slaves. You know that, Mr. President, [Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair,] as well as I; you have a chapel on your own estate. I am sure very many other southern planters have. Why have we not day schools for the free colored negroes? Because we do not choose to have them as instructed as that your Garrison and other base men may enable them, through their "little learning," to become their own worst enemies. That is the difficulty, and the whole difficulty. I do not think otherwise in reference to the free colored population of this District. While I would vote nothing from the national Treasury for their education as a separate class, yet if they want to tax themselves, as a separate class, for that purpose, I have no objection. It is not necessary and proper, as I think it is, to preach the gospel to the negro race; and as every master of a well-regulated plantation considers, then I think it would be proper, if it could be done with perfect safety to all parties, that the negro should be educated, so to enable him to read that Bible which the white man preaches to him.

Mr. HARKIN. I understood the Senator from Virginia to announce the proposition that, in his opinion, the legislation pertaining to this District ought to conform to the legislation of the surrounding States. I understood him to say that he had understood him. Now, I understand that a number of the slave States have enacted laws providing for the sale or reenslavement of the colored population. If, then, Virginia and Maryland were to enact such a law as that, would he expect Congress to pass a law providing for the sale or reenslavement of the free colored people of this District? It seems to me that this is a conclusion that is almost irresistible from the proposition which he made.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, first, as to the Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia: I did not understand at all that he had assented to any measure which would provide by law for the raising of a tax or otherwise for the education of the colored people. I understood him exactly as he has explained, that he would assent to a bill allowing the negroes to tax themselves, if they thought proper to ask for such a bill, for the purpose of educating their children. I dissent from him altogether.

Mr. BROWN. Then we understand each other.

Mr. MASON. Lasy that it is the established policy, and has been probably for a century—I do not know how long a time—of my own State, and I think equally so of the State of Maryland, the adjoining State, and so far as I am informed of the legislation of all the slave States, to prohibit the education of the negro race, and in my judgment a wise policy, an expedient, and a just one. I am not going into the reasons for the policy, for that does not become me here. But such is the policy; and in my opinion the proper and wise administration of the affairs of the District of Columbia requires our legislation here to conform to the policy of the adjoining States in reference to this population, bond or free.

Mr. BROWN. I am not the chairman of the Senator from Iowa, I would say this: I am not aware that any State has passed any laws to make slaves of those who are now free, against their will.

Mr. WILSON. Arkansas has.

Mr. MASON. That may be; I do not remember.

Mr. DAVIS. No; it is not Arkansas either.

Mr. MASON. I am not aware of it.

Mr. DAVIS. It was legislation which required free negroes to leave the State or to be reduced to a condition of bondage.

Mr. BROWN. It is in the law of my own State. If negroes emancipated subsequent to 1806 remain in the State after they are emancipated, they are guilty of a misdemeanor prescribed by the law, and upon the fact being ascertained by the law, in continuing, if they are sold. But in the execution of the law it is always understood, after the fact has been ascertained against the negro, that he has abundance of time, a year or two if necessary, to go away. But that is the established policy of the law of the State of Virginia, and of most of the other slaveholding States. It is to prevent the increase of the free negroes.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, APRIL 13, 1860.

NEW SERIES.—No. 106.

Now, as to the question of the honorable Senator from Iowa. I am not aware that any law has been passed, except a police law of this character, to reduce into slavery a negro who is free, against his will; but I do know that in my own State, of late years, and of late years only—since the negroes who were emancipated in this State, and left it, went into the free States and found no footing there, not being tolerated there, and being obliged to go elsewhere—the instances have been very numerous where they have returned, and have applied to the Legislature for permission to go again into slavery; and, so far as I recollect, that permission has always been granted. Further than that, those cases became so numerous, so frequent, causing so many acts of private legislation, that it was thought wise to make a general law; and there is now a general law, by which, under certain safeguards that are prescribed, the courts are allowed, on being satisfied that the negro, of his own free will, desires again to go into slavery, to furnish him the means of doing it; and they are generally allowed, according to my recollection, to reduce him into slavery. But there is no law, except the police law to which I have adverted, which would reduce a negro into slavery.

In answer to the whole question of the Senator, I am perfectly prepared to say this: that race, and color, form no part of the political society of the country; they can take no part in the administration of public affairs; and they, being in that condition, I would not agree to depart all in the legislation here from that which has been found expedient and politic, or wise, in the States where that form of bondage exists. I would conform the legislation here to the legislation there, unless it should result (which I never apprehend, and I am satisfied it can never result) that there should be any legislation really equal, tyrannous, or oppressive in that respect.

Mr. HARLAN. I may not have been fortunate in the selection of my terms; but I think it untrue that several of the slave States of the Union have passed laws providing for the sale or re-enslavement of the free colored population within their limits. I may be mistaken in this instance; they have the alternative of expatriating themselves. That may be true; but nevertheless it is true that unless they choose to leave the country in which they were born they will be, under those laws, sold into slavery. I do not intend to be drawn into a discussion of the verbal accuracy of the language of my interrogatory. The question which I wished to raise was, whether, if Virginia or Maryland should adopt such laws as these, in the opinion of the Senator from Virginia it would become the duty of Congress to enact these laws for this District, in pursuance of the idea thrown out by him that we must conform legislation of Congress in relation to the District of Columbia to the general legislation of the slave States surrounding it?

I will admit frankly that we ought not to disturb unnecessarily the laws of this District which were in force previous to its creation by the State of Maryland to the United States; but I do not feel that I am bound to continue in force any unjust law that may be found to have existed here previous to the creation of a law existing here in my judgment unjust, I deem it not only to be my privilege as a Senator here, but my duty to vote for its repeal.

I regard the exclusion of any human creature that lives within a State or a district from the means of mental and moral culture. I cannot, therefore, vote to exclude that class of people from the means of moral and mental culture in this District. This would be unjust to children thus proscribed, and is its inevitable consequences, injurious to the entire community. The Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Bayard) alluded to the injustice of taxing that proscribed people to support schools for the exclusive benefit of the white children. It is true that would be unjust; it would be a kind of legal robbery. But now I inquire of him, if this injustice would not still exist if the amendment which he proposes should be adopted? You propose not only to levy a tax on the property of the District, but also to take out of the Treasury of the United States a sum, which may reach $25,000 a year, to aid in education of the children of this District. How is that tax levied? Indirectly on the earnings of goods brought into this country from abroad. Then, every individual, black as well as white, residing in this District or out of it, who buys hat, or a coat, or a pair of pantaloons, or almost any of the ordinary implements of domestic economy, of husbandry, or of art, pays part of this tax; hence the injustice to which the Senator has referred will still exist. Nearly all of your public revenue is derived from this tax levied on imported goods, and will be paid in part by this class of individuals that are to be excluded, but the end proposed to be attained by the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire, which I have proposed to amend, and which amendment he has accepted, is not merely to avoid this alleged injustice. It has reference to the property—I think I may use a stronger word, to the education of the children of the poor, or supporting a large number of them either in your poor-houses as paupers, or in your jails and penitentiaries as criminals.

It is this necessity that controls my vote—not the alleged injustice of taxing one class to educate the children of another class of people. As I have before stated, you cannot claim support for the bill, as reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, on the ground of private justice between man and man. As a question of justice between man and man, you have no right to compel the rich man to pay of his abundance for the education of the children of the poor. You must justify it on general principles; on the ground of the necessity of the policy for the purpose of avoiding the crime and profligacy and idleness springing up among ignorant and uncultivated people. He is taxed in advance, to prevent crime, rather than afterwards to punish criminals. Hence he loses nothing, and may be the gainer, since this is believed to be the cheaper mode of procedure, and of securing order. And society will be benefited in the increased security of life, and character, and property.

The necessity which has been supposed to exist in some of the slave States for the re-enslavement of the free colored population probably grows out of the injustice, or rather the want of wisdom, in their local laws on the subject of education. They have proscribed their free colored population in these States, as your bill proposes to prescribe them in this District. I doubt not that, in every slave State, every free colored man, woman, and child, is thus proscribed; is excluded from their schools; is without the ordinary means of moral and mental culture; and hence many of them do grow up in ignorance; they become idle, profligate, vicious, and, in the end, multiplied thousands of them become criminals; and, for the safety of society, some of those States have proposed, and I believe have enacted, laws for their re-enslavement; and they justify it on the general principle of self-defense; they must defend society from this general crime that always springs up in ignorant communities. Thus the unjust law, depriving a degraded people of the means of cultivation, call for the enactment of laws which seem to us living out of those States to be exceedingly error. Avoid the first injustice and folly, and the necessity for the latter will never arise. It seems to me that the worst law ever enacted in all the colored children, who are free in this District, to enter schools; not with the white children, but separate schools; let them be educated; as the Senator from Mississippi said, allow them to learn to read the Bible, and multiplied thousands of them will be controlled by its pure principles of morality; your criminal calendars will be diminished; your poor-houses and hospitals and prisons proportionally relieved, and life and property rendered more secure.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I make a last appeal to the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. If you really love the children of your own race more than you love the negro, withdraw these propositions, and let this bill pass. If you are determined to embarrass it with propositions like this, it never can pass.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him the propriety of making an appeal to the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, for there were only two of them that voted even to educate the whites? All but two on the other side voted to strike out the $25,000 to educate the whites.

Mr. BROWN. When I had got the other side to the point of agreeing to educate the white children, seeing that I had no support on this side for educating either whites or blacks, I thought myself justified in appealing to the other side in favor of our own race. This is a proposition to educate white children; and I ask gentlemen to consent to take one proposition at a time, and just think for a moment that these children are dearer to us than the little darkies; let them drop the negro for a little while, and take care of white children.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are only two of you who regard the whites.

Mr. BROWN. But with your assistance we had enough to carry it. [Laughter.] We carried it in favor of white children. There are five thousand of them to-day, by a very slight exercise of the imagination, at the doors of the Senate, imploring you to pass this bill; children of your own blood; of your own complexion; of your own race; and, if you sacrifice this bill, I am entitled, by the terms of the proposition, when you urge this negro question, whatever may be your reason for it, however you may feel convinced in your own heart, that it is repugnant to gentlemen on this side; to urge it is to defame the bill itself; to denounce the proposition is to white children, because you are not allowed to educate the black children. Let us take them one at a time; and as the white boy is better than the black boy in the judgment of some of us, as the white girl is more entitled to our kindness than the black girl, let us take the whites first; let us provide for our own people, precisely as any man would do for his own children in preference to the children of his neighbors; precisely as a man would take care of his own kith and kin in preference to strangers. These white children are of our own race. I appeal to you in their behalf, and I ask you to pass it. It is a bill; let the negro stand aside for a little while, just for this day; take him off the Senate, dear as he may be to you; he can certainly wait until tomorrow, and let this little bill in favor of five thousand undenied whites, I might almost say pauper, children, pass the Senate.

But, said the Senator who was last up, you tax these people; you tax them upon their hats and upon their coats, and upon whatever they consume, and the revenue goes into the national Treasury, and they have a claim upon it. I do not want to raise new issues; but there is not true in all its amplitude. Does not the Indian, when he buys a blanket; does not the Indian, when he buys calico for his squaw; does not the Indian, when he buys anything which is taxed by your country, have a claim upon the national Treasury? But does he, therefore, acquire any interest in the national Treasury? Does not the foreigner traveling on your soil—not only he who comes here to settle among us, but he who comes as a mere visitor—and who buys goods in your country, and carries them away to the revenue of the Government? And yet he acquires no interest in the revenue. I liken these colored people, these negroes, to Indians and foreigners—I mean simply upon the question of taxation; that they purchase, and contribute something by enter into many of the questions that may be discussed; but I look on the amendments which have been offered to the bill as objectionable; and I wish to state my objections as briefly as I can. The object and general scope of the bill, without reference to its particular sections, is to provide for the education of the white race in the District of Columbia, within which the Congress of the United States, under the Constitution, has the power to do so. There are introduced two amendments; one of which on its face purports to place the black race on an equality with the white race; and the other, though not so expressed, as I read it, is the only one which, for that purpose, but to a more limited degree. I only wish to express my own opinion, that if gentlemen residing in the States in which the negro race do not exist in large relative numbers to the white race, choose within their own States to place the negro and the white man on an equality, (whether it be in their public schools, or in their militia, or in all the avocations of life,) with that Congress has nothing to do; with that the citizens of those States in which that race exists in larger relative numbers have nothing to do, and of it they have no right to complain. But, sir, as I read the bill, it is not on this side—what is the certain conviction of my own mind, what I announced to the Senate, I think, in substance, during the discussion on the Kansas-Nebraska bill—that whenever in this country a majority of the people of the majority of the States shall by Federal legislation, attempt throughout the Union, or in any part of the Union, to place the black and the white race on an equality, this Union is gone.

Mr. HARLAN. I desire to ask the Senator a question. If the negro population of this country were all as well educated as the white people, would they then be our equals?

Mr. BAYARD. The honorable Senator is perfectly welcome to ask me the question. I am expressing only an opinion. I do not desire here to enter into an argument on that point, but I will give him my opinion, because I never shrink from the expression of any opinion I entertain where it is proper to express it. Without entering into the question, which I leave to philologists and etymologists, as to whether or not we have two races, I have no shadow of doubt from my own observation of the negro race, of its inferiority. I am no slaveholder; I never expect to be one. I am perfectly willing to admit that in my own State slavery is of very little value and of little moment; yet I could not but recognize that the law of slavery must be maintained there while the relative number of negroes remains in the State so large in proportion to the white population; but it is unnecessary to trouble the Senate with that now. My answer to the honorable Senator is this, from my reading of the history of the past, from my own personal observation of the character of the race, I believe it would be impossible to carry the civilization of the negro race as a race—I do not speak of individual cases—to a point with the white race which would benefit either to them or to the white race. I think that is the main error on the other side. Now, sir, I know very well—

Mr. HARLAN rose.

Mr. BAYARD. I would rather go on with what I have to say, than to trouble the Senate with my make my own remarks afterwards. I did not desire to introduce this question. My opinion is decisive, so far as my own judgment is concerned, that there is no such thing as equality between the negro and the white race; that you cannot make equality education or in any other mode I have seen, perhaps, somewhat more of that race than the honorable Senator from Iowa. I have seen them (probably he has not) where they exist, as they do in my own State, in much larger relative numbers of free negroes than in any population in this Union in proportion to the white population. I have seen them in the State of Maryland. In my boyhood I was in both States. I have been in almost all the States where slavery exists, and in many States where it does not, and where the negroes are in smaller numbers. I shall not be surprised if gentlemen result from taking isolated cases. Sometimes the black man—and generally he is a cross where he does so—has exhibited powers beyond his race; and gentlemen draw from that the deduction that the race is capable of elevation. I have looked at this question of races, I have examined history, and I can find no instance where the black race has ever advanced to anything like ordinary civilization. When I look to the case of Hayti, where they have been freed nearly as long ago as our own Government has been established, with all the advantage of connection with the white race; with all the advantage of example; left to their own government; as far as I can judge of their progress from what accounts from the case of Hayti, they are worse off now in point of civilization than they were when the insurrection of 1798 occurred. They are certainly less productive in their industry than they were then; and, in my judgment, they have exhibited the inferiority of the race as a race for self-government at all. When I look to Jamaica, where they have had the whole pressing power of the Government of Great Britain to sustain the theory of emancipation—and I can easily see why she should so urge it, having taken the step of emancipating them—they have retrograded, both in production and the value of the property hitherto of the island. As a general rule—I will not say there are no exceptions—they have retrograded, as regards the advantages to their race, as a consequence of the British emancipation of 1834.

I am not going to enter into these questions, and discuss them now. I am only expressing my opinions in answer to the Senator. I do not look to individualities; I deal with men as races. I could as lief vote for giving the boys of color the rights and privileges, political and civil, that you give to men at twenty-one, or in some countries at twenty-five, because sometimes you meet a boy of eighteen who has more sense than most men of fifty, as to give great privileges to the negro race, I may mention I have no objection to capacity; when my own experience, in accordance with the history of the world, has shown me that the race, as a race, is incapable of cultivation. I will not enter into all the argument to sustain this view now; I only give my opinion. I do not mean that is exactly the objection I intended to make—I do not consider the racial equal. In the providence of God, why He made the distinction, and when He made it, is one of those matters which it is not for me to enter into. The color of the skin is not considered in the law of God. The difference in the organic structure of the race as affecting their capacity, is far greater and more prominent, though it may not be as obvious to the eye, as the mere distinction of color. As I view the negro race, whenever and however created, I am not disposed to be inquisitive as to how it may have pleased Providence to bring them into the world—is not for me to enter into and discuss here. It is enough for me to know that, in my judgment, the difference exists; that one race is more animal and less intellectual than the other; that one race is incapable of civilization; and if you attempted to carry it to the same extent as the other it would result only in insanity, and I cannot agree to put them on an equality.

By the bill, the honorable Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Bayard) proposes to educate the white race according to what is called the common school system; he proposes to make a governmental education of the white race within the District of Columbia, where we have the power to do so; and he is not content with that, but he would introduce a separate bill for the purpose of also providing proper schools and proper education for the black race within the District. But they say to us—knowing well as they do, from the representation in the Senate, that it is impossible to suppose that, consistent with their opinions and their duty to their constituents, the Senators on this floor who represent slaveholding States would vote for placing the two races upon an equality—they say to us: "The bill shall not pass without these amendments." That is to say, that we will not make an appropriation for the education of the white race without our bringing in the equality of the black race. We are not content to place them upon an equality in our own States by our own legislation; but we will not permit you to do, what it will be denied will be benefited to education by governmental provisions in the District of Columbia, the white race, unless you tack to it the education of the black race, on which we know there is a division of sentiment in this country; and we must press the question of the equality of races on the southern States of this Union." That is the course of gentlemen on the other side, not as regards their own legislation in their own States, where these people exist in very limited numbers; but they mean to press it, wherever they have the power, through the means of Federal legislation. This is the aspect in which I view it; and I repeat, again, that whenever a majority of the people of a majority of the States of the Union are able to pass, by an act of Congress, a law which shall place the negro race, so far as the Federal Government has the power, on a footing of equality with the white race, the Union is gone at once and forever. That is my judgment, and I repeat, therefore, as I value the Union a great deal more than I do raising these political questions of antagonisms connected with races of men, I shall vote against any measure that seeks to assume a power in the Federal Government to equalize the two races in this country.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, the views that I intended to present have been misrepresented, unintentionally I do not doubt. Who has proposed an equality of the negro and white races? It is involved in the proposition submitted by the Senator from Mississippi, that the amendments proposed by me? If it be involved in either of these propositions, I confess I am exceedingly obtuse. In this proposition, the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. Davis) concluded that we were about to propose an equality of the races, and he inquired of him what law of nature it was there that prevents the strong from taking care of the weak; that prevents the powerful, the rich, those who are able, for providing for the education of the ignorant, the poor, the weak, the feeble? The proposition never pending is, that those who are weak, powerless—the superior, the dominant race—shall provide for the protection of those that are feeble and weak and dependent, and at the same time promote their own best interests by guarding in advance against the perpetration of crime and against personal harm.

It does not seem to me that the question of the equality of the races can be involved in the question of the education of either the white or the black. Is it on that principle alone that you provide for the education of the poor, the feeble, the weak? They are all exactly equal with each other. What do Senators mean by the term equality? Do they mean physical equality? Who has proposed to make the negro, by law, as beautiful as the Anglo-Saxon; as symmetrical in his proportions; as capable of civilization as the white race? The Senator has proposed to make him his equal in intellectual development, or in moral sensibilities? Who has proposed to make him his equal in a social point of view? Nobody. Social equality, I suppose, depends on entirely different laws, and on that subject everybody must be a judge for himself.

Will either of those Senators tell me that he will meet on terms of perfect equality every man of his own race, admit every man to his own table, or as a suitable auditor for the hand of his own neighbor, in any company? I apprehend not. What kind of equality is referred to? I suppose that every man in a free country must be left free to choose his own associates; and if a negro be taught to read the Bible, to read for himself the revealed will of God, does he hence necessarily become the social equal of the white man? Of Delaware or the Senator from Mississippi?

Well, is it political equality that is referred to? Who has proposed to make them the equal of the white race in a political point of view? Nobody. At least the party of which I am an humble member has not made any such proposition. They propose, simply, that the strong and dominant race shall provide for the protection of those who are feeble and dependent; those who are their inferiors; and what is there in this that overturns a law of nature? The husband, I apprehend, feels himself more equal to his wife than the strong man does by his acute and powerful intellect, and the moral strength with which the Almighty has clothed him, he is in a certain sense the protector of his own wife and his own offspring. They are regarded equally, in a physical point of view, and in any other respects, as the inferior of our portion of the human family; but merely because the lady may, in a physical point of view, be inferior to her husband, must she thence necessarily be deprived of his protection, and the protection of the laws of the country in which she lives? Because minor the Declaration of Independence, and intimates that he means by that all men are equal; but he immediately announces that there is a difference between the two races.

Mr. WILSON. Well, Mr. President, I believe there are a great many men in the world of the white race inferior to the Senator from Mississippi; and I suppose there are quite a number superior to him; but I believe that if an inferior man and the superior have equal natural rights.

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose the Senator knows what he means. I take it for granted he does; but it is impossible for anybody to get it from his language. I put to him the plain question: whether there was equality of rights under the political institutions of the United States; whether there was political and social equality?

Mr. HARLAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. HARLAN. Do you then believe in the political and social equality of all individuals of the white race?

Mr. DAVIS. I will answer you, yes; the exact political equality of all white men who are citizens of the United States. Their equality may be lost by the commission of crime; but white men, the descendants of the Adamic race, under our institutions, are born equal; and that is the effect of the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. HARLAN. If the Senator will allow me, being a born citizen of Massachusetts, I state the proposition that the Senator from Massachusetts has stated. I inquired as to their social and their political equality.

Mr. DAVIS. Their political equality, I stated, exists, unless it is lost by the commission of crime, or some disqualification which attaches to the individual, not to the race. Their social equality will depend upon a great variety of circumstances, being the result of education and many other contingencies. Those are conventional, not political, rights. They do not belong to the institutions of the country. They may be under his taste. Every man has a right to select his own associates; and he may assert his superiority, and the person he excludes may regard him as an inferior. All that has nothing to do with anything we have any right to concern. This is not a debating society. We are not here to deal in general theories and mere speculative philosophy, but to treat subjects as political questions. The Senator, therefore, has asked me a question which does not belong to the occasion or the place.

But the Senator from Massachusetts, in his bold words, announces that he will speak of this, which I could not get him to define, whenever he pleases, and that we must listen to him as long as he chooses to speak upon it. Now, sir, as long as Massachusetts chooses to assign the Senator a seat here, he has a right to speak. If Massachusetts confers upon him the right to speak, he should be careful that he speaks as becomes the place and the position which he holds. When Balmain's ass talked as a rational being, the miraculous event became matter of record; but rational beings have brayed like asses many a time since Balmain's ass spoke, and no one took note of it.

In all the relations of life a gentleman owes it to himself to avoid giving offense, unless he has first made up his mind that he is responsible for it. We do not need here for the purpose of personal conflict, no more than for the other purposes concerning which I answered the Senator from Iowa. Why should propositions be introduced which it is known are offensive, and bold words spoken about the right to talk, and the obligation of people to hear? A gentleman has no right to give an insult unless he feels himself bound to answer for it. There is no man with true respect for himself who will ever give offense, unless he is willing to answer for it. I can feel but little respect for that character of conscience which permits a man to give offense but does not permit redress.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish to ask the gentleman one question, if he will permit me.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. COLLAMER. It is in relation to his last proposition; and the question is whether he really holds that a gentleman has a right to insult another if he will answer for it?

Mr. DAVIS. I will say to the Senator he has no right.

Mr. COLLAMER. I understood the gentleman to say so.

Mr. DAVIS. I weave the words; and now say, but if he does commit an offense against the feelings of a gentleman, he then redeems, as far as may be, that offense by giving him redress.

Mr. COLLAMER. I understand the gentleman aright; but he qualifies it somewhat. I take it that he does not really mean to be understood as saying that a gentleman has a right to insult another anywhere, not even if he will answer for it.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly the right to aggress does not exist. I believe I have answered the question that one redeems that breach of another's rights by giving him redress.

Mr. COLLAMER. That is to say, if a gentleman intentionally insults me, I am to invite him out that he may shoot me, and that is called satisfaction.

Mr. DAVIS. It may be.

Mr. COLLAMER. That is logic I do not comprehend.

Mr. DAVIS. That may be. I put to the Senator a question.

Mr. COLLAMER. I did not hear it.

Mr. DAVIS. I say I will put it. Do you feel you can use offensive language to another, and then plead your conscience in bar of giving him redress?

Mr. COLLAMER. I desire to answer that question, but I cannot do so, because I will misunderstand each other, and hardly hold different sentiments about it. I answer that I understand no gentleman has a right to insult another at all.

Mr. DAVIS. Grant it.

Mr. COLLAMER. And he is no gentleman if he does. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. That is going a little too far, because men of hot temper sometimes do. I would not write the gentleman a blackguard on account of a hot temper, and I know he is a man of impetuosity.

Mr. COLLAMER. That may be true. I do not call that statement an offense, because there is too much truth in it. My understanding about this subject is this: I regard an intentional insult as an act of a gentleman. I think we shall hardly disagree in that.

Mr. DAVIS. No; if it is deliberate and wanton.

Mr. COLLAMER. That is what I mean. Now, a man may commit an offense of that character in haste and inconsiderately. Such a man should immediately, whenever occasion and reflection come to him, give satisfaction by an apology. That is what a gentleman will do—not satisfaction by persisting in it intentionally, but satisfaction by apology, and as publicly as the offense was made, if it is asked. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. DAVIS. And then, if he makes an apology, if it is cordial, he takes care not to do the same thing again; so that he does not come into the Senate and use defiant language, and in defiant tone, either that he shall make an apology or retract it.

Mr. COLLAMER. Mr. President, I remember when, I suppose, that to which the gentleman alludes may have taken place. I simply took up the statement I understood him to make, to which I have alluded. I know nothing about the transaction to which the gentleman alludes.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no doubt the Senator and myself generally concur in the view which he presents. I certainly would not hold my man justifiable in wantonly wounding the feelings of another.

Mr. DURKEE. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Mississippi, and it is a practical question: whether he is opposed to the colored people of the District educating themselves?

Mr. DAVIS. I did not hear the question.

Mr. DURKEE. Are you opposed to leaving the colored population to educate themselves by law?

Mr. DAVIS. Oh, no. I have no objection to their having any education of which they are susceptible.

Mr. DURKEE. That is a practical question before the Senate, and I thought I would ask the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. My remarks were first directed to a constitutional point; to a point of political power. I denied the right of Congress to take money from the Treasury and distribute it to the schools of the District.

Mr. COLLAMER. I wish to ask the gentleman a question: whether he thinks it is in the power of Congress to take money from the Treasury for the education of any children?

Mr. DAVIS. That was the proposition I was going to make, and I shall not surrender the power of Congress to take money from the Treasury for the benefit of the schools in the District of Columbia. Then I denied the fitness, the propriety, the decency, and the fraternity, of attempting to put negro children and white upon the same level, and to tax us to educate the negro children of this District; that one was a social offense, while the other was an offense against political law. I met the two questions, as founded upon fundamental error: the first, in attempting to put the races upon an equality, and the other, in attempting to use the powers of this Government for eleemosynary purposes, either in the District or out of it. My objections were general. They went to the whole proposition. I was not sustaining the bill, and warning upon the amendment of the Senator from New York. I did not consider them both objectionable, but for different reasons, and so stated when first on the floor of the Senate.

But, Mr. President, these objections to what I considered an offense against the law of nature, and against the Constitution of the United States, were not based upon the principle of inequality about the right of individuals and the obligations of humanity. I doubt not the Senator from Massachusetts could, much nearer home than the District of Columbia, find objects for his humanity. If the newspapers have spoken truly of the long procession of men of war, and of children suffering for want of bread, and deprived of labor by which to obtain it, he might in the village of his own residence find objects more meet to receive, and having higher claims upon his humanity than the negro children of the District of Columbia.

But this is a cheap humanity, which finds in the Treasury of the United States the source upon which to draw for its gratification; and that is a cheap philosophy, too, which announces "do unto others as you would others should do unto you," and makes the application of it in violation of those rights of others which it is the duty of every man, as a social being, as well as a member of the political community, to respect. I know that we maximize that rule upon which is founded nearly the whole theory of obligation man to man, has been tortured into a justification of theft—stealing people's negroes, on the ground that they should do unto the negroes as you would the negroes should do unto you; but I do not believe a negro would steal him. It would be a bad bargain for him. These maxims, universal in their application, are tortured from their true meaning to justify outrage, not only upon constitutional right, but upon moral obligations.

If Senators had thought proper to confine their operations, in educating negro children, to their own section, I have no objection to be projected to it; I know of no one who has ever expressed any fear about it. I know of no authority by which the Senator speaks of the fear of southern men if the negroes are taught to read. The Senator from Virginia has well said that there are conditions of society in which it became improper for them to read, and that those are questions of which each community may judge; but that condition results in no small degree from the corrupt tendency, the vicious purposes of those who are the authors of such a policy.

If there were no incendiary publications to be put into the hands of the negroes; if they came truly, as they now fictitiously attempt to present the question in the United States Senate, with the Word of God in their hands, and had come to read, I have no objection to their having any objection to educating the negro children.

The Senator from Virginia has no doubt seen often, as well in the family circle as in the parish church, a class of negroes taught the great truths of the Bible; taught prayers orally. The man must want to be a cotton seedling who does not perceive that the owner of slaves will desire them to understand the great maxims of rectitude which that holy book contains. It is his interest, if he had no higher motive to prompt him. It is a book not needed against them. Many of them read it, and very imperfectly; and comprehend it scarcely at all when they do read it. They learn it only when explained to them by those who are able to comprehend and to communicate its meaning. Senators must not be surprised at this, for it is true of almost all people everywhere that they pore over the Bible and spell it out, and comprehend but little of its meaning; but there is no apprehension of negroes who thus spell out the Bible being rendered worse to the master, and I know of no one who has any fear of their reading the holy truths of that sacred book.

But, sir, when men employ their time in writing tracts, in publishing newspapers, to indoctrinate crime into the negroes—to teach them to commit arson and theft and murder—then there is a reason growing out of the crimes of our neighbors which imposes it upon us, as a duty of self-protection, to prevent the negroes from reading, as the means of shutting out your unholy work. That is the fact, as it presents itself, and that, I imagine, is the foundation of all the objection which has existed to their being taught to read. Nor is the objection as general as the Senator supposes. Even the legislation to which he refers, in a few States where it exists, has never been carried to the point of forbidding them to read; but I tell the Senator what, perhaps, he does not know, that he has scarcely found any State in which he will not find many negroes who can read, and who can write a little, too. We would not allow any visionary person to come there and establish a school to teach the negroes, where he should suspect the motive of such an individual. We should expect that his trunk packed with those seditious publications, the purpose of which is to incite an ignorant population to the commission of crime.

My colleague has remarked, in relation to this bill, what seems to be true of every question which is brought to the Senate: that of purpose, plain as it is, cannot be executed because Senators insist upon mingling with every proposition the discussion of the negro question. If this Government had been instituted by the negro instead of the white man, the subject of the negro race could not be a more interminable one of discussion. I have heard no question yet discussed as a grant political and constitutional question during the present session of the Senate, but in every instance, sooner or later, and generally by a single vote, they play upon the subject of the negro race of property which is held in the southern States. Do we expect, Senators, to maintain the Government which we have sworn to support, in this manner? Do we expect to legislate for the general welfare? Do we expect to transmit to posterity the rich inheritance we have received by a course like this? Do we hope from old legislation to eliminate what is wrong? Do we hope from passing events to determine what is required in the future? It cannot be done when every controversy is one of a personal character, and every argument is one levelled at the Senator who is present, and not at the welfare of the people of the United States.

I should not have voted for the bill if the amendment had not been offered, and for the reasons which I have stated. Nor do I believe, to come down to the question as one of practice, that the indigent white children of this District, those who most need free instruction, are within the limits of the cities of Washington and Georgetown. They are outside of them. The dark race is one that surrounds these cities, and those who are to have the benefit of your grant of land and of money. If the power claimed by the proposed legislation had been delegated; if it were constitutional, it would be a question of expediency which gentlemen have thought proper to torture into one of sound policy.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has chosen to indulge in remarks to which I feel it my duty here and now to reply. The Senator talks about tones, about manner, about language. Who is more accustomed than the Senator to speak in tones of exultation and superiority on this floor? Who is more accustomed than that Senator, in his manner and intercourse here, to give offence to members of this body? Who is more accustomed than himself to use language unworthy of the Senate of the United States?

Mr. LANE. Mr. President—
Mr. WILSON. I beg your pardon; I do not give way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) Does the Senator from Massachusetts give any to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WILSON. I do not wish to be interrupted.

Mr. LANE. Very well.

Mr. WILSON. Sir, the Senator, while addressing the Senate in a tone and manner that every man on this side of the Chamber who listened to him had a right to feel as wrong, not to say any unkind, and if we were to suppose that he and others were to sit here and listen to our discussions of negro equality. There was something in his tone and manner that seemed to me a rebuke of Senators on this side of the Chamber, and for one I did not choose to be rebuked by that Senator then or now. In reply to that question, I said that so long as the Senator remained here he must listen to these questions when we chose to discuss them. I did not know that there was anything in my tone or manner or my language as to the Senator. It was not so intended. My language was intended to be plain and explicit, but not to wound his feelings; and if I had known that there was anything in my tone or manner that would have done so, I would have chosen to speak upon some other subject. I will not wish here, now, or at any other time, to wound the feelings of any Senator; and no one would regret doing so more than myself.

But, sir, the Senator goes on and uses language, and in a tone and manner that seem to be in the nature of a lecture to me, as to the Senator, and what I have advocated on this floor. The record is made. I am ready to leave the record of my sentiments avowed here to-day to the country—to the civilized, Christian, and enlightened men. I am ready to let my sentiments and my sentiments be known to the American people, and let them see which are most in harmony with the laws of nature, the laws of God, and the laws of a refined and Christian civilization. I shall not shrink from the judgment of the country. The gentleman is accustomed to come into this Chamber and to bring the teachings, the philosophy of a slave system, and blurt that into the face of Christian and civilized men, and when we rebuke it, or rather when we oppose it, lectures are read to us—to men who stand upon eternal principles, upon Christian principles taught in this Chamber, and taught in nature, taught by the experience of all mankind. Sir, this slave system, whenever and wherever it has existed in all times, and in all lands, has taught nothing that elevates or ennobles humanity. Christian men, who believe that God made man in His own image, are against you, and against your system, and you know it; and yet, because we propose to educate a few poor colored children in this District Senators say that we are insulting them.

Great God! does it come to this, that in the Senate of the United States, because we want to educate in the District of Columbia, where we have exclusive jurisdiction, a couple of thousand of poor black boys and girls, we are to be told we insult the Senators of the United States? This is language to be ashamed of. I do not wish to let the humane current of an advancing and Christian civilization spread over this continent, and to correct their own errors, and not come here and complain of us, and taunt us with having insulted them. Insult a Senator of this Christian land, of this democratic Republic, by proposing to aid poor little black boys and girls to read the ten commandments, the Lord's prayer, and the invitation of our Savior to let little children come to him!

The Senator talks about a responsibility. Sir, the Senator from this country has branded his own code to which he has referred as a crime. As a law-abiding man I cannot resort to it. The law of God has put its brand upon it, and I will not accept it. I am here and now to Senators, that while I repudiate that code, I shall not shrink from attacking the Senator who has accepted, and to accept the full responsibility of them, and I shrink from nothing that is legal and right in their vindication. I think it is time to stop this talk in the Senate of the United States about this barbarous code of the duello. I do not want it flung in my face, and no Senator shall thrust it in my face with the idea that because I do not accept it I am not to use on this floor the language that becomes a Senator or a man. The Senator says I am responsible for the manner in which I use language here. I admit the responsibility. The debates in this body and the experience of these members will show you I have been most careful as to that Senator in language, in manner, and in tone. I did not intend to say an offensive word to the Senator in my remarks, and I had no idea that I had done so; but the remarks made by him in reply were wholly and entirely unjustifiable, and unworthy of the body in which he sits.

Mr. DAVIS. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. WILSON. I say the remarks made by the Senator from Mississippi, in reply to the observations made by myself, were uncalled for, unjust to me, unworthy of this Senate, and of himself. I seek no controversy with that Senator. I would not seek to wound his feelings, or those of any other Senator; but I cannot permit him unrebuked to lecture me or to tell me, when I utter a word upon this floor that he chooses to refer to, that I am not responsible to a code that my country has branded as criminal.

The Senator says I had better look in my own neighborhood; to my neighbors and friends. I do look to them, and I say at home and abroad, at all times and on all occasions, wherever I can give a vote, and wherever I see the Senate, and of himself. I seek no controversy with that Senator. I would not seek to wound his feelings, or those of any other Senator; but I cannot permit him unrebuked to lecture me or to tell me, when I utter a word upon this floor that he chooses to refer to, that I am not responsible to a code that my country has branded as criminal.

But let me say to Senators that the suffering or starvation which they imagine, does not exist there, and that, as a whole, the State of Massachusetts is now in a high state of prosperity, almost unexampled in the history of this country. It is with all the advantages of the South, and New England is prosperous in almost every branch of business in an eminent degree. In one branch of business it is not so, owing to plagues and obvious causes of a temporary character which will soon pass away, and are now passing away. Massachusetts is prosperous in almost every branch of industry; but in the boot, shoe, and leather trade—a trade of great importance—it is not, and has not been for more than one year, in a prosperous condition. The intelligent and independent workmen of this industry, animated by a desire to increase the wages of labor, have engaged in a strike; and the whole not wholly successful, the signs of improvement are visible. If political partisans, or men who predict the failure of free society, hope to make anything by the movement of the shoe and leather trade, they are destined to be sadly mistaken.

The Senator says it is cheap to vote money out of the Treasury of the United States. Sir, there is something higher and nobler in the action of an American Senator than saving a few dollars. I believe in economy in the Government; but I believe the Government has something to do besides supporting penitentiaries and supporting armies; that here in this District our policy should be to educate, and enlighten, and alleviate the burdens of the people, and to have a country where we should be proud to look upon. Therefore, I support this measure that has been so ably advocated by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Senator from Mississippi, (Mr. Brown,) and I support this measure as an ability and as a nobleness that command my admiration and respect.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Massachusetts says, in the manner and tone employed by him, he had no purpose to be offensive or disrespectful. That is a statement that is true; and yet it is strange, indeed, that whilst the Senator makes it, he precedes and follows it by language which, in the school in which I have been reared, would be deemed offensive. It may be overdone, perhaps, to the different standard to which we have been taught to bring things for measurement. I have said, however, that it is enough for me to know that it is not intended to be offensive. He cannot be less willing to have controversy with me than I am with him. I would greatly prefer with him, as with everybody else, to have easy and friendly intercourse in our official relations. There are differences of sentiment which are becoming every hour more and more repellant, and there is no need to precipitate the consequences which they may bring about. When gentlemen do not mean to be offensive, it is surely to be regretted if their language or their manners should be such as to provoke resentful replies. I do not see the use of denouncing the hazard that a man may encounter when there is no hazard to him.

When nobody denies the right of a Senator to speak on any subject which is before the Senate, in a manner becoming the body of which he is a member, I see no reason in assuming the possession of that right, as though he were defying some danger to which he was exposed, if he should exercise it. It is unnecessary for a man to gird up his loins when he is going to bed. Thus we are led to misunderstand his meaning. I have only to say now, that if I could, I am disappointed the Senator, as it appears he intended me to appreciate him, I surely should have had nothing in reply to say to him which he could have considered in any degree offensive.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 12, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, Mr. Prayer by Rev. JENK CHAMBERS, of Philadelphia. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BILLS UPON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. WHITELEY. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the Senate bills upon the Speaker's table. My only object is, that they shall be taken up, and referred to the appropriate committees.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I object.

— PENSION LAW.

Mr. DUELL. I move that the House take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which House joint resolution No. 16, giving a construction to the second section of the act of February 3, 1853, "to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRANCH. If that joint resolution was introduced under the understanding that, after it was referred, it should not be again brought into the House by a motion to reconsider, I object.

The bill was read. It provides that the second section of "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved February 3, 1853, shall be construed to extend pensions to the widows in said section described, from the 4th of March, 1848, pursuant to the decision of the Court of Claims in the case of Jane Smith; and that all pensions accruing to such widows between the 4th of March, 1848, and the 3d of February, 1853, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the certificate of the Commissioner of Pensions, issued as in other cases of revolutionary pensions; provided, that no pension shall be allowed to any widow, under this resolution, for the same time during which the husband for whose service she claims was living and in the receipt of a pension.

Mr. DUELL. I think that there can be no objection to that resolution. I want its provisions to go before the House and the country. It explains itself.

Mr. HOUSTON. How does that bill come in?

The SPEAKER. It came up on a motion to reconsider. There is some misapprehension on the subject, however. The resolution was introduced under a rule which forbids a motion to reconsider, unless with unanimous consent.

Mr. BRANCH. Then I object to its consideration.

Mr. DUELL. I want the House to understand its provisions, and I give notice that I will call it up as early a day as possible.

Mr. BRANCH. That resolution must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, under the rules, for the reason that it makes an appropriation in express terms.

Mr. HOUSTON. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the bill cannot be taken up on a motion to reconsider, if objection be made.

GEORGIA AND FLORIDA BOUNDARIES.

Mr. WHITELEY. I understand that there is now on objection to the proposition I made, that the House proceed to the consideration of the bills upon the Speaker's table, for reference only.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I must insist on my objection, unless the gentleman from Delaware will withdraw the objection he made to my resolution in reference to improvements in agriculture.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I trust that there will be no objection to the proposition made by the gentleman from Delaware.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois. I do not withdraw my objection.

Mr. FENTON. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. GILMER. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. DAVIDSON. It will be better for the House to understand that we shall now take from the Speaker's table the bills of the Senate for reference to the appropriate committees. There are a large number of private bills there which had better be disposed of at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRANCH. I have no objection, if it be the understanding that they are not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. COBB. I object to the understanding being imperative that none of them shall be considered in the House, for there is an important bill upon the Speaker's table which ought to be considered at this time.

Mr. HOUSTON. If my colleague will withdraw his objection to taking bills from the Speaker's table for reference with the understanding that they are not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider, nobody else will object to that course. I prefer it to any other mode for the disposition of these Senate bills.

Mr. COBB. Let me state my purpose. There is a Senate bill upon the Speaker's table which ought to be considered and passed at this time.

It is a bill in which the United States and the State of Georgia are interested. It is in reference to the boundary between Georgia and Florida. There is a great deal of conflict of title which ought to be quieted. This bill quiets the title and settles the matter. I am glad that that bill shall be taken up and passed, I will not object to the proposition that we shall go to the Speaker's table and take up the remaining Senate bills for reference. I do not want the bill I have indicated to be referred. There is no use in referring it; for the Committee on Public Lands have already informally considered it, and its provisions are so palpably right, that they unanimously favor its passage.

I ask that the bill be taken up and considered to-day. It has laid on the table until it is already old.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I propose that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, and take up the Senate bills in their order, with a view to their reference to the appropriate committees, with the exception of the bill to which the gentleman from Alabama has alluded.

Mr. COBB. If the House will take up the bill I have indicated, and put it upon its passage, I will withdraw all objection to the proposition which has been made. Otherwise I must object.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to taking the bill, and disposing of it? It is the first bill in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. FENTON. I would inquire what effect this course is to have upon the morning hour? Is it to come out of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not yet commenced.

The bill, which was read, provides that whenever the dividing line between the States of Georgia and Florida shall have been finally surveyed, approved, ratified, and confirmed, as the boundary between these States, the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to adjudicate, upon principles of equity and justice, all claims under sales or grants by the State of Georgia to lands which may fall within the State of Florida; and all of said claims which may be approved by him shall be ratified and confirmed, provided that the State of Georgia shall first ratify and confirm all sales and grants made by the United States of lands in Florida which may fall within the limits of the State of Georgia, under the final adjustment of the boundary line aforesaid.

Mr. COBB. I can state the purpose of the bill; and then, if the House chooses, they can hear the correspondence upon the subject by the Secretary of the Interior, who recommends the passage of this bill. I have had the subject informally before the Committee on Public Lands, and they are unanimously in favor of its passage. The boundary between the States of Georgia and Florida has heretofore been a doubtful question; and the Government of the United States has sold lands, since the last adjustment of that line, which really belonged to the State of Georgia. When there is a portion of country which was supposed to be within the limits of Georgia, which really falls within the jurisdiction of Florida. Upon that portion of land which Georgia disposed of, perhaps half a century ago, settlers have been living for many years; and upon the probability of this character is passed, these titles will be rendered doubtful upon a readjustment of the boundary. Should lands that have been granted by Georgia be found, on the final adjustment of the boundary between the two States, to lie in Florida, they would, in the present state of the law, be considered as lands of the United States, and the Government would not recognize sales thereof that had been made by the State of Georgia. An act of Congress is necessary to confirm such sales or grants. The bill contains a proviso that the State of Georgia should ratify and confirm all sales or grants of lands along the line made by the United States, as of lands in Florida, but which, by the final survey of the boundary, may be thrown within the limits of Georgia.

There being no objection, the bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I now insist upon my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is no objection to taking up and referring the bills upon the Speaker's table.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask leave to report to the House, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, a joint resolution of the Senate relating to the Louisville and Portland Canal, with a recommendation that it do pass; and I ask that the House will take it up now, and act upon it. It is a matter of public interest to the whole country, and one in which the whole Ohio valley is as deeply interested as in any measure that can come before this House. The resolution proposes no appropriation of money out of the Treasury; but simply confirms upon the heads of directors of the canal authority to enlarge it, to cut, to build a branch, so as to make that work subserve the great purpose for which it was originally constructed.

Mr. FENTON. I must insist upon carrying out the understanding of the House, which was, proposed to the business upon the Speaker's table, and take up and refer the Senate bills.

HARLEM RIVER.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the President of the United States, in compliance with a resolution of the House of March 20, 1860, requesting him to transmit to the House all information in the possession of the officer in charge of the Coast Survey, showing the practicability of making Harlem river navigable for commercial purpoases, and the expenses thereof, transmitting a report from the Secretary of the Treasury containing the desired information; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES OF LAND OFFICES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, pursuant to the seventh section of the act of 18th August, 1855, an estimate for certain expenses for district land offices; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

AFFAIRS IN OREGON.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the War Department, transmitting correspondence with General Harney touching affairs in Oregon; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORY OF MINNESOTA.

Mr. GILMER. I rise to a question of privilege, and it will detain the House but a moment. It was referred by this House to the Committee of Elections to determine whether the Territory of Minnesota is entitled to a Delegate upon this floor. The Committee of Elections lack information, and they have directed me to propose the following resolution, and ask for its adoption:

Whereas it is claimed that that portion of the Territory of Minnesota not included in the State of Minnesota still remains a Territory, and the act thereof entitled to have a Delegate in the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, all such information as he may possess in reference to the existence of any such Territory.

Mr. GARTRELL. If I understand the preamble, it states that the Territory of Minnesota is entitled to a Delegate.

Mr. McKNIGHT. Oh no; it is only claimed that the Territory is entitled to a Delegate.

Mr. GILMER. The Committee of Elections want information as to what is the state of things there.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. If I understand the preamble, there is a distinct and substantive assertion that that portion of Minnesota not within the State boundaries is an organized Territory.

Mr. GILMER. The preamble only states that it is so claimed.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the preamble will be rejected. The resolution is sufficient.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I ask that the preamble may be read once more.

The preamble was again read.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. There is no objection.

The resolution was then agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The House proceeded to take from the Speaker's table the following Senate bills; which were severally read a first and second time, and referred as indicated below:

An act (No. 309) for the relief of Thomas Allen, and to the Committee of Claims.

Joint resolution (No. 24) for the compensation of Rev. R. R. Richards, late chaplain to the United States penitentiary in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURNETT. The bill makes an appropriation of only $300, I believe, for the payment of this minister for the discharge of his duties at the penitentiary. The case has been before the Committee for the District of Columbia, and has been favorably passed upon; but it has been hanging in the air for some time. I believe there was no difference of opinion on the subject between the two Committees for the District of Columbia at the last and this session. I ask to have it put upon its passage.

Mr. ELLIOT. I object.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

An act (No. 148) concerning courts in the Territories—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

An act (No. 229) for the relief of Angelina C. Bowman, widow of Francis L. Bowman, late captain in the United States Army—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 256) for the relief of Thomas L.

Diashroon, of St. Louis county, Missouri—to the Committee on Public Lands.

An act (No. 285) for the relief of William B. Shubrick—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

An act (No. 373) for the relief of William P. Bowhay—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 375) to extend the provisions of an act approved March 3, 1851, entitled "An act to limit the liabilities of ship-owners, and for other purposes," to the lakes—to the Committee on Commerce.

A resolution (No. 15) for the relief of Lieutenant John C. Carter—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A resolution (No. 51) for the relief of James Macaboy—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 87) for the relief of Lee Deatherage, and John Deatherage, or their legal representatives—to the Committee on Public Lands.

An act (No. 98) for the relief of Olivia W. Cannon, widow of Joseph W. Cannon, late a midshipman in the United States Navy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 113) for the relief of Eli W. Goff—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 119) for the relief of A. M. Mitchell, late colonel of Ohio volunteers in the Mexican war—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

An act (No. 120) for the relief of William Wallace, of Illinois—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 123) for the relief of Elizabeth Spear—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 124) for the relief of Nancy M. Gansley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 126) for the relief of Michael Nourse—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 127) for the relief of John Robb—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 128) for the relief of Asbury Dickinson—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 130) for the relief of Richard Fitzpatrick—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 134) for the relief of James Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 135) for the relief of Cornelius Boyle, administrator of John Boyle, deceased—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 143) for the relief of Francis Hüttman—to the Committee on Commerce.

An act (No. 144) for the relief of Jeremiah Pendragon, of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 145) for the relief of Otway H. Berrygan—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

An act (No. 151) for the relief of Ebenezer Ricker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 154) for the relief of Randall Pegg—to the Committee on Patents.

An act (No. 169) for the relief of Elijah R. Merrill—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 170) for the relief of H. H. Howard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 174) for the relief of William Money—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 175) for the relief of George Phelps—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 176) for the relief of R. W. Clarke—to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman who objected to the motion which I made a short time since has withdrawn his objection; and I hope the House will now consent to take up and put upon its passage the bill which I reported from the Committee on Roads and Canals for the benefit of the Louisville and Portland canal.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I object, until we have got through with the Senate bills on the Speaker's table. I will then agree to it.

An act (No. 177) for the relief of John R. Nourse, and others—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 182) for the relief of Nicholas Underhill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 183) for the relief of Cornelius Hughes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 184) for the relief of Rebecca A. Correll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 185) for the relief of Mrs. Ann P. Derrick, widow of W. S. Derrick, deceased—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 186) for the relief of Mills Judson, son of the late bond of the late Farmer Andrew D. Crosby—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

An act (No. 187) for the relief of Henry G. Carson, administrator of Curtis Grubb, deceased—to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

An act (No. 189) for the relief of Franklin Pease—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 191) to provide for the quieting of certain land titles in the late disputed territory in the State of Maine, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Public Lands.

An act (No. 195) for the relief of the legal representatives of James J. Bell, deceased—to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

An act (No. 198) for the relief of F. M. Gannell, passed assistant surgeon in the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

An act (No. 206) for the relief of Emilie G. Jones, executrix of Thomas P. Jones, deceased, and Nancy M. Johnson, administratrix of Walter R. Johnson, deceased—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 207) for the relief of James L. Edwards, administrator of R. Thomas Gedney, deceased—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 210) for the relief of Augustus H. Evans—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 172) concerning the courts of the United States in the district of Arkansas—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

An act (No. 181) for the relief of Mary Walbach, widow of the late Brevet Brigadier General John De B. Walbach, United States Army—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 346) for the relief of Joseph Pattee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (No. 378) to relinquish the title of the United States to certain lands occupied by the city of Baton Rouge, in Louisiana—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

An act (No. 387) for the relief of certain actual owners on lands granted to the State of Arkansas for railroad purposes—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A resolution (No. 27) authorizing a settlement of the accounts of John R. Bartlett, late commissioner of the United States to run and mark the boundary between the United States and Mexico, and for other purposes—to the Committee of Claims.

An act (No. 82) to amend the fourth section of the act for the admission of Oregon into the Union, so as to extend the time for selecting salt springs and contiguous lands in Oregon—to the Committee on Public Lands.

An act (No. 188) for the relief of the surviving grandchildren of Colonel William Thompson, of the revolutionary army of South Carolina—to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask leave now to report, from the Committee on Roads and Canals, with a view of putting it upon its passage, resolution S. No. 6, authorizing the enlargement of, and the construction of a branch to the Louisville and Portland canal.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of the resolution. I do not think that any gentleman will be called for from me. I will not, therefore, trespass on the time of the House, but will call the previous question upon it.

Mr. BRANCH. I am not familiar with the principle involved in this resolution. I would rather that the gentleman from Kentucky should explain it.

Mr. MALLORY. I can explain it in a moment or two.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MALLORY. I move to suspend the rules, so that the resolution may be acted on.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is not in order. The resolution will be considered now by unanimous consent.

Mr. MALLORY. I then ask the unanimous consent of the House to consider it.

Mr. BURNETT. I appeal to gentlemen to let the resolution come before the House. If they do not see proper to suspend the rules, they will have an opportunity of voting against it. It certainly does not require any extraordinary consideration. Let the question come before the House, and if any gentleman wants the yeas and nays he may have them so far as I can assist him to obtain them. It is simply a question whether we will authorize the directors of that company to enlarge the canal in such a manner as shall not pledge the faith of the United States.

Mr. BRANCH. I ask the gentleman whether the whole of that property does not belong to the Government?

Mr. MALLORY. No, sir; it does not. I will tell the gentleman how it is held. The property is held by a corporation for the benefit of western commerce. It is essentially held by the Government; but it must be so held as will subserve the purposes of commerce. By the act of 1842, the whole work was transferred to the Government, absolutely, upon certain conditions; and one of those conditions is, that the canal shall be made available to the commerce of the West. The Government of the United States is a stockholder to the amount of about five hundred thousand dollars, and has received its dividends regularly up to this time. A portion of the revenue which sustains the Government has thus been raised by a tax upon western commerce. Now, sir, it is proposed that the Government shall give up its interest in that way, in order that the commerce of the Ohio valley may be freed from this tax.

Mr. BRANCH. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky just one question. Is it not a fact that this canal has cost the Government about five hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir; the Government has taken cost to about that amount.

Mr. BRANCH. And, if I do not misunderstand this bill, it provides, in the case, I suppose, that, after this enlargement shall have been made, the tolls shall be reduced to such a rate as shall merely defray the cost of keeping it in order. In other words, it provides that the Government shall relinquish its interest in the work.

Mr. MALLORY. That is true. That feature of the bill was placed upon it in the Senate, upon the motion, I believe, of Mr. TOOMBS, of Georgia.

Mr. BRANCH. I do not know but this bill may be all correct, but it involves a matter of some importance; and I would give you my opinion, and would postpone its consideration for an hour, to give me an opportunity to look into it. I may be satisfied that it is a just and proper measure. I dislike to object to it, if it is for me.

Mr. MALLORY. Can I make an arrangement by which I can leave the House for an hour?

Mr. BRANCH. If the gentleman will withdraw his application, he will have just the same opportunity of bringing up the bill then that he has now.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman cannot bring up his bill now except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MALLORY. I am aware of that. Mr. BRANCH. I think the gentleman from Kentucky had better withdraw his application now and make it at some other time. I desire very much to examine the question before I consent that it shall be brought before the House in this manner.

Mr. MALLORY. I think I can make an explanation in a minute that will satisfy the gentleman from North Carolina. Under the laws as they exist, the Government has purchased nearly the entire stock of the company; but the whole amount has been repaid out of the dividends made, and the Government has received an excess over the amount of some twenty-four thousand dollars.

Mr. BRANCH. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Government has been reimbursed for all it has invested in this canal?

Mr. MALLORY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANCH. Then I shall make no objection to the bill, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. MALLORY. I think there will be no objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects; and the bill, therefore, cannot be brought before the House.

TERRITORY OF MINNESOTA—A GAIN.

Mr. MILLSON. I rise to a question of privilege. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House a few minutes ago passed the following resolution:

Whereas it is claimed that the portion of the Territory of Minnesota not included within the State of Minnesota still remains an organized Territory, and the residents thereof are entitled to have a Delegate in the House of Representatives—Therefor,

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, all such information as he may possess in relation to the existence of such Territory.

When the resolution was introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. GILMER,] it occurred to me that it was adopting a course which the circumstances of the case would hardly warrant; but as no one objected, or suggested any opposition to it, I preferred to consider it a little upon it before acting upon the views which suggested themselves to my own mind. Further reflection, however, has satisfied me that such a resolution would be regarded by the President as a very extraordinary one. It seems that we are calling upon the President to give this House all the information in his possession as to the existence of the Territory of Minnesota.

Now, it really seems to me that this is purely a legal question. If there be any doubt as to the existence of the Territory of Minnesota, it has been established by the action of this House itself; and it is not at all proper, as it seems to me, to call on the President of the United States to determine this legal doubt.

I hold, Mr. Speaker, that where a Territory is organized and a State afterwards admitted into the Union out of a portion of that Territory, the law admitting the State is, ipso facto, a repeal of the law establishing the Territory. That has always been the construction given to such laws. When Missouri was admitted into the Union as a State, the territory included within her limits did not include one third the population embraced within the limits of the Territory of Missouri. Yet the Territory of Missouri was considered as destroyed by the admission of the State of Missouri.

But, however, this may be, it is purely a legal question. If there is any doubt about the question, let it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to settle it and resolve the doubt; but do not let us call upon the President of the United States to give us all the information in his possession as to the existence of a Territory, which, in fact, if there be such a Territory in existence at all, it is in consequence of our legislation; and if the Territory has been destroyed, it has been destroyed by our legislation. Believing that this is not a proper subject of inquiry by the President, I move to amend the resolution by which it was adopted, with a view of affording an opportunity of making such modification as the circumstances may require.

Mr. GILMER. I care nothing at all about this resolution; but I have not been able to see the difficulties which my friend from Virginia discovers. It seems to me that he is a little particular upon the subject. It simply calls upon the President for such information as he may have in his possession.

Mr. MILLSON. I am not at all particular; but I think it is probably, but possibly—The President may regard it as a request to call upon him for all the information in his possession in regard to the effect of the laws we have passed.

Mr. GILMER. Nothing of that kind was intended. I presume that the gentleman from the House, except my friend from Virginia, ever had any such idea. If my friend will consult the authorities to which he refers, he will find that their bearing is different from that he alleges. In the case of Ohio, the territory remaining outside of the State limits was considered by the House as still existing under the government of the organic territorial act; and, sir, under that action of the House, a Delegate presented himself here and took a seat upon this floor. Such was the action in the case of Michigan and Wisconsin. Here a Territory, called Minnesota, has been admitted into the Union as a State, but the limits of the State are not those of the previous Territory. Now, sir, it is a very grave question whether the territorial act does not apply to the territory outside of the State limits and within the limits of the Territory of Minnesota with the same force and effect that it did previous to the admission of the State of Minnesota? It is not so plain a matter as my friend from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] supposes. While it is a fact that no Governor and no judges have been appointed for the Territory by the President of the United States, yet, sir, the people there have adhered to and still adhere to the idea that they are an organized Territory, under the former act of Congress. They believe, and have believed, that they have all the rights and privileges of a regularly organized territorial government. They have selected their Delegates to represent this floor at a Western Convention, and, therefore, let the President send to this House, for its deliberate action, all the information that he may happen to have on the subject? Is not a fair proposition? Let him state to this House why he has not appointed a Governor and United States judges for the Territory. Let him give us what facts are in his possession why a Territorial Legislature has not been elected and convened. The request is courteously made. We ask no action further than this call for information. If the resolution be adopted, we may get facts that may be useful to us.

Mr. MILLSON. The resolution calls upon the President for information with reference to the existence of the Territory. The question may be a difficult one; and I do not want to call upon the President to settle a legal question which we ought to settle for ourselves.

Mr. GILMER. It is a question of fact.

Mr. GARTRELL. It was not the intention of the Committee of Elections, as I understood that, the resolution should contain no reference to a legal question, whether or not a Territory existed, but simply that the President be requested to furnish this House, and through it the Committee of Elections, with all the facts within his possession connected with this alleged Territory of Dakota; whether there was an organized Territorial government there—any territorial officers de facto; but not by any means to extract, or endeavor to extract, from the President, a legal opinion; for, sir, I agree, with the honorable gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] that that would be highly improper. That House, under the Constitution, has the power to constitute a committee to investigate the existence of a territorial government.

Mr. MILLSON. Then, let the resolution be brought before the House on a motion to reconsider, and amended so as to conform to that intention.

Mr. DAWES. I wished to get the floor when the resolution was adopted, for the purpose of offering an amendment. I had no idea, in consenting that a resolution should be reported, that the President should be requested to furnish this floor with information. I have no objection, sir, I did not suppose that the resolution was drawn in that form. As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GARTRELL] has suggested, it was the design to inquire of the President as to what had been done, since the State of Minnesota had been admitted, with reference to the recognition of a territorial government in Dakota; so to what had been done by the Executive—whether he had appointed officers and whether the territorial government had been kept up, or whether there had been any organization of the Territory. [Mr. GARTRELL,] as well as by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] probably would not be objectionable; but, sir, I cannot perceive what information the President may have as to the pretended organization of a territorial government there, or what he can send us with reference to his recognition of it, that will have anything to do with the settlement of the question of law that is underlying this whole matter. The question is, whether that portion of the Territory not included within the State of Minnesota has any organized government under the laws of Congress; whether the law organizing the whole of the territory extends with the same effect and force over the portion outside of the limits of the State of Minnesota, or whether the creation of the State by act of Congress has not destroyed the authority of the territorial act. If the President has recognized the Territory as organized under the former act of Congress, that has nothing to do with the law of the case submitted to us. It would likely have no influence upon the minds of the members of this House whether the President declared that the Territory was organized, whether he has recognized it, or whether he has not.

Mr. SPEAKER, it seems to me that this is an important question, and that it ought to be settled either by the Committee of Elections or, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MILLER), by the Committee on the Judiciary, so that for ourselves we may determine the law of the case. I have an opinion; but I cannot now undertake to prejudice the case.

Mr. GROW. If the gentleman from Alabama will let me, I will say a word as to the case. When the State of Minnesota was admitted into the Union, organized counties under the territorial government of Minnesota were divided, leaving portions within the limits of the new State, and portions without those limits. Since that time the people in those portions of country outside of the State limits have gone on under a kind of provisional government, claiming, however, to act under the old territorial organization. I suppose this resolution merely calls upon the President as to whether he has any official information of the provisional government there; and, if so, as to the manner in which it has been carried on. I understand that the people there occupy the same situation now, so far as their government is concerned, that they did at the admission of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. HOUSTON. I remember that I was not inclined to prejudice this case, and that I was not disposed even to state the opinion on the law of the case that I entertain. I have no objection to the President being requested to inform this House whether he has recognized a Territory of Dakota. I do not object to a call being made upon the President for all the information he may have with reference to the existence of a territorial government there. Yet, sir, I believe that the call would amount to nothing. I believe that it would be superfluous, for I cannot perceive, I repeat, how it would have any influence or bearing upon the minds of members of this House, so far as regards the adjudication of the legal point involved. Let me make the strongest possible case. Even if the President had recognized a Territory, and appointed a Governor and judges for it, and secured for it all the paraphernalia of a territorial government, it certainly would not preclude this House from examining into the question. It would not relieve this House from the duty of going into the question, to ask whether the President had, or had not, prejudged the case, and attempted, by his own mere act, to put into existence a territorial government without authority from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. The information sought for may have some bearing upon the testimony already before the Committee of Elections on this point. It is with that view, I understand, that the resolution is brought here. Certain testimony has been presented to the Committee of Elections; and the information we seek for may add strength to what we already have.

The information we desire from the President is a matter of fact, and of fact only. It is true, as the gentleman says, that it does not alter the legal question, and would not make an organized Territory of Minnesota an organized Territory; but it will do something towards settling the minds of the committee on the facts of the case.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I suppose, by the gentleman's own statement, that he desires the resolution to be reconsidered, or that he may put it in such language as will secure the precise information which he considers necessary.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think, if the gentleman from Alabama will read the resolution, he will see that it is not subject to serious objection. The Committee of Elections is not asked to state information the President may have. But admit everything the gentleman says to be true, the proposed inquiry can do no harm. This House is judge of the law; but it is important to have all requisite information, that the law may be properly applied. While that House may not be influenced, by any information which may be obtained from the President, as to what law is, still it is necessary and proper that the House should have all the facts, that they may judge correctly whether the request should be granted or refused. I understand that elections have been held in that Territory, and that a great many subsequent facts have transpired there, which, if known, might aid the House in construing or applying the law. Really I cannot see any objection to that resolution, nor can I see how the House can exercise an enlightened legal judgment without having all the facts before them. I hope the vote adopting the resolution will not be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

HENRY WOODS.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I ask leave, in accordance with the instruction of the Committee on Commerce, to report a joint resolution for the relief of Henry Woods; and to ask that it be put upon its passage.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection to the gentleman reporting his bill, and having it referred; but I object to putting it upon its passage.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The bill has been referred and I desire to report it back from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURNETT. I cannot consent that the gentleman shall get in his bill, and put it through in that way.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Then let it be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. FEXTON. I call for the regular order of business.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. GURLEY. I rise to a question of privilege. The Committee on Printing have directed me to report a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and upon which I call the previous question.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House, twenty thousand extra copies of the President's protest, his resolutions and minority reports thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose the gentleman from Ohio will allow me one moment. I desire to offer an amendment to his resolution. I propose to make the number twenty-five or thirty thousand, instead of twenty thousand. I want also to state, what I suppose the gentleman from Ohio knows, that, under the printing act of 1852, whenever extra numbers of any documents are ordered, if the number exceeds five thousand copies, and does not exceed ten thousand, there shall be a deduction of two per cent. from the prices specified in the law upon press-work, folding, and stitching; if the number exceeds ten thousand, and does not exceed twenty thousand, a deduction of five per cent.; and if over twenty thousand a deduction of forty per cent. I understand that the Superintendent of Public Printing has put a condition upon that law that operates in this way: that if you order between five and ten thousand extra copies, a deduction of two per cent. is made; if you order between ten and twenty thousand, five per cent. is deducted; and if you order over twenty thousand copies, forty per cent. is deducted upon the whole number of extra copies ordered. So that it will be cheaper for this House to order thirty thousand extra copies of that document, than it would be to order twenty thousand. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "twenty thousand," and inserting "thirty thousand." I desired, by these remarks, to get the facts before the House, so that when extra copies are ordered hereafter, they may understand the matter.

Gentlemen around me say that twenty-five thousand copies are sufficient. That will give each member one hundred copies each. I will make it twenty-five thousand copies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurring upon the adoption of the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I would like the yeas and nays upon this resolution. As a matter of course, I do not expect that half a dozen members will sustain the call, but I would like to see who are in favor of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution was then agreed to.

Mr. GURLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GURLEY. I am interested also by the committee to offer the following resolution; upon which I call the previous question:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the House, five thousand extra copies of Edward F. Beale's report relating to the construction of a wagon road from Fort Smith, Arkansas, to the Colorado river.

Mr. URANGH. I call for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his demand for the previous question until he can tell the House what the printing of five thousand extra copies will cost.

Mr. GURLEY. The printing and paper, without the maps, would be $13 87 per one thousand copies. The seven maps will cost $162 23; making $236 09 per thousand copies. Five thousand copies will cost $1,180 45.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask gentlemen who favor the publication of this report to give us the yeas and nays. Let us see who they are.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 67, nays 94; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Adams, Aldrich, Ashley, Avery, Barr, Barrett, Bingham, Blair, Blair, Boies, Bryson, Burlingame, Burnham, Butterfield, Chase, John B. Clark, Coffey, Cowley, Davidson, DeLoach, Dennis, Doolittle, Eliot, Fish, Fisher, Foster, Frank, Frazier, Gooch, Gurley, Harlan, Haskell, Helmick, Howard, Hutchins, Irvine, Jackson, Francis W. Kellogg, Keim, Keim, Lester, Lincoln, Maynard, McClernand, McKnight, Millard, Moorhead, Edwards, Joy Morris, Moore, Newell, Olin, Phelps, Potts, Rice, James R. Rogers, Schwartz, Scott, Thayer, Train, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Webster, Windom, and Woods.

NAYS.—Messrs. Charles F. Adams, Green Adams, Allen, Almy, Thomas L. Anderson, William C. Anderson, Babbin, Barkdur, Bayne, Babson, Beach, Briggs, Bristol, Buffington, Burnett, Carey, Carter, Horace F. Clark, Cobb, John C. Cochrane, Conkling, Cox, Brown Criss, Crawford, Curry, Rice, Davidson, Dennis, Doolittle, Edwards, Elbridge, Farnsworth, Fearey, Ferry, Garrett, Hardeman, John T. Harris, Hallam, Hickman, Howard, Holman, Houston, Humphreys, Hunt, James H. Kibler, Larned, Lawrence, James M. Leach, McKean, McQueen, McRae, Millson, Lahan T. Moore, Stephen Moore, Morrill, Isaac N. Morris, Nelson, Newell, Olin, Phelps, Potts, Packard, Quarles, Reagan, Briggs, Christopher Robinson, Rufin, Redwick, William Smith, William N. Smith, Spinner, Stillwell, Stanton, Stewart, Stewart, William A. Stearns, Stokes, Stratton, Taylor, Thayer, Thomas, Tompkins, Trimble, Underwood, Vinton, Vance, Vandever, Wadsworth, Watson, Winthrop, and Woodson—84.

So the resolution was rejected.

During the vote,

Mr. COOPER stated that he was paired off with Mr. LEACH, of Michigan.

Mr. COLFAX stated that Mr. GAOW was paired off with Mr. LEACH.

Mr. HASKIN, when his name was called, said: I desire to say, in explanation of my vote, being a member of the Committee on Printing, that that committee have reported in favor of the publication on a resolution offered by Mr. PHELPS, and to accommodate him, I vote "ay."

Mr. BURNETT. I hope the Speaker will enforce the rule. The gentleman from New York knows the rule, and ought not to attempt to debate a question when debate is not in order.

Mr. BURNETT. He stated that he was paired off with the Hall when his name was called, he would have voted "ay."

The vote was announced, as above recorded.

Mr. HICKMAN. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BURNETT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was rejected; and I also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HICKMAN) changed his vote, with the express intention of moving to reconsider.

Mr. BURNETT. That may have been; and that was the very reason why I sought the floor.

Mr. HICKMAN. I wish to state that I changed my vote.

Mr. BURNETT. I object to the gentleman discussing the question.

Mr. HICKMAN. I have a right to state that I changed my vote, with the express determination of moving a reconsideration; and I think I was on the floor time enough to obtain the floor properly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not aware of the object of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and recognized the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PHELPS. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will withdraw his motion to lay on the table.

Mr. BURNETT declined to withdraw the motion.

Mr. HICKMAN called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 74, as follows:

YEA—Messrs. Charles F. Adams, Green Adams, Allen, Ayer, Thomas L. Anderson, John C. Anderson, Beale, Boyce, Branch, Briggs, Brewster, Buffum, Burnett, Carey, Hayes, Francis P. Clark, Cobb, John Cochran, Conkling, Crawford, Curtis, Davidson, Delano, Edmunds, Eshelridge, Farnsworth, Fenton, Fessenden, Feltwell, Hamilton, Hardeman, Hall, T. Harris, Hays, Hale, Harlan, Houston, Humphreys, Jackson, Jenkins, Jones, Killgore, Labaree, James M. Leach, Leake, Love, Maloney, McQuinn, McKim, McMillan, Labor T. Moore, Abraham Moore, Morrill, Isaac N. Morris, Nelson, Nickles, Pendleton, Ferry, Pease, Pugh, Rogers, Keegan, Rippe, Christopher Robinson, Ruffin, Rust, Sedgwick, Stewart, William Smith, William S. H. Smith, Spink, Stillwell, Stanton, Stevens, Stokes, Stratton, Taylor, Thomas, Tompkins, Underwood, Vance, Vandever, Lenzel Washburn, Wells, Wilson, Windsor, Woodruff, and Woodson—66.

NAY—Messrs. Adair, Aldrich, Ashley, Avery, Babitt, Barr, Bingham, Blair, Blake, Bonaparte, Bryant, Burnham, Butterfield, Carter, Case, John B. Clark, Colfax, Corbin, Cordee, Dawes, Dinn, Edwards, Eliot, Eli, Florence, Foster, Frank, French, Gough, Gurney, Hale, Hall, Hanks, Helmick, Hickman, Howard, Hughes, Huie, Irvine, Jencks, Francis W. Kellogg, Keyton, Longacker, Loomis, Lovell, Madison, May, McCreary, McCreary, McKim, McKim, McMillan, Montgomery, Edward Jay Norris, Morse, Noell, Ginn, Pettit, Phelps, Foster, Rice, James S. Robinson, Royce, Samuel S. Royce, Sargent, Schuchman, Keiser, Train, Trimble, Watson, Watson, Caldwell C. Washburn, Webster, and Windom—74.

On the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the vote, Mr. BARKSDALE stated that he had paired off with Mr. KILGORE, but had forgotten the fact when he voted on the last question. He asked leave to withdraw his vote.

Leave was granted.

EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, asked the unanimous consent of the House to report to the Committee on the House and the Senate a resolution, appropriating the sum of $48,000 for the payment of the expenses of the several investigating committees of the House of Representatives during the present session; the same to be added to the miscellaneous item in the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. COLFAX. This joint resolution might be disposed of to-morrow. This is probably the last day we shall have for public business for the next two weeks.

Mr. RUFFIN. I object to any such resolution. Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I trust there will be no objection. Let the resolution be amended and passed; for these expenses will have to be paid.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Is it in order to move for a committee of investigation on that resolution? If so, I will make such a motion.

There being objection, the resolution was not introduced.

NEW YORK PUBLIC STORES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to the resolution of the House of March 26, calling for information and a report in respect to a contract for the performance of certain labor at the public stores in the city of New York.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I move the reference of that communication to the special committee to investigate this contract.

It was so referred.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

The SPEAKER stated the business first in order to be the report of the Committee on Public Expenditures, in reference to the public printing.

Mr. HASKIN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Clever] and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Hendon] my colleagues on the Committee on Public Expenditures, have left the city this morning for their homes, being called there by indisposition in their families. They have prepared a minority report, which should have been considered, if they had remained here, in connection with the majority report. At their request, and to accommodate them, I move to postpone the consideration of this subject till Wednesday, 25th of April, immediately after the morning hour. That meets with the views of the committee. The motion is made to accommodate those gentlemen who have gone home.

The motion was agreed to.

FRENCH SPOILIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER stated the business next in order to be the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 510) to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of claims of American citizens for spoliation committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1871.

Mr. CORWIN. I learned this morning that the report of the committee in this case had not been printed till this morning. It is a very lengthy and elaborate report. I desire very much, before any action be taken on the bill, that every member should have an opportunity of reading that report, as I think that will save a great deal of time that would probably be occupied in the discussion of the question when it comes up. I have consulted with the committee on the subject, and they have very generally agreed that the bill shall be postponed till the 7th of May.

Mr. BURNETT. When this bill was postponed before, there was a question of order raised. I have no objection to the direction which the gentleman proposes to give this matter, with the understanding that it is not to prejudice the question that has been raised—namely, that the bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CORWIN. Certainly, the question of order goes with it.

Mr. BURNETT. Well, if there is to be no advantage taken of the postponement, I have no objection.

Mr. CORWIN. I should be very willing to have the question decided now, but there are a number of gentlemen on all sides of the House who desire very much to make speeches to-day in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I know the pain it gives a man who desires to make a speech to be deprived of the opportunity of doing so, and I am unwilling to inflict that pain.

Mr. BRANCH. As I raised the point of order when this bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs a week or ten days ago, I desire to say now that I have no objection to the bill being postponed as indicated by the gentleman from Ohio, and being postponed to some day which shall suit the convenience of the House. I presume the 7th of May will be convenient. What day of the week is it?

Mr. CORWIN. It is the first Monday in May. Mr. BRANCH. I want to give two reasons personal to myself, that day of the week should be fixed upon later than Monday, as I desire to be here when the bill comes up. Will the gentleman any Wednesday, the 9th of May?

Mr. CORWIN. I will agree to that.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would suggest, that on Wednesday, the 9th of May, several gentlemen expect to be absent, in Baltimore, and though they may do no more than vote, still they have several votes which gentlemen on one side or the other may want.

Mr. BRANCH. How long does the gentleman think the Baltimore convention will sit?

Mr. HARRIS, of Maryland. About long enough to make a President. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRANCH. I suggest, then, to the gentleman from Ohio, that he postpone the bill until after the convention.

Mr. CORWIN. There are so many conventions that I have found it quite impossible to do any business if I attempt to suit them all. I have accommodated the Democratic convention. I should be very glad to accommodate the Chicago convention, as well as the Union convention; but the Democratic convention being considered the most important, I thought that if we passed that, the others could take care of themselves. Let the bill be postponed until Wednesday, the 9th of May.

Mr. BRANCH. I concur in that entirely.

Mr. CORWIN. I am very sure that the gentleman from Baltimore and his friends will all be back before that day.

The motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Wednesday, May 9, was agreed to.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

The House then proceeded, as the next business in order, to the consideration of an act (S. No. 84) to facilitate communication between the Atlantic and Pacific States by electric telegraph, reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads with amendments.

Mr. COLFAX. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that I shall save the time of the House which would be consumed in the reading of the bill by presenting, very briefly, the main features of the bill as it passed the Senate, and the amendments unanimously agreed upon by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of this House.

The bill which passed the Senate by a very large majority is entitled "an act to promote therein—the presents of various telegraphic companies in the United States for the construction of a line or lines of telegraph, to be built by them, from some point east of the Mississippi river to San Francisco, and a Government subsidy for ten years of $50,000 per annum. The bill, as passed by the Senate, also provided that they should be privileged to charge private citizens four dollars for a message of ten words over any line. It also gives them the right of way over the unoccupied public lands of the United States for ten years, with the occupancy of a quarter section of land for stations every fifteen miles. It also provides for a branch line to Oregon, and gives the use of the line, free of charge, to the Coast Survey, the United States Fish Commission, the National Observatory, for scientific purposes. These are the main features of the bill as it passed the Senate. When it came to the House, it was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. They decided to reduce the Government subsidy to reduce the charge to private individuals for messages, and also to adopt some salutary restrictions which they thought the Senate had omitted. They propose to reduce the Government subsidy from $50,000 to $40,000 per annum. The same plan is carried out as regards the Government or public business of the Government, up to that amount, free of charge, as they are to receive, under their contract, $40,000 a year. If, in case of war, the Government requires more than that amount of service, an amendment proposed by the committee provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify such excess to Congress, and, of course, that amount, if not unreasonable, will be paid by Congress.

The committee also propose to reduce the charge for private messages. Although that proposed in the Senate plan is carried out, they propose to pay for messages in every other portion of the globe, yet as this would be a Government enterprise, built in a large degree by Government aid, the committee decided that this company should reduce the price of messages to private individuals to the lowest living rate; and we have there limited the amount to be charged for a message of ten words to three dollars. I need scarcely say, to gentlemen who are familiar with telegraphic operations, that this is a low rate than is paid for telegraphing the same distance in any other part of the world.

The committee have also adopted this amendment, to the second section of the bill: that "should any of said quarter sections be deemed essential by the Government, or any company acting under authority, for the construction of the line, the contractors shall relinquish its occupancy, receiving an equal amount of land in its stead."

The object of that amendment is this: that if stations should be located by the company in mountain passes, and they should be found essentially necessary for the location of a railroad, the Government may require them to surrender those lands and occupy other lands instead. We may, however, ask the House to modify this, and only require them to surrender so much of the station quarter section as may be necessary for railroad purposes.

The committee also propose the following amendment as a proviso:

Provided, further, That messages received from any individual, company, or corporation, or from any telegraphic lines constructed with this line at either of its terminals, shall be impartially transmitted in the order of their reception, except that the dispatches of the Government shall have priority.

That proviso compels them to receive messages from connecting lines, which may be competing lines, and to transmit them impartially in the order of their reception.

The committee also propose the following amendment, as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That if the persons herein

this bill. We have Congress voting the public domain by millions of acres for almost every conceivable purpose. We have proposed for the absorption of the entire public domain by giving it away in the shape of homesteads. The last proposition we have is, that this Government shall vote money from the public Treasury directly into the pockets of private incorporators, for the purpose of constructing a line of telegraph from the Atlantic States to the Pacific slope. I say that my intellect is so obtuse that I have never been able to ascertain from what clause of the Constitution we derive the power of Congress to perform this character of legislation. But that I suppose will not for a moment weigh with gentlemen here who have advocated all these schemes for disposing of the Government of its public domain; and I cannot believe that these considerations will deter those gentlemen from voting this bonus into the pockets of these private incorporators.

The next objection I have to the bill is, that it creates a monopoly for ten years between the Atlantic States and the Pacific slope, so far as a line of telegraph is concerned.

Mr. STOUT. If the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. STOUT. I think that the gentleman is mistaken when he states to the House that this bill creates a monopoly. It does not, as I understand its provisions, create any monopoly. It only provides that for ten years between the Atlantic States and the Pacific slope, no other party shall be allowed to build a line of telegraph. Other parties are not precluded, for as many as choose may build other lines of telegraph.

Mr. BURNETT. This bill confers upon the parties named in it the exclusive right to build a line of telegraph from this side to the Pacific. It authorizes them to establish lateral branches connecting with Oregon, or in any other direction, as they may see fit. It gives them the exclusive right of way over the public domain. It not only does that, it confers upon them a quarter section of land for each station; and it is provided that if the land should be needed for the construction of a Pacific railroad, that other land shall be selected.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. The gentleman from Kentucky has certainly not read the bill, for, in fact, he would not fall into the mistake that he has.

Mr. BURNETT. The bill provides that—

For the purpose of establishing stations for repairs along said line or lines, not exceeding at any station one quarter section of land, such stations not to exceed one in fifteen miles on an average of the whole line.

Mr. COLFAX. Let me read a single line from the bill, which precedes the provision referred to. It is this:

With the free use during the said term of such lands as may be necessary for the purpose of establishing stations, &c.

It only provides that they shall have the use of the land during the term of their contract.

Mr. BURNETT. I understand the term occupancy, and so do, I am sure, the gentlemen who reported this bill. We all know what is to be the result of this thing.

The bill confers another power upon this corporation, and it is this: that they shall be the right to enter the land along this line of telegraph at $1.25 per acre. It creates not only a telegraphic monopoly; it not only gives this company $40,000 a year; it not only does all this; but it gives this company the exclusive right of entering the public land along this telegraphic line at $1.25 per acre. Yet gentlemen tell me that this bill will pass. Doubtless it will; for you cannot introduce any proposition here, voting money from the public Treasury, or giving away the public domain, that will not receive a majority of the votes of this House. For one, I desire to enter my protest against the passage of this measure.

This bill, sir, not only gives to this company a monopoly of this telegraph for ten years, but it gives them from the public Treasury $400,000. I want gentlemen to understand that the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to tell me, when, under this bill, this company can draw the first subsidy of $40,000. When will this company come to the Treasury for this $40,000?

Mr. COLFAX. I will answer the gentleman with pleasure. If the gentleman from Kentucky will read the twenty-ninth and thirtieth lines of the first section, he will find that it is provided that

No such contract shall be made until the said line shall be surveyed and paid money therefor, and that no case whenever the contractors fail to comply with their contract.

No payment, sir, can be made until the whole line is put up and in actual operation. When that is done, when the line is in actual operation, then the Secretary of the Treasury pays the said rate of $40,000 per annum. Of course, the Government gets the service before it pays.

Mr. BURNETT. You must take those lines in connection with another section of the bill. There it is provided that, thirty days after the passage of this bill, the incorporators shall signify, by writing, their acceptance of the terms of the contract, and that when they have done that, and entered upon the work, they are entitled to the $40,000 granted by the bill.

Mr. COLFAX. Does the gentleman say that in the provision of the bill which I have indicated? I know that he wishes to do justice, although an opponent of the bill. It is provided that if they fail to signify their acceptance of the contract, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall certify for and send to the Post Office the execution of the work. Not a word is said in that section of the company being paid until the line is completed. They cannot, under this bill, receive one cent from the Treasury of the United States until both branches of Congress, with the President, have passed a bill making a appropriation for that purpose. This bill only provides for the contract; and the payments under it have to be provided hereafter, as payments are provided to mail contractors for carrying the mail.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to address to the consideration of the members of this House one question. I ask them upon what principle of public policy, upon what ground as wise legislators, we should pass this bill conferring such gigantic power of exclusive monopoly upon private individuals.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. In what section of the bill does the gentleman find this conferring of exclusive monopoly?

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will read the bill, he will perceive that the bill confers an exclusive right of way on this company from the Atlantic States to the Pacific slope.

Mr. KELLOGG, of Michigan. I think that the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BURNETT. If the English language, in which it is couched, means anything, it means what I have stated.

Mr. COLFAX. I do not like to interrupt the gentleman, but when he speaks of what was intended by those who reported this bill he must allow me to set him right when he falls into a mistake.

The bill does not give the company an exclusive right of way. It only gives them the right of way. There can be, if it be deemed proper by others engaged in the telegraphic business, fifty more lines between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is it in the bill that any company will seek to build another line?

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly not, when you bring into competition with private enterprise the strong arm of the Government. If we grant a subsidy of $40,000 a year to this company, it is in the hands of the Government, and private individuals will come into competition with it.

Upon the point that I have been arguing, let me read the language of the bill:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of the President of the United States, is hereby authorized to enter into a contract with Louis Barnett, Thomas B. Walker, John H. Bergthall, Hannan Wiley, Norvin Green, John D. Cason, Frederic A. Bee, Charles M. Stebbins, and James J. Graham, or their assigns, for a majority of said contractors to assign, for the use by the Government of a line of lines of magnetic telegraph, to be constructed within two years from the 21st day of July, 1860, from some point or points west of the Mississippi river, by any route or routes which the said contractors may select, (commencing at any point or points to be named by the Secretary of the Treasury, New Orleans, New York, Charleston, Philadelphia, Boston, and San Francisco, or any other point or points named by the Secretary of the Treasury,) to the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, for a period of ten years, as if no social rate of compensation were provided, and the said line or lines were granted to said parties, or a majority of them, and their assigns, to use, until the end of the said term, any unoccupied telegraphic line or lines now in use, and any line or lines necessary for the same, unless said lands shall be required by the Government of the United States for railroad or other purposes, and provided that no right to preempt any of said lands under the laws of the United States shall inure to said company, their assigns or servants, or to any other person or persons whatsoever.

Now, sir, every gentleman here who is a lawyer will say, when you once confer upon this company the right to build this line of telegraph; when you have once made a contract with them; when they have entered upon the work; and when the contract, that they have a vested right in it, and that Congress cannot hereafter confer a similar right upon another company; because that would be interfering with the vested right already conferred upon this company. Hence I say this bill becomes a monopoly of the Pacific slope, and a telegraphic line is concerned, between the Mississippi and the Pacific coast.

There is another branch of the bill to which I desire to call the attention of gentlemen. I do not wish to weary the patience of the House, but I regard this as an important measure, and I must call the attention of the House to another branch of the bill. But before I do that, I want to say one word to my friend from Oregon, who urges the passage of this bill because it will plant civilization along the Pacific slope, and the Mississippi to the Pacific coast. Well, sir, I have not thought that that is one of the powers granted under the Federal Constitution to the Congress of the United States. I have not been taught that it was our business to vote money from the public Treasury for the purpose of establishing private telegraphic lines for the benefit of private individuals, in order that, in connection with that, and as incidental with it, we might have civilization and population.

Mr. STOUT. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky what, in his opinion, is the difference, so far as his constitutional objection is concerned, between paying for information carried through the mails, and paying for it sent over a telegraphic wire to the Pacific coast?

Mr. BURNETT. I shall endeavor to answer the question which may have governed the founders of this Government in framing the Federal Constitution. I know that, under that Constitution, we have the power to establish post routes and all that sort of thing. But for the purpose of transmitting intelligence, we have not the power, yet for the purpose of establishing a telegraphic line, we have no express authority in the Constitution; and, being a strict constructionist, I do not claim such power for the Government.

Mr. BURCH. Does the gentleman know the opinion of the framers of the Constitution in reference to telegraphic lines?

Mr. BURNETT. I suppose they had no opinion, as there were no telegraphs in existence. The gentleman from California is for this bill, as I understand; and if I did not suppose that he asked the question jestingly, I would urge his propounding such a question as a reason why the bill ought not to pass, for if he was not apprised of that fact, he should not have asked the question; and if he was, there is no good taste in propounding it.

I desire to call attention to the last section of this bill. If you are determined, gentlemen, to pass this bill, I ask you to pass it upon principles which are just and equitable to the entire country. If it is your purpose to vote from the public Treasury this large sum of money for the benefit of private enterprise, then I say, strike out the names of these corporations, open this thing to the field of enterprise throughout the entire country, and give to all those who may have knowledge of telegraphing, or who may not have, the fullest opportunity to compete for the right of construction of those lines, or who propose to confer an exclusive benefit in this form or shape. The last section of the bill, as it comes from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, is as follows:

And he it further enacted, That if the persons herein named, or any majority of them, fail to file their report with the Secretary of the Treasury within thirty days after the passage and approval of this act, the said Secretary is hereby directed to advertise for sealed proposals, to be received for thirty days thereafter, (and the fulfillment of which shall constitute the right of construction,) to be made bids for mail contractors, to build the line or lines herein provided for, with the franchise hereby proffered, and such proposals shall be opened and read in public, and said award the same to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, provided such proffer does not require a larger amount of money from the Government than the amount herein stated.

Now, if gentlemen want a fair bill—if they are determined to pass one—strike out the names of those corporators and adopt this last section of the bill, leaving out the first part in reference to these persons failing to file their duty. Change the last section, and make it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to receive sealed propositions to build this line of telegraph, and to give it out to the lowest bidder, provided the sum to be paid by the Government shall not exceed $40,000 per year. By that course gentlemen will perceive that you give out the telegraph lines in the country a chance for competition, and give to private enterprise everywhere the advantage of free competition in this great undertaking. Is anybody injured by that? Have the gentlemen named in this bill any right to be made the corporators in this grant over other citizens? If not, I say, strike out the names and insert the provision I have named, which will throw open wide the door to emble all to come in and compete for the bonus from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BURCH. Will the gentleman—

Mr. BURNETT. I must decline.

Mr. BURCH. The gentleman asked a question, and I suppose he wants an answer. He asked the gentleman to strike out the names and anything to entitle them to consideration over other parties. I say that the gentlemen named in this act have already built five hundred miles of telegraph line from the Pacific coast, through the West Minor, and the Mississippi, and now the gentleman from Kentucky cites his action as an argument against this bill. To the gentleman's remark, I answer that there is a man, Mr. O'Reilly, who, I believe, projected and constructed the first line of telegraph connecting the sea-board with the Lakes and the Mississippi, and who says that he will, with his associates build that line without the aid of money, if the Government will give them the right of way, as conferred in this bill.

Mr. BURCH. I understand that this very same man proposed to the Senate to build this same line for $40,000 a year from the Government, and now the gentleman from Kentucky cites his action as an argument against this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Suppose he did? We know him to be a man of enterprise; and he has demonstrated that by his own efforts, and I only desire that the provisions of this bill shall be such as to enable him, the pioneer in telegraphing, to come in competition with these other gentlemen. He certainly has some claim, and ought to be permitted at least to come in competition with these other gentlemen. The gentleman says he wanted a subsidy of $70,000. The case is just like that of every other man who seeks aid from the Government—like every other project that we have here for Government aid, either for railroads or for telegraphs. They say that the Congress of the United States was disposed to vote a bonus to those who might establish a line of telegraph from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast. Hence, Mr. O'Reilly came and put in his bill for $70,000, and I suppose other men have come in since offered to take $40,000. There is a saving of $30,000 between last Congress and this. That is, in my judgment, a conclusive argument that the course which I suggest is a correct one.

Mr. BURCH. I think that Mr. O'Reilly's offer of $70,000 was made at this Congress. It may have been made, however, at the last Congress.

Mr. COLFAX. I think I can state something on this point, if the gentleman from Kentucky wishes to hear it.

Mr. BURNETT. I will hear the gentleman; for I am in search of light.

Mr. COLFAX. When this bill was pending before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I was a great deal like the gentleman from Kentucky. I thought that an annual subsidy of $50,000 was too large; and I made up my mind that I should not be willing to report in favor of over $40,000. I thought that the messages of the Government would probably amount to that sum, and, therefore, that the Government would not lose a cent by the subsidy. Mr. O'Reilly and Mr. Smoot did me the honor to call on me. Mr. Smoot is an old friend and personal acquaintance of mine, but I have never known him before. Mr. O'Reilly, in conversation with them, on the subject, I asked whether they would like to have this line—

Mr. BURNETT. I cannot permit the gentleman to make a speech here. If he will answer my suggestion, I will hear him.

Mr. COLFAX. Mr. O'Reilly and Mr. Smoot told me they would be willing to take $40,000 a subsidy, and three dollars for a single message; and that if we would give the contract to this company, at those rates, they would have no objection provided we inserted a provision compelling them to receive messages from competing lines.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Has not the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a right to conclude the argument in this case?

Mr. COLFAX. Certainly; but I wanted to answer the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I think we have enough at this time.

Mr. SMITH. I was remarking, Mr. Speaker, that the reason for the course suggested by myself will be made manifest when it is taken into consideration that, within the short period of one year, the amount asked for subsidy was lessened from $70,000 to $50,000. The amount put in by the Senate was $50,000. The bill came into the House; and then these gentlemen, becoming uneasy for fear they could not get $40,000 from the Treasury—$40,000 per annum for ten years—were willing to take $30,000 less, with $10,000 less of the rights of a monopoly conferred upon them by the provisions of this bill. Hence they agreed with the Post Office Committee to take $40,000. Now, if these changes have taken place within twelve months, why not to adopt the provision in the last section of the bill, and require all these parties to bring their several interests into competition with each other, permit these parties to put in their bids in writing, and require them to take the Government contract at the lowest subsidy, limiting it to the amount fixed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads?

Is there any injustice done by these parties, any wrong inflicted on anybody, by that course? None at all; and it does seem to me that if we are determined to pass this bill, that is the mode and course which should be adopted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one more remark in connection with this bill. It is true that it limits, to some extent, the charge for telegraphing, the price to be paid for sending messages, and it limits also the tariff of charges for telegraphing throughout the country. I cannot, therefore, speak of my own personal knowledge. But I am informed by those who have experience in this thing, who have been in the business of telegraphing, and on which telegraphic messages are sent, that the rate of charges fixed in this bill is exorbitant. I know nothing about this myself; I merely throw it out for the consideration of gentlemen. The statement is made that you not only confer on this company a monopoly, but you permit it to charge exorbitant prices at the expense of the commercial men of the country. While we are conferring these exclusive privileges on this band of private corporators, let us at least extend to the rest of the great interests of commerce and of all other interests connected with it, by fixing the tariff of prices so that there can be no extortion from those who use the line.

The gentlemen have presented themselves to my mind. There are other objections to this bill—numberless objections, that might be urged; but these, it seems to me, are sufficient to defeat the bill, if not—and I must confess that I have had little hope of defeating it—do appeal to the friends of the bill to perfect it, so as to protect all the interests of commerce against the exclusive rights granted under this bill.

Mr. STANTON. Permit me to ask a question for information. I want to vote for this bill. We are to have a competition for the right of these same gentlemen may not contract for this line without having their names inserted in the bill, and why others may not be furnished with opportunities also of bidding lower if they choose, giving me an opportunity for the performance of their contract? That is what I want to know. What is the necessity of having the privilege exclusively confined to those named in the bill, of taking it at the rates specified? Why might not the objection be accomplished by letting these gentlemen put in their bids without having their names in the bill? I want to vote for the bill; but I see no reason why the privilege of bidding should not be extended to others besides the gentlemen named.

Mr. CONKLING. I will endeavor to answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio in a moment. But let me say, in the first place, that I should have been glad to vote for this bill precisely as it came from the Senate, providing for a subsidy of $50,000, instead of $40,000, and establishing four dollars for the price of a single message, instead of three dollars. If I had been permitted to vote for the bill as it stood, I should have done so, knowing, in the first place, that the rate of telegraphing thus established was much lower than the rate existing on any telegraphic line on this continent.

Mr. COLFAX. Or the other.

Mr. CONKLING. My friend says, "or the other." That would be speaking somewhat beyond the knowledge of my constituents, and about what I first stated, without fear of contradiction. I should have supported the bill with pleasure, knowing, as I happen to do, several of the gentlemen whose names appear in it; members of both political parties, and most of them, I believe, of that party to which I do not belong; knowing them to be men, both as regards means and character, eminently safe to be selected and chosen to occupy a position like that proposed, and to hold with the Government the hundred millions of dollars of property and trust. I know that they have, by reason of their possessing the patents, the connections, the capital, and the experience, the facilities necessary to construct this line, costing, as I understand it, not less than a hundred millions, to one million dollars; which outlay must be made completely before any revenue can be derived from the Government or elsewhere, and before the contracts provided for can be entered into.

In this statement, I answer, in part, the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON], and I will answer it further, by saying that if this proposition were thrown open for debate—a principle of action which, in its general application, I fully admit to be the wisest simple result of the free competition of parties, as far as carrying out and consummating this great enterprise, would be turned loose upon the very men named in this bill, they being the only parties who can now carry forward a work of this sort, and who would be in a position to monopolize the demands, interference, and compromise, or it would tend to impede, to delay, and to frustrate the whole scheme. I have considered, therefore, ever since this bill was first brought to my knowledge, that the only mode of execution to that general rule adverted to by the gentleman from Kentucky, and again hinted at by the gentleman from Ohio, in obedience to which this contract would have been thrown open for general and universal competition, is such as to that.

But, sir, I rose for a purpose which I have not yet reached. It was to express my astonishment that the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BURNETT]—although I suppose he is one of the great constitutional leaders of the Democratic party—should venture to criticize upon constitutional grounds a bill which has received the sanction of a very large majority of the Democratic Senate, a higher body, in some respects, than even this. My friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STANTON], says "No." I am told that there are upwards of sixty candidates for the Presidency in that body. [Laughter.] My friend says that there are more than that here. Well, I say that wherever there are sixty hopeful candidates for the Presidency, a body no larger than the Senate, it is hardly fair to be a constitutional tribunal of very great authority and weight.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Those candidates for the Presidency would go for any thing. CONKLING. I am not saying that they would do a great many things; but I do not feel called upon at this time to give this House gratuitously an opinion whether they will go for any bill or not. Now, I want to say, in answer to the learned gentleman from Kentucky, that, whether Congress has power—using his expression—to build telegraphic lines or not, I rather think Congress has power to authorize the Government to pay for the transmission of its telegraphic messages. It certainly has power to send ships thousands of miles over ocean to carry express messengers to transact the very business embraced in the purview of this bill; and it certainly has the power, in any way, to enter into a contract with gentlemen calling themselves a telegraphic company, or with men known by any other title, to transmit such intelligence as the Government may have occasion to send from the Atlantic ocean to the Pacific slope. Now, that is all that this bill proposes—not that the Government is to build a line of telegraph, but that the Government is to be authorized to enter into a contract with these gentlemen for the transmission of messages at a specified rate, they to have priority over all other persons if seeking to use the line; and no such contract to be entered into, and no money to be paid, until the line is completed, and the entire outlay has been made.

Now, I should like to know from the gentleman from Kentucky, or from the most ardent or hypercritical gentleman on this floor, whether his ingenuity can point out a mode in which the Government can contract for the performance of this service on terms of greater restriction and hedged about with safeguards and provisions more likely to secure certainty, economy, and all the considerations constituting the propriety of a measure of this sort, than those which have been inserted in this bill?

Now, sir, it is not that the Government is to build this telegraphic line; it is not that the Government is to endow private corporations with special franchises, privileges, or immunities; but simply that Congress is to fix an amount to be paid for a given service, predicated upon data, figures, and probabilities, which shall not be too large a sum; and that having fixed the amount to be paid, it is to particular men, selected on account of their peculiar fitness for the purpose, who, in return, undertake to render an equivalent in service. That is all there is of it. If there were more, I might go into an argument on the various incidents and consequences of this bill, which would bring much larger powers than it implies, within the enumerated powers given to Congress by the Constitution. But it is enough for me to know that such is the limited scope of the measure, that the Government is to be authorized to contract for, and necessary services—services which, as has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and as was certified by the late Governor Martz, and by several other Secretaries of State, will be of yearly, perhaps of monthly consequence, and of enormous saving to the Government.

Now, it seems to me all this talk about the extraordinary character of this bill vanishes. I believe that these parties are, in all respects, the fit men with whom to make this contract; and I believe that the bill is sufficiently restricted. It is very simple in principle, and has been subjected, by the committee of this House, to reductions which have cut down the charge for messages below that point which, I am informed by experts on this subject, is the minimum of adequate compensation. For one, I shall vote for the bill with great pleasure, although, at the same time, I shall recognize many of the general principles which have been asserted here in opposition to it.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, this has been to me a subject of earnest consideration and mature deliberation; and I wish to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky. [Mr. BREXET.] In regard to his constitutional objections, I must say that I am no lawyer. Now, sir, a member of the committee, however, however, that such an objection should be made by a distinguished and learned lawyer of this House. As, however, his constitutional argument has been so ably answered by the gentleman from New York, I will not make a single remark upon it; but in reply to those objections made by the gentleman from Kentucky, I will say a few words.

I will say, that so far as I am concerned as a member of that committee, I was opposed to the bill in the first place; and the objections which were urged by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BREXET.] were the same objections which I urged in the committee against the enactment of this bill as it came from the Senate. But, sir, if all these objections have not been obtained by the amendments which the committee has reported to the House, then the committee has been exceedingly unfortunate in framing those amendments.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, no man is more opposed to exclusive monopolies than I am, and, as a general principle, I am opposed to all monopolies; but I do not consider that this bill encourages an exclusive monopoly. The committee did not intend, and I do not believe the bill as amended by them grants, any exclusive privileges. Of the contrary, it will be as free and open to competition after the passage of this bill as it is now before the passage of the bill. The bill simply provides that the Government shall simply agree to pay the sum of $40,000 per annum for ten years for telegraphing all its communications to the Pacific coast; and there is not a gentleman on this floor who does not know enough of the wants of the Government to be convinced that, so far as that sum is concerned, it is a large bargain. Forty thousand dollars is nothing at all to this Government compared with the advantages and benefits which the Government will derive from the establishment of a line of telegraph to the Pacific. I should not consider the sum of $100,000 per annum of the slightest consequence whatever compared with the advantages the Government will obtain from this line, to say nothing of the advantages the people at large will derive from it.

That, sir, is my view of this matter, and when I was represented as being opposed to the establishment of such a line, and the aid of the Government, of a telegraphic line of communication to the Pacific, I said, I am not opposed to such a line; on the contrary, I would vote $100,000 a year subsidy, if necessary, for the accomplishment of that purpose; but I believed that $40,000 was a sufficient sum to put these gentlemen to the test, and to give them any more, and I based this opinion upon reliable data, as I believed; for, sir, I wish to say to the members of this House that I have gone into this subject fully, I have calculated its cost, and have ascertained the probable amount of the revenue of this line. So far as its advantages are concerned they are incalculable to the American people. I suppose there is not a member upon this floor who doubts the great advantages to the people of the whole country, independent of the Government, of the aid of the Government, of the establishment of a telegraphic line to the Pacific coast; and the only question to be considered by the House is whether this is as good a bill as can be obtained, and whether the sum of money proposed to be paid by the Government is sufficient to put these gentlemen to the test.

I believe that if this is thrown upon to competition—and let me say to gentlemen here that that was my first deliberate conclusion as the only fair, just, and proper mode of establishing a telegraphic line; I have faithfully and conscientiously endeavored to put this subject before gentlemen here. The committee have had nearly a dozen special meetings upon it; I have conferred with these parties and with other gentlemen connected with telegraphic companies having full knowledge upon this subject, and it is my deliberate and firm conviction, that, if this matter is thrown upon to competition, situated as these corporations are, it will involve, for another year at least, the loss of a telegraphic line to the Pacific, and so believing, I have given my assent to the provisions of this bill. When I say that I believe that the Government has the most important interests which the Government has in the establishment of such a line of communication, and feeling, as I do most sincerely, that to throw the matter open to competition would defer the building of the line for years, I could not consent that it should be thrown upon to competition.

Now, sir, in regard to the objection urged to this bill by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BREXET.] that it gives to these men the exclusive right to a quarter section of land every fifteen miles along the route, not only for ten years, but forever, I reply that the committee I was not intend to do any such thing; the corporations do not understand that they have got any such thing, and it seems to me that language could not convey any stronger impression to the contrary than the language of this bill. If gentlemen here, and gentlemen here, they have been exceedingly unfortunate in their choice of language, for that is their intention.

The gentleman again objects, that the bill provides that the money shall be paid upon the acceptance of the contract by the gentleman and the gentleman, in reference to that point, that every man upon the committee would be opposed to such a provision. For myself, much as I desire the establishment of a telegraphic line to California, I would not consent that the Government should be liable to such an imposition, if we were to do such a line of communication from now till doomsday; and if it is thought by the House that the bill is not sufficiently explicit in that regard, let an amendment be offered that cannot be susceptible of any such misunderstanding, and I will give my vote for it, although I believe the bill as reported by the committee is liable to no such construction.

Now, sir, in regard to the provision in the third section and twelfth line, to the effect that messages received through any company or over any telegraph line connected with this shall be imparted to the Government in the order of their reception, with the exception that the dispatches of the Government shall have priority, that is an amendment, as you will see, to the Senate bill, and one which I regard as of great significance; and it removes a great objection which existed against the Senate bill, urged by the friends of the country; for it cannot be denied that great abuses have existed heretofore, by a disregard of this principle, in operating other telegraphic lines.

That, sir, is a provision which I deem of great importance, and of vital interest to the people of this country.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BREXET.] says that this bill confers an exclusive monopoly. I deny it. As I remarked before, the matter will be open to competition just as much after the passage of the bill as it was before, with the exception that the Government agrees to transmit its communications over this line, paying a moderate sum therefor. With that exception, it has no privilege, no monopoly, nothing but what everybody would be willing to grant.

Mr. HOARD. The gentleman from Massachusetts says that he has estimated the probable cost and the revenue of this line of telegraph. I would be glad if he would enlighten the House as to that probable cost and revenue. Before he answers that question, I would ask him to state, at least, what probably would be the capacity of the line.

Mr. ALLEY. I will say, in reply to the interrogatories of the gentleman from New York, that I have investigated the whole matter, and satisfied myself of the probable cost, revenue, and capacity of this line of telegraph. From the information I could obtain from the most enlightened sources, I have come to the conclusion that the sum provided in the bill is about as low as the thing can be afforded.

Mr. HOARD. State the cost.

Mr. ALLEY. I will state my judgment of it.

Mr. HOARD. That is what we want.

Mr. ALLEY. My judgment is, that the cost will be inside of $600,000. In that I differ with some members of the committee, and with the corporations, and with many gentlemen connected with telegraphic lines in this country. From the opinion that the cost will be inside of $600,000.

Mr. HOARD. For what length of line?

Mr. ALLEY. For the length of line proposed.

Mr. HOARD. What is the length of line proposed?

Mr. ALLEY. About sixteen hundred miles.

Mr. HOARD. Where does the line start from?

Mr. ALLEY. St. Louis.

Mr. HOARD. The bill says that the line shall start at any point west of the Mississippi, even if it is not a point on the Mississippi. Under the bill, the company can start five hundred or a thousand miles west of the Mississippi, if they choose.

Mr. ALLEY. I will say, for the information of the gentleman from New York, that a line of telegraph has been already established to St. Joseph, on this side, and from San Francisco, five hundred miles eastward; leaving an intervening space to be covered with a line of telegraph of sixteen or seventeen hundred miles. For that connecting line of telegraph I estimate the cost to be inside of $600,000. I hardly think that it will exceed half a million. I allow $600,000.

I will say in reply to the other interrogatory of the gentleman, that the lowest estimate, with the exception of that made by one of the members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, for operating the line, is $200,000 per annum. My own estimate is about $150,000 per annum.

In regard to the capacity of the line, I will say that it will be able to transmit about thirty messages an hour. If the line be worked twenty out of the twenty-four hours, that will be six hundred messages per day. That is the capacity of the line. Whether they would get anything like that number of messages, I cannot tell. It is, however, exceedingly problematical. Nobody can tell what the extent of communication will be. But, with regard to the tariff of charge we have fixed, we have been informed that four dollars was the lowest rate at which a single dispatch could be transmitted.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I hope the gentleman will answer one question. The bill provides that three dollars shall be the charge for a single dispatch of ten words. Now, sir, from what point to what point is covered by that charge?

Mr. ALLEY. From St. Louis to San Francisco.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. The bill is indefinite in that regard. Suppose the contractors fix the point of commencement of the subsidized line one thousand miles west of St. Louis, must we pay from New York to that point, and then three dollars to San Francisco in addition?

Mr. ALLEY. The charge is from any point west of the Mississippi that the company may choose to start from.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Suppose these gentlemen, as private individuals, build a line five hundred or one thousand miles west of St. Louis, and fix at that point as the starting point of the subsidized line, does the bill provide that charge of three dollars for the whole line, or only for the most western portion of it?

Mr. ALLEY. That would be in violation of the understanding which sustains under the provisions of the bill between the Government and the contractors.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Perhaps it would. Mr. ALLEY. It would be in violation of the spirit of the agreement and positive understanding between the gentleman and the Government. The bill can be amended so as to make it more imperative on that point, if it is desired; but it seems to me that there is no necessity for it, for Congress is supreme in the matter. We are to be the judges when the company violates the contract with us. If they would violate the contract to any extent suggested, then there is not a man in this House, I think, who would vote to grant them this subsidy. We have the power in our own hands.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. The defect in the bill can be cured by naming the points between which the specific charge of three dollars shall be the price for a single dispatch of ten words.

Mr. ALLEY. If the gentleman from New York does it material, let the bill be amended in that way.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered all the objections urged against this bill which strike me as important. I will say, in conclusion, that I hope the House will take the bill as it stands; for I believe that it is the best we can get. I believe it is as good as the company can afford to believe, too, if this matter be thrown open to competition, as some gentlemen seem to desire, that it will end in the loss of the whole thing. And why not? Because, as has been partially stated by those who have preceded me, these parties are in possession of most of the points, and also most of the telegraphic lines upon this continent; and the additional value which the construction of this California line will give to all the rest, furnishes a strong inducement for these parties to build it even at a considerable loss. And from all the information I have been able to obtain, my calculations I have made, my judgment is satisfied that it is as favorable a contract as they can possibly afford to make with the Government. As I have already said, every village in every State of the Union feels a deep interest in this enterprise. There is not a village or hamlet in the land, but that has friends and relatives of its people in California, and whenever telegraphic communication is established between the Atlantic and the Pacific coast, every individual upon this side and upon the other will feel that California is at least one-half nearer to us than it is now. Feeling that the great commercial, financial, and manufacturing interests of this country, as well as the commercial interests of the whole world, will be benefited to an incalculable extent, and feeling also that the Government will be benefited independently of the people more than $100,000 per annum; and having said much more than I intended when I arose, I will conclude by saying that I shall give this bill my cheerful and hearty support.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COLFAX. I trust that the House will not agree to this. If the House is ready for the previous question on this bill I will call it now, with the understanding that gentlemen may propose their amendments to-morrow morning. If this telegraph line is to be constructed, this bill had better at once pass; for if it be delayed still further it will be impossible, almost, to begin the work, or to complete any part of it this year. It has been hanging here for three weeks because of the priority of other business of the House, and now that it is up, I hope it will be speedily disposed of. If it is not passed now, so that the Senate can concur with our action next week, it cannot be until after the Charleston convention, and even then it may be tardily crowded out by the press of business at the close of the session.

I only ask that, if you go into committee now, you will give me an hour to-morrow to finish this bill. All we want is action upon it. Gentlemen can offer what amendments they please, and then vote on the whole.

If the gentleman from Maryland will yield to me, I will move the previous question now; and if the House sustains it, that will carry the bill over until to-morrow morning. That is all I desire. If the House then desires to debate it an hour, I am willing.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will not move the previous question. I intend to vote against the bill, and I want to give the reason for my vote.

Mr. COLFAX. The offer I have made, which the House understands, and to which there is no objection, I move the previous question. If a majority of the House sustains it, well and good; if not, the bill goes to the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maryland insist upon his motion?

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I do; and it is in possession of the House.

Mr. SCOTT. If we go into committee, what will be the effect upon this bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill will remain before the House until to-morrow morning.

Mr. FLORENCE. To come up to-morrow morning, or whenever it is reached.

Mr. COLFAX. Then I enter a motion to recommend the bill, to insure that point.

The motion of Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland, was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 336) to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes; to authorize a loan; to regulate and fix the duties on imports, and for other purposes; upon which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CORNING] was entitled to the floor.

TARIFF BILL.

Mr. CORNING. I believe I am entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDEMAN] desires me to yield to him for a few remarks, and with the permission of the committee, I will do so, with the understanding that I shall have the floor whenever the House again goes into committee.

No objection being made, Mr. CORNING yielded the floor to Mr. HARDEMAN.

The committee was addressed by Messrs. HARDEMAN, DAWES, FLORENCE, and DUELL. [The speeches will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. LEAKE moved that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.
So the committee rose; and Mr. SPEAKER having taken the chair, Mr. Speaker pro tempore, Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 336) to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes; to authorize a loan; to regulate and fix the duties on imports, and for other purposes; and had come to no conclusion thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. HICKS, its Chief Clerk, informing the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the House (No. 31) for the relief of Charles Knapp.

Also, that the President had informed the Senate that he had approved and signed

An act (S. No. 71) for the relief of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; and an act (S. No. 136) for the relief of Thomas Finckh.

An act (S. No. 233) for the relief of Alice Hunt, widow of Thomas Hunt; and

An act (S. No. 250) for the relief of Kate D. Taylor, widow of the late Breckinridge Oliver H. P. Taylor.

Also, that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. No. 78) for the relief of Francis Hutton.

Also, that the Senate had ordered the printing of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount of revenue collected annually in each collection district, from June 30, 1854, to June 30, 1859, &c.

Mr. BUFFINTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at half past five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 13, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GERRY.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message of the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in regard to the compulsory enlistment of American citizens in the army of Prussia, which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion by Mr. HALE to print the report was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 23d of February, information in regard to the competition by American citizens of the Island of Naxos, in the West Indies; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, detailed information with respect to the expenses of the Indian wars in Oregon and Washington Territories; which was, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a report and estimate under the act of the 2d of March of the act of 18th of August, 1856, relative to clerk hire and office expenses of the district land offices; which was ordered to lie on the table; and a motion of Mr. WILSON to print the report was referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, submitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 20th ultimo, an estimate of the amounts that will be required to hold councils with certain Indians of the plains, and in the State of Minnesota; which was, on motion of Mr. SEASTIAN, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 23) for the admission of Kansas into the Union, received from the House of Representatives yesterday, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FESSENDEN presented the petition of Harriet Crocker, widow of Edward Crocker, late a boatswain in the Navy, praying a pension, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Edward Savoy, praying compensation for his services as cook and servant to the staff of General Bankhead in the war with Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LATHAM presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, asking the passage of a law legalizing and confirming to the State of California such selections and localities of land as were made by the State before survey of the United States authorities; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHANDLER presented petitions in relation to the claim of Peter Campuzano to pay for taking care of the United States dredge-boat, belonging to the St. Clair Flats improvement; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON. I present a memorial signed by T. S. Tobey, president, and Lorenzo Salazar, secretary of the Boston Board of Trade; Jacob Byglov, president of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; Daniel Treadwell, vice president of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences; Joseph Lovering, professor of mathematics and natural philosophy of Harvard College; L. Agassiz, professor in the Lawrence High School; C. C. Felton, president of Harvard College; Benjamin Pierce, professor of astronomy and mathematics of Harvard College, and B. A. Gould, editor of the Astronomical Review, praying that the Superintendent of the Coast Survey may be directed to send observers to the most suitable point on the Atlantic coast to observe the eclipse of the sun, which will occur on the 18th of July next, with a view of verifying the relative heliographic positions of the sun and planets. I move the reference of this paper to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is literary, or scientific, or a little of both; and I think it ought to go to the Committee on the Library. We do not want a report of the planets in the Committee on Commerce. We go over the ocean and over the earth. When you come to science—

The VICE PRESIDENT. What committee does the Senator from Massachusetts think that it be sent to?

Mr. WILSON. I have no choice myself whether it goes to the Committee on Commerce or the Committee on the Library. It was placed in my hands by a gentleman in the name of the head of the Coast Survey, Professor Roche, with a request that I would present it and ask its reference to the Committee on Commerce. If the Senator does not wish that reference, I propose that it go to the Committee on the Library.

It was so referred.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented papers relating to the claim of Mary L. Lear, widow of the late Lieutenant Clinton W. Lear, of the United States Army, to a pension; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BIGLER presented a memorial of the officers of the American Philosophical Society, of Philadelphia, praying that the Superintendent of the Coast Survey may be authorized to send persons to some suitable point on the Atlantic coast to make observations of the eclipse of the sun, which will occur on the 18th of July next; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SIMMONS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Moody, Beece & Co., with the report of the Secretary of the Treasury thereon, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 257) for the relief of Frederick E. Huxley, be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions and the Patent Office.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LATHAM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 405) to confirm certain lands to the State of California, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FITCH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 29) authorizing the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to receive and adjust the account of Randolph Clay, United States minister to Peru; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BENJAMIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 407) for the relief of Mary L. Lear; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BIGLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 30) to repeal the proviso of the third section of the act approved March 3, 1859, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1860," which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BIGLER. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. KING. I should like to know what is the proviso that it is proposed to repeal.

Mr. BIGLER. I will explain, for the information of the Senator from New York. I have introduced the joint resolution simply for reference; but I will state what it means. It is a proposition to repeal the proviso which limits the price at which certain public buildings in Philadelphia should be sold. The officers have endeavored to sell at that price, and cannot do so.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the reference.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS. The Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, the report of Captain H. D. Wallen, of his expedition, in 1859, from Dallas City to Great Salt Lake and back, have directed me to report it back to the Senate with a recommendation that it be printed; and that motion, I suppose, goes to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Mississippi that the motion may be put now, as this is a report from a committee, and that it is not therefore necessary to refer it to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I ask that the motion to print be put now.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel S. Burton, praying to be allowed the amount due him for pay and rations as a musician in the war of 1812, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Captain John B. Montgomery, of the United States Navy, praying to be released from his liability for an unpaid balance of public money entrusted to him for recruiting purposes, and lost by the failure of the bank in which it was deposited, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 406) for the relief of Captain John B. Montgomery, of the United States Navy. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Charles Montgomery, praying compensation for defending, at the request of the superintendent of Indian affairs in Utah, two Indian boys who were indicted for a criminal offense in the second judicial district court for that Territory, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Samuel Jones, a captain in the United States Army, praying to be remunerated for losses sustained by him in consequence of the blowing up of the steamer Pennsylvania, on the Mississippi river, while he was traveling in the public service, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia; which was agreed to.

He also presented the petition of John Wilson, a paymaster in the Army, praying remuneration for losses sustained by the wrecking of the steamship Southerner, on which he was traveling under orders, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia; which was agreed to.

PROPERTY IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask the consent of the Senate that the resolutions introduced by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Brown,] relative to property in the Territories, be made the special order for Monday next at one o'clock; at which time, if it does not interfere with any business that is urgent, its passage will be desired to submit some remedy to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

AFRICAN SLAVE TRADE.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by him on the 13th ultimo; and it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether the treaty with Great Britain, for the suppression of the African slave trade, has been executed; and whether any further legislation is necessary, by way of amendment, or otherwise, for the more effectual suppression thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FENNER, its Clerk, announced that the House had this day ordered the printing of the following documents:

Message of the President of the United States, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the House, a report as to the practicability of making the Mississippi river navigable for commercial purposes—ordered at twelve o'clock and twenty-five minutes.

Letter of the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, pursuant to the seventh section of the act of 18th August, 1854, a report on the application for certain expenses of district land offices—ordered at twelve o'clock and twenty-five minutes.

Letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the House, the official correspondence of Brigadier General William S. Harney, in command of the military department of Oregon, relating to the affairs of that department—ordered at twelve o'clock and twenty-five minutes.

Letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House, calling for information in reference to a contract for the performance of certain labor at the public stores in the city of New York—ordered at two o'clock and two minutes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

A bill (S. No. 306) to settle titles to lands along the boundary line between the States of Georgia and Florida.

A bill (S. No. 78) for the relief of Francis Hutton; and

A bill (H. R. No. 31) for the relief of Charles Knapp.

ARREST OF FRANK B. SANBORN.

Mr. SUMNER, Mr. President, I present certain papers which I have received, supplementary to the memorial of Mr. Sanborn, now lying on the table of the Senate. These papers are the official returns to the writ of habeas corpus made by the sheriff and by Carleton, pretending to act in the name of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate; the papers being authenticated by the clerk of the supreme court of Massachusetts. They become important at this moment, particularly in answer to the assertion hazarded the other day by the Senator from Virginia, (Mr. Mason.) It will be remembered that he stated that Mr. Sanborn was taken from the custody of that pretended officer by a mob. That was the statement of the Senator from Virginia, made here, and going to the country; and I think a calumny upon the people of Concord. How are the facts authenticated by the official papers? The return by the sheriff is as follows:

MIDDLESEX, ss. April 7, 1860.
By virtue of this writ, and in obedience thereto, I this day took the body of the within named John B. Sanborn from the custody of Silas Carleton, at Concord, in said county, and now have him, under safe and secure conduct, before the chief justice of the said county, at Concord, sitting at Boston, in the county of Suffolk, as within directed. And I have also removed the within named Silas Carleton, who appeared before me, and there, in view of the taking and detaining the said Frank B. Sanborn, by reading to him the within writ, and have also given him in said said a signed copy thereof.

JOHN B. MOORE,
Deputy Sheriff.

Now comes the return of this very Carleton, the pretended officer: the return of this very Carleton, the pretended officer.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, Suffolk, ss. April 10, 1860.

Before Lemuel Shaw, chief justice of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts.

In the matter of F. B. Sanborn.

And now before the said chief justice comes Silas Carleton, the deputy—

He so calls himself—of Danvers, N. H., Sheriff, at-Arms of the Senate of the State of Massachusetts, and for answer saith that by virtue of a certain warrant duly issued by authority of the Senate of the said United States, now in session, at Concord, on the 23d day of February, A. D. 1860, a copy of which he heretofore presented to the said chief justice, that he did receive, for the causes so said warrant and the said copy he heretofore fully acted, on the 23d day of April, instant, the body of the said F. B. Sanborn, at Concord, in the county of Middlesex and Commonwealth aforesaid, and that after said (after having arrested the said Sanborn, and taken him at the place aforesaid, he, the said F. B. Sanborn, was taken from his custody by one John B. Moore, then and there acting as deputy sheriff of the county of Middlesex, and that the said F. B. Sanborn was taken from his custody by the said John B. Moore, by virtue of a warrant or writ, under the seal of the honorable Edward Rockwood Hoar, associate justice of the said supreme judicial court, on the 24th day of April, instant.

Deputy of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate of the United States.

SUFFOLK, ss. April 14, 1860.

Subscribed and sworn to before

R. M. QUINCY,

There, sir, is the official response to the assertion of the Senator from Virginia. The Senator says he was rescued by a mob. It is true there was a mob in Concord. It was a mob of kidnappers, who went there in the name of the Senate of the United States to seize a citizen of Massachusetts. I have here a letter which I have received from one of the most distinguished citizens of Concord, who was present at the time. This is his statement:

"No reason by the crowd was made or attempted till the said John B. Moore, who was arrested, and taken to the jail, and his fellows resisted till the deputy sheriff's obligation to force him to take Mr. Sanborn from him."

And here is a letter from one of the most distinguished citizens of Concord, who was present at the time. This is his statement:

"Sir, it is not unnatural that an arrest made under such circumstances should attract the attention of the people in that town and throughout the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. It has. It has excited a feeling of indignation against the act; and perhaps that is increased when people put this question: 'Why this effort to seize Mr. Sanborn? Why this overhauling of law to accomplish that purpose? It is notorious that there is a citizen of Virginia, formerly the chief magistrate of that State, who has openly avowed that he knew much in regard to the very matters in inquiry before that committee, and that rubies should not bribe him to disclose them.' He has threatened to change denials to that committee and this Senate before the whole country, refusing openly to testify; and yet that committee makes no motion to bring ex-Governor Wise before the Senate, and compel him to testify."

And here is a letter from one of the most distinguished citizens of Concord, who was present at the time. This is his statement:

"Mr. BIGLER. I more that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 10) in addition to 'An act to promote the progress of the useful art.'"

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the papers presented by the Senator from Massachusetts will, for the present, lie with the memorial on the table.

Mr. MASON. Before that is done, the Senate will allow me to say a word in reply to what has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts. When he presented the memorial of this man, Sanborn, I objected to the reference which he proposed to give it, upon the ground that I thought no action could be taken upon it until we had the official return upon the warrant under which he had been arrested; and, in the course of the remarks which were made in reply, according to my recollection, to what then came from that Senator, I stated that I, of course, had no personal knowledge of anything that transpired; but that, as well as I could gather from a hasty correspondence with the marshal, whose deputy was the party that made the arrest, Sanborn, when arrested, had been rescued by a mob in the town of Concord, from the officers of the law. That was denied by the Senator, on information that he had received to the contrary. I had no other information, other than that communicated to me by the correspondent. Since then, I have received—and only last night—the official return of the officer who made the arrest; and it is my purpose, on Monday, under the instructions of the select committee, to present the question to the Senate for the disposition that that committee have instructed me to move shall be made of the subject. It may possibly involve an inquiry which will ascertain the facts, which would seem to be in controversy for the party making the arrest and the deputy sheriff who served the habeas corpus before we go further into the subject; but we have the circumstances that transpired under oath of the party who made the arrest—the deputy of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I shall, I say, on Monday, move, under the instructions of the committee, for the disposition of that subject which they have instructed me to move.

In reply to what fell from the Senator in reference to the action of the committee, I will say that it has been the pleasure of that Senator to say that a citizen of the State of Virginia, who was late its Governor, as he learns through the press, has stated that he had information on the subject which the committee were required to inquire into with reference to the occurrences at Harper's Ferry which rubies could not bribe him to disclose; and it has been the pleasure of that Senator to say that the committee have taken no action to have that gentleman brought before them as a witness, and to assume that they have done it from a desire only to get that sort of information from northern men. Now, I will say to the Senator that he has spoken upon a subject of which he has no information. I assume that the members of the committee have disclosed nothing as to that. I say, therefore, the Senator has stated here, as matters affecting and impugning the conduct of the committee in the inquiry committed to them, that upon which he can have no information; and secondly, it is known that if anything, will be divulged in good time, when the report is made. At present, the Senator can have no information on the subject.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I profess to have no information except what is open to all the world; and there are two things that are open to all the world, that is, so far as they are known through the press: first, that the ex-Governor of Virginia has more than once declared that he had important information in reference to that matter, and that rubies would not tempt him to disclose it; and secondly, it is known that the ex-Governor of Virginia has not been brought to Washington as Mr. Hyatt has been, and an attempt has been made to bring Mr. Sanborn. No kidnappers have been sent into Virginia, nor hand-cuffs put upon ex-Governor Wise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The papers will lie on the table.

PATENT LAWS.

Mr. BIGLER. I more that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 10) in addition to "An act to promote the progress of the useful art."

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BIGLER. I suggest that that part of the bill which has been reported as a substitute is the only part that perhaps need be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has never been read in the Senate. The Secretary will read the bill at length.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BIGLER. Let me suggest that perhaps the Senate will agree by unanimous consent that this bill was recommitted to the committee and a substitute reported for the entire bill, that only the substitute be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania has just suggested that this bill was recommitted to the Committee on Patents, who have reported a substitute for the entire bill; and he asks unanimous consent to suspend the reading of the bill, and that the substitute only be read. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued. The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will read the amendment of the committee.

The Secretary read the amendment reported by the committee, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

That the Commissioner of Patents may establish rules for taking affidavits and depositions required in cases pending in the Patent office, and such affidavits and depositions may be taken and sworn to by any justice of the peace or other officer authorized by law to take depositions to be used in the courts of the United States, or in the state courts of any State, or in the District Court of any country, or in the Patent Office, it shall be lawful for the clerk of any court of the United States for any district or Territory, or for any justice of the peace, or for any attorney or agent of any party, to issue subpoenas for any witnesses residing or being within the District or Territory, commanding such witnesses to appear and testify before any justice of the peace, or other officer as aforesaid, residing within the District or Territory, at any time and place in the subpoena to be stated; and if any witness, after being duly served with such subpoena, shall refuse or neglect to appear at the time and place so specified, or neglect being proved to the satisfaction of any judge of the court whose clerk he is, to obey the subpoena, such judge may thereupon proceed to enforce obedience to the subpoena, or to cause the same to be enforced, in like manner as any court of the United States may cause to be enforced, any decree or process of a subpoena of a testificandum issued by such court, and may also cause to be enforced, in like manner, any compensation as is allowed to witnesses in the courts of the United States: Provided, That no witness shall be required to appear at the place specified in any subpoena served on him by virtue of this act, unless his fees for going to, returning from, and one day's maintenance at the place of examination shall have been tendered to him at the time of the service of the subpoena.

Sec. 2. And he further enacted, That, for the purpose of securing greater uniformity of action in the grant and refusal of letters patent, there shall be appointed in the same manner as now provided by law for the appointment of examiners, a board of five examiners-in-chief, at an annual salary of $2,000 each, to be composed of persons of competent legal knowledge and scientific ability, whose duty it shall be, on the written application of an inventor, for the purpose being filed, to revise and determine upon the validity of decisions made by examiners when adverse to the grant of letters patent, and to report to the Commissioner of Patents upon the validity of the decisions of examiners in interference cases, and when required by the Commissioner of Patents, to attend to the attendance of witnesses and perform such other duties as may be assigned to them by the Commissioner of Patents. The examiners-in-chief of this board may be removed by the Commissioner of Patents, upon payment of the fee hereinafter prescribed; but the said examiners-in-chief shall not be governed in their action by the rules to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Patents. No appeal shall hereafter be allowed from the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, except in cases pending prior to the passage of this act.

Sec. 3. And he further enacted, That no appeal shall be allowed from the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, upon payment of the fee hereinafter prescribed; but the said examiners-in-chief shall not be governed in their action by the rules to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Patents. No appeal shall hereafter be allowed from the decision of the Commissioner of Patents, except in cases pending prior to the passage of this act.

Sec. 4. And he further enacted, That the salary of the Commissioner of Patents, from and after the close of the present fiscal year, shall be $10,000 per annum, and the salary of the chief clerk of the Patent Office shall be $2,000. Sec. 5. And he further enacted, That the Commissioner of Patents is authorized to sell to the public, for the purpose of sale, or when not removed by him, to otherwise dispose of such of the models belonging to rejected applications as he shall not think necessary to be preserved, and the same authority is also given in relation to all models accompanying applications for designs. He is further authorized to dispose, in favor of the widest sale of designs, when the design can be sufficiently represented by a drawing.

Baltic, through which we obtain our entire supply of hemp, would have been closed against us. That circumstance, which is a perpetual reminder to the mind of the Government, great desire to establish a domestic resource, upon which we might safely and independently rely. He seems, in his efforts to complete the bill, to have been actuated by a spirit of patriotism, and to have acted under the full conviction that he was not transgressing his lawful authority in doing so. He was, however, mistaken. He was, in the opinion of the committee, standing committed to the opinion of the country; and his engagements with the claimants, in relation to their compensation, should be recognized and fulfilled by the Government.

"The claimant, conscious that the prosecution of the enterprise would be attended with great pecuniary loss, would probably involve him in serious losses, expressed an unwillingness to return upon it."

It was not a voluntary proposition made by this claimant. It was not one of the frequent cases in which a man comes to the Government and urges it into a contract for a speculative purpose; but this claimant was sent for by the Secretary of the Navy. He was brought to the seat of Government to consult with him on subjects connected with this enterprise; and he was urged, against his will, by the Secretary of the Navy, to enter into it. These considerations appear to me to relieve him entirely from any prejudice which any Senator might entertain against him.

"The Secretary of the Navy, in order to overcome the objections given to the bill, by Mr. Myerle, brought and at such a price, as would probably afford him an adequate remuneration in the event of success, and assured him that the Department would take the loss, if it occurred, as compensation for any loss he might ultimately sustain in consequence of a failure of the experiment. Mr. Paulding, in his report, avers that he recommended the bill, in the opinion of the Navy Department just about the period at which the rejection of the hemp of the claimant took place, and that, had he been retained in office, he would have taken effectual measures to remedy, as far as possible, the injustice of the decision of the inspectors at Boston, by causing the hemp to be retested, as he was then, and still is, of opinion that the superiority of the claimant's hemp, in strength, more than counterbalanced any alleged inferiority in cleanness, and that he substantially justified his conduct according to the understanding of the parties."

"The hemp of the claimant was received, he would have realized a profit of $65,000 as a remuneration for the time and means which he had sacrificed in the accomplishment of the great enterprise for which he had voluntarily entered and labored. He was assured that he should be indemnified against loss, even in the event of a failure. He was told, but not in writing, that the Government would, which not only reduced its independent of foreign countries for an ample supply of the best hemp in the world, for the use of the naval service, but that it would have developed an important agricultural interest in our country, whereby millions of dollars, which were annually sent to foreign countries for the purchase of hemp, would be retained at home, and contribute to the general wealth and prosperity of the country. Mr. Paulding says, 'you succeeded, and you will be rich; and another man will be ruined, who would have done so.' Yet this success has not elicited the fulfillment of the pledge of indemnity which was made the claimant, even in the event of failure."

"It appears, from the testimony embraced in this report, that the hemp offered by the claimant for inspection was analyzed and rejected, and that he was thereby not only unfairly deprived of the profits which he would have realized from the fulfillment of his contract, but consequently embarrassed and entirely ruined. The testimony establishes the fact that the claimant, in order to embark upon the enterprise at the earliest solicitation of a high functionary of the Government, or, at least, of an officer from a lucrative manufacturing position, which promised him a large sum of money, he was induced to enter into a contract to ruin. It further appears that he was the owner of a large amount of property, exceeding the value of $50,000, which was in his hands as a security for the fulfillment of a debt to the hemp enterprise in behalf of the Government; and that he directed in this object of great national importance, and in the exercise of his own judgment, during which time he manifested a degree of sound business capacity, and courage, both moral and physical, which, if duly and justly rewarded, would have proved a source of a liberal worth."

The Senator from Kentucky said he was engaged in the present, or, in two years, in the prosecution of this enterprise. The committee shows that he was engaged six or seven years:

"The committee, having traced the legislative history of this claim, find that its justice has been recognized by several honorable members of the House, and that it has been so long and repeatedly passed, separately, both the Senate and House of Representatives, not merely concurrently, so as to commend it to the popular eye, but in such a manner as to commend it to the popular eye."

"The Court of Claims, after a thorough and elaborate examination, have commended it to the favorable consideration of Congress."

I will state to the Senator from Delaware that the decision of the Court of Claims was simply on a technical and legal point. They said that Mr. Paulding, under the law, had no authority to make this contract, and therefore the Government was not legally responsible for any damages which this party sustained by the rejection of the hemp; but the Senate is not bound by a legal technicality. If this man entered into this contract in good faith, and the Secretary of the Navy made it in good faith, for the purpose of testing a great national experiment, which has resulted largely to the benefit of the United States, it seems to me that every principle of equity and of justice would demand to treat it precisely as if it had been a naked legal contract.

"The Court of Claims, after a thorough and elaborate examination, have commended it to the favorable consideration of Congress."

"In the conclusion of their opinion, reviewing the case, (Rep. C. C. No. Doc. 81, Thirty-Fourth Cong., third sess., p. 12.) the committee say:

"The evidence tends to show that an active and enterprising man of business became embarrassed in his circumstances by seeking to vindicate the just and fair power of the honest occupation, by his efforts to promote a matter of national concern. We submit the whole matter to the consideration of Congress, for such action as they, under all the circumstances, shall consider just and equitable."

"For sixteen years the claimant has been struggling with misfortune and adversity, entailed upon him by creditors made and losses sustained in the prosecution of this enterprise. During that entire period he has been before Congress, seeking in vain to obtain redress for the loss of his property, and a reparation of injuries sustained in the accomplishment of an object of national concern, the benefit of which the country has been enjoying. He is now, however, afflicted with blindness, and distressed with the infirmities incident to advanced age. These considerations unite with the claims of justice in urging, in the hands of the Government, an immediate relief. The committee, therefore, report a bill, the enactment of which would confer upon the claimant the relief which he is entitled to, and confer a great benefit upon the country."

The committee in the House of Representatives have reported a bill for precisely the same amount as the Committee on Claims of the Senate—$100,000. The bill is introduced from Kentucky, and this amount has been arrived at. I confess it has been partially arbitrary. It was very difficult to ascertain by any proof what injury this party actually sustained. It is in proof, however, I think conclusively—at least it is so stated by the report of the Senator from Florida upon your table—that if the inspectors in Boston had accepted the quantity of hemp which he manufactured and offered to the Government under his contract, he would have made $65,000 clear money by the operation. It is not in proof that these inspectors colluded with the inspectors of foreign hemp to break down this experiment of Mr. Myerle, for the benefit of foreign importers, and that they did him great injustice by the rejection of his hemp; for the Secretary himself, and persons who examined the hemp, and reported that it was inferior, because the hemp was a stronger and better article than any foreign article which had been introduced into this country, and was wanting in nothing but a little cleanliness, which was an unimportant consideration at most. There can be no doubt, I think, from the reading of the evidence in this case, that the inspectors corruptly rejected the hemp of Mr. Myerle.

MR. SLIDELL. Will the Senator from Georgia excuse me? I should like him to point to that portion of the record from which any such inference is drawn.

MR. IVERSON. I cannot do that, because I have not got it here.

MR. SLIDELL. I have examined carefully, and I can find nothing of that sort.

MR. IVERSON. That is the report of Mr. Mallory. I take it for granted he would not make the statement unless it was so. I am not familiar with the facts, and take the statement more on what Mr. Mallory has reported than on my own knowledge of the case. I think that is justified by Mr. Paulding's deposition, because he states his deposition that if he had not gone out of the Navy Department, he would have taken means to reconsider the determination by which that hemp was, as he says, improperly rejected. Improperly—yet? Rejected, because the inspectors reported that it was not good. I think it is not proper to be any way by the testimony of the witness, and it was a better article than any that had been imported from abroad.

Now, sir, here is the case of an old man who was employed by the Government, at the instance of the Secretary of the Navy, to test the hemp on his own application—but employed to make an experiment which cost him six or seven years of labor, the best years of his life, and on it he expended a fortune of $50,000, and by it he has been ruined. It is an experiment, too, which on all hands is admitted to have been a failure, and yet the Government, because now, instead of being dependent on a foreign supply, this very process, which he demonstrated to be one capable of being pursued successfully, has enabled the Government to supply itself with a domestic article, and has stimulated the production of this article in all the western States. Under these circumstances, I think he comes with a powerful appeal to Congress, not only to be generous and liberal to him, but to do him an act of justice, and restore to him some portion of that fortune, at least, which he has expended in the service of the Government.

MR. HAYARD. I have known for many years a honorable Senator from Georgia—with whom I often have the misfortune to differ, perhaps from the difference in the structure of our minds—as to the weight of testimony. When he imputes to prejudice the readiness to act of the Senators, he does a great injustice. I certainly have no prejudice against Mr. Myerle. I think I do not know him personally. Perhaps I have seen him once. Indeed, I rather feel sympathy for the man; but I cannot suffer sympathy for the man to bias or govern my judgment in determining whether the bill ought to be passed, if there be no evidence to sustain it. I thought such action on my part here was judicial action, and that I was bound first to look to the proof of the facts on which the claim rested, and then see whether, taking the facts as they were, the action of the Government was bound justly—I use that term not technically, but justly—to pay.

Now, sir, I differ with the honorable Senator from Georgia as to what he calls the technicality on which he says the Court of Claims rejected the claim. I have lived long enough in foreign countries to know that when that objection of technicality is made, the word is almost always used for the purpose of creating the idea that it is strict law against right; but I consider it a principle here, which stands far beyond technicality, that as an officer of the Government—especially an officer having high powers—should not be permitted to make contracts without authority of law. When it is proposed that the Government shall recognize his debt where he abuses his authority or goes beyond his authority, it is not a technical objection, but a matter of principle, in my judgment, to reject any such contract which he has made. It is a principle that is necessary for the transaction of the business of the Government. You cannot get along without adopting that as a principle, and if adopted, it would not be understood that it is a principle.

Now, sir, what is the proof in this case? The report of the Committee of the House draws in what I consider an objection to this claim to support it. The Secretary of the Navy made an application for authority to make an advance to carry out this contract. The Senate passed it; but the House did not—the report says, as it is understood—the House did not pass it, from want of time to act on it. I do not know anything about the want of time. I know the law was not passed. I know the House did not consider that the claimant had a right to the money, and the law at the time. But, in the face of the refusal, for it amounts to a refusal by Congress to give the power, the Secretary chose to exercise it in an informal manner. The report also reads thus into consideration that the Secretary of the Navy had a right to do so, and that it was the intent of his powers. Did the Attorney General reply to him that he had power to make such a contract? I apprehend not. The committee do not say so. The opinion of the Court of Claims is not read here, but I think it is understood that I think you will find, if you read it, that the Court of Claims rejected this claim on the ground that an officer had gone beyond the extent of his authority; and they report all the facts to Congress, leaving it to Congress to say whether, under the circumstances, they should be allowed to stand, although the authority had been transgressed. I do not consider that as a mere technical question. I think it is of vastly higher importance that we should not sanction such a precedent, than that the individual should suffer in the particular case arising from it, and that we should not allow one who had no authority to make it with him.

I therefore, sir, without having the slightest prejudice against Mr. Myerle, cannot vote his bill, because I cannot sanction the precedent which it embodies. I may say further, that the bill is in every respect a bad one. It is admitted that this is necessarily arbitrary in its nature. My recollection is, that in a former bill which was before the Senate, and which I think passed the Senate, the amount was greatly less; I think probably not more than three hundred dollars. I cannot recollect now. If I had time to examine, I would look; but I think, at that time, as it could not be ascertained with accuracy before the bill passed the Senate, those who were in favor of it found themselves obliged, as there was no evidence to sustain such a claim, to reduce to the amount shown; and my impression is, that in that shape it did pass the Senate, though it was resisted. By looking back to the Congressional Globe I can tell. It is within a period of some seven or eight years that that occurred. The case was before Congress some time before that. It was resisted, and resisted as a case of no merit, by the honorable Senator then representing the State of Missouri, as I mentioned. I know that gentleman was a man very often of strong prejudice; he may have been misinformed; but he entertained an opinion against the merits of the claim, and I am very sure he resisted it. There were other able and intelligent men in public life, nearer to the time of the transaction than we are, who were opposed to the allowance of this claim.

But I rest my case upon what I have stated—that I think the precedent too dangerous to be sanctioned by Congress; and as to Mr. Paulding's subsequent statement—that if he had remained in the Department he would have ordered the hemp that was rejected to be received—how could he tell either the Senate or the country the proper judge of hemp. He never examined the hemp. He took the statements of others after he was out of office; and it was natural. Able as Mr. Paulding was—and I do not deny it, man of undoubted integrity, as he was—and I do not deny it, I do not think he was a man whose integrity was in question; I do not think he was so estimated throughout the country. He was a man of a high order of ability; a great writer, in many respects; but I do not think the impression made on the country was that his particular forte was administrative talent. These opinions are but the opinion of a gentleman supporting a contract which he had made without authority of law. He had no competency to decide about this hemp. His opinion, therefore, introduced into the report of the House committee, is entitled to little weight. It is to the question of the propriety of the action of the honorable Senator from Louisiana. At the time to which I have referred, I examined the testimony which was before the Senate when this question was discussed before, and which had been before for years, and it can hardly be said to afford any possible reasonable ground for attacking the character of the inspectors on the ground of corruption, though there was the imputation that foreign inspectors in Boston had influenced them in their decision; but there was no proof of that whatever; nor was the position then examined. The testimony was all on one side, so it always was in Congress at that day. I into a strong conviction that, where a man seeks to do justice in a matter of this kind, he must not only hear both sides, but he ought to hear the evidence on both sides; and in so doing, leaving the character of those officers of the Government, I think they had a right to be heard, and not to be condemned by Mr. Paulding, after he was out of office, or by any other man, as guilty of corrupt practices, or under or without acts, without being heard, and without leaving the character of the grounds and reasons on which they acted. The Secretary of the Navy at that day did not choose to send it back; did not choose to make the allowance. Why could it not have been done? Why could not the party, if his hemp was improperly received, have carried the case to the court, who was then Secretary of the Navy, I believe, and have said to him, "Sir, send this back for re-examination by somebody else, because it has been unjustly rejected, under improper influences, by these inspectors in Boston?" Would not that have been the natural course, when the inquiry could be made at once; made while the hemp was still there, and could be the subject of examination by persons skilled in the examination? Yet did all that take place? No; not from any evidence that I recollect of, or from any other cause, but, in the whole, or, without the slightest prejudice against this party, or rather with a feeling of sympathy for him, because he had embarked in a losing undertaking—for that was my feeling—

I cannot reconcile my mind to vote in favor of an allowance by Congress of a sum to Mr. Myerle, because it involves the recognition by Congress of an undoubted assumption of authority beyond the extent of his powers by the Secretary of the Navy; and which, if recognized by Congress, will only lead to further assumptions by other officers under similar circumstances.

Mr. PRESIDENT. Mr. Myerle did not think the exact state of this case has been precisely presented yet by any Senator. Mr. Myerle was a gentleman whose attention had been turned towards the culture of hemp. He had his own ideas on the subject. He thought, no doubt, that while his efforts could be rendered to the country, he could profit himself by the introduction of such culture. He applied to the Secretary of the Navy, or, if gentlemen please, the Secretary of the Navy applied to him. He did not ask that a certain sum of money should be given to him for the purpose of stimulating this enterprise, but he said to the Secretary of the Navy, "if you will give me a contract"—"in the first instance, I believe, for three hundred tons of hemp, which was afterwards increased to five hundred"—"if you will give me a contract for the quantity of five hundred tons, I will undertake to make the experiment." That was the inducement held out to Mr. Myerle. The promise said to have been made was a subsequent one. Mr. Myerle went to work in good faith and attempted to deliver the hemp to the navy, but he could never have expected to make the quantity of five hundred tons by any single establishment in a new enterprise of that sort, and by labor supervised only by himself. I presume he intended to do so by sub-contracts. He did produce a certain quantity of hemp, but he delivered it in the city of Boston; and it was there inspected by the proper officers of the Government and rejected.

It has been confidently asserted by the Senator from Maine, that the testimony was conclusive that this hemp had been improperly rejected. Now I differ from him, and I think I can show him why. There is no such evidence. On the contrary, the evidence proves that the hemp was not equal to the sample for which the contract stipulated. The hemp was rejected. Mr. Myerle then applied to Mr. Paulding, Secretary of the Navy, and he said to him, "I will take the hemp, but I will not lose any money. Here the first question presents itself, whether mere vague conversations of an officer of the Government, however high, to induce a man to enter into an enterprise, impose any moral obligations on Congress, or give rise to any obligations. To what injurious consequences to the public Treasury, and the public morale too, might not such a system lead? Now I assert most positively that, in the first place, there is no proof that this hemp was improperly rejected. I assert most positively that the promise is complete that Mr. Myerle did not comply with the terms of his contract. He has not pretended that he complied with them. However, in the first instance, I am disposed to meet the assertion made by the Senator from Georgia. He states that it was the intention of the Government to reject the hemp in consequence of some collusion and corruption on the part of the officers.

Mr. IVERSON. No; but I said that was my conclusion.

Mr. SLIDELL. The Senator from Georgia referred to the report of Mr. Maxcy, the chairman of the Naval Committee; and I will here, by the way, state that my first impressions about this case were derived from a very careful examination of it when I was first a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I thought then the case was unfounded, and that majority of the committee thought differently, and a report was made on the subject to the Senate; the bill was discussed with a great deal of zeal and talent on both sides of the question; the matter was fully examined by the Senate, and the result of the deliberations of the Senate on that occasion was, not to pass a bill for the sum of $45,000, but, if my recollection serves me—and I will appeal to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEN] on that subject, for he took a very active interest in favor of the bill, and he spoke upon the subject in the Senate, and the Senator from Georgia, Mr. Myerle, $10,000, and no more. Now, as to the charge of corruption, which is said to be sustained against the inspectors—

Mr. POLK. If the Senator will allow me, I think it is due to this claimant that I should make an explanation of what the case was, as it was first referred to by the Senator from Delaware, and now again by the Senator from Louisiana, that the bill, as it on one occasion passed the Senate, was for a less amount than it has been reported both by the committee of the House and Senate, and that the House and Senate were not the amount for the reason that, after the case went to the Court of Claims there was testimony taken in, as I understand, pretty extensively on both sides, and it showed that the amount originally claimed, and for which a bill formerly passed the Senate, was too small, and hence the committee became satisfied that the amount was not adequate to repair the damage that had been inflicted upon, or perhaps I ought to say that had been suffered by, Mr. Myerle. This is his explanation of it.

Mr. SLIDELL. To recite to what I was about stating as to the evidence which was so confidently asserted to exist, showing collusion and corruption on the part of officers in Boston, the whole foundation of this charge is a single paragraph of a letter of Mr. Paulding, the Secretary of the Navy.

It had been in the head of the Navy Department at the time this hemp was rejected, I would most assuredly have taken upon myself the responsibility of directing it to be received, and I would have been a commercial trader, not in quality, I believe, but in quantity, or something of that sort. I have always suspected that wrong was done by the persons who made the trial, in consequence of some secret influence exercised over them, and this suspicion was verified to me by the late Commodore Nicholson about this year. The Commodore was in the command of the yard at Boston, and assured me you had not justice done to the trial.

In another letter, he says that Commodore Nicholson assured him—

"That Commodore had been used to induce the inspectors to come to that conclusion."

What is this? It is the statement of a Secretary of the Navy, who really knew nothing about hemp. It is derived from conversation with an officer who was not in command at the time, and knew nothing of the transaction. It has been heard from officers there. No attempt was made before the Court of Claims, or no successful attempt, no evidence was produced before the Court of Claims to show that this contract had been violated by the United States, or that any damages resulted from the transaction. The claimant appeared endeavored to show by testimony that this hemp had been improperly rejected; but the court says:

"It is not contended by the claimant that these contracts were performed in Boston, or that he has any force or action against the United States arising out of any failure on their part to perform the stipulations in the contract. The claimant alleges that the liability of the United States depends on a verbal contract made between himself and the Secretary of the Navy [Mr. Paulding] in the year 1852."

I am not disposed to occupy the attention of the Senate in this matter; but I will send to the desk to be a portion of the report of the Court of Claims, that I think points out the danger that will result from legislation of the character contemplated by this bill in the strongest terms. I ask the clerk to read page 59.

The Secretary read, as follows:

"That no doubt that the Navy commissioners, under the direction of the Secretary, were constrained to make the contracts in question for the delivery of American water-reel hemp; but in questioning on that point need be made the price of it. The question presented is, whether the Secretary could bind the United States by his promise to indemnify the contractor in the event of his failure to deliver the hemp, or whether American water-reel hemp could be successfully introduced. Such a promise gives the claimant a right to make a contract, and to enter upon any time, and at any place within the United States. He is not limited, either as to the amount of capital he might invest, or as to the time or place of his operations, or the Government. It is to select the place of his operations, the agents to conduct the business, and the manner in which the enterprise should be conducted. It is a contract, in the point of view of an agent of the United States to exercise his own discretion, subject to no limitations, and personally responsible to the United States for the results of his conduct, and the profits of it belonged to him, while the losses were sustained by the Government. The Government's payments were successful, the benefit to the United States would be that we should depend upon American hemp for the supply of the Navy, and it would be a contract to make it from Russia."

Now, it is very clear that this is not a contract for the delivery of hemp to the United States, but a contract for the right to indemnify a citizen for an experiment which might or might not result in unusual benefits. We are just as sure that, if the bill of Congress, as it is, is passed, the Secretary is authorized to make a contract subject to no law of the Government to contingencies of this character. The more exact that the Secretary might cause a contract to be made, the more the Government would be enabled to make the Government substantially a hemp grower. If the power had been reserved to the Secretary to limit the liability of the Government should exercise some superintendence over the contract, it would be a very different matter. It is not in his hands, as it is, nothing could be larger, lower, or more ill-limited. The power is not only not given to the Secretary, but it is not given to the Government. It must not be derived from, nor is it incident to, any authority specifically given by law. The act in force in 1859 was the act of 1854, which gave the Secretary the power to purchase, and provided that all purchases and contracts for supplies or services where art, or may, according to law, be made by the Secretary of War, or the Secretary of the Navy, shall be made either by cash purchase or by previously arranged contract. It is not in the least probable that the Government that, from this kind of an interference can be made that the Secretary could bind the Government by his promise to interfere with the Government in the purchase of supplies in relation to the supplies for which the Secretary might contract, and we are of opinion that the clause has no legal effect.

Mr. SLIDELL. In order not to make any mistake in the assertion of fact, I have sent for the Globe of 1854. However, the Senator from New Jersey is very confident in his recollection that the bill passed for $10,000 that year; and I suggest to the friends of this bill now, that their best policy would be to move its reduction to that sum.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Mr. President, I almost regret that it has fallen to my lot to know something about this case, and, therefore, to trouble the Senate with some remarks on the subject. I have not stated all the facts. This old gentleman may have some scintilla of right, and I would be willing to yield to him. But I think that the appeals which have been made in his behalf have not satisfied me or the Senate in regard to the legality and validity of his claim, they have appealed somewhat more successfully to my feelings on this subject; and if the gentleman will re-consider this demand to $5,000, which I think about a duty, I will be satisfied. I think that I have said enough to show that I am not without some sense of right and claim for that sum—I shall have nothing further to say about it, and let the bill pass.

Now, sir, that is not needed to. I have further to say on this subject that no case that I have known affords such an illustration as to the manner in which ancient claims are brought up before the courts. I have said that the case is a case as presented by its friends. Nothing is admitted, as plausibilities, and exaggerations. This gentleman, for instance, we are told, was a man of enterprise; he was a man of property; he was a man of high standing in the community; it is told there is a region of country where hemp is raised, and where the people do not know how to prepare and handle it for use; he is brought in to go out there, and undertake to instruct them in the art, and he is told that he has secured services, and furthermore that he shall have a contract for the delivery of five hundred tons of water-proofed hemp, at a high price, if delivered in Boston. Now, sir, I would tell you that this gentleman agreed upon. Well, sir, he engaged, and he went to Kentucky. The great man from Georgia says he was in this employ five or six years. I do not know the exact period of his employ; I do not know how long he was in the employ; but he must have stayed five or six years, how long was he employed in this sort of instruction to the hemp raisers? What part of that time was employed in the attempt to fulfill his profitable contract as he supposed it was, and what part was lost in a case which a claim is made for $44,000.

Let me remark, in the first place, that the recollection to my recollection—for I knew this claim when it was first presented to this body, and it is pretty nearly as old here as I am—it was, I think, for not quite half the amount that it now is. If any of the gentlemen of those committees who have reported upon it and examined it, recollect it, I should be very much obliged to them for the information. It has grown by time. Time has at least that profitable influence on your old cases, that depend not upon any precision, not upon any facts, but upon platitudes, upon plausibilities, upon the general opinion of things recollected after the lapse of twenty, thirty, or forty years. That is the case.

This gentleman, in the first place, is represented as abandoning for the sake of the country, and for this patriotic employment, large and profitable enterprises, and an estate which he had. Now, let me tell you sir, all this is a farce. Mr. Myerle had no estate. Mr. Myerle, when he went there, ha-executions against him returned "No property." Mr. Myerle may have had some enterprise, since he was a slaveholder, but he was not a man of anything to improve and advance his condition—a very praiseworthy object. He has a conversation with the Secretary of the Navy, and he goes to Kentucky. Now, can anything be imagined more utterly preposterous and absurd than that the Secretary of the Navy should be so deeply conversant with hemp growing, in all probability, should be sent to Kentucky to teach the most intelligent class of population, or as intelligent class of agriculturists he can be found anywhere in these United States, how to prepare for the market a stalk of hemp growing, in all probability, of their own productions? Can anything be more preposterous on the face of it? They were the wealthiest and most intelligent class of our agriculturists. This was their staple; and Mr. Myerle who never cultivated, for all I know, and probably never saw, a stalk of hemp growing, unless he said, in Kentucky.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to a little Kentucky testimony?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Yes, sir.
Mr. FESSENDEN. Hon. Robert Wickliffe of Kentucky in a letter addressed to Mr. Mycrls dated Lexington, May 21, 1841, says:

"I trust that your patriotic exertions may not only be crowned with success, to the great prosperity and advantage of the nation, but that your own labors may be well rewarded in the end. One thing is certain—that is, both the State and nation will owe you gratitude for achieving what has failed heretofore."

That, I suppose, is one of the platitudes. Now we will take a little testimony. George W. Carter, in a letter dated Woodford county, Kentucky, says:

"I know of my own knowledge you had every difficulty to contend against that could be thought of, and you also know that the neighbors even went so far as to threaten about you and pull down your dams as fast as you would put them up, in consequence of these prejudices. Still, which effort it has been uniformly adopted, and the farms that have the suitable means for the business."

* * *

"Your efforts have proven entirely satisfactory as to the practicability of the business, and has given a new impetus to the culture and management of hemp, and has been of incalculable advantage to the State of Kentucky, and the hemp growing country generally."

Henry Wallace, in his testimony, says:

[illegible]

It was the dew-rotted hemp that they had been manufacturing before, according to the testimony

Mr. SLIDELL. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me a moment, I wish to correct an error of statement. I find that when the bill passed the Senate, on the 30th of June, 1854, it was for $15,000—not for $10,000, as I stated before. The bill was originally passed for $30,000, and was sent to the House; and a motion for reconsideration was entered, and the bill was brought back from the House of Representatives. It was the again fully discussed, and finally passed the Senate for $15,000.

Mr. POLK. I know the fact that it passed for more than that at the last Congress; and I will ask the Senator if that is not the smallest amount for which it ever passed?

Mr. SLIDELL. I really do not know. This is the only occasion when I ever recollect this bill to have been fully discussed. As I said before I had occasion to examine it on the Naval Committee.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I shall occupy very little of the time of the Senate. I have stated that, in place of the large fortune which this gentleman is alleged to have had in the active profitable enterprises in which he was engaged, he had nothing. He went to Kentucky without means, and he came from there so. It is not true that he is entitled to anything on account of sacrifices antecedent to that. He abandoned nothing; he pursued a hope of benefiting his fortune by this enterprise. At that time, there were very respectable gentlemen who were interested in the project. Knowlton & Co. at that time they had grand hopes, no doubt, from Mr. Myerle's efforts; but I tell the Senator, upon my own knowledge, that there was very little water-rotted hemp new made in Kentucky. For a number of years, the Government has been the patronage of this Government, and to introduce it in place of Russian hemp, for all naval and maritime purposes. They failed in it. Mr. Myerle says his was rejected. There were several other rejections before we had any general determination to use the hemp of the plantations. To use their hemp by preparing it for water-rotting. The idea is set forth that Mr. Myerle carried to Kentucky this great secret of water-rotting hemp. I can tell gentlemen it is no such thing. He did not know, and he never did know, and he never knows, and every man conversant with that section of the country knows, that a large farmer of my own knowledge and acquaintance, who owned a large tract of land in the county of Woodford, was a great hemp raiser, was in the habit of water-rotting his hemp before Mr. Myerle came west of him. I know that.

We heard of Mr. Myer's patriotic efforts. Why, sir, it is the patriotic effort that has been made by everybody that has come here and tried to make a racket out of the hemp business. I made a mistake. We did get resolutions and tried authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make contracts prospective for the delivery of hemp, and to pay for it the highest prices allowed for the best hemp. But, in the very act, I retract, the hemp is rejected; and I do not know how to do it without attributing corruption, at any rate, to those under whose inspection it had to pass previous to its reception by the Government. But there'll no doubt be a great deal of talk about it, and I am sure that which the gentleman from Missouri calls prejudice on the part of these hemp raisers of Kentucky, turns out to be nothing more than the best judgment that was to be formed on the subject. It is the judgment of practical men; the judgment of men who have been in the business, and who know that the hemp is not good, and that it is hot and most profitable use of their staple. There is but little water-rotted hemp in Kentucky now, and it is only one here and there, who may have been in the business, who are in a position to give it its true value.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The testimony in the report is, that it has almost displaced all other kinds of hemp.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I am living testimony, and I say it is no such thing.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then the report states what is not true.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The report is mistaken, and every man from Kentucky will say so, I know better. But that is going from this subject. Mr. Myer made a contract with the Government for five hundred tons of hemp, to be delivered at a certain price. He was to receive $100 a ton for it; for that, in comparison to what the dew-rotted hemp sold for in Kentucky, he hoped to make a large profit. He went there to get the people to water-rot hemp, in order that he might purchase their water-rotted hemp; and so far from his being able to get a profit, as going there to do, he sustained a great deal of loss. He lost there, he said, about a million, without means. When he had made this contract, the prospect of it seemed to be flattering. He was to get two hundred, or two hundred and twenty, or two hundred and thirty dollars a ton, or more—the price of raw hemp. He was to have $100 a ton. The prospect of this profitable contract enabled him to procure means. He borrowed the means upon the credit of gentlemen and merchants in the city of Lexington—one by the name of Millhouse, I think; another by the name of Smith. They gave him a bill of exchange on London here for a claim, and it was heard of in Kentucky by these merchants, that he might probably obtain a large sum, they went on their claims to me, with a remonstrance and a request that if such an allowance was made to him long enough to send—and, the bill should provide that the money should be paid to his creditors, and not to him.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I believe I made a motion to insert $5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are several motions of amendment, stipulating different sums, the last must be first in order.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I think the Senator from Kentucky is mistaken. He said if the friends of the bill would strike it down to $5,000, he would vote for it. He did not make any motion about it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The gentleman is right. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Even if the motion were made, the large sum would be first in order, and must be first put. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The question was put; and the amendment was declared to be agreed to.

Mr. SLIDELL. I prefer now to move to insert $10,000, and take the yeas and nays on that. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will not be in order to amend further in relation to the sum.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I cannot understand how the proposition can be made at all, if the question must be first taken on the larger sum; and that be not susceptible of amendment now, and an amendment afterwards cannot be offered for a larger sum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Where there are different propositions in relation to the amount, the question first in order is on the largest sum named; and if that be voted down, then the next larger sum would be in order; but if the first, or second, or any other proposition be adopted, that is final and conclusive, until the question shall come before the Senate, when the bill is reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I will make the motion there.

Mr. HAMLIN. We may get at this in another way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided then, no division being called for on agreeing to the amendment to insert $30,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Chair will pardon me a moment before the question is decided affirmatively, I think the Chair is wrong in relation to the filling blanks, the question is first to be put on the longest time and the largest sum; but in striking out and inserting it is different. If I make a motion to strike out and insert a larger sum, my motion must be first put. The motion is to strike out $44,400 and insert $30,000. It is in order to amend that motion, before the question is put, by striking "thirty" out of that amendment, and inserting "ten." That is according to the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The statement of the Senator from Maine is correct, and the Chair does not apprehend it is in collision at all with the decision already made. The proposition to strike out $44,400 and insert $5,000, the Chair does not understand to have been made, or any provision but that of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SLIDELL. I may say, have stated it in the proper form; and I confess, with great humility, my entire ignorance of the rules; and I would have been pleased if the Chair had suggested to me the proper mode of arriving at the end I intended. I now move to strike out the sum named in the bill, and insert $5,000, if the Chair says it is in order now to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will treat the question as still before the Senate, although a division was not asked for, and the vote was announced on agreeing to the amendment. If the amendment be agreed to, it will not be open to further amendment until the bill shall be reported to the Senate. The question now before the Senate is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SLIDELL. I now desire, in some form or other, to make a substantive motion that the sum allowed to Mr. Myer be $5,000, and I am not particular about the mode of reaching it. ["Say ten."] I will put it at $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question it is now. The Senator from Georgia moves to strike out $44,400, and insert in place thereof $30,000. The Senator from Louisiana moves an amendment to that amendment, by striking out "$30,000" and inserting "$10,000." The question, then, is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. IVERSON. I think I can place it in a different position, to reach every object. The question is divisible, I think, first on striking out—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not divisible. A motion to strike out and insert is an entire question, and not divisible. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLINGMAN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—Noyes, Bayard, Benjamin, Blagden, Bragg, Clingman, Crittenden, Hamlin, Hiram, King, Lane, Nicholson, Powell, Rice, Satter, and Wigfall—15.
NAYS—Cass, Chase, Colburn, Cowan, Chandler, Clark, Colburn, Dixon, Durkee, Fremont, Fox, Gorin, Hale, Harlan, Hendricks, Iveson, Poik, Simmons, Ten Eyck, Wade, Wallen, and Wallis—21.
So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, which is to reduce the sum to $30,000.

Mr. IVERSON. I presume there will be no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and was then considered and read a third time. It was read the third time; and on the question, "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. BAYARD called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. FOOT. I have paired off on this question with the absent Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLAY.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—Noyes, Anthony, Blight, Brown, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Colburn, Dixon, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitch, Green, Hale, Harlan, Hendricks, Iveson, Poik, Simmons, Ten Eyck, Thompson, Wade, Wilson, and Wallis—24.
NAYS—Simmons, Bayard, Benjamin, Blagden, Bragg, Clingman, Crittenden, Hamlin, Hammond, Hiram, John and Alexander, Kent, Lane, Mason, Nicholson, Powell, Slidell, and Wigfall—17.

So the bill was passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. HAYES, Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 513) for the relief of Hockaday & Liggitt; and

A joint resolution (No. 34) for the relief of John T. Robertson, of Virginia.

JOHN PEEBLES.

The bill (S. No. 125) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of John Peebles, was announced to be next in order.

Mr. SLIDELL. At the request of a gentleman, who is interested on behalf of the claimant, I move that the bill be postponed until Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN ERICSSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 132) for the relief of John Ericsson.

Mr. HALE. That bill was postponed last Friday at my request, because I thought, from the reading of the report, as far as it went, that it ought not to pass. I have since examined the papers pretty thoroughly, and I am rather strengthened in my conviction that it ought not to pass; and I will state very briefly in a few minutes the reasons, and then the Senate may do as they please with it.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have been informed by Commodore Stockton, without any pretense of authority or instruction from the Navy Department, to do certain things; and subsequently he presented a claim to the Navy Department for about fifteen thousand dollars for making certain drawings. It was sent to the Secretary of the Navy, and by him referred to Commodore Stockton, and Commodore Stockton reported that he was surprised at it; he could not approve of it, and thereupon it was rejected by the Secretary of the Navy. Subsequently the man came to Congress, presented his claim again, and at that time it was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which the honorable Senator from Florida, who now with such distinction and ability presides over the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, [Mr. YULEE], was then the head. He investigated the matter, and he made a report against it, and now it has come up again, and has, by some means or other, been got through the Court of Claims. I think the bill ought not to pass; but I have no particular interest in it. I know the Treasury is open, and people go in with pretty liberal hands, and help themselves, and that they perseverance and patience in besieging the Treasury pretty generally succeed; and, some way or other, they find out a way of getting in, and I suppose that, after fifteen years, Mr. Ericsson will get in, and get out those $15,000 though at the time he pretended that the services rendered by the man who employed him said he was entitled to nothing. The Secretary of the Navy no decided, Congress so decided, and now, after fifteen years, he has come back, and I suppose will have his bill.

Mr. SLIDELL. The Senator from New Hampshire neglected to state what I think forms the chief objection to this claim of Mr. Ericsson. It has been before the Naval Committee since I have been a member of the Senate; but it now comes from the Court of Claims. Mr. Ericsson claimed to be the inventor of a certain style of propeller, and he was extremely anxious to have the opportunity of building a vessel on his own plan and superintending the drawings and work generally. He expressly declared that he expected no compensation whatever. That was the understanding upon which he was permitted to construct his drawings and superintend this work, and now he appears before Congress to claim the sum of $15,000, though he was at the time perfectly satisfied to have an opportunity of testing the merits of his own invention at the expense of the Government. That is the real truth of the case in a few very words.

Mr. IVERSON. I am not very familiar with this case. It was once investigated by the Committee on Claims, and I think, reported on favorably by the Senator from Florida, now absent, [Mr. YULEE]. In the case, and as he is absent, I move to pass it over, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope that will be done; but I beg to make one suggestion as to this idea of working on one's own plan, and not to be charged nothing for his patent, but I do not think he intended to do all this work for nothing.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

NAHUM WARD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 137) from the Court of Claims for the relief of Nahum Ward.

Mr. IVERSON. At the last sitting on the Private Calendar the Senator from Ohio, who is not present to-day, [Mr. PERRY], said this man was one of his constituents, and he desired to be present when the case was considered. I move to pass it over.

The motion was agreed to.

ERNEST FIEDLER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 138) from the Court of Claims for the relief of Ernest Fiedler.

Mr. HUNTER. That is one of the cases that the Senator from Ohio had laid over last week in order that he might examine them. I hope it will be laid over until next Friday.

Mr. SLIDELL. And all similar cases.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will agree that these cases shall lie over until next Friday; but I hope there will be no further delay.

Mr. SLIDELL. If they go over as unfinished business, they will then come up, of course. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending motion is to postpone the consideration of this bill.

Mr. SLIDELL. I thought that was done by common consent.

Mr. HUNTER. We can go into executive session, and then it will go over to next Friday. ["Agreed."]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SLIDELL. I renew the motion for an executive session.

$150,000 appropriated for that purpose, and as though the application to that purpose of part of the money appropriated as aforesaid to "the improvement of the navigation" of said rivers had been lawful; provided that the credits allowed shall not exceed the total amount of said appropriations.

SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing that the joint resolution shall be received; and I move that it be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on Private Calendar. I think it ought to be examined into, and that there ought to be a report accompanying it.

Mr. MALLORY. There is a report.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to object to the resolution coming on; but I think there ought to be some examination of it.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. If the House will indulge me, I will say one word in regard to the knowledge which I possess of the contents of this bill. It was considered before the Committee on Commerce. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOOREHEAD] was instructed to report it, and to ask to have it put upon its passage. I am told that it is to provide for a remission in this respect: the items of accounts were misapplied, and money was attributed to one set of items while the appropriation was designed for another—all falling, however, within the general appropriation. A part of the appropriation was designed for the improvement of certain rivers, and another part for the improvement and repair of certain boats on these rivers. I was informed, and believe, that a great part of the appropriation was expended for the boats, and not for the rivers; and this bill is to correct that misapplication. The aggregate expenditures did not exceed the sum appropriated.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask my friend from New York, who seems to have been put in possession of certain information in respect to this bill, whether his committee has applied to the Department to learn, and whether it has information from the Department showing, the true, real difficulty in the way of settling these accounts? What information is there from the Department, before the House or before the committee, on the subject of these contested items?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. The information submitted to us in the committee was to the effect that there was no objection in the Department to this resolution, and that it was requisite to a proper settlement of these accounts, that the error had been committed; that it can only be corrected in this way; and that that course would be without injury to the public interests.

Mr. HOUSTON. If there be any communication from the Department, I call for the reading of it.

Mr. FLORENCE. This will cost the Government nothing. The matter has been investigated by a committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have asked for the reading of it. Will the gentleman let it be read?

The following communications were read by the Clerk:

WAR DEPARTMENT, April 7, 1860.

Sir: In reply to your letter of the 14th inst., enclosing a joint resolution providing for the adjustment of the accounts of the western river improvements, I have the honor to transmit, herewith, respectfully, the report of the graphical engineer and Third Auditor, containing the information requisite for a full understanding of the subject. The joint resolution is herewith transmitted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Committee on Commerce, House of Representatives.

REPORT.

Sir: In reply to your letter of the 16th March, 1860, from Hon. J. K. MOOREHEAD, referred to this office for report, I have the honor to state:

On examination of the settled accounts of the agents of the Bureau of Topographical Engineering, for the improvement of the 20th August, 1853, "for the construction and repair of wing boats, dredges, boats, discharging sewers, and machinery, to be used on the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Arkansas, and other western rivers," it was ascertained, it appears that the amount applied to that purpose was $150,000.

The amount appropriated is $150,000 00

And the amount expended beyond the amount appropriated is therefore $60,874 33

Of this amount, there appears to have been applied to appropriations for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi, below the rapids..... $67,578 67

The Ohio, including the repairs of the dam at..... 64,879 95
The Mississippi of the mouth of the Ohio..... 4,320 83
The Arkansas..... 6,729 67

On settlement of the accounts of the agents referred to above, the accounting officers were of opinion that the expenditures necessary for the complete preparation of the plans and dredge boats, &c., for use in the improvement of the river designated, should be charged against the special appropriation for their construction, &c.; and that the expenditures for the cost of the construction of the appropriations for improvement of the navigation of the rivers in which they were designed to be used, was inadvisable, and could not be properly, properly be credited to the agents by whom the expenditures were made, without special authority from Congress.

There are no balances in the Treasury of any of the appropriations for the improvement of the rivers herein referred to, and if the credits contemplated by the joint resolution (S. R. No. 4, first session, Fifty-third Congress) introduced in Hon. Mr. MOOREHEAD's report are authorized, the salaries for which the disbursing agents will remain accountable will, if any, be inconceivable, as the only balances reported to be on hand by accounts rendered to the Treasury are for the year of 1859-60.

For the improvement of the Mississippi river, below the rapids..... $273 47

For improvement of the Arkansas..... 267 86

The letter from Hon. Mr. MOOREHEAD, and the resolution followed with it, and the letter in your from the Topographical Bureau, dated 23rd March, 1860, which was referred to this office herewith, are respectfully returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. J. MINER, Auditor.

Hon. JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

BUREAU OF TOPOGRAPHICAL ENGINEERS, Washington, March 28, 1860.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge your statement of report upon a letter from Hon. J. K. MOOREHEAD, of the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, including a joint resolution to allow credits to certain disbursing officers for expenditures made by them on account of the improvement of the western rivers.

The appropriations of August 20, 1853, for the improvement of western rivers, specified the objects in which they were to be applied; but in making the report, your committee found necessary to take from the funds appropriated for one object the means necessary to carry out another.

The object of the resolution, to authorize the accounting officers to reimburse the accounting officers to settle and close the accounts of the disbursing officers as they have been required.

With regard to the amount expended for boats, &c., beyond the amount of appropriation for that purpose, and the amount expended by the other expenditures, your committee respectfully refer to the Third Auditor, in whose office the accounts have been audited.

Respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,
J. J. ALBERT, Colonel Corps Engineers.

Hon. JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

Mr. HOUSTON. I shall not object to this bill, because, as far as I can understand these papers, and the statement made by the gentleman from New York, the bill does not contravene any additional appropriation. I may say, however, that I think such conduct on the part of disbursing officers is very censurable; and this House, and the country, have an opportunity, and where it can lay its hands on such officers, ought to express its sense of such conduct by withholding any additional appropriation where officers transgress or violate their duty and the law.

Mr. MALLORY. If the gentleman from Alabama can allow me, I can explain the extent at least, how this thing occurred. The superintendent of these wing-boats was authorized, by the general superintendent for the improvement of these rivers, to construct these boats. He had contracted for the construction of a certain number of boats. Under the word work of the boats was nearly completed, he ascertained that such a rise had taken place in the price of iron, that if he went on with the construction of these boats, and had the necessary machinery supplied, the boats would cost an amount largely in excess of that appropriated for this special purpose. Under these circumstances, he consulted Colonel Long and Colonel Albert as to the course he should pursue. They told him, without a moment's hesitation, to proceed with the construction of the boats; and they expressed an absolute certainty that he would be sustained and justified in pursuing that course. On the receipt of this advice, he pursued that course; and consequently, the cost of the boats, which it is reported was $150,000, was in excess of the appropriation.

I concur with the gentleman from Alabama that these departures from the exact sums appropriated should not be allowed, as a general rule.

Mr. HOUSTON. This explanation simply divides the responsibility for improper conduct between the disbursing officer on the ground and the heads of bureaus in this city.

Mr. MALLORY. Yes.
Mr. HOUSTON. I do not care to what point or to what person the blame should be applied. Such conduct ought to be censured whenever an opportunity presents itself.

I desire now, sir, after this bill shall be acted on, to ask for the regular order of business. I want the Chair to understand that this is the call which I make, and which I insist upon.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I inquire whether this bill has been received?
The SPEAKER. The bill has been received.
Mr. MALLORY. I move the previous question on its passage.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama waive his motion to commit?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation, the joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FLORENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS OF 1812.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the War Department, transmitting a list of persons who served more than six months in the year of 1812; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

RICHARD D. JONES.

Mr. BRANCH. I ask permission of the House to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Richard D. Jones, for the purpose of having them referred to the Pension Office. It was so ordered.

J. ALEXIS PORT.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask leave to have withdrawn from the files of the House the papers in the case of J. Alexis Port, leaving copies thereof on file. It was so ordered.

REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS.

Mr. McCLERNAND, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into and report, by bill or otherwise, the expediency of making additional compensation to registers and receivers of public lands, where several land districts have been consolidated into one district.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being called for, the committee will be called for reports on private business.

WILLIAM EWING.

Mr. TAPPAN, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of William Ewing; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BULL & COZENS.

Mr. TAPPAN, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Bull & Cozens, and John Nailor & Co.; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JANE SMITH AND OTHERS.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I am instructed by the Committee of Claims to report back the bill (C. C. No. 44) for the relief of Jane Smith, of the county of Claremont, State of Ohio, with a general joint resolution, which shall cover this and all similar cases. It is a joint resolution giving construction to the second section of the act of February 3, 1853, to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans. I ask that it may be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and with the report of the committee, be printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. DUELL. I hope that motion will not be agreed to.

The question was stated to the House, and the Speaker announced that it seemed to be decided in the negative.

Mr. BRANCH. I think the House does not understand the question. This is simply a motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider. Mr. HUSTON, I suppose everybody will understand my purpose in making the motion. It is to provide for the bill remaining in committee, where it can be discussed. It involves a principle that ought to be examined into; and that is all I want. I do not want it brought back into the House by a motion to reconsider, and put through under the operation of the previous question, without the opportunity upon the part of any member to ask any question, or express any opinion upon the subject.

Mr. DAVIDSON. And everybody knows that if it goes to the Committee of the Whole, without the power to bring it back by a motion to reconsider, it can never be reached.

Mr. DUELL. The bill was before the last Congress, and passed this House, as I understand, almost unanimously. I presume every member is familiar with it.

Mr. BRANCH. I will say that the motion is simply to confirm the action of the House in referring the matter to the Committee of the Whole, on the motion of the gentleman who reported it to this House. I do not know what objection can be made to it.

The motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined, and found truly enrolled, an act (H. R. No. 31) for the relief of Charles Knapp; when the Speaker signed the same.

HALF PAY TO WIDOWS AND ORPHANS.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I will say that there are some thirty odd bills from the Committee of Claims, involving precisely the same principle as the which has just been passed, and covered by the joint resolution which we have reported. I report them back, and ask that they may be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

The following bills were accordingly referred, and ordered to be printed:

A bill (C. C. No. 52) for the relief of Margaret Taylor, of Putnam county, Tennessee;

A bill (C. C. No. 52) for the relief of Anna Parot, of Clinton county, Ohio;

A bill (C. C. No. 51) for the relief of Nancy Madison, of Fairfield county, Ohio;

A bill (C. C. No. 50) for the relief of Mary Armstrong, of Gloucester county, Rhode Island;

A bill (C. C. No. 48) for the relief of Esther Stevens, of Van Buren county, Michigan;

A bill (C. C. No. 49) for the relief of Mary Bart, of Scioto county, Ohio;

A bill (C. C. No. 47) for the relief of Ann Clark, of Madison county, Tennessee;

A bill (C. C. No. 46) for the relief of Hannah Weaver, of Wayne county, Pennsylvania;

A bill (C. C. No. 45) for the relief of Lucinda Robinson, of the county of Orleans, State of Vermont;

A bill (C. C. No. 54) for the relief of Lavinia Tipton, of White county, Tennessee;

A bill (C. C. No. 55) for the relief of Lucretia Wilcox, of Wayne county, Michigan;

A bill (C. C. No. 56) for the relief of Mary Robins, of Westmoreland county, Virginia;

A bill (C. C. No. 57) for the relief of Tempy Connelly, of Johnson county, Kentucky;

A bill (C. C. No. 58) for the relief of Rosemond Robinson, of Belknap county, New Hampshire;

A bill (C. C. No. 59) for the relief of Jane Martin, of Harrison county, Virginia;

A bill (C. C. No. 60) for the relief of Melinda Durkee, of the State of Georgia;

A bill (C. C. No. 61) for the relief of Sarah Wood, of Albany county, State of New York;

A bill (C. C. No. 62) for the relief of Mary Pearce, of the county of Cortlandt, State of New York;

A bill (C. C. No. 63) for the relief of Ann B. Johnson, of the county of Henrico, State of Virginia;

A bill (C. C. No. 64) for the relief of Hannah Menzies, of the State of Kentucky;

A bill (C. C. No. 65) for the relief of Rebecca P. Nourse, of the State of Kentucky;

A bill (C. C. No. 67) for the relief of Anna Hild, of Monroe county, State of New York;

A bill (C. C. No. 68) for the relief of Polly Booth, of Madison county, State of New York;

A bill (C. C. No. 69) for the relief of Sarah Eaton, of Worcester county, State of Massachusetts;

A bill (C. C. No. 70) for the relief of Temperance Childers, of the State of Virginia;

A bill (C. C. No. 71) for the relief of Elizabeth King, of the State of Virginia;

A bill (C. C. No. 72) for the relief of Lydia Clapp, of Washington county, State of New York;

A bill (C. C. No. 73) for the relief of Elizabeth Morgan, of Rensselaer county, State of New York;

A bill (C. C. No. 74) for the relief of Phæbe Polly, of Oswego county, State of New York;

A bill (C. C. No. 75) for the relief of Nancy Ing, of Herkimer county, State of New York;

A bill (C. C. No. 76) for the relief of Mary Ann Hooper, of the State of Virginia;

A bill (C. C. No. 77) for the relief of Almira Reniff, of the State of Pennsylvania;

A bill (C. C. No. 78) for the relief of Sarah Loomis, of New London county, State of Connecticut;

A bill (C. C. No. 79) for the relief of Mary Grant, of the State of South Carolina.

Mr. BRANCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bills were referred; and also moved to lay the bill motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AUGUSTUS H. EVANS.

Mr. McCLERNAND, from the Committee of Claims, reported back Senate bill No. 210, for the relief of Augustus H. Evans, with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COMMANDER W. D. PORTER.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama. I am directed by the Committee of Claims to report back to the House the petition of Commander W. D. Porter, of the United States Navy, for balance of pay, and to move that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

It was so ordered.

BENJAMIN SAYRE.

Mr. HOARD, from the Committee of Claims, reported back House bill No. 99, for the relief of Benjamin Sayre, with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined, and found truly enrolled, bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 306) to settle the titles to lands along the boundary line between the States of Georgia and Florida; and

An act (S. No. 78) for the relief of Francis Hattman.

CAPTAIN ALFRED V. FRASER.

Mr. ELY, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Captain Alfred V. Fraser; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STEPHEN F. WILLIS.

Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of Stephen F. Willis; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RICHARD CHENERY.

Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina, from the same committee, also reported back Senate bill No. 77, for the relief of Richard Chenery, with a recommendation that it do pass, with certain amendments; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. WINSLOW. I rise to a privileged question. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next. It was the understanding last week that we should adjourn over this week.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

SIMON DE VISSER AND JOSÉ VILLARUBIA.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back Senate bill No. 39, for the relief of Simon De Visser and José Villarubia, with a recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM HIGGINS.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report a bill for the relief of the widow and other heirs of William Higgins.

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. TRIMBLE. I hope that there will be no objection to the passage of the bill at this time. It is a just claim; which will be admitted, I think, when the bill is read. I ask that the bill be read.

The Clerk read the bill. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to cancel homestead warrant No. 31474, issued on the 10th of July, 1856, to William Higginson, for service rendered as a seaman in the United States Navy during the war with Mexico, and to reissue the same to William Higgins, the real party for whom the land was intended.

Mr. TRIMBLE. It is a case of mistake of name, and the bill only provides the proper correction.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TRIMBLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSHUA FOSTER AND OTHERS.

Mr. ALLEY, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, made an adverse report on the petition of Joshua Foster and others, respecting a metallic safe and mail-bags for marine purposes, which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES STOKER.

Mr. ALLEY, from the same committee, also made an adverse report on the petition of James Stoker, for relief; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

HOCKADAY & LIGGITT.

Mr. ALLEY I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of House bill No. 513, for the relief of Hockaday & Liggitt, in order that it may now be put upon its passage.

Mr. BART. I must object to that.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That motion is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. It can only be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I know nothing about this case, and I must object.

Mr. BURNETT. I hope that the gentleman from Virginia will consent that the bill shall come before the House; and then we can act upon the facts as developed by the report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Every man must take his turn; and I cannot consent that one case of merit shall jump another case of merit.

Mr. FLORENCE. Does the objection of the gentleman from Virginia prevent the passage of the bill, if the gentleman reports it and brings it before the House?

The SPEAKER. The objection is a good one. Mr. BURNETT. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I do not object to the bill being taken up.

The bill was read. It directs that the sum of $59,576 be allowed to Hockaday & Liggett, in full payment for damages sustained by them in reduction of pay for carrying the mails on route No. 8911; and that amount be paid to William Liggett, for and on account of Hockaday & Liggett, and for their benefit.

It appears from the report that Hockaday entered into contract, on the 8th of April, 1856, with the Postmaster General, to carry the United States mail weekly from St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri, to Great Salt Lake City, in the Territory of Utah, for the sum of $190,000 per annum; that soon after, William Liggett became a full partner with Hockaday in said contract. It appears in evidence that service was commenced, and ran on the 1st of May, 1856; that it was faithfully and satisfactorily performed according to the contract. On the 7th of April, 1859, the contractor was notified, by direction of the Postmaster General, that it had been decided to reduce the service from a weekly to a semi-monthly mail, and the compensation would be reduced to $125,000 per annum. Against this action on the part of the Postmaster General the contractor remonstrated, stating in reply that such action was not contemplated, and provided for in the original contract. The contractor stated that a change of service from weekly to semi-monthly mails would not diminish, but would increase the expense of carrying them. This view of the case seems to be supported by the most ample testimony. The memorialists set forth the facts of the annual Post Office appropriation bill impaired their credit, and diminished their resources to such an extent as to subject them to great loss, but presenting in their case, however, no obstacle to the prosecution of the contract that was insurmountable; but when added to this a curtailment of the service and a reduction of the pay to the amount of $65,000 per annum, without any diminution of the expense, it involved them in irretrievable ruin. Thus, at a single blow, the accumulations, of Mr. Liggett's case, of a long life of virtuous toil, were swept away, his family beggared, and his partner, Mr. Hockaday, discouraged and disheartened, retired to Salt Lake City, where he now remains in a state of mental and physical debility, which disqualifies him from benefiting any attention whatever to his business. The contract was transferred by Hockaday & Co. to the present contractors, who have performed the service, according to the original contract, in a manner entirely satisfactory to the Department, preferring to carry the mail weekly rather than semi-monthly at the same expense, alleging, in this case, that Hockaday & Co., that it is less expensive for them to carry the mail weekly than semi-monthly.

The memorialists ask Congress to indemnify them to the amount of $65,000, as that is the sum which will be saved to the Treasury, by the action of the Post Office Department, up to the bill, but also declaring that this sum will not cover their loss by a very large amount.

THE SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the passage of the bill?

MR. BRANCH. How is this bill before the House?

THE SPEAKER. By unanimous consent. MR. BRANCH. Is it already before the House? THE SPEAKER. It is.

MR. BRANCH. I would like to ask the gentleman who has this bill in charge, whether there is any allegation that the Government failed to comply with its contract?

MR. NOELL. That is the very ground of the bill.

MR. BRANCH. I would like to hear from the gentleman having charge of the bill, if gentlemen will permit it, with a view to know whether there is any allegation in this case that the Government failed to comply with its contract with these individuals?

MR. ALLEY. Yes, sir. That is the chief point upon which the case rests. These individuals entered into contract with the Government to carry the mails from St. Joseph to Salt Lake City, weekly, for $190,000 per annum. But the Government reduced the service from a weekly to a semi-monthly one, by reason of the non-appropriation by the last Congress of money to carry the mails. The consequence of that reduction of service, and of the non-appropriation of money, caused a failure of these parties. The reduction of the service from a weekly to a semi-monthly one increased the cost to the parties of performing the service, instead of reducing it, while the Department, at the same time, reduced the pay from $190,000 to $125,000 per annum.

MR. BRANCH. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the Government did not, in the contract which these parties signed, reserve the right to reduce the service at its pleasure, and whether the parties did not agree to perform the reduced service at a pro rata compensation, or to throw up the contract?

MR. ALLEY. Such a stipulation was contained in the contract; and a similar provision is contained in the contract of every mail contractor with the Government, with the exception of the contractors for the Butterfield route. But that does not alter the equity of the case at all.

MR. CRAIG, of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to make a remark just here?

MR. ALLEY. Certainly. MR. CRAIG, of Missouri. These parties were, under their contract, carrying the mail weekly on one of the main routes, over the plains from St. Joseph, Missouri, to Salt Lake City, supplying, as you know, the mail to the Army, and the settlement along the route, at Fort Kearney and Laramie, and Pike's Peak. The service was reduced by the Department from a weekly to a semi-monthly one; and the testimony of many officers of the Army, of the postmasters along the route, and of many citizens, shows that this change, instead of increasing the cost to the parties, actually increased them, by reason of the accumulation of large amounts of mail matter for two weeks, which required the use of two four-horse coaches. This doubled the force employed, and required them to purchase double the number of horses, double the number of coaches, and double the number of men. The reduction to a semi-monthly service took off $65,000 per annum of their pay, while it increased by thirty, forty, or fifty per cent. the expenses of the contractors. When the appropriation bill for the payment of mail contractors was passed, these parties were notified of this, but they applied to one of my colleagues, Mr. Woodson, and other gentlemen of property, and secured the assistance of their indorsement until this Congress could relieve them.

MR. BRANCH. The reduction of the Department reducing the service and the pay was shown to Colonel Woodson and those other gentlemen, and they were obliged to abandon these parties to their fate. Thus they were broken up, and driven from the field, at an immense sacrifice of their horses, under the circumstances. The private property of one of these parties is now in the hands of the sheriff, to satisfy debts created by reason of the action of the Post Office Department. The other party, discouraged and disheartened, has retired to Salt Lake City, out of health, and out of mind, and his family are in ruin.

We now propose, by this bill, to give them, not an original appropriation, but to give them just the money now in the United States Treasury which belongs to them by the original contract. The calculation was made by me for the committee, and shows that they have been compensated some fifty-nine thousand dollars. As we have proved that they were driven from their semi-monthly trips to weekly trips, we propose to pay them that amount.

MR. BRANCH. The gentleman speaks of withholding $59,000 from these parties. Do I understand him to say that it is proposed by this bill to authorize the Postmaster General to pay over to them fines and forfeitures which he has withheld in consequence of their failure to comply with their contract?

MR. CRAIG, of Missouri. No, sir. By the reduction of the service and pay, they were kept out of some fifty-nine thousand dollars, which they would have received, if no change had been made. The Government stopped that amount of the original pay, which they would have received, if the Department had not reduced the service. The proof is that the service was, in fact, increased above what it would have been had they been permitted to go on and perform the service weekly in one-horse coaches. It is proved that they, in fact, performed the service, they were compelled to perform, and the committee recommend that Congress shall give them what belongs to them.

MR. BRANCH. It appears, then, that these parties made a contract with the Government, in the usual form, to perform a stipulated service. The ordinary clause was contained in that contract, by which the Postmaster General reserved the privilege of reducing the service at his pleasure.

MR. CRAIG, of Missouri. I will say to the gentleman that neither the contract nor the law gives to the Postmaster General any such power. The Postmaster General has no power to reduce the service whenever the public interest may require it. But the excuse he gives in his orders to all these contractors, so far as I have read them—and I have read a great many of them—was not that the public interest required the reduction of the service, but that Congress had failed to appropriate money to pay the contractors, he was obliged to reduce the expenses of the Post Office Department to a revenue standard.

MR. BRANCH. I asked the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ALLEY], who reported the bill, at the outset, whether there was not reserved in the contract, the privilege of reducing the service at the pleasure of the Post Office Department? He replied in the affirmative; and I was very ready to believe he was correct, because I knew that such stipulations were contained in all the contracts which I know anything about. I understand, also, the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that such a reservation is contained in every contract, with the exception of the Butterfield contract. I therefore assumed, and still assume, that Congress reserved to the Postmaster General the privilege of reducing this service at his pleasure. The facts, as I understand them, are briefly these: these parties made a contract with the Government to carry a mail, the privilege being reserved to the Postmaster General to reduce or increase the service at his pleasure, upon allowing a pro rata compensation. They entered into this contract with a knowledge of all the liabilities which the contract imposed upon them with reference to an increase or reduction in the amount of service.

MR. CRAIG, of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a legal question right here?

MR. BRANCH. Certainly. MR. CRAIG, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman to look at the act of 1836—if he has not already done so—and he will agree with me that the Postmaster General has the legal right to reduce the service, because Congress failed to place money at his disposal.

MR. BRANCH. I ask the gentleman from Missouri, as a simple matter of fact, whether, under the contract signed by these parties and the Postmaster General, the privilege was reserved to reduce the service?

MR. CRAIG, of Missouri. I believe it was. MR. BRANCH. That settles the whole matter.

MR. CRAIG, of Missouri. No, sir; the reduction was in the face and eyes of an act of Congress.

MR. ALLEY. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

MR. BRANCH. I think not. MR. ALLEY. I only yielded to the gentleman from North Carolina.

MR. BRANCH. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon for occupying it so long.

MR. ALLEY. I should be glad to hear the gentleman from North Carolina.

MR. BRANCH. Gentlemen around me have consumed all my time, or I should have been through.

MR. ALLEY. I think there are clear and explicit answers to every question the gentleman has asked, and which will commend themselves to the good judgment and sense of justice of the House.

THE SPEAKER. The Chief understands that the gentleman from North Carolina is entitled to the floor.

MR. BRANCH. I understand so, and will get through in three minutes, if gentlemen will allow me to go on uninterruptedly.

Well, then, Mr. Speaker, it being admitted that the privilege was reserved by the Postmaster General of reducing the service at his pleasure, and that he, in fact, exercised his discretion, he reduced the service, and allowed to these parties a pro rata compensation under the contract which the party signed, if they did not choose to con-time the service at the reduced rate of compensation they had the right to throw up the service, and the Government could have claimed no penalty from them; for the same clause which gives to the Postmaster General the right to reduce the service, gives to the contractors the right to give up the contract, if they do not choose to continue it at the reduced rate of compensation.

It seems, however, that after this service was reduced, the parties continued to perform it, in disregard of the order of the Postmaster General. In contempt of the exercise of his authority, they continued to perform the service in the manner stipulated in the original contract; and now they come forward, and ask that they shall be paid for the service as though it had never been reduced. I take these to be the simple facts of the case. While it is admitted that the Postmaster General had a right to reduce the service, while it is admitted that he did legally reduce the service, these parties refused to conform to his directions, and went on to perform the service—not authorized by their contract, not authorized by law; and now they come before Congress and demand pay for it. I would, at that point, ask whether the passage of this bill, like to know whether the Post Office Department recommend its passage; whether the Post Office Department has presented to the House or to the committee any reason why these parties should be put upon a different footing from all the other mail contractors of the country.

If it is attempted to justify this claim on the ground that the reduction was made in consequence of the refusal of Congress to make an appropriation, then I say there will be thousands of similar cases all over the country. I am told that there are many here already; and if we are to establish the principle that parties are to be allowed to go on and perform services in defiance of the orders of the Postmaster General, because these orders were given in consequence of the failure of Congress to make an appropriation, I think this matter ought to have more serious consideration than is likely to be given to this bill. I, myself, cannot, as at present advised, admit that this presents any ground for a claim upon this Government. I cannot consent that any case shall be made out of this matter, without admitting the principle that we are to be made responsible to parties, and that they are to be allowed to take the law into their own hands, and to go on and perform services not authorized by the Postmaster General, and then come here and claim compensation for the same. The Postmaster General would have no ordered the reduction if Congress had made an appropriation.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. BURNETT. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me for a moment or two.

Mr. ALLEY. Certainly.
Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a point of order. Has consent been given to bring this bill before the House?

Several Members. Of course it has.
Mr. HOUSTON. The bill makes an appropriation, and I desire to have it considered where, under the rules, the law requires it to be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that unanimous consent was given, and the House has gone on and discussed the question without objection. The Chair cannot, therefore, now take it from before the House.

Mr. BURNETT. With the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ALLEY], I desire to say, that I dislike very much to differ with my friend from North Carolina [Mr. BARNES] on any question. But this is one of the few claims that have been presented to Congress for relief which, in my judgment, demands all that has been asked. The objection urged by my friend from North Carolina is, that this bill ought not to pass, because there was a clause in the contract signed by the parties, authorizing the Postmaster General to reduce the service. That is the whole of his argument. Now the facts show this to be the case: that these parties made a contract to carry the mail from New York to San Francisco City, at a compensation of $150,000. The ordinary clause for a reduction of the service was contained in the contract—that the Postmaster General had a right to reduce the service. These parties went on at any expense, and expended large sums of money for the purpose of stocking the road, which involved a large expenditure. They went on and earned the mail in accordance with their contract literally, once a week, delivering the mail in accordance with the schedule and times fixed.

There is another fact, which gentlemen must bear in mind, that, by the action of the last Congress, the Postmaster General was authorized to let the mail contractors of the country for the services which they had performed. This applied to the parties who are now seeking relief from Congress. Congress failed to make an appropriation. These parties were authorized by the action of the failure of the Government to pay them the sum stipulated for carrying the mail. The first breach of the contract, therefore, was on the part of the Federal Government—they were the first violators of the bond. These contractors, notwithstanding that fact, went to outside service, as the proof exhibits, and through their friends secured means for the purpose of enabling them to carry on the mail in accordance with the contract. Then follows the order of the Post Office Department, which says that, instead of carrying the mail once a week, they must carry it twice a week. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to this fact, which is abundantly proved—for I have examined this case closely—every single postmaster on that road, from Salt Lake City back to St. Joseph, and the postmasters at the intermediate offices, all certify that they were obliged to carry the mail under the reduced service that it did to carry it once a week. That is the statement of the officials of the Post Office Department. They say, in letters, that these men were put to heavier and greater expense in carrying the mail twice a month, than in carrying it once a week. And why? It is shown, that under the original contract they could carry the mail in a four-horse wagon, or coach, by taking it once a week. But under the reduced service the mail was perished, and consumed at the office, and instead of their being able to carry it in one wagon, they were compelled to use two.

Mr. BRANCH. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to ask a question here? I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to say that every contractor who carries the mail, certifies that it costs these parties more to carry the mail once every two weeks than once a week.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes, sir.
Mr. BRANCH. Now, will the gentleman from Kentucky explain to me—for it seems to me that every contractor who carries the mail certifies that it costs these parties more to carry the mail once every two weeks than once a week.
Mr. BURNETT. The reason of the increased cost is apparent when you recollect that, if they had carried it once a week, the same team would have answered; but by carrying it once every two weeks, the contractors required a double number of teams, and increased their expenses. They show that they were carrying it once a week. That is a matter of record.

Now, these parties come on here, and what do they ask? They show that the reduction to the semi-monthly mail, instead of reducing their expenditures, increased them. They show that they were carrying it once a week. That is a matter of record.

Now, these parties come on here, and what do they ask? They show that the reduction to the semi-monthly mail, instead of reducing their expenditures, increased them. They show that they were carrying it once a week. That is a matter of record.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I see, from the report, that the proposition is, to give these contractors the amount which was saved in the Government by the reduction of the service up to July of this year. Now, sir, I ask if these gentlemen are now performing this service? I understand that they have sold out, and that other parties are now performing this semi-monthly mail service.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no individual knowledge upon this subject. Further, the proposition is not to give them the amount which was saved in the Government, but to give them the amount which was saved in the Government by the reduction of the service up to July of this year. Now, sir, I ask if these gentlemen are now performing this service? I understand that they have sold out, and that other parties are now performing this semi-monthly mail service.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I think that is a mistake. I understand that they have sold out utterly.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. If the gentleman will allow me, I will explain how that matter is. Mr. BURNETT. I will conclude what I have to say on this subject. I understand that they have sold out utterly. I understand the proposition to be simply that; the Government having failed to perform its obligations to these contractors, it is proposed to reimburse them for the loss which they have sustained in consequence of the action of the Government. It appears, that the second time, that when the Government reduced the service on this route, the effect, was not to reduce the expenditures of carrying the mail, but, on the contrary, instead of putting them in a better condition, they had to increase their expenditures, in order to comply with their obligations. Having done all that they were called on to do—having undertaken to perform all the services that they contracted to perform—I think they are justly entitled to the relief which they ask; and hence I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. Now, sir, I will not discuss the second question, but I will discuss the subject. I desire to answer very briefly the questions propounded by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. BRANCH], and also those propounded by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH]. I have examined this subject very closely; and I am satisfied that the Government is not liable to answer their questions. The contract for the performance of this mail service is now in the hands of one of the original contractors. The evidence shows that the original partnership was dissolved, and the field is now open to the reduction made in the service, and made in consequence of the failure of Congress to pass one of the general appropriation bills, with a loss of more than one hundred thousand dollars upon their stock.

The gentleman from Virginia is mistaken in relation to the allowance which this bill makes. It does not make up the reduction to the 1st of July, as the gentleman states. Such an allowance would require an appropriation of $65,000. This bill appropriates but $59,000, and I believe, reduces the allowance.

Now, then, the gentleman from North Carolina misrepresents the law. He says that the contract and law both allowed the Postmaster General to reduce this service, and reduce the pay in pro rata proportion. I agree that the contract and the law both allowed the Postmaster General to reduce the pay in pro rata proportion. The gentleman to the law of 1836. That law provides that when the Postmaster General believes the public interest requires a reduction of any particular mail service, he may make the order for reducing it; but he can only do it for such a reason. In these cases, however, it is plain that the Postmaster General reduced the compensation to suit himself. In some instances he reduced it fifty per cent.; in some, forty per cent.; and in others thirty per cent. The Postmaster General, in answer to a letter addressed to him on this subject, says that he reduced the pay in pro rata proportion to the law by which he was governed; and that, in settling with these contractors, there was no particular proportion of reduction made.

Mr. BRANCH. If the gentleman from Missouri has any letter from the Postmaster General, I should be glad if he will have it read, for I would not willingly do these parties an injustice.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. I have a letter from the Postmaster General, to which I will refer presently. I will first answer the other branch of the gentleman's question. The Postmaster General reduced this service, with that of many of the other routes, for want of money, in consequence of the failure of the last Congress to appropriate the necessary funds. He concedes in his letter that he was driven to this course. The gentleman wants to know what the Department thinks about the propriety of making this remuneration. I will say to him that the Department is in favor of making it. I have here a letter, written to one of the other contractors similarly situated, in July last, an extract from which I will read. The letter is addressed to Mr. W. H. Smith, by the Third Assistant Postmaster General. He says:

"The Department can but regret any losses you may sustain by the alteration of your contract; but as the contract was made by the Department, and not by Congress, that body will no doubt indemnify all who will have sustained damage through its action."

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 1860.

NEW SERIES.....No. 108

That is the opinion of the Post Office Department about this matter. And now I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that he may serve in Congress half a century and he will never find a more meritorious case. He will never find a stronger case than this, where the arm of the Government strikes down a worthy man who had a handsome fortune, made by hard work. He is no speculator. He was never a contractor under Government before, except on one occasion for a few months. He has carried out his contract faithfully and has been ruined by the failure of the last Congress to make the necessary appropriations. He is totally ruined, unless Congress does him this act of justice. He asks you to give him no gratuity. He asks simply that you will unlock the Treasury and pay him the amount which the Postmaster General withheld from him on account of your own action. The Postmaster General required him to reduce the service to a semi-monthly mail. He could not carry it in accordance with that order without a very large increased expense. He proposed to continue the weekly mail at the reduced rate, but the Postmaster General utterly refused, and directed the postmasters along the route not to deliver the mail to him, except semi-monthly; and it was only after having given a bond not to require any thing beyond the reduced compensation that he was allowed to carry the mail once a week. I trust there is no gentleman in this House who will vote against this bill.

Mr. BRANCH. I will tell the House but a single moment. The statement of the law made by the gentleman from Missouri is correct, that the Postmaster General had no right to reduce this service without letting it out to the lowest bidder; or, in other words, if the Postmaster General has acted in violation of law by reducing this service, it would certainly not be new fees upon the matter. I have been under the impression, having signed contracts of this description myself—not as a contractor, but as the president of a railroad company—that the Postmaster General had such a right. I never signed a contract of that description in my life that did not contain a provision allowing the Postmaster General to make any reduction he pleased; to make any change in the schedule, and, indeed, almost any change in respect to the contract that he might see fit, giving to the directors of the railroad company the privilege of throwing up the contract if they did not like to continue the service under the new arrangements. If the law be as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, and the Postmaster General has violated that law, that, I repeat, puts a new place upon the matter. I demand that the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in reference to that point; but I do not see him in his seat.

Mr. ALLEY. The gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Eads,] and the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Branch,] have so ably renewed the objections of the gentleman from North Carolina, as to leave me but little to say in addition. Upon a single point, however, which the gentleman from North Carolina deems to be so material, and which has been raised before the House, I would make one remark, if I can have his attention for a moment.

It is true that that provision is inserted in the contract; a provision, as I have before stated, which is embraced in every contract with the mail contractors of this country, except the contract for the Butterfield route. It is made, I will not say in violation of law, but without any provision of law to cover the case. I will say further, that some of the best legal minds in the country are of the opinion that the provision inserted in mail contracts by the Postmaster General is not a valid one; and I hold in my hand the reply of Attorney General Black to inquiries submitted to him by the Postmaster General in reference to the Butterfield contract. In that contract this provision was omitted, and the Postmaster General observed that, inasmuch as it had been the custom of the Department to insert that provision, he had the legal right to annul that contract. The reply of the Attorney General is worthy of a statesman and of the highest legal officer of this Government. It concludes in these words:

"I am not at liberty, nor do I think you are, to inquire whether it was well, or ill, for the Government to make this contract. The unfortunate condition in which the Government has unexpectedly found itself might make us wish to retract it, but it is not in our power to do so, as it is a contract which has been made in good faith, and the interests of the country are not the most important. It is a far deeper stake in doing justice and maintaining the laws."

That, sir, is the reply of the Attorney General to the Postmaster General on that point; but if there were that provision, if it were a legal provision, if it were as strong as any statute of the United States could make it, I for one, would resist it, as trying no foundation in justice or equity, as applied to this case.

These parties, Mr. Speaker, have performed every stipulation that they agreed to, and that provision in the contract, and which has been inserted in all other contracts, has been solely for the purpose of protecting the Government against extraordinary contingencies. It has always been so held; and for the Postmaster General to take advantage of that provision to strike down honest men, who have faithfully performed every condition of their contract, is in violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the law. For one, I repudiate it. As I stated yesterday, my avocation is that of a merchant; and if a merchant of my city should do as the Postmaster General has done in this and in similar cases—violate his pledged faith in opposition to every sentiment of justice of every principle of right, and every feeling of humanity—he would, as he ought to, receive the condemnation and the execrations of the whole community; for I know of no rule of morals to be applied in the fulfillment of contracts to individuals that will not apply with equal force to the Government. It would be to be beneath the dignity of a high officer of this Government to take advantage, in dealing with honest creditors of the Government, of a legal quibble. It is an outrage upon their rights, and I would involve the whole power of the Government to interpose its colossus arm to shield these, and other parties similarly situated, from impending ruin.

These, sir, are my sentiments. In my judgment, never has there been a case submitted for the consideration of Congress which presented a stronger case of equity than this. It is a case of extreme hardship. It has ruined these individuals, who are honest and worthy men. They are no speculators; but they have performed every stipulation of their contract. As has been remarked by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Cass,] the property of one of them is now under execution and in the hands of the sheriff, even to the very beds upon which his wife and children sleep; and the other partner is now in a distant Territory in a condition of mental inequity, rendering him incapable of the execution of his duties as the Post Office and Post Roads, looking to the hardships which have been endured by these parties because of the non-fulfillment of the conditions of the contract on the part of the Government, no exemption presented to the Government more to its justice and sympathy. There are other reasons, which I will not now enumerate, because I believe that facts enough have been presented to cause this House unanimously to pass the bill. I will close by calling for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read a third time.

Mr. ALLEY. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. JONES. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BINGHAM and BRANCH were appointed.

The yeas and nays were ordered; the tellers having reported only twenty-one in the affirmative—less than one fifth of those present.

The bill was passed.

Mr. ALLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I desire to call up a private bill. There is a pensioner in this city from my State, who is both deaf and blind.

Mr. FENTON. Let us first get through with the call of committees for reports.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. At the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I will not call up my motion at this time.

JOHN T. ROBERTSON.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a joint resolution for the relief of John T. Robertson, of Virginia, and to ask that it be laid upon its passage.

There is a report accompanying the bill, which I ask to have printed. As the report is not printed, I will move to put the bill upon its passage, and will state the facts in the case.

The joint resolution makes no appropriation, but simply releases the petitioner, John T. Robertson, of Virginia, from any further liability to the Government of the United States upon his bond as surety for his father, who was collector for the United States at the port of Newburg. I will state to the House further, that there were four co-sureties with Mr. Robertson upon that bond, two of whom, at the time of the defalcation of the father, proved to be totally insolvent. The other two were equally able, with the petitioner, to contribute to the payment of the defalcation, but upon being brought against them upon that bond, upon which they were jointly liable—if liable at all—both of these co-sureties were discharged from all liability by the judgment of the United States court for the eastern district of Virginia.

I state further, that this petitioner has already voluntarily, and without suit or coercion upon the part of the Government of the United States, contributed his full pro rata share, to the extent of his entire property, in discharge of his obligation to the Government of the United States; that there remains unpaid upon that bond which he voluntarily gave to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, the principal sum of only $1,000; and this bill simply releases him from that obligation, with its accruing interest. With this statement, I move that further action be not put upon its passage, after the reading of it, so that the House may see that it conforms to what I have said.

The resolution, which was read, directs that John S. Robertson, of the State of Virginia, be released from any further or existing liability to the United States upon his bond executed to the United States on the 26th of July, 1850, in the sum of $10,000, conditioned upon the payment of $5,000 in several installments, as therein provided. The resolution was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I now move that the report accompanying the bill be printed. I do so in order that the Senate may understand the case.

The motion was agreed to.

R. R. RICHARDS.

Mr. CARTER. I am instructed by the Committee for the District of Columbia to report back, with a recommendation that it do pass, a joint resolution for the relief of John T. Robertson.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I have no objection to having the report made, but I must say that played, be dismissed. If we do that, then we will do what is valuable. Just as you raise wages here, we will raise elsewhere in the country for like services.

■ The States imitate exactly the example of the Federal Government. Four dollars a day do not pay a man's expenses, I am told. We hear it asserted that $3,000 a year will not more than pay necessary expenses. I am credibly informed that some members expend $6,000 and $10,000 a year. They have the right to do that, for then they expend from their own private means. I will not intermeddle with the privaterights of individuals; but when the Government is taxed for the purpose of exalting certain men above their fellows, I say that I have a right to object. There is no man in this country who feels more right than I do to do in its legitimate advancement in wealth and prosperity; but, sir, I fear luxury and extravagance. I feel proud that I have lived to see a comparative wilderness, occupied by twenty-five thousand inhabitants, blossom into full-grown States with a population of nine million. May I never live to see them sunken into an Asiatic degeneracy!

No man with a more swelling heart contemplates the growth of this country. I am fearful, however, that our people are too fast; and that unless they change their course they must rapidly degenerate. We do a great many things for which it would be difficult to find a power in the Constitution. A, B, and C, are hunted up, and money is squandered upon them. Relics of distinguished men who have gone before us are overburdened with national veneration, and we hear and understand much about the Constitution; such, however, in the technicality of the rules of this House, that it is impossible for a man to say so, let the question be ever so objectionable. Consider it. If you will not change these things, then I call upon the people to bury every relic of the past in this House and put in those who will restore the better days of the Republic.

Mr. Chairman, we are often designated as the servants of the people. Is it not curious that the servants live much better than the masters? Yet we make the people the servants of the servants. We make them believe this and that, because they put confidence in us.

I confess that I am not accustomed to speaking in public. I know what I do. If I had the faculty of others, I would have long since told. I have said what I have, and I feel that I have endeavored to state plain and substantial truths. I do not believe, let me say, that this Government will not be crushed out. This Government will not now be disserved. No, sir, my fear is that we will wear out; that our people will degenerate and become overrated and misused as are the people of Asia, because of their debauchery and mode of living. There is no man acquainted with history who will not have the same fear. No Government that has preceded us ever had the same facilities of success. We have all the arts and sciences of former years, together with those unknown to the ancients. I must believe that we are unfortunately driving towards the brink of destruction. There is no hope but by retracing our steps, and again adopting the policy of our fathers. I do not know where the party, that will begin it? It must be begun if we are to be saved. Here is the place to begin it. Let us exhibit by our acts what we profess to be.

I will now, sir, say a few words to my particular friends. I am not ashamed of being a farmer and a laborer; I am proud that I have done my share of work. I despise the man who will declare that labor is disgraceful. It is dishonorable. God said that man should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. If I have ever done anything valuable, it has been the actual manual labor I have performed in assisting to develop a new country. I am proud to say it. I ask whether we have not here too many talkers? They are not laborers nor farmers. There are men who want to do all of the talking; at least they want to lead in all the talking. What can deny that? It is lamentable truth. The evil has even extended to our boarding-houses. [Laughter.]

Why, sir, it would be impossible for a man, anywhere here in Washington, even among the poor, to get out half a day without being interrupted. [Laughter.] This may be laughable; but it is an true as the other statements I have made. I ask these gentlemen who are so dispassionate and smart, to reflect that every man here, by the Constitution of his country—and we are all Constitution-loving men—has just as many rights as I have.

Abstractly, there is not a man upon earth who really believes that he has a right to property in another man's labor. But a question of expediency comes in; and while gentlemen will talk about this matter, I ask these lawyers—and I have seen eight or ten levels of them struggling for the floor at the same time—that they will reflect that others have an equal right to be heard, though they are crowded out by the severe struggle. It may be regarded as ridiculous to talk in this way; but I talk pretty much what I believe to be true; and if gentlemen will not say it is not true, I am willing to retract. I know it may be called indecent for a man of my age, and among these scientific gentlemen, to talk in this way, but I am impelled to it by facts which stare me in the face; and there is not a man in the House who will not agree that what I say is true. Why, I have heard ladies say, "Is it possible that you do not believe yourselves better?" [Laughter.]

We occupy in this House an exalted position; and just in proportion as our position is exalted, and we do not come up to what that position requires, we are degraded. We are degraded in politics in a very dangerous year [laughter] for this Government. I am not talking for Baucumbe—for I shall never consent to be a member of Congress again—but so far as I have any influence among my constituents, I shall talk to them just as I do to you, and if they do not believe me, it will be their fault, and not mine; for I know, and you all know, that I tell the truth. I do not believe there is a man here who will get up and say that I am not speaking the truth. I will now yield the floor to the gentleman from Texas. I call him my friend because I call every man in this House my friend so long as he conducts himself in a gentlemanly manner. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to occupy much time. I do not mean, perhaps, that I should say anything; but the observation I wished to submit in this: that the views of Jefferson and others of his day have been frequently presented in this House, to show that they were, in the abstract, opposed to slavery in their time. That proposition is true; but to give it the force of a standing of what seems to some gentlemen to be a change of conviction upon that subject, I desire to say, that some thirty or forty years ago, indeed within my recollection, very many of the people of the South believed that slavery was an evil; but that they had the institution among them and could not get rid of it without inflicting a greater evil upon the country. They were not able to send off their slaves, and it would not do to turn them loose among them.

Now, sir, I say, that regard, that it is probable, if a crusade had not been instituted against the slaveholders; if they had not been denounced as wicked and cruel men for indorsing what many of them at the time did not consider abstractly right, I have no doubt that slavery would have been perpetuated, and the new condition of the slaves would have been ameliorated, as, indeed, it has been to some extent; but the amelioration of their condition has been arrested, to a considerable extent, by the action of men who would have precipitated their liberation, and who denounced and reviled the owners of the slaves. The attack made upon the slave owners brought into question the morality of slaveholding, the philosophy of slaveholding, the justice and policy of holding slaves; and necessity forced upon people who owned slaves the race of men that they would have otherwise considered the whole subject in its political, social, and moral bearing; into the mental capacity and moral power of the African race; their condition when left to themselves, and their relative condition when in subordination to a more intelligent race of men. The result of a more liberal and thorough investigation, followed out in all its details, has within thirty years worked out a great revolution in the minds of men, particularly in the country where the institution existed, in reference to slavery; and the conviction has been firmly fixed in the mind of the people of the South, that there is not, abstractly, any sin in the holding of slaves; that there is no moral wrong in holding slaves; that there is no social or domestic inconvenience in holding slaves, as there was supposed to be thirty years ago.

That the present settled conviction of the public mind, and the revolution in public opinion has grown out, as I have already said, of the attack made and so long and persistently kept up on the institution, and that disposition of the human mind to make sure that it is right in all its doings.

It may be said that men hunt for reasons to excuse what may not be right. But that statement would not overbear the arguments and facts which have influenced their minds, when the tests of history, of reason, and of philosophy, have been applied to the institution of slavery. The strength of the argument in favor of slavery depends upon a few facts easily comprehended.

But I will break the connection of my argument to say what I should have said in another connection. It is not to be denied that oppression is sometimes exercised by the owner of slaves, more than it could be denied that there is oppression by men who employ hired labor. There is oppression wherever power and wealth are brought to bear upon labor, and that exists in every civilized community on earth. It is not pretended that the Southern Confederacy was a criticism of the fact of slave owners, that cannot be said to exist in favor of those who control labor in any other form of society.

Mr. LANDRUM. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, but I must do so. Mr. Chairman, I will not persist.

Mr. LANDRUM. Mr. Chairman, that we are now threatened with great and alarming evils, no one who will take a calm and unprejudiced view of the subject, and who is not blinded by momentary doubts. In the formation of this Government there existed a spirit of harmony and concession from the citizens of each State in this Union towards the citizens of every other State; and this spirit was so plainly exhibited in the formation of the Constitution that the Convention of the United States—it was so adjusted, so adapted to the wants of all the States entering into the Confederacy—that it received the almost unanimous support of the convention. Harmony and concord and good feeling reigned throughout the whole of the Convention, and the Convention of Carolina rejoiced in the prosperity and commended the virtues of the citizen of Massachusetts; and the citizen of Massachusetts responded to the feeling of the citizen of South Carolina. That was the feeling which pervaded the citizens of this common country when the Constitution was formed; and that was the spirit which pervaded it for the thirty years afterwards during which the Government was administered by the fathers of the Republic.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what state of things does this country exhibit? A people discordant; a great sectional party formed; and the whole history of the country massed in a search for subjects of denunciation on the part of citizens of one portion of the Confederacy against citizens of another.

In that convention which framed the Constitution, which is the basis of our Government, slave States were admitted without objection. Concessions were made to slave States on every point that they demanded, and which they deemed essential to the preservation and protection of their rights in this Union. Ay, it was not objected to a State then that she should come into the Union because she permitted slavery. So far from that, the Constitution abounds with express provisions for the protection of their property, and for the security of their rights. It was not objected to a free State that she should form a member of the Confederacy because she did not tolerate slavery. But the patriotic founders of the Republic looked to the interests of the whole country, and sacrificed prejudice and sectional considerations to the necessary order to form a more perfect union.

Contrast that state of feeling and that state of facts with the condition in which we now see the country. Mutual denunciation is the business even of the Representatives of the people on the floor of this Chamber. It is not deemed expedient the circulation of books calculated to sap and undermine the foundations on which the have excluded Kentucky, was it not bad faith to exclude Missouri? because in the ordinance establishing the territorial government of Missouri, in 1812, there was no Wilmot proviso, no prohibition of slavery. But slavery was permitted, as we ask it shall be permitted now; it was protected in the courts, and no complaint was uttered within the Territory of Missouri, in regard to this question of slavery until she applied for admission into the Union. If your anti-slavery party, which I charge is the cause of all the evils with which this country is afflicted, was right then in excluding Missouri, because she did not abolish slavery, your forefathers were wrong in admitting Kentucky. Either they were wrong and you are right, or you are wrong and they were right. Between the two I have no hesitation in my choice. Regarded as patriots, regarded as legislators, Missouri was admitted into the Union, I consider as men who regarded their souls, I have no hesitation in saying I believe they were equally as honest as the Republican party of the present day.

In 1793 they gave us the fugitive slave law, these being only seven votes in opposition to it, and some of those were from the South, I think—a law, which if we attempt to enforce in the northern States we are met by mobs, and bloodshed frequently follows. No southern man dare go into some portions of the northern States and attempt to execute this law, except at the peril of his life.

Such was the action of the founders of the Republic, whose example we are constantly called upon to imitate. Tennessee was admitted in 1796, with slavery. The Territory of Mississippi was organized in 1798, and the application for admission of that Territory, and the restriction as to slavery removed. That was legislation under the Constitution. These are the precedents we are to follow; and we are not to go behind the constitution and follow the precedent of 1787, which the relations of the States was entirely different from what it is now.

Ah! but you say, Mr. Jefferson thought slavery was a great wrong. But the acquisition of Louisiana in 1804 was a great right. Mr. Jefferson was then the president of the Republic. He represented the people of the free States, and he represented the people of the slave States; and no matter what his private opinion might have been upon the question of slavery, or upon the question of religion, or upon any other question, we are constantly called upon to imitate him. Acting as he did, he had nothing to do with your private opinions upon the subject; but we have something to do with your legislative action; and I call upon you, acting under oath, as Jefferson did, to imitate his example. He acquired Louisiana through the instrumentality of Livingston and Monroe. Slavery existed in the Territory of Louisiana by the treaty by which she was acquired, and by that her inhabitants were guaranteed their rights of property.

Louisiana was admitted into the Union, in 1812, as a free State. I know that sections of the States are made in these cases. The objection has been made that in Tennessee, in Kentucky, and in Mississippi, slavery already existed; but acting upon the principle upon which gentlemen here propose to acquiesce, that whatever is wrong and evil can produce nothing but evil, and you must follow it to its results, no matter where it leads you—no question of policy can be entertained. Why did these eminent opponents of slavery, as they are called, and to whose opinions we are constantly referred, increase the slave power, and encourage slavery aggression, as you term it? The only aggression slaveholders have ever made upon the free States, is a demand that they should let this matter alone. Why do not members of Congress, assembled within these halls, initiate legislation which Great Britain assures you there was no such restrictive legislation in the Constitution, nor under the Constitution, up to 1820; for in 1813, under the Administration of Madison, I believe, slaves were recognized as property, and taxed by the Government; and in 1819, in the treaty with Great Britain, again expressly stipulated that all slaves and other private property—I use the very language of the treaty—in the possession of either of the belligerent parties, should be returned to the other.

And yet we are told that we are the cause of all these mischiefs, because we do not join with you in the declaration that there can be no such thing as property in man; and that we have 'leaped' from the example of our forefathers in not joining in that declaration. Sir, I would not use an unparliamentary phrase; I would not say any word calculated to widen the breach which now exists between the different members of this Conference, for God knows no one deprecates it more than I do; but I do say that intelligent gentlemen who stand upon this floor and make that declaration, ignore the whole legislation of this Government, from the formation of the Constitution up to the Missouri difficulty, in 1820. I say, if they are familiar with the legislative acts of their forefathers, they must know they are uttering that which is not true, when they say their example teaches us that those men opposed slavery in a very shape and form in which we have legislative power. Missouri was admitted into the Union in 1817, and no objection was raised that she was a slave State. But it was in 1819-20 that the struggle began for which you propose to hold us responsible. Why, sir, after the Government had gone over to your side without question, having never asked, when a State applied for admission, whether she was free or whether she was slave; while the whole country was living in harmony and brotherly love and affection; while the southern States were proud of the property and happiness of the free States, and the people of the northern States rejoiced at the property of the people of the South, this hydra-headed monster of anti-slavery was then first produced; and from that day to this it has stood, "black as night, fierce as ten furies, terrible as hell," and has acted in the relations of the States from one end to the other.

What was the cause of the agitation of 1820? After you had encouraged the citizens of Virginia and Kentucky and other States to settle in Missouri, by protecting slave property in the courts of justice, you turned round and said to the people of the free States, "quit the territory, or we will be limited unless you relinquish the right thereafter to hold slaves; and you kept her out of the Union for one year. The South, with that compromising and generous spirit—I say so in no spirit of egotism, for I am describing the position of a representative of the people, and I go forward and executed that memorable relinquishment, agreeing that slavery should not go north of 36° 30' if you would permit Missouri to come into the Union. While we have voted for the admission of free State after free State, and we have admitted a question which we are ready to vote for the admission of Maine, you turned round and ungenerously—what your motives may have been God only knows; whether to promote your political power or not it is not for me to say—forced Missouri coming into the Union upon the relinquishment of the right to hold slaves.

Now, sir, who departed from the lessons of wisdom taught by the fathers of the Republic? Most of them then slept in their tombs, and a wiser and purer and holier race (in their own estimation) had supplanted them; and "his sin against his brethren" was a question which would be blotted from Missouri, or she could hold no place in the Union.

However, you made a good trade, and then the objection to the "sin against God and the crime against humanity" was waived for a consideration. You excluded the people of the free States from all the territory north of 36° 30', and then Missouri was admitted into the Union with slavery. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANDRUM. I would thank the committee to extend my time for ten minutes longer. General session was given.

Mr. LANDRUM. I shall have to pass over a number of points which I should have liked to touch on, and will only make this remark: that having all the time a majority in the House of Representatives, and a majority in an Illinois vote in the Senate, you passed the tariff bills of 1824 and 1828, in which the southern section, now securely in a minority, were to be made tributary to promote and pamper the industry of the North. Then came the opposition to the annexation of Texas, and we were again in a minority. It became the Wilmot proviso for Oregon, and for the territory acquired from Mexico. Then followed the struggle of 1856, when you boldly inscribed on your banner: "No more slave States to be admitted into the Union." At all events, you insisted on "prohibition to slavery in the Territories," and announced that our system of labor was a "twain relic of barbarism" with polygamy. Then followed the emancipation, in the platform of a great popular party, which struggled almost successfully for the government of the country, that the whole people of the South who owned slaves were living in that state of pollution and degradation which characterizes the polygamist.

Yet we are told that we are the cause of all the trouble, because we do not join in the Wilmot proviso. Now, sir, what is the state of parties? The greatest man, perhaps, of the Republican party—certainly the greatest in influence, and the one whose prospects are first for the Presidency—has declared that the three billions of property which we must do be destroyed, stating that "you and I own it," meaning that it must be done by the present generation. Then follows the resolution of the gentlemen from Ohio (Mr. BLAKE,) voted for by sixty members of the House, declaring that slavery ought to be abolished wherever the Government has the power to do it.

The gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. FENNER) will recollect his declaration that some of us may live to see fifty sovereignties of this Confederacy; and when that day comes, it will be their duty to change the Constitution and to abolish slavery. And yet gentlemen seem to wonder that the people of the South are talking about new guards for their safety. Sir, the gentleman who says Mr. Jefferson, that Governments should not be abolished for light or transient causes, is most true; but no less true is the maxim that a people are always disposed to endure evils so long as they are endured, rather than right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. So what may be the action of Louisiana, in any contingency that may arise, it is not for me to state.

I believe that the people of my State have too much at stake to attempt to change their present institutions, and to make any arrangement for light or transient causes. We have an immense wealth, a vast commerce, a city trading with all the States of the Union, whose forests of masts, with the flags of all nations floating in the harbor, denote that her commerce is coextensive with the globe. Sir, the people of Louisiana are literally trembles, in a frontage of nine miles, from the superabundant merchandise. Reluctantly, most reluctantly, would that people take any steps which by possibility could involve us in civil war and commotion; and great, indeed, must have been their apportionment when they adopted, in convention, March 15, 1860, the following resolution:

"That, in case of the election of a President on the avowed principles of the Black Republican party, we concur in the opinion that Louisiana should sever in council her sister slaveholding States, to consult as to the means of force protection."

I have no idea that I am mistaken, when I state that no action will be taken under that resolution, except on the most mature deliberation. But, sir, whenever the people of Louisiana are asked to take any action in defense of their property, and to liberate purpose of those who may get control of the Government to spread over them that dark and benighted pall which hangs like an incubus over the Central and South American Republics and the West Indian Islands, they will act. And whatever course the majority of her people may choose to take, her sons will sustain it with their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor.

Mr. VANDEVER next addressed the committee on the political questions of the day. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, obtained the floor. Mr. FLORENCE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a motion that the committee rise? Mr. MOORE, of Alabama. I will, unless it be desired to continue the session.

Mr. VERREE. I would like to submit some remarks this evening. Mr. MOORE, of Alabama. I will yield for that purpose, provided it is the understanding that I shall have the floor the next time the House re-assembles. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that will be the understanding.

There was no objection. Mr. VERREE. Mr. Chairman, it is with no expectation of shedding any fresh light upon a subject which has been so thoroughly discussed as the tariff, that I rise to address you.

But, sir, while I do not hope to add to the array of facts and arguments which have been urged on this side of the House, I cannot permit the question now before the committee to be finally disposed of, without expressing my earnest, cordial, and sincere desire that the bill, as reported, may prevail by such a majority as will leave no room in the mind of the people for the position which, in this Chamber at least, we occupy in regard to it.

On this subject of a tariff, Mr. Chairman, I feel that I have, if I may so say, a special mission to perform.

The whole of my active life has been passed in pursuits which have brought me in direct contact with its workings. I have been compelled to study its principles, because I have been largely interested in its effects. My own affairs have been so intimately associated with it that they could not be separated from it; and the consequences that have flowed from changes in the revenue policy of the country have been felt by me in the most sensitive part of every man's external relations—my finances. In what I have to say, therefore, my statements, though they may be regarded as the result of an experience which leaves on my own mind, at least, not the slightest doubt of their truth.

Mr. Chairman, in an extended Confederacy like ours, increasing every additional session, by the admission of new States, there should be a diversity of opinion in regard to the policy of legislation affecting the interests of the citizens of such States. Statesmen of eminence, representing the local interest of their particular section, have widely differed in regard to the policy of the revenue laws. At one time, whilst the master spirit of South Carolina was advocating and defending the protective policy with his accustomed zeal, he was opposed by the intellectual giant of New England with all his ability and experience. After the passage of these two distinguished statesmen were found transposed from the positions they then occupied; and Mr. Calhoun, whose candor and honesty no man can impugn, was threatening to nullify and dissolve the Union in 1853, because Congress had attempted to pursue the very policy he had, sixteen years before, so forcibly and eloquently sustained. Conceding to others that independence of judgment and action I claim for myself, let us examine, for one moment, the action and policy of the present Administration in reference to the different systems of collection.

The Jacksonian Democracy told us they were in favor of a "wise and judicious tariff for protection"; whilst the Buchanan Democracy of the present day assert they are in favor of a tariff for revenue, giving incidental protection; and the Cobb Democracy elaborately attempt to show the fallacy and unconstitutionality of the President's views, and advocate, with much zeal, an exclusive revenue tariff. The terms used to describe the degree of protection are relative ones—"wise and judicious and incidental"—meaning at least any reasonable man can expect to be desirous of having at all, depending upon the construction and locality of the man who utters them. A distinguished statesman has said that language was designed to conceal our thoughts and opinions; but we must not deceive ourselves in the belief that by the use of such language we are misleading intelligent, educated men, or practical mechanics. The subject is too well understood, and the tricks of political demagogues in the presidential election of 1844 are too well remembered.

The principles and effects of revenue and protective tariff are so different and antagonistic in their character, that the policy which best promotes the one almost inevitably destroys the other; and no so-called revenue tariff bill ever passed by Congress but excepts the most important articles of revenue. If the Administration desire to pass a revenue tariff, which they so ardently propose, why do they not propose a tax on tea and coffee? for, as neither of these articles has been successfully cultivated in this country, whatever revenue could be collected upon them which did not prevent their being sold at a dearer price for revenue. The consumption of these articles has become so common and universal with all classes, rich and poor, that such a tariff would be unpopular; and therefore, political demagogues, who control the Democratic party, abandon the revenue policy, by admitting tea and coffee free of duty, and thus avoid incidental protection, but more properly speaking, political—protection to manufactured articles.

The able Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Cobb, in his report of 1857-58, argues with much earnestness and apparent sincerity to prove the fallacy of the revenue and constitutional policy, which the President had recommended in his message of the same year; accusing him by implication, if not in direct terms, of recommending a violation of the Constitution. The Secretary contends that the revenue is the only principle upon which a tariff can be justified, or constitutional; yet, as I have previously stated, he does not recommend any duty upon tea and coffee, the two articles from which the greatest amount of revenue could be collected. This inconsistency and the difference between his arguments and recommendations should not occasion any surprise, because the principles of the great national Democratic party, as it is called, but more properly speaking, the sectional slave oligarchy, is controlled by the same logic. What is their interest is always their principle, and what they desire is their end, and a violation sufficient to justify them in threatening to "tear down the pillars of our temples and scatter the fragments to the winds." Disregarding all such flimsy and hypercritical objections to the protective policy, as inconsistent with the Constitution, and believing that this country possesses within its own borders all the crude material necessary to make us independent of any nation in the world, I believe it to be the duty of Congress to grant such a system of protection, that all persons possessing the art and experience necessary to pursue any business would be justified in investing their capital and talents in its pursuit.

Political economists tell us that labor is the source of all wealth; and that the man who makes one blade of grass grows where it must grow before the first inventor. Now I contend that when a man is willing to invest his entire fortune and credit in the manufacture of any necessity of life, where, as in thousands of cases, this country possesses all the natural advantages of soil, climate, and position, and, as I have said, it should be the policy, yes, it is the imperative duty of Congress, to afford all such persons sufficient legislative protection to enable them to manufacture such goods in competition with the foreign manufacturer. This cannot be done by a protective tariff, but by a protective law, affording incidental or accidental protection. It can only be secured by a protective tariff for the sake and for the purpose of protection.

The history of every protective tariff since the Government was established, without exception, proves the fact that, before five years—yes, before one—the home competition, a natural and healthy rivalry resulting from such protection, will reduce the market value of protected articles to a low and regular standard; much lower, indeed, than, previous to such a policy, had been the ruling prices of imported articles of the same quality.

It is useless to mention or particularize the numerous articles which sustain this position; but I will simply allude to the articles of glass and cut nails—the latter of which, under the tariff of 1842, were protected by a duty of three cents per pound, and which, according to the theory of distinguished advocates of free trade, would advance the price as much as the duty levied; when, in reality, the natural superiority of American iron to the English, and the scarcity of a home market to the manufacturers, induced such competition that a short period the price was reduced to three and a quarter cents per pound, only one quarter of a cent more than the duty, showing conclusively the fallacy of their arguments and predictions.

The advocates of southern policy, although professing to desire to develop the material greatness of our industrial interests, contend that the manufacturers of this country need no protection, and that their supposed necessities are caused by their extravagance and mismanagement. It is a common error with this class, to satisfy their minds that they know the cause of the manufacturer's troubles better than he does himself, and they condemn him for doing what, under the same circumstances, they would have done themselves. Sir, among the many causes that produce the greatest amount of distress and permanent embarrassment with manufacturers, is the increased cost of their machinery over their calculations.

This contingency is the natural result of man's fallibility and sanguine character; and when, as in a majority of cases, a manufacturer has exhausted his means before his machinery is completed, and he is unable to pay for it, he is worthless, he is compelled to go forward or lose all, and is thus drawn into difficulties from which a lifetime only can extricate him. He finds, like all who have preceded him, that the cost of his goods is enhanced by the increased cost of his machinery, and that he cannot afford to sell as cheap as he anticipated when he commenced. He begins now to realize, for the first time, the fact that his fortune is invested in machinery that turns no interest, and is worthless unemployed. After this difficulty is overcome by investing down the amount of capital, he finds another of far greater embarrassment, for the reason that it cannot be remedied; and that is, the difference in the cost of capital and labor between this country and his European competitor.

It is, therefore, necessary to conduct successfully an establishment capable of finishing ten thousand tons of railroad iron per year from the ore would be at least three hundred thousand dollars, costing in Europe three per centum per annum; while in this country the legal rate is six per centum, and the cost of material alone is greater—in a majority of cases equal to ten or twelve per centum; thus making a difference, under the most favorable circumstances, of three to seven per centum per annum upon the entire amount of capital employed. The difference of fifty per centum in the cost of material alone, calculating at the rate of legal interest, is $9,000 per year; and if the comparison is made upon the rate generally paid by manufacturers in this country, it will make a difference of over twenty thousand dollars per year in favor of the English or foreign manufacturer.

The next important item of cost in manufacturing is the price of labor; which, according to the best American and European authorities, is at least eighty per cent. of the value of the finished iron.

One of the largest iron manufacturers in this country says that English iron can be made cheaper than American; not because less labor is required, but because that labor "costs less than one third as much." Other manufacturers of equivalent capacity and cost of English labor "at least one half," but supposing it is one third less than the cost of the same labor in this country, and calculating it at eighty per cent., the proportion of labor to the value of a ton of iron, the difference in favor of the English maker would be more than thirteen dollars per ton; which amount, added to the extra cost of capital, would far exceed the amount reported by the Committee of Ways and Means in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. Chairman, having shown that the cost of manufacturing in this country is more than fifty per cent. greater than the foreign or cheap labor of Europe, how can the advocates of free trade expect that the manufacturers of this country can compete successfully with the foreign, unless the cost of labor and capital is reduced accordingly? In the language of the ministerial representative of the French Emperor:

"To preach free trade to a country which does not enjoy all these advantages, is nearly as equitable as to propose to a chess player to give up his king."

Sir, if the manufacturers of this country are compelled, under the influence of the southern free-trade policy of the present Democracy, to compete with English labor and capital, it is very clear that the laborer must take less wages. He must, like the English peasant, eat less meat, and use inferior food, and deprive his family of the comforts which would make his life happy. His wife must share his daily labor, and his children must be imprisoned in a cotton factory instead of going to school, and he and his must finally become as inebriated to the refinements of life as the slaves of the South. Sir, the system of free trade ignores the cause of the trouble. It proposes to reduce the wages of labor down to the low rates of old manufacturing cities. It assumes that the working man must be poorly paid, and, of course, poorly fed and clothed, that their must, in fact, as was said by a distinguished Senator of South Carolina, be "the mauls and mills of society." Against such a degradation of labor I earnestly protest in the name of political economy, of common humanity, and that Divine precept of doing unto others as we would be done by.

Mr. Chairman, there is no gentleman on this floor whose constituency is more immediately and thoroughly interested in the measure now before this House than that I have the honor to represent. The people of my district are almost exclusively dependent upon their own industry for their support. Nowhere in my own State, nor, so far as I am informed, out of my own State, within the same geographical limits, can there be found so vast a variety of pursuits as within that portion of the city of Philadelphia in whose behalf I am addressing you to-day. Bounded on one side by the Delaware river, it offers especial facilities for ship-building; and in those periods when the policy of the General Government has permitted a free development of the resources of the country, there might easily be seen emerging from the ship-yards of Kensington and Camden stalwart workmen, light of step, and preening all the tokens of honest, manly independence. And, sir, although in the general blight which has fallen upon our industry, these laborly shipwrights have been compelled to pause, nevertheless, of them left, should happier times ever arrive, to make the air once more resonant with the mingled music of their adze and the cheering chorus with which they are accustomed to lighten their hours of labor.

Scattered along the shore, and also at frequent intervals in the more closely-settled portions of the district, are numerous establishments for the manufacture of iron in all its manifold forms, from the engines and boilers which furnish the motive power to the stateliest ship of the sea and the most fastidious of land travel, to the smallest implement which is used in the diversified employment of man. Sir, the rails manufactured in this district are to be found on the great iron highways of the most remote States of the Union. The machinery which is constructed within it is distributed in the tropics, the icy wastes of the ocean and the frigid regions of the eastern continent. Nor, sir, is there any description of textile fabric which is not here produced. Cotton and woolen and silk, the hair of the goat and the fibre, are wrought into infinite varieties of tissue by the rapid flight of the spindle or the cunning dexterity of the hand.

The cassimères that all of us wear, the shawls that wrap the graceful forms of our women, the coverings that cover the mattresses that compose our beds, the carpets that embellish our floors, the fringes that adorn our curtains, and the curtains themselves, all these, are the productions of our looms. And, sir, thousands of these looms are distributed by ones and twos and threes among individual owners, who, cooperating with the large establishments, in the production of goods, are careful to themselves satisfactory remuneration for their toil. Sir, in my district also are the great manufactories of the finest sort of leather—the calf skins, the kid, and the morocco—which supply the wants of the leading shoe-makers of the country; and which, at the same time, yield to the scrivener the parchments on which he inscribes records intended to be eternal.

There, too, are to be found establishments everywhere famous for the superior glass they produce, which, in solidity, smoothness, and circumference of shape, are unequalled in the world. But, sir, I will not go on with this specific enumeration. Suffice it to say, in brief, that in the third congressional district of Pennsylvania, labor, in multiplied forms, is the normal condition of the people; and even when they are not engaged in actual personal handicraft, their pursuits, for the most part, have direct relation to its necessities. The supply of the many thousands who earn their bread in the mills and the factories and the shipyards and the workshops of the "old Northern Liberties and Kensington," in the numerous dwellings, with food and with clothing, with the means of education and the opportunities of public worship, requires an amount of mechanical appliances, of commercial enterprise, of professional skill, which can hardly be estimated.

Mr. Chairman, from what I have said you will readily infer that my district is a perfect hive of industry—a hive in which all have their assigned parts, and one in which, when the sun of prosperity shines, there is ceaseless activity.

But, sir, it is also true that when from any cause the economy of this same hive is seriously disturbed, when its industrial occupations are interrupted, when the order and regularity of its motions are interfered with, there must necessarily follow confusion, disaster, and suffering. And, sir, that is precisely the condition of things there now.

So long as the tariff of 1842 was in operation, and its influence was continued to be felt, the people I represent were prosperous and happy; labor in all its departments found ample employment and remunerative wages; all branches of trade shared in the advantage which labor thus enjoyed; and the happy consequences were manifested in all directions. Go where you might, sir, you encountered only the manifestations of thrift and contentment. In all the older and more thickly-settled portions, every foot of available space was occupied for some useful purpose; wherever there were new buildings, in various stages of erection, stretched themselves on all sides. The carpenter and the bricklayer and the mason were in constant requisition for the increased growth of the population and the increased wealth of its individual members. Sir, I grieve to say all this has changed.

The repeal of the tariff of 1842—though, as has been already sufficiently explained in this debate, its mischievous results were, for a time, accidentally averted—fell like a blight on my district. The future of things was obscure and overshadowed. To a state of steady success for all legitimate enterprise succeeded a state of varying troubles. That which had been stable at once became unfixed. Money, which had flowed abundantly through all its proper channels, grew scarce and the laborer, who had formerly been secure in his returns of healthful business, found their profits had ceased, and that day by day their affairs became more and more uncertain, until at last all reliance upon them was gone.

When working man, the slave, operated with unshaking energy. Accustomed for years to the comforts and many of the luxuries of life, they found themselves constrained to forego not only these, but even some of the absolute necessities. Their employment, which had previously been constant and secure, became irregular, and in many cases finally ceased; and their wages fluctuated in a corresponding degree. In the revolution of 1857, as all remember, the country was involved in one of those terrible crises which the vacillating character of our revenue laws has so often produced.

This was the inevitable sequence of what had gone before. The drain of the precious metals sent abroad to pay for articles which ought to have been manufactured at home, had so disordered the finances of the country that monetary panic and commercial distress were the inevitable convulsions revealed the frightful hollowness of the system we had been pursuing. Crash succeeded crash, until general ruin was threatened.

Merchants and manufacturers laid down one after another in the storm that was then raging, and the whole fabric of our commerce and industry shook and shivered.

Mr. Chairman, in the material world violent hurricanes are frequently required to purge the atmosphere; and though their career is marked by havoc and desolation, they are followed by purer and clearer skies. So, too, in the political world; and if the panic of 1857, in its senseless fury, struck down many an honest and worthy man, its ultimate results are destined to be beneficial. Among its salutary consequences, not the least, has been the unanimity it has produced in my own State in regard to the question of protection.

Prior to that visitation, the Democratic party, even with us, had affected an indifference, and sometimes went so far as even to avow hostility to the principle. But, sir, they were forced to do so no longer. The workingmen, the laborers, the operatives of the good old Keystone State, stimulated by the sufferings which they endured, have investigated this subject, and they have determined on reform. It was upon this that the election of 1858 mainly turned; and, as a consequence, the representatives of the People's party comprise a large majority of the Pennsylvania delegation. Sir, the People's party, which had its origin in Philadelphia in the spring of 1858, was based upon the principle of protection to American labor against the cheap labor of Europe. It was in that time that it invited the working classes to rally under its banner, and it was through their aid it triumphed. It was upon that principle that myself and my colleagues were elected in the ensuing fall; and it is upon that principle we expect to carry the presidential candidate who may be nominated at Chicago.

Mr. Chairman, it will be a monstrous wrong that great body of citizens whom I represent, if this session is permitted to pass without some efficient attempt for their relief. They are eminently deserving of that relief; no classes contribute more to the solid advancement of the country than they do. They produce far more than they consume, and thus accumulate a surplus for public good.

They are reasonable in their demands, asking only that you will so modify your tariff that the money which is now squandered abroad may be turned to the benefit of the citizen at home. They ask you, not for the opportunity of living in idleness, but for the means of obtaining work.

They ask you to frame your laws for the benefit of your own countrymen, instead of arranging them to promote the interest of people living on a foreign soil.

They ask you to remember that they have rights which ought to be regarded; feelings which ought to be respected; claims which ought to be considered. And, sir, while they mean no more than they tell you that, if their just demands are not complied with, if they are rejected with scorn when they apply only for what they know is their due, they will visit upon the men and the party which thus trifles with and provokes them the vengeance of the ballot-box.

Mr. ROBINSON, of Rhode Island. Mr. Chairman, much has been said, in the course of the debates in this House, of the purposes and designs of the Republican party. Bold and harsh accusations have been made against it. It has been specially charged with the avowed purpose of overthrowing the Constitution of the United States; and of intending to use the administrative powers of the General Government, if it should obtain it, to break down the rights of the southern States and eradicate some of their social and political institutions. The party is charged with ignorance, with avarice, with slavery, the true spirit and construction of the Constitution. It is alleged that its purposes and designs are treasonable, and that it aids and abets the invasion of the States. These charges are made with a seriousness and persistence that forbids us to distrust the sincerity of men; at least, of our southern friends who make them. Their reiteration by the prelates and politicians of the North, however, are perfectly understood to be for political effect alone, upon men who are supposed to be without any serious motive, and to deter them from a free expression of their opinions. Fortunately, however, for the party charged with these grave political offences, we are debating this matter before an intelligent and patriotic people. The schoolmaster and the press, the stern types of our modern civilization are abroad, and have been for years; and the people who have received their instructions will never believe that they have not improved their pupils and softened and refined the spirit of that barbarous age, when learning was cramped and confined; when men of power were despotic and timid, and were marked, not with the pen, but with the pommel of their swords.

We violate the Constitution! How! Because we contend that "freedom is national, and slavery sectional;" that "freedom is guarded and protected by the Constitution, which announces its preamble its object to be "to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and posterity."

And the provision of that Constitution were designed to carry out and perpetuate the formula of glorious purposes set forth in its preamble. It was framed for no other Government than a Government of freedom. Had, however, any one unfamiliar with the designs of that instrument insisted to the arguments from the Democratic side of the House, they must have thought that the framers of the Constitution intended to protect, not freedom, but slavery; to promote, not the general welfare, but to pile up, if possible, the means to keep the country in a state of constant disturbance.

Chairman Wells strikes me as remarkably singular, if it were the design of the Constitution to promote and extend slavery, that the word should not have occurred in the instrument from its beginning to its end. It is equally strange that some of the soundest as well as most brilliant statesmen of the Revolution should have protested against the insertion of the word, that the instrument forming the basis of a glorious Confederacy of free States should nowhere, in any of its provisions, perpetuate the evidence that there existed, in the land where that fierce struggle for freedom was waged, no glaring a solemnity as that institution presents—a palpable contradiction of the political doctrines and rights set forth in the Declaration of Independence.

If it had been the purpose of the Constitution to extend slavery, why then, this institution itself were of no overwhelming importance that it could form the only nucleus about which the people of the original States could gather, is it not surprising, is it not a glaring impeachment of the intelligence, as well as the patriotism and honesty of its framers, that they left in the instrument this only disturbing element in our Government, almost wholly and entirely to implication, that its only recognition—by them was not as existing by the force of the Constitution, but exclusively by virtue of the State laws?

There was a time when our southern friends strenuously contended for the doctrine of strict construction. When we urged upon them the necessity of protection to domestic industry, and the policy of a system of internal improvements, they turned to us with an air of triumph, and asked us to point them to the authority granted in the Constitution to Congress to legislate upon those matters as we desire. Can they blame us, who earnestly believe that this policy does contribute to the general welfare—does form the basis of the States' future prosperity, rendering it permanent and strong, promoting intercourse among them, establishing the means of a common defense, furnishing employment for a cheerful, willing industry, as well as compensation for its toil—can they blame us, when they claim that the right to extend slavery is a right, that the Constitution, nay, superior to it, and walks with an elephant tread over all other purposes and designs of the Constitution, that we turn upon them with their favorite doctrine of strict construction, and ask them to point us to any recognition of such a purpose or design in any of the provisions of the Constitution?

We think the interrogatory a proper one, and should be answered by some more potent reply than denunciation. The Constitution itself, in that article which forms the basis of the fugitive slave law, expressly declares that it shall be enforced by our political opponents. That section provides that "No person held to labor or service in one State—"

Under what? Under the Constitution of the United States? No—

Under the laws thereof, excepting those another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor shall be due.

This section, if it applies to fugitive slaves, recognizes the servitude as existing purely and simply by the laws of the State, and therefore wholly local and sectional in its character. If the framers of the Constitution had entertained the idea that the institution of slavery was a feature of the Government whose fundamental laws they were framing, would they have left it with no other support to the authority of the master over the person of his slave? Would they have made no provision for those cases where the exigencies of business or the allurements of pleasure would induce the master to take his slave into a State where the local law did not or might not recognize the right of one man to own the person of another? They were strangely negligent of the high and responsible duties imposed upon them, if they designed to give to slavery no existence under the provisions of the Constitution. They recognized it, however, as a slave institution. The person is held to service, not under the Constitution, but under the laws of the State from which he escapes. When the master takes him beyond the limits of that local law that binds him to servitude, then, under the Constitution of the United States, the slave is at once free, and the master can assert its right, and the slave stand "disenthralled," by the "emancipating genius" of the Constitution.

But it is not only from this provision of the Constitution that we think we prove conclusively that the institution was regarded simply as an institution of a State, existing by force of its own local law, but by the contemporaneous construction given to that instrument by the framers of it. That ordinance, which forever debared the entrance of slavery into the glorious Northwest Territory, where the stout States are rejoicing in freedom, and busily engaged in a noble competition in agriculture, science and art—in all that dignifies and adorns our nature—and makes us reverence the institutions of freedom, is a lively recognition of the text and principle of the Constitution they framed and so grandly set in operation.

Its results there are the embodiment of all the purposes its sublime preamble contains; not mere glittering generalities, but the natural as well as the necessary elements of the political genius of the Government.

Did our revolutionary statesmen in that ordinance "exorcise the Constitution of its spirit?" or did they not display its vitality and power? And now, has that Constitution, having attained the years allotted to man, become wrinkled and decayed? Has it lost its manly proportions, its vigorous spirit and power, and become dwarfed and decrepit? If it has, its decay results, not from any inherent weakness or defect in its original formation, but from the experiments upon it, as it has been administered to it by politicians, which eat out its original fibers, and destroy its early manliness. Is it necessary to repeat, apart from this commentary of our political fathers, which this ordinance presents, the opinions they have expressed in the past, and the counsel which all candidates for political honor are commanded to worship, or be shut out from political promotion? Those opinions are a portion of our political history, and it is not in the power of party convulsions to falsify or obliterate them. The Constitution is a part of our political history, with untiring zeal the advocates of a noble and exalting freedom. This institution was regarded not as an element of power but of weakness, retarding our political progress, and retarding the development of the national power. Nor were those opinions confined to the age in which our fathers lived. Their descendants adopted their views upon this grave matter. A little more than a quarter of a century ago the same opinions were as freely expressed in the State that now prides itself as the home of Washington and Jefferson.

A new analysis of the Constitution has been made by the political experts of the day; and, to the surprise of all, it is announced that, instead of freedom, slavery is its inspiring genius, and constitutes its strength and preserving power. The stars of its flag no longer shine over the pathway of liberty, but twinkle dimly and darkly over the mists of human servitude. We, who follow the statements of the Revolution, the great apostles of human freedom; we, who struggle in our national institutions for the secure and permanent maintenance of 1787, the first-born of the Constitution are stigmatized as disorganizers and sectionalists. If the struggle of principle against power—a contest for a strict construction of the Constitution, where human freedom is involved—against an abridgment of the principles of the Revolution, of extending human servitude, makes us disorganizers and sectionalists, we must bear the charge. An appeal to history will fasten these epithets upon those who so freely apply them to us.

Why, Mr. Chairman, who threaten to disorganize the Government? Why, who threaten the reputation of the Union for relief for any political grievances they suffer, or imagine they suffer? Who would bring upon the American people the greatest of all political calamities, in the vain hope of redressing some imaginary political injury? Have the Republican party made any such threat? In the wild and stormy day, when they provided the organization of this House, did that party proclaim on this floor their success in the coming presidential contest the condition upon which they would stay in the Union? Did they appeal to the first amendment of the American people to the Union, and resorting to the ballot-box—their only safety, for the purpose of frightening them into casting their votes for their presidential nominees? Did they declare, here or elsewhere, that they have any other remedy for any mal-administration of the Government than that of seceding from the Union, and resorting to the ballot-box—their only constitutional agency for reforming abuses and redressing any and all political evils? No declarations of violence have proceeded from the Republican party, or from any individuals acting or speaking by their authority. We know that fiery denunciations of the Union have been uttered upon the Democratic side of this House; not only uttered, but loudly and warmly applauded, and its dissolution solemnly argued as the sure means of redress for the political evils they allege they suffer.

With these denunciations the Republican party have no sympathy. They heard them with deep regret and unexpressed surprise. Their only response to them is that they consider such a measure fraught with absolute ruin and destruction to the Republic, and that they have no hope of freedom, and plunge the American people into a political chaos, alike hopeless and irredeemable. The Republican party now, and at all times, protest against such threats and such a measure. They can find no crime in the success of any party in trying to frighten the people into the hope of freedom, and plunge the American people into a political chaos, alike hopeless and irredeemable. The Republican party now, and at all times, protest against such threats and such a measure. They can find no crime in the success of any party in trying to frighten the people into the hope of freedom, and plunge the American people into a political chaos, alike hopeless and irredeemable. They cling to the Constitution and the Union, successful or defeated, and will regard as an outrage upon the purposes of our fathers an effort to pervert the first or dissolve the latter. They adhere to the principles of Washington, Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe. They regard the commentary upon the Constitution, and wish no higher panegyric upon their party than it bears aloft in the din of political controversy the same ennobling truths which have given to those distinguished statesmen their names and their fame.

The more closely we examine and criticize those provisions of the Constitution in which the subject of human slavery is so tenderly touched, the more convincing becomes the evidence that, like the opinions of its founders, it looked to its final extinction, and its abolition as a necessary part of the "migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit, shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year 1808." We find the power given for prohibiting the foreign traffic. Was this power of prohibition given for the purpose of extending or restricting the institution? This power to prohibit, the Congress did exercise as soon as it constitutionally could do so; and thus, if the modern theory be true, struck a blow, not only at slavery, but at the christianization of the miserable, barbarous and idolatrous African race. It was provided that the national legislators of 1808 regulate slave labor as specially protected by the Constitution, and as essentially necessary to the growth and development of the nation, and at the same time, employed their legislative authority to diminish the supply of this necessary labor! It would be impossible to entertain any respect for their intelligence or patriotism, and come to this conclusion. If they believed that the Constitution carried slavery with it, and necessarily extended to it its protection, they would not have so gratuitously made such an exercise of it would be so injurious to its spirit, and defeat its object. The exercise of the power thus conferred would be destructive of that fundamental principle which, according to modern commentators, they labored to establish. In fact, the exercise of this power would be a violation of the Constitution, and if it were so, the action would be correct, then they possess rightly who protest against the exercise of this power, and contend that the laws passed to prohibit the African slave trade are a gross invasion of the rights of the States, and as national legislators, sworn to support the Government? Congress? We cannot.

We contend, however, that the passage of these laws, as soon as, under the Constitution, they could be passed, is a complete, conclusive response to the argument so laboriously made to prove the Constitution a pro-slavery Constitution, formed, among one of its purposes, for carrying slavery wherever it chooses to go. Our fathers had no such opinion; and the fault of the Republican party is in following their example. Their platform of principle is one embodied in the Constitution, and will stand or fall with it. It is vain to reply that our fathers themselves, though anti-slavery in sentiment, formed a pro-slavery Constitution—a political paradox, invented for the purpose of avoiding the argument drawn from their acts, and the contemporaneous construction given by them to the instrument they formed. This assertion is no impeachment either of their intelligence or their patriotism. Modern assumption has not gone so far as to distinctly announce they were either ignorant or unpatriotic. They certainly understood the language they used, and carefully avoided a direct and unqualified recognition of slavery itself. They shut out, by express declaration, that any service could be due under the provisions of the Constitution. Their devotion to freedom, through a stern and unequal conflict of years, proves both their honesty and patriotism. They could not have been otherwise. It is not a feature of hypocrisy to cheat itself; and their legislation, under the Constitution, plainly proves they did not intend to cheat their posterity. They left to them, in one of their earliest acts of legislation, a heritage of noble wisdom, the emphasis of which was love for freedom, and an earnest desire to inaugurate a system of legislation that should protect, and not subvert, the rights of man.

The historic fact remains, and no sophism can obliterate it, or convert delirium to reason, that the first announcement of the principles of the Republican party was made by the statesmen who founded the Government; to whom we all have looked with reverence and awe; whose statues we set up in the portals of the Capitol; and whose memories will be revered and revered while freedom and independence have a votary. If they erred, then we may be wrong; but it will require something more than denunciation of those who are the humble followers of the policy they announced, to convince either us, or the world at large, that they were charged with the error of which they were ignorant of the purposes they intended to accomplish, or established a system of government whose correct construction and sound administration, upon its original principles, would defeat its objects. The Republican party of today is the party which Thomas Jefferson, the leader, led. It has adopted no new scheme to accomplish purposes not originally contemplated in the formation of our political system. We stand by its founders; and if we must fall, we fall with them.

It is equally futile to contend that the change in the circumstances of the union are such as will authorize a change in the construction of the Constitution. We are dealing with the principles and purposes of the fathers, and not with the changes and vicissitudes of a nation's progress. We are not, when we contend that the Constitution requires a restriction upon slavery in the Territories, with violating rights guaranteed by the Constitution they framed. To refuse this charge, we point to their opinions and their legislation. Whether it would be expedient to grant to slavery the unlimited right to travel and acquire property in the Territories is another question. The Territories it plagues; whether the pecuniary advantage of our southern friends would be best promoted by the extension, are not the questions involved in this controversy. These may present strong reasons to the South, to be urged for a restriction on the provisions of the Constitution, but cannot control its construction, nor aid in establishing the accusations made against us. If the framers of the Constitution were anti-slavery in sentiment, it is fallacious to suppose they would have formed a Government to cherish and extend a system of labor which they believed morally wrong, un sound in policy, and which might imperil the general welfare and endanger the domestic tranquillity of the States where it existed.

How, then, ask, do we violate the Constitution in extending it to the Territories? by excluding, as its founders contended, for the exclusion of slavery from the Territories? We disclaim any right to interfere with it in the States. In this respect, we are powerless. We neither contend for nor recognize any such power in the Constitution; and our party organization, in enunciating its principles, always have disclaimed any such power, and protest against any attempt to exercise it.

Further, those individuals in the North and East who are distinctly Abolitionists make this want of power in the Constitution the very ground of their quarrel with and opposition to it. With such a basis for the instrument, how can it be ever evil or dangerous around it are best understood by them, and with them alone are the remedies. We neither seek nor justify any interference from abroad.

If the institution be—as modern politicians, and slave States, no further lack than ten years frequently and earnestly declare—a social and political blemish, the practical development of a political philanthropy regarding and working out the best good and highest interest of both the white and black race, and solving the political problem of combining the welfare of both in one social system, we are willing and anxious that all the good educed from it shall be enjoyed and confined to the States where the system now exists. We ask not to be the recipients of the blessing it promotes, and assure those States that no act or effort of the Republican party will disturb them in the enjoyment of it.

We do, however, claim the right to determine, under the Constitution, whether the system shall be extended into Territories where no law exists to establish it; or, in other words, we protest in behalf of the free laborer, and the hardy laborer against being compelled to receive its dubious good. It is now said the true principle is, that the negro, a slave in the States, upon his introduction into the Territories continues a slave; that the Constitution, therefore, extends over him and continues in servitude a proposition at war with the earliest legislation adopted by the fathers of the Constitution, and suggestive of some very significant queries. The position assumes the absence both of territorial and congressional legislation, and claims not recognition by the common law. If it has any foundation whatever, it must be by virtue of some local law. Will the slaveholder in the Territory look to the law of the State from which he emigrated for the means to control and regulate his claim to this anomalous property? Will the Constitution transfer into the Territories as many slave claims as there are slave States from which owners of slaves may emigrate, and vindicate and protect the rights founded upon these various codes?

In one State the slave code carefully prohibits emigration, while it may be permitted in another. Will the person emigrating from the first be prohibited from giving freedom to the slave, while the slaveholder from the second will be at liberty to emancipate? Will the relation of master and slave, that exists, during the life of the responsibility, be affected as the legislation of the State may vary from which they emigrated?

Again, it is now deemed in many of the slave States a necessary safeguard of their institution to exclude the free negro, or to reduce him to slavery. Will the Constitution of the United States, of its self carry this protective legislation into the Territories as a general law, controlling all parties; or will the emigrant from a slave State, whose local law expels the free negro or reduces him to slavery in case of disobedience to the law, have power to put in force this local law in the Territories, free negro, or sell him into servitude, while the emigrant from a State having no such law will possess no such power?

All this political and legal chaos appears to be the legitimate result of the theory that the Constitution of the United States carries slavery into the Territories. If it carries it there, it should protect it; and to protect it without congressional legislation creates this confusion.

We are told that, if it had not been for the provision of the Constitution for the rendition of fugitives from justice, the States would have adopted it. If this be true, can we believe that the framers of the Constitution, who certainly understood its provisions; who so adroitly excluded the words "slave" and "slavery" from it, and who embraced the first opportunity to exclude slavery from a large portion of the common territory, would have adopted it, if they had believed it susceptible of the construction which is now attempted to be put upon it?

Again, our forefathers discussed the subject of slavery with as much freedom as any other upon which they were called to deliberate. It was by them not a forbidden topic. If the Constitution carries slavery into the Territories, will the same freedom of discussion be permitted there? or will the immigration of the slaveholder, with his chattels, of itself restrain this freedom of debate? Will a person from a free or slave State, who may have some doubt of the policy of slavery, or who, leaving the mere question of policy, takes a higher stand, and denies its rightfulness, be debarred the freedom of speech or discussion; be prevented from expressing freely and fully his opinions? If a newspaper is established, will that be subject to censorship, and all articles it may contain, freely examining the social and political influences of the institution, be deemed incendiary, while the editor will be consigned to the prison, or hounded over to the "unfriendly legislation" of a mob? We know that, if such a discussion in some of the slave States is not allowed to those who debate this subject and express opinions hostile to the expediency or justice of slavery. To those whose social and political institutions are of so strong a texture that they will bear the closest examination, and whose minds are not so easily queried are important. Accustomed to think freely, and to express aloud their thoughts upon all matters in which they feel an interest; to examine with scrutiny their bearing upon their social and political prosperity; in fact, to discuss all subjects they choose to discuss with the fullest freedom, and to give to their opinions the freest expression, the citizens of the free States doubt the propriety of extending an institution which, in this age of progress, requires to be spoken of tenderly and carefully, and which has all the prejudices of birth, the strength of habit, and force of education, to sustain it.

Mr. Chairman, we have lately passed in our legislative duties to inaugurate the statue of Washington. His life was again passed in re-remembering the past, and the future, and his joyful as they recurred to his early toils and patriotic struggles. We challenged the world to produce his parallel. His triumphs in the field and his success in the Cabinet; his devotion to the cause of freedom, wherever called by duty to act, and his subject of exalted heroism, all the Republicans party, while they pay homage to his principles, will prove the sincerity of their respect by attempting to bring back the administration of the Government to the policy he so nobly sustained while living.

Mr. FLORENCE moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to. So the committee rose; and Mr. FLORENCE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FLORENCE reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had under consideration the Union general, and particularly House bill No. 338, to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes, to authorize a loan, to regulate and fix the duties on imports, and for other purposes; and had come to no conclusion thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. DUNN, (at ten minutes after four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned till Monday.

IN SENATE.

Monday, April 30, 1860.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Dr. GRAY. The Journal of Thursday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GREEN presented the memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Washington, relative to the war debt of the Territory of Washington and State of Oregon; which was ordered to lie on the table, a bill on the subject having been reported.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Scotland county, Missouri, praying the establishment of a mail route from Farmington, Iowa, to Macon, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. WADE presented the petition of G. C. Johnson, praying the payment of a balance of an amount which the Secretary of War was authorized to pay him out of the annuity of the Shawnee Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. KING presented the petition of Solomon Whipple, praying an extension of his patent for a machine for cutting files; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

He also presented an additional paper in relation to the claim of Sally Moor, widow of Elisha Moor, to a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEMPHILL presented the petition of citizens of Texas, praying the erection of a lighthouse on or near the north breakers, at the entrance of the harbor of Galveston, and the restoration of the light-vessels lately removed from the entrance of that harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce; and a motion to print the petition was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SEBASTIAN presented the memorial of Barrow, Porter & Greenleaf, contractors for building the mail route from San Francisco, to Stockton, California, praying indemnity for mules stolen by the Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GWIN presented a resolution of the Legislature of California in favor of the passage of a law establishing a mail route connecting with the central overland mail from Carson City, in the Territory of Utah, to Nevada City, thence to the town of Auburn in the county of Placer, thence to Folsom, and from there to Sacramento City, passing over the Sierra Nevada through the Heunues pass, with final route, whoring therefrom; the first one leaving said route at Jackson's Ranch near the western end of Heunues Pass, to Downville, in the county of Sierra; and the second leaving at Lake City in the county of Nevada, via North San Juan to Marysville, Yuba county, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

RECOMMENDATION OF A REPORT.

On motion of Mr. LATHAM, it was Resolved, That the petition of G. C. Barnard, assignee of the Hon. David C. Broderick, deceased, praying the enactment of a law authorizing the payment to him of the amount due Mr. Broderick for the services rendered by him at his decease, with the adverse report of the Committee on the Judiciary thereon, be recommended to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEBT, VANTINE & CO.

Mr. LATHAM submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Court of Claims be requested to return to the Senate the papers in the case of Vantine & Co., which were referred thereon on the 2d instant.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. In the examination of the cases referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, they find referred to them a petition of J. B. Williams, praying a grant to the heirs of Joseph Biggs, deceased, of the amount paid by him for boarding, nursing, and medical attendance on account of being wounded in an Indian war in 1788. I should like to know what sort of relation or connection that has with the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. It seems to me properly to belong to the Committee on Claims. At the instance of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, I move that they be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON MARKET-HOUSE.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Foot, of Vermont, was appointed on a committee of conference some eight or ten days ago. He has been absent since, and it is wholly uncertain when he will return. It is very desirable that the conference should be held; and I move to excuse him, and that the Vice President be authorized to fill the vacancy upon the committee of conference on the bill (S. No. 192) authorizing the corporation of Washington city to make a loan and issue stock for $300,000, for building a market-house.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. COLLAMER was appointed.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FEASER, its Clerk, announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed, on the 13th instant, an act (H. R. No. 31) for the relief of Charles Knap; and also that he had approved and signed, on the 19th instant, an act (H. R. No. 213) to incorporate the United States Agricultural Society.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

The message further announced that the House had ordered, on the 24th instant, the printing of the following documents:

Message of the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the Secretary of the Navy, showing the number of officers and men in the service of the United States belonging to the African squadron who have died in that service since the date of the Ashburton treaty to the present time.

Message of the President, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives, "that the President be requested to communicate to the House any information in relation to the existence of the Territory of Florida," &c.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives, directing him to communicate the amount required to complete, furnish, &c., the St. Louis custom-house and post office.

The message further announced that the House ordered, on the 25th instant, the printing of the following documents:

Letter from the Acting Postmaster General, explanatory of the provisions of a bill (H. R. No. 681) relative to postage on newspapers in packages, &c.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with resolutions of the House of Representatives, information relative to discriminations in Switzerland against citizens of the United States of the Hebrew persuasion, ordered at twelve o'clock and twelve minutes.

Letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a report relative to the occupation of the Island of San Juan—ordered at twelve o'clock and thirteen minutes.

Memorial of the Legislature of Alabama, asking the allowance of interest on two and three per cent. funds, the payment of which was withheld by the Government—ordered at twelve o'clock and eleven minutes.

ANON DART.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If there is no business to take up the time of the Senate, I desire to call up a bill on the Calendar (No. 220) which has passed the House of Representatives. I think it will not occupy the attention of the Senate very long.

Mr. LANE. What bill is that?
The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) The title of the bill will be read for information.

● RELIEF OF ANON DART. A bill (H. R. No. 220) for relief of Anon Dart. Mr. LANE. I very much desire that the Senate shall be full when that bill comes up. It provides for the payment of a large sum of money; and it involves a question that ought to be settled by the Senate when we can have a full vote. I trust, therefore, that it will not be hurried through the Senate to-day. The body is very thin. Whenever the Senate shall be full, I will go with the Senator (for he has much anxiety in relation to this matter) to bring it up, so that it may be discussed, and the principles contained in the bill decided. If the decision shall be in favor of the claimant, it is not a question which will stop with the decision of this bill. It is an important matter; for it would bring about legislation in other cases like this; and I trust the Senate will not attempt to bring it up when there is so thin a Senate, and we cannot have a full vote upon it. I think the Senate is too thin for business; and therefore I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I hope the Senate will allow me to submit a matter before he submits that; that when we adjourn it be to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. LANE. I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Wednesday next. We call know it is scarcely good faith to attempt to go on with legislation under these circumstances; and we certainly cannot legislate on contested matters here. Speeches, it is true, might be made on different sides of different questions; but speaking here will amount to nothing, so far as actual business is concerned, and I therefore move that when the Senate adjourn, it be to meet on Wednesday next.

Mr. LANE. I think we had better, perhaps, take the question on adjourning till to-morrow.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I can hardly consent to allow the remarks of the Senator from Oregon in relation to the bill now pending before the Senate to pass without any reply. It is not my purpose to press it into the Senate this morning, if there is a disinclination to do any business; but I simply desire to say that the bill in question has, I understand, twice passed this body, has received the unanimous reports of committees of the House of Representatives for three sessions in succession, and it will appear on examination to have been decided—without any reference whatever to any opinions which I may entertain myself—by some of the ablest men in the Senate. I think, therefore, it is based on facts which, as I believe, when they are brought to the attention of the Senate, will show clearly that the bill ought to pass, and that there is nothing in this case which will establish a dangerous precedent in any other case. But I shall not press it, and I leave it to the Senate. I shall not take it up or to postpone it. As to the question of adjourning over from to-day until Wednesday, I hope the Senate will not agree to that proposition.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the Senate will not adjourn over; and it seems to me there are very good reasons why we should not do so. In the first place, I think to-morrow is assigned to the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. DAVIS], and I suppose he desires then to be heard on certain resolutions which he has submitted to the Senate. If, however, it is perfectly agreeable to him to leave over to-morrow, then that would be out of the way.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly. I have no wish on the subject.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then, if the Senator does not wish to occupy the floor to-morrow, we have a bill here—on appropriation bill.

Mr. COLLAMER. Would not the Senator from Mississippi lie off occupied to-morrow as some other day?

Mr. HAMLIN. I would say, as is suggested by my friend the Senator from Vermont, if the Senator from Mississippi would be willing to occupy the floor to-morrow, we should save a day by having him do it. If he does not desire it, however, he need not do so; but there is now pending before the Senate an appropriation bill. That is one measure which, I apprehend, we can take up and discuss without doing injustice to any absent Senator, or to anybody else; and I think there are a great variety of matters before the Senate which will lead to no very considerable debate, and which may not and need not be delayed in consequence of the absence of any one. I request, therefore, that we think we ought to take up those measures about which there will be no disagreement, and dispose of as many as possible. I would ask the Senator from Virginia, who has charge of the appropriation bill to which I refer, whether there is anything on that bill which necessarily requires us to delay action on it, when we have time now? If there is, I would not ask for action; but if there is no reason to the contrary, I hope we shall take up that bill and dispose of it, and all others of a like character.

Mr. HUNTER. I can only say, in regard to that bill, that we are through with the amendments of the Committee on Finance; and we have just commenced with those of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from Arkansas, the gentleman from Arkansas, can vote for me better than I can. There is an amendment pending, offered by one of the Senators from California, [Mr. LATHAM], which was a matter of interest to them. If the Senator from Arkansas is ready to go on, I am.

Mr. COLLAMER. I ask the gentleman from Virginia if there are not other appropriation bills.

Mr. HUNTER. That is the only one reported.

Mr. COLLAMER. The only one in the hands of the committee?

Mr. HUNTER. Not the only one in the hands of the committee; but the only one reported.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. In answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Virginia, I have to say, that the Committee on Indian Affairs, not anticipating that that bill would be brought up to-day, have not prepared all the amendments which they contemplated offering; but there are two amendments already offered to the bill, one of which is entirely willing shall be disposed of now. One was offered by the Senator from California, [Mr. LATHAM,] who is in his seat, and, no doubt, willing to go on with the discussion. I suggest, therefore, that we can make some progress at least with the amendments already offered to the bill. One is the amendment offered by the Senator from California, and the other is one which was submitted by myself. I am willing to proceed as far as we can with the bill to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I submitted the motion that when we adjourn, we adjourn to meet on Wednesday next. I really do not believe that it is well that we should meet here and go on with business, particularly in regard to the case of Dart, that was mentioned just now, nor in regard to the Indian appropriation bill itself, for I know there are seriously contested matters there. It so happens that there are many Senators absent from their seats on both sides of the Chamber, and it is, I think, but good faith to those absentees that we should give them a reasonable time and opportunity to get back to their seats and be able to enter into the regular transaction of business. If it be the wish of the Senate to go on and disregard that state of facts, I have no objection to make, and should withdraw the motion; but I can see no use of coming here for an hour or two in the morning when the time might be otherwise more better spent by each member of the Senate, as it seems to me. It is plain that we cannot go on with business with the numbers that are here and that are likely to be here. I have no objection to going on with business myself, and if I could see it expedient that that was the sense of the Senate, I should withdraw my motion; but I do not think that is the candid sense of the Senate; and I think that a vote on the motion to adjourn until Wednesday, at which time we may have a full quorum of this body, will be the wisest course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion before the Senate is, that the Senate take up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 220) for the relief of Anson Dart. The Senator from Arkansas moves that when the Senate adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next. By consent, the Chair will entertain that motion. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas?

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—yeas 30, nays 14.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion now before the Senate is, that the Senate take up the bill (H. R. No. 220) for the relief of Anson Dart.

Mr. LANE. I hope this bill will not be taken up to-day. We cannot, I think, do justice to it at this time. The Senate is too late. There are too many vacant seats here to allow a measure like this to pass; and I hope the Senate will not take it up. If, however, they are determined to take it up, I am ready to give the reasons why I oppose it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If the Senator from Oregon as far as he is concerned, will consent that the bill be taken up on Wednesday, in the morning hour, I will withdraw the motion to take it up now.

Mr. LANE. I have no objection, so far as I am concerned. I can make no objection to the Senate, though. It is a private bill, and I do not see why it should be taken up out of its order in preference to other private bills; but if it is the pleasure of the Senate to take it up on Wednesday morning, I shall make no objection.

STEWART MAGOWAN.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate an error which has occurred in the spelling of a name in a bill we have passed. I do not know the name, but I have power to correct it; but if it be, I should be glad to have it corrected. A bill has passed both Houses granting a pension to Stewart Magowan. His name is spelled Magowan. By mistake they have spelled it McGowan. I desire to know if there can be any correction of this mispelling. It sounds the same. I desire to inquire whether it has been signed by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it has been sent to the President. It is no longer in the possession of the Senate, and the Senate cannot take any order on it, it not being under the control.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I inquire as a question of order whether the Chair supposes the spelling can be corrected. It is not of much consequence, I suppose, the sound being the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest, that probably a shorter mode of correcting the error would be the introduction of a new bill.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Well, let it stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, to take up the bill (H. R. No. 220).

SHAWNEE INDIANS.

Mr. GREEN. I move that the Senate adjourn, if the Senate has any business to present.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 268) to pay the Shawnee Indians of Kansas Territory for certain depredations committed on them by white men. I think it will take but very little time, and may be disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If it were the inclination of the Senate to adjourn, and not do any business to-day, and no objection were made by the Senator from Oregon, I was about to withdraw my motion to take up House bill No. 220; but the Senate has not decided to adjourn, and if any bills of this kind are to come up, I prefer that that bill should be taken up. I think we can soon dispose of it.

Mr. CLARK. Let this go.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I withdraw my motion, but with the understanding that I shall renew it on Wednesday morning, and at the earliest opportunity, and press it until the bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to take up the House bill No. 268.

Mr. GREEN. I really think it improper to proceed with any of these bills in the absence of so many Senators, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, April 30, 1860.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. J. L. Elliott.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

Mr. HATTON. Mr. Speaker, I submit the motion that the rules be suspended, and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I think at this time it is the proper motion.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Before the question is taken on that motion, I would ask gentlemen of the other side whether it is proposed to do business, or only that the House shall go into committee for the purpose of hearing speeches, as was the case last week. If it be the intention that we shall do business in the House when the committee rises, I want that we shall know it now, that we may take action accordingly.

Mr. HOUSTON. I presume that until absent members return, the same course will be pursued that was pursued during the last week.

Mr. HATTON. There is no disposition on this side of the House to take advantage of the Democratic members who are absent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. With that understanding, we are ready for the question.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. BEFFINGTON in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the tariff bill, on which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MOORE] had the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by JAMES BECHAN, his Private Secretary.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

Mr. GROW. With the consent of the gentleman from Alabama, I will make one remark. I endeavored to get here before the House went into committee, but I have failed to do so. Wednesday and Thursday next have been set apart for the consideration of territorial business; but from appearances, and the facts which are known to the committee, the probability is, that the House will be as thin on Wednesday and Thursday as it is this morning. Of course, I do not desire that territorial business shall be called up when it cannot be considered and acted upon; and I have to suggest that two days of next week shall be fixed for this business, instead of the days set apart for it this week.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think that we had better take no steps in the matter until the days set apart for the business have arrived.

Mr. ASHMORE. I have no doubt that, at the proper time, the House will make no objection to taking the course indicated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROW. I have in part succeeded by bringing the matter to the attention of the committee.

Mr. MOORE, of Alabama, addressed the committee for the purpose of raising the question of the bill reported by Mr. MORRILL. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. ALLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. HAMILTON. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit me, I propose to make a personal explanation. I will not consume more than a few minutes.

Mr. ALLEY. If there be no objection, I yield for that purpose.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILTON. I find in The Press, of Philadelphia, under date of the 14th instant, what purports to be the report of the special committee of this House, raised for the purpose of considering the property for a railroad connection between the Atlantic and Pacific States. If the chairman of the committee is present, I would like to know whether it is by his authority or that of the majority of the committee that this publication has been made. I find no name attached to that report, as if I had concurred in it. I find the names of other gentlemen attached to it, as if they had concurred in it, when they and myself were opposed to that majority report of the committee. If the chairman of the committee is present, I would like to state by what authority the report was published in The Press, and by what authority my name, and those of others opposed to it, were in it?

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CRAWFORD] is not in the Hall.

Mr. HAMILTON. I regret to hear that he is not present. At some future time I trust that he will set myself and others right on this question, inasmuch as we opposed the report at every stage, and upon the final vote.

Mr. ELIOT. I am in the same category with the gentleman from Texas. I appear, in the publication he refers to, as having given my assent to the majority report, when I am opposed to it in all of its aspects.

Subsequently Mr. CRAWFORD came in, and having obtained the floor, said, Mr. Chairman, I understand during my absence this morning that the honorable gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HAMILTON], and the honorable gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH], took occasion to revert to the fact that their names are attached to the publication of the majority report of the Pacific railroad committee, as though they subscribed to it. It is true that some of the press have published the report entire, and appended the names of all of the committee to it. It is just to say that that publication was entirely without the authority of the chairman of the select committee, or of other members of that committee. The fact is that only ten of the sixteen members of the committee signed the majority report of the committee, and some of the ten signed the report with explanatory notes attached to their signatures.

I am very sorry that the members of the committee did not sign it. I think it unfortunate that they did not sign it. If we have one Pacific railroad it will answer our national purposes. The one we have reported in favor of will have two arms, intended to extend north and south, it seems to me that the members who refused to approve the report ought to have approved it. In justice, I must say, however, that Mr. PHILLIPS, Mr. HAMILTON, Mr. SMITH of Virginia, Mr. HINDMAN, Mr. TAYLOR, and Mr. ALDRICH, did not sign the report, although the report published in some of the papers shows that they did.

Mr. ALLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the remarks which I shall submit to the consideration of the committee at this time, I propose to discuss the principles and purposes of the Republican party, the causes which led to it, the necessity of its organization, the inevitable tendency of its doctrines, and the final result of its action.

"Slavery has been, to a greater or less extent, a disturbing element in our national politics ever since the organization of the Government; in fact, political differences were occasioned by it, and sectional prejudices grew out of it, at a period long anterior to the formation of the Federal compact. The establishment, encouragement, and perpetuity of the African slave trade, on the part of Great Britain, against the remonstrance of some of our colonies in 1786, was one of the first steps to the American Revolution. When the Constitution was framed and adopted, slavery existed in all the States save one, and to her great glory be it spoken—that State was Massachusetts. The manner in which slavery was abolished in Massachusetts in 1780, was the first step to the abolition of the institution. The Federal Constitution was framed, in an honorable to the historic fame of her judiciary as it was to the patriotism and sense of justice of her people. It was not abolished by legislative enactment, but simply by the decision of her supreme court, that slavery was incompatible with the principles of her constitution, and the declaration of sentiment in its preamble. Thus it was that slavery ceased forever within her borders. And Massachusetts, ever true to this doctrine of her constitution, sent forth to-day with no less honor her delegates in protest against the unfortunate African, except it may be in obedience to what is believed to be the higher law of the Constitution of the Union.

The almost universal sentiment of the North is, that slavery is a great moral and political evil; productive of no good, but much of evil to the master, as well as to the slave; and to hold him as a chattel is in violation of every precept of Christianity, of every axiom of liberty, of every sentiment of justice, of every feeling of humanity. While the bulk of the Southern States oppose its further extension, they do not regard themselves as politically responsible for its existence and perpetuity in the States. So long as many of the most enlightened and gifted men of the South, who were statesmen and patriots, regarded it as an evil, and deplored its existence, and agreed with the North that it ought not to be extended, and declared, also, that it could not be defended upon any other ground than that of uncontrollable necessity, the North were satisfied to be quiet and content. But when it was discovered that the determination of the South, in violation of all law and precedent, to force slavery everywhere, the people of the North became aroused, and now stand ready, with a unanimity proportioned to their conviction of the purposes and designs of the South, to declare "thus far, but no further"—no other inch of slave territory.

Upon this question of the extension of slavery, the South has been gradually growing desperate, until now it openly announces its treasonable purpose to dissolve the Union, if not permitted to use the whole force of this Government to extend and protect slavery in all the national Territories. Many far-seeing and sagacious people at the North have predicted for a long time this design of the South, but were unable to make the mass of the people believe it. But when the South, in its frenzy, they first make mad." The South have proclaimed it in unmistakable language; and the anti-slavery sentiment of the country will now take possession of the national Government. It cannot be averted. The South may rave and howl as much as it pleases, but it must be done. It is now to the South, these chosen Republican leaders will so administer the Government that every interest will be protected; that exact and equal justice will be done to the North as well as to the South, to the East, and to the West. I am sorry to see, on the part of some, a disposition to apologize for the position and action of the Republican party, and claiming that the organization is a purely defensive one. It is well enough to state, what is the fact, that had it not been for the madness of the South upon this question, the Republican party would never have existed in its present proportions. But this party needs no apology. It asks for nothing that is not clearly and constitutionally right; and apology for its action is as much out of place as an apology for the views and actions of Washington, Henry, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Webster, and Clay; upon the question of slavery and its extension. It stands where they stood, condemning slavery and opposed to its further extension; and, like them, disclaiming any purpose or authority to interfere with its existence in the States. Its fault, if any, in what seems war, in being too conservative to satisfy the anti-slavery sentiment of the country.

General Washington wrote to Robert Morris, as follows:

"I can only say that there is not a man living who without some fault, does not have a plan adopted for the abolition of it; but there is only one proper and efficient mode by which it can be accomplished, and that is, by legislative authority. And this, as far as my suffrage will go, shall be my voting."

Should not this testimony of the immortal "Father of his Country," in favor of our principles, to satisfy our position to the country and the world?

Mr. Jefferson declared it to be the sincere wish of his heart to see slavery abolished; for, said he, "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, and his justice cannot sleep forever." And, alluding to the violence to which he declared:

"The Almighty has no attribute which can take side with us in such a contest."

Patrick Henry declared: "That he honored the noble effort to abolish slavery."

Mr. Madison said that slavery found no justification in any laws of justice and right, and its extension should be resisted.

Mr. Monroe was equally emphatic in his denunciation of slavery; and in his speech in the Virginia convention, he said:

"We have found that this evil has preyed upon the very conscience and has been prejudicial to all the States in which it has existed."

Mr. Webster declared "that his right arm should be severed from its socket sooner than it should cast a vote favoring the extension of slavery."

Mr. Clay declared "slavery to be a great moral, social, and political" evil; and he advocated, with great earnestness and power, at every period of his life, the gradual emancipation of the blacks.

These illustrious characters and eminent statesmen, North and South, and men of high standing upon the enduring records of the nation's history, could not receive the smallest commission for public service at the hands of this national Administration—an Administration which will remain in its coming time as a standing accusation of corruption and crime.

The Republican party reflects every shade of opinion upon the question of slavery. The organization contains within its limits the most ultra conservative men, and the most zealous anti-slavery men, differing only upon one subject, namely, the determination to prevent the further extension of slavery.

The Democratic party contains within its folds the rankest secessionists or disunionists and the mildest conservatives, but all equally bent, at least so far as the organization is concerned, upon extending and perpetuating human slavery. But neither of the extremes of these two wings is destined to be immediately successful in obtaining possession of the national Government. The disunionists of the South could no more succeed in their desperate and suicidal scheme of secession, seated in the Presidential chair, than the Abolitionists of the North can elect one of their number to that high position. But the anti-slavery sentiment of the North is thoroughly aroused; and, acting in conjunction with the conservatism of the whole country, it will place in the Presidential chair, on the 4th of March, 1861, a Republican President of conservative tendencies but firm convictions; and whether he be the distinguished Senator of New York or any one else, he will be sustained by the whole people of the North and the patriotic men of the South.

You may as well make up your mind to it; you must submit to it.

These threats of dissolution of the Union are as the idle wind. The great body of the people at the South are not so deficient in understanding and intelligence as not to know that they could not live a moment, and that for a single day, without the assistance of the Union, in hostility to the North. I have no fear of any serious movement for dissolution on the part of the South.

"Barking dogs never bite." I confess I have some fears of the North, although I know they are a magnanimous and forgiving people, yet multitudes are beginning to feel that there is a point beyond which "forbearance ceases to be a virtue." When they consider that their commercial, their manufacturing, and all their political interests, are neglected and sacrificed, and everything made subservient to the interests of slavery, as they have been for years past; I say, when all this is fully realized, as it soon must be, it is impossible to predict what the consequences will be. Certain it is, that, first of all, they will rise in their might and demand their rights under the Constitution. But let us suppose that the people of the South, this Union will never be dissolved by them; it will take a mightier arm than theirs to overthrow this Government. If dissolved at all, it will be by the relentless will of the North.

Gentlemen talk about the white people of the South as being the oppressed. But let us look to God's providence; and they taunt the white laborers of the North with being slaves to the capitalists of the North. I heard a southern Senator declaim the other day upon the floor of the Senate, and stigmatize the free States as servile States. Yes, sir, he repeated it—servile States. I have heard Representatives upon this floor talk about the white slaves of the North. Let me say to those gentlemen that there are multitudes of laboring men in the district I have the honor to represent, as there are all over the North, who are as equals in all things to moral culture, general intelligence, and in all the attributes that constitute a true manhood, of a large majority of the southern Representatives upon this floor. Why, sir, there are several mechanics who belong to a literary society, and who are as well educated as the dependent upon their daily labor for support, that for learning and eloquence, are hardly surpassed by the distinguished Senator from Virginia whom I heard make the remark. Labor at the North is respected; and it is only the idle and vicious that are degraded and despised. In the South, however, there labor is despised because of slavery; and the average condition of the great body of the non-slaveholders of the South—and they constitute four fifths of the whole—will not begin to compare favorably in education, general intelligence, moral worth, and many feelings, with the average of the native negro population of my own State; and when I say this I say what I know from personal observation and knowledge; for I have traveled extensively in the South, and know much of its institutions and people. The North have no desire to oppress the people of the South, and they do not need their sympathy and pity more than they deserve our censure; and their arrogance and braggadocio cannot but excite derision and contempt.

A distinguished foreigner remarked to me, some time ago, that he had been traveling in the South, and noticed among his people more than the exhibition of superiority over the North which many of the southern people assumed. "Why," said he, "as a whole, they bear no better comparison with the North than a last year's almanac does with the finest edition of Washington Irving's works."

The South has been prolific in great men, and nearly all her eminent statesmen in the past have borne their testimony against slavery, and opposed its extension; but the lesser lights of the South, and the masses of the people, are in error. Their men of to-day pronounce slavery a blessing, both to the master and the slave, to be nourished, extended, and protected, notwithstanding they see all around them the evidences of blight, desolation, and decay, which every one can see in the bare Southern States, and which are attributable to the withering, blighting effects of slavery." Take Virginia, for example. Less than seventy years ago this State contained twice as many inhabitants as New York, and her political power in Congress and the electoral colleges was nearly double that of the Empire State. How is it to-day? The population of New York is nearly three times as great as that of Virginia, and her political power in Congress and the electoral colleges is nearly three times as much as that of "the Mother of Presidents." How is it with their material resources? Seventy years ago New York exported about three millions, and Virginia about four millions; to-day, the former State exports annually over one hundred million, and the latter less than the did seventy years ago.

The production and importations of the two States at that time and the present show a much greater disparity in favor of the great northern State. The imports of this State amount to near two hundred million per annum; while those of the other amount to less than one million per year. The annual products of the Empire State amount to more than two hundred and fifty million, while those of the great southern State amount to only about forty million per year. When the Constitution was adopted, only seventy years ago, New York was behind Virginia, both in products and importations. But a short time previous to that, this latter State was the first commercial State in the Union—her commerce exceeded that of all New England, and was three times as great as that of New York. Now, New York city alone is worth more than twice as much as the whole of Virginia, and contains more than half as many inhabitants. I do not speak of these two States as exceptional cases; there is even more difference with some of the others than with these. I might take each and every one of the slave States, and compare them in details with the free States, in prosperity and progress, with less favorable results for some of the slave States than the comparison between New York and Virginia.

Taken also, for instance, Pennsylvania and South Carolina. The imports of foreign goods into South Carolina at a century ago were worth about ten dollars. At present they are but little more than half that amount; whereas, in Philadelphia alone, they are more than twelve times as much, against a very trifling amount one hundred years ago. The products of the manufacturing, mining, and mercantile States of Pennsylvania amount to about two hundred million dollars per annum, while in South Carolina they amount to less than ten million dollars per year. Before the Revolution, the "Palmetto State" was the second commercial power on the continent.

Look at Kentucky and Ohio. Kentucky was admitted into the Union ten years before Ohio; with a finer climate, more productive soil, and greater natural advantages, yet Ohio has outstripped her in population, wealth, and enterprise, to such an extent that it requires no comparison between them, in almost anything, absurd. No one, whose judgment is not completely blinded, can fail to see that all this is a race between freedom and slavery. A system of forced labor on the one side and voluntary industry on the other. When we look at these inconceivable results, and ask ourselves, "On the contrary, but the South had abolished slavery in the early days of our history, her territory would have been covered, in the language of another, "with cities and villages and railroads; and the country, instead of this, would have had fifty million people, who would have hailed the rising morn, exulting in republican liberty."

Virginia is much larger, territorially, than New York; with a finer climate, greater natural advantages of every kind. In fact, let her abolish slavery, and she would be in a position to rival this Union in wealth and importance; but if she will cherish and perpetuate this curse within her borders, she must remain imbecile and poverty-stricken, distinguished only for her slave-breeding—living upon reminiscences of the past, with glory in the present, and without hope in the future.

But in these comparisons I have not alluded to my own State of Massachusetts, so often reviled and so frequently calumniated upon this floor—a State which stands incomparably above all others, not only in historic grandeur, but in present greatness and unrivaled achievement.

She needs no eulogy from any of her sons. "Her works praise her," and slaveholding arrogance may disparage her merits, but she stands forth to-day, in the estimation of all enlightened men, as the model State of this Union. Her achievements in science, literature, in arts, in industrial pursuits, and in works of benevolence, and her intellectual and moral standard, are altogether unparalleled by any section of equal territorial extent upon this continent. Equally prominent is her historic greatness; and so pre-eminently is this by the general judgment of all mankind, that no one whose opinion is worth quoting dares to deny her historic supremacy.

But we of the North are not only threatened with a dissolution of the Union, in the event of a contingency, which I think is sure to happen—namely, the election of a Republican President—but we are told that non-intercourse is to be established immediately with the North, and the South will purchase no more of her products. This is, indeed, alarming; but let us inquire how this is to be effected. Everything that the South has to sell her poverty compels her to sell for cash only, while everything we dispose of to the South we give her a liberal credit upon. The South to-day cannot, in my opinion, pay debts; and it has not property enough, in my judgment—not what she calls property, but the property of her very five cents on the dollar of what it owes. And shall they talk of non-intercourse? Why, if you except the last few years, in which the South has been remarkably prosperous, owing to the high price of her products—a state of things which it is impossible should last—and the North has lost more money at the South, a great deal, than she has ever made by the trade of the South, and there is scarcely a northern merchant who has not been obliged to depend upon his profits from custom received from the middle and western States, to meet his liabilities in trade at the South. I do not wonder that in the great commercial revolution that swept over this country like a tornado in 1857, every northern merchant that I knew in all the northern cities that dealt exclusively with the South failed and ruined. The same thing again occurred in 1849—the year in which the United States bankrupt law was passed, which wiped out untold millions of southern indebtedness; more, in fact, than the profits of the whole trade of the South would then amount to for half a century. The only persons who were saved from those two storms were those which had kept clear of trading with the South. Some years ago I was published in several of the southern cities as one who was hostile to slavery—a merchant whose store should be avoided and shunned, because I was Free-Soiler; but I never discovered it made any difference. I will only say that if non-intercourse with me had always been the practice on the part of the South, I should have more money to-day than I have now. Taking into view the poverty and dependent condition of the South, her refusal to interfere with the slavery trade, and losses—as much as it would be for our wives and children, who are so dependent upon us they could not live a week without us, to threaten us with dissolution and abandonment.

But these threats, about withdrawing from the North the trade of the South, are of no value in their futility and impotency, have a moral significance not unworthy of comment. Such an appeal to the cupidity and avarice of the North—to stifle their honest convictions and suppress the holiest impulses of their nature at the call of material gain, is an insult to our people; which not a few northern merchants, I regret to know, are equally with the South responsible for. But, thanks to the integrity and moral heroism of the North, such an appeal will have but little effect. I need only mention in this connection what I have said of the dependent condition of the South upon the North, that notwithstanding the intensity of feeling on the part of the South, the violent threats and vehement declarations about non-intercourse since the commencement of this session, I do not think that the merchants of the South, and I am acquainted with, who has been in the habit of trading with the South—and I know of hosts of such in the Republican ranks—whose trade has diminished. On the contrary, I know of many, and some of them intense Republicans, whose trade has increased in the last year. I am sure of experience know that trade will seek the best markets, either by buying or selling, in spite of popular clamor.

We have heard a great deal said about the Helper book, and some of our timid friends on this side of the country have felt quite alarmed at the denunciations and abuse that have been heaped upon those who recommended it. Mr. Chairman, I am not ashamed to confess that I read that book, and recommended it, and contributed money to procure its publication for gratuitous circulation. And I think of the country, have felt quite alarmed at I thought there was, I should regret its publication, and would trample it under foot; for as much as I desire the overthrow of slavery, I do not wish to see it removed by insurrection and bloodshed. There are in it many extravagant declarations and foolish suggestions, which I do not approve of; but I never saw any book that was written by an enthusiast that did not contain more or less extravagances. There is in it a great deal of useful statistical information which will do any one good to read; and if the South would read it carefully and properly, I think it would do them no harm, and might do them much good.

But we must remember that Helper is a southern man; therefore we should make allowance for his enthusiasm and extravagance, for extravagance, both in his statements and in his language, is a southern soil. Well, indeed, the South shrink from the exposure of its imbecility in that book. The statistics which it presents, well authenticated as they are, show but too conclusively how rapidly the South is deteriorating; while it is shown that the North, on the contrary, is progressing in intelligence, population, and wealth, with a rapidity unparalleled in the history of the world. He says:

"Less than three quarters of a century ago, say in 1793— for that was the time of the abolition of the trade in slaves in the northern States—the South, with advantages in soil, climate, rivers, harbors, minerals, forests, and, indeed, in every thing that could be considered as a natural resource, was in the rear of the North in all the important pursuits of life; and now, in the brief period of scarce three-score years and ten, we find the South in the van of the North, in population and disbandment, slave owners and slave drivers are the sole authors of her degradation; and as they have shown, so let them receive their punishment."

He shows by unmistakable data that the value of all the property in all the slave States of the Union, exclusive of negroes, is not as much as that of one of the northern States. He shows, also, from the undisputed record of their views, that the great majority of the southern States, since the Revolution, and in the early history of the Republic, whose memories they cherish with the deepest reverence, were nearly all in favor of freedom and against slavery. No wonder it is distasteful to them this to be reminded by one of their own fellow-citizens of their mental degeneracy and material decay.

As I have said before, this slavery question has been a disturbing element in our national politics every since the organization of the General Government; and it will continue to be, until it is finally settled within the limits of the States, when the Federal Government will cease to have any responsibility for its existence; for all are agreed, the South unanimously, and nineteen twentieths of the North, that we have nothing to do with it in States, and no responsibility for its political arena. I have watched the progress of the anti-slavery sentiment with great interest from the day that the South, in its first act of madness, refused to receive and refer appropriately, petitions praying Congress to inquire into the expediency of abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia. I have seen the patriot and statesman, John Quincy Adams, whose large experience, eminent service, matchless ability, and unquestioned patriotism, entitled his opinion to more consideration than those of any other man in Congress, raised his warning voice of admonition to the States, and the Federal Government, when he was opposed to granting the prayer of the petitioners; that he thought good reasons could be given for his opinion, and if the petitions were received, appropriately referred and reported upon, the whole question would be consigned to the dust of oblivion. But he thought it better that they trampled upon this great constitutional right—the sacred right of the humblest citizen in the land—they would raise such a storm of just and holy indignation at the North, that no power on earth could suppress it. Who is there now so blind as not to see the verification of that prediction? From that day to this the anti-slavery sentiment of the country has been gradually strengthening as one after another of the demands of the South has been put forth, until it has become in opposition to the further extension of slavery as resistless as the waves of the ocean.

Mr. Calhoun said at that time that the South must prevent the entering wedge, by refusing to resort to abolition petitions; and, said he, if you permit this sentiment of abolition to obtain a foothold, by the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia, although they do not pretend to have any constitutional right to meddle with it in the States, yet the moral influence of such action will procure its overthrow in the States. For, said he, Europe is now opposed to the institution of slavery; and if the North are against us, the whole world would be against us, and the South could not resist the moral influence of such combined opposition.

How false that delusion, and how false the attempt to stile the deep-rooted, conscientious, and religious convictions of a great people, by the passage of a few resolutions, concocted by aspiring politicians. As the "old man eloquent" told them, they were only adding fuel to the flame. So it was with the present legislation. It has no act; a measure of no practical benefit to the South, which can never be executed in many of the States of the North; a law which I believe to be, with a vast majority of the people of my own State, one of the most wicked, unconstitutional, and barbarous laws that was ever conceived by the human mind. I remember that at the time of its passage I was traveling with a very intelligent gentleman, a slaveholder of South Carolina, an old friend of mine, and he told me that he regarded it as the worst law for the interests of the South that ever was enacted. He said it was better and right enough in itself, but it could be of no practical service to the South, and would only serve to arouse, what he called, the prejudice and religious fanaticism of the North, in opposition to the peace of the interests of the South. And, said he, I know enough of the people of the North to know that this sentiment of hostility to slavery is founded upon a mistaken, but nevertheless, conscientious religious conviction of its sinfulness and wrong; therefore it is useless to talk about constitutional rights against religious prejudice for any day, or set of men, who believe themselves armed by the panoply of heaven, are ready to maintain a warfare against the world.

The South again exhibited its madness and folly in the repeal of the Missouri compromise act—a measure which has been productive of nothing but disaster and ruin to the interests of the South; and they are now determined to force upon an unwilling people another act, of more supreme folly—to characterize it by no harsher term—than either of the others, namely, the enactment of a congressional slave code. Such an act will be the last nail in their coffin, if they should be permitted to drive it.

The necessity of the Republic for the present is to be found in the occasion which has arisen to resist the usurpations and aggressions of the slave power, so vastly multiplied of late, culminating at last in the corruption of the supreme judiciary of the land—in the Dred Scott decision; although in law, I think, that part of it which is of any value to the South may justly be considered, in legal parlance, extra-judicial, and of no binding force; but it is the strong indication of the inauguration of a policy which, if persisted in, must make the legislative department of the Government entirely subservient to the judiciary, which will finally result, if not checked, in the overthrow of the liberties of the American people. It is an innovation and usurpation, which cannot be resisted at all hazards; and to me the result of the coming presidential election has more significance and greater importance from its probable connection with the organization of that court than from any other cause.

It may seem to some who have great reverence for the judiciary, as somewhat harsh to characterize the recent action of the Supreme Court as corrupt. But when we consider that this court has always carefully abstained from giving any decision upon any question of law or of fact, except when it was actually obliged to do so, and never either, except upon those points in particular, that it was imperative upon them to adjudicate—now for the court to go out of its way to give opinions, which under the circumstances it had no moral right to give, upon questions purely of a political character, in such a manner as to bring, No act of the executive, legislative, or judicial department of the Government from its foundation, so shocked the public mind—both for its meanness and atrocity—as did the Dred Scott decision. The court, in order to maintain its decision in that case, that colored men, descendants of Africans who had been imported as slaves, whether bond or free, were not citizens, within the meaning of the Constitution, was compelled to falsify history and ignore every principle of justice and right. The court declares that at the time of the Declaration of Independence, the whole civilized world universally regarded them as "having no rights which the white man was bound to respect; and that the negro might justly and lawfully be reduced to slavery for his benefit." This is a statement in the face of the most undeniable facts, that England's highest courts had decided, several years before our separation from Great Britain, that the negroes had the same natural rights as the white man. And many of her noblest and best citizens had declared the enslavement of the negro to be a sin and a crime, and a crime of the greatest magnitude. In our own country at that time, the greatest statesmen, patriots, and heroes, who guided our councils, led our armies, and conducted our diplomacy, during the revolutionary struggle, our Washington, Franklin, Adamses, Jeffersons, Sheridans, Madisons, and a host of others, declared negro slavery to be irreconcilable with the precepts of the Gospel, or the rights of man; and the framers of the Constitution would not permit the word slave to pollute its pages.

But the present history of our Government has the Supreme Court stepped aside, without the shadow of a pretext to justify it, and undertaken to interfere with the legitimate functions of Congress, by virtually pronouncing its own unconstitutional in controversy between the two great political parties of the country, and interference—no dangerous in its character, so monstrous in its action, and so terrible in its consequences—ought to be visited with indignation and scorn by the American people. Has it come to this, that the Supreme Court, which has been as beset by Jay, an Ellsworth, a Rutledge, a Cushing, and a Marshall, with their illustrious associates—has constituted its high functions and pre-eminence authority to such base purposes, with its venerable chief and his associates descending to political partisanship? The fears of Mr. Jefferson, in relation to that court, have at last been realized—fears which he so often expressed, that it would usurp authority and power, which the framers of the Government never intended it should possess; and while that illustrious statesman and patriot, who was never without a matter of constant jealousy and watchfulness.

Establish the Republican party in power, and it will place upon the bench of the Supreme Court, an opportunity presents, those who will interpret the Constitution and laws, not political parties, but as upright judges, holding the scales of justice even, whether they favor one side or the other. With this party in power, and not until then, our commercial, manufacturing, and agricultural interests will be properly cared for.

But upon whom do the South rely for support in this? Upon the Supreme Court, which is supported in the language of Mr. Calhoun, "by the cohesive power of public plunder?" What a support! and where is always found, when the national Treasury is in other hands? Passing ultra anti-slavery resolutions, and striving with each other to make anti-slavery professions, to secure the offices and emoluments of the State governments. So it has always been in our State, and so it will ever be, so long as Democrats are willing to sell themselves for a mess of pottage. No abolition convention could have any strategy, unless slavery was made stronger anti-slavery professions, than the Democrats of Massachusetts have done when the Democracy have been out of power in the national Government. Their ablest leader—that statesman of national renown—Caleb Cushing, while he was looking to Massachusetts for approbation and support, not every day a slavery demand was made with an alacrity that would have been truly commendable if it had only been sincere. No man ever uttered on the floor of Congress nobler sentiments for freedom than he. No man ever denounced the aggressions of the South stronger than he did; and that is the only respect in which his great abilities, no man of Massachusetts ever debased himself so much to obtain favor with the South as Caleb Cushing.

Many have listened with amazement to the discussion speeches upon the other side of the House; at their cool, effrontery and apparent sincerity, and any apparent sincerity, for they do appear to be in earnest, and although I have as little regard for the judgment and good sense of mere talkers and rhetoricians as any one, and appreciate, I think, most fully their lawlessness of either of these qualities, yet I am hardly prepared to believe in their sincerity at the expense of such a draft upon the soundness of their judgment.

In fact, we have heard it intimated upon this floor, by the advocates of disunion, that these men, in their own case before matters, with no purpose to execute them; but now they say they are terribly in earnest. If gentlemen will consult the record of debates upon this floor, they will find that twenty years ago the South was as denunciatory in tone, as belligerent in attitude, as brave in declaration, and more so in action, than they are now. Eloquent gentlemen told us then that the danger was imminent, the crisis was at hand, and unless this agitation of the slavery question ceased, the Union must be dissolved. About that time, a very quiet gentleman in my own country, with a few associates, believing that it was the duty of the North to absolve itself from all responsibility for the existence of slavery, proposed to let the South take care of itself; and therefore petitioned Congress to effect a peaceful dissolution of the Union.

This petition was presented by the venerable Mr. Adams, and such exhibition of courtesy, reason, rage, and confusion, on the part of southern members, has seldom been witnessed on this floor. Mr. Adams barely escaped a vote of censure for presenting the petition. Never since that experience on this country had cause to believe that the South could be in earnest in its threats of dissolution.

I remember that Mr. Webster and Mr. Choate, of my own State, were once engaged as opposing counsel in a patent case, and Mr. Choate's client was endeavoring to prove that a certain machine was his cause—that two sections of a machine that looked exactly alike were in reality entirely different. Mr. Choate addressed the jury with all that learning, eloquence, and zeal that characterized that gifted man, and such was his earnestness and power that the parties in interest on the other side began to tremble, and feel that, after all, there might be a difference. Mr. Webster arose, and said quietly to the jury, "All this learning and eloquence is very pleasant to listen to, but so far as this case is concerned, it is all poetry; it is all humbug; and I hold you responsible to him, as I do to you, to see if you can find a difference? Of course not; there is none. You see it—you know it." These few words dispelled all of the effect of Mr. Choate's gorgeous eloquence. Such is the power of truth.

So, here we have the Constitution and the Union. Look at them, look at them, among the greatest monuments of human genius the world has ever witnessed; look at the blood and treasure they have cost; look at the mighty interests involved in their perpetuity; and then tell me if any party is so foolish as to be permitted to demolish them! Never! never! never!

Mr. WADE addressed the committee for one hour on the slavery question. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. ENGLISH obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. FLORENCE, who moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to. So the committee rose; and Mr. EVERETT, having been called by the Speaker, rose, and Mr. BERRYMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly House bill No. 336, to provide for the
